AS the Apoſtle Peter (writing to all the Saints) ſaid, This Second Epiſtle, ſo I may ſay, (and have learned, I hope, to ſay it without boaſting or comparing) This Seventh Epiſtle, Beloved, I now write unto you; in all which my deſire is to ſtir up your pure Minds by way of Remembrance, that ye may be mindful of the Words which were ſpoken, and of the Troubles which were endured before, by this (great Example of Suffering) Holy and Patient JOB. And though Seven, being a Perfect Number, might hint me a fair Pretence to ſit down, and do no more; yet I am further from thinking what I have done Perfect, than I am from deſiſting (in reference to my own Intention) to perfect (according to that meaſure of Light, which ſhall be given in) what is yet to do. 'Tis a General Mercy, that in an Age wherein the Sword hath been called out to do, and hath done ſo Much, there hath been not only Leiſure, but Encouragement for the Pen to do This Little. And 'tis Your ſpecial Honour, who ſtill promote This, or any Work of this Kind, that while ye have been engaged in ſo great a Charge for the Maintaining of a War, and the Preſerving of Peace, ye have not excuſed your ſelves in this Point of Charge. And (poſſibly) it will be no Diſhonour to this Age in Future Ages, nor to This Nation in Forreign Nations, to ſee or hear, that our Spirits have neither been hurried nor ſcared by Wars, and Changes, into an Indiſpoſition or Incompoſedneſs for Works of ſuch Seriouſneſs and Retirement. What Daniel Propheſied of the Building of the Wall of Jeruſalem, whether Literal or Myſtical, is true of this Paper-Wall, (which is no Stranger to Jeruſalem) it hath been built in Troublous Times. Except the Lord build both Houſe and Wall, they labour in vain that build in Calmeſt Times; and where the Lord buildeth (though by weak and unskilful Hands) labour ſhall not be vain in Stormy Times; it ſhall neither be labour in vain, becauſe unfiniſht for uſe; nor ſhall it be labour in vain, becauſe unuſeful when 'tis finiſht. The Bleſſing of God (and without That, nothing can) delivereth all our honeſt Labours from theſe two Vanities, and his Bounty delivereth them from a Third. For while we are ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, always abounding in the Work of the Lord, as we may have a ſtrong Confidence, that our labour ſhall not be in vain to others; ſo a full Aſſurance, that it ſhall not be in vain to our ſelves. Plain-hearted Jacob, labouring in the Integrity of his Soul for Laban, only in keeping Sheep, though his Wages (as envying that he thrived ſo faſt) was changed ten times; yet he thrived the faſter; and he Who came over Jordan with his Staff, became two Bands. To be ſure, we can never want either Pay or Reward for that Work, which is a Reward, and can pay it ſelf. And though I know, (and cannot but thankefully acknowledge, Honoured Sirs) that this long continued Work hath been an occaſion of conſiderable expence to you; yet I much believe, that it will not prove any thing of loſs to any of you. There is (ſaith Solomon) that ſcattereth, and yet increaſeth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to Poverty. They that ſcatter to do Good, ſow what they ſcatter; and that which is ſown in a right Soyl, increaſeth to a Harveſt. They that with-hold what they have, more than is meet, ſhall not hold what they have, but meet with Poverty. As that which is given in Charity for the relief of the Poor, ſo that which is given in a due tempered Liberality for the uſe of the Publick, is lent to the Lord, and he will ſurely repay all that he hath borrowed. Therefore give a Portion to Seven, and alſo to Eight, (whether Indigent Perſons, or Pious Uſes) for ye know not what Evil ſhall be upon the Earth. If Evil come upon the Earth, they will be found the beſt Husbands of their Goods, who have laid up moſt in Heaven: and if Good continue upon the Earth, they will not find any miſs of what is ſo laid up. I write this, not as either fearing an Abatement of my own private Intereſt, nor as hoping or looking after an Increaſe of it: But only as a grateful Teſtimony of what ye have freely done, for the carrying on of this Work; and as an Argument, that in ſo doing, ye have not done neither unwiſely or unprofitably for your ſelves.

And for this Piece of the Work now given into your Hands, and Publiſhed to the View of others, I ſhall only ſay, That herein you have an end of the Controverſal or Diſputative Part of this Book. Job's Friends have now finiſht their laſt Reply upon him; and Job hath finiſht his laſt Anſwer to them. For though he continueth ſpeaking Five whole Chapters longer, yet he ſpeaketh rather to the General State of the Queſtion, than to any of their Particular Objections, as may appear hereafter (if God give leave) in the Explication of that large and pathetical Diſcourſe. And it was well, that his Opponents would make an end ſomewhere, and leave what they had offered to the Judgment of equal and indifferent Moderators. Which may be a juſt rebuke upon many in this Age, who will diſpute, and draw the Saw of Contention everlaſtingly; as if they thought it a Diſhonour, when they have ſaid all, to ſay no more; or were reſolved never to be ſatisfied, how much or how often ſoever they have been anſwered. Moderate and modeſt Diſputing tends to healing; but the Itch of Diſputing (which an Honourable and Learned Knight, deceaſed, would have engraven upon his Tomb-ſtone) leaves nothing but a ſcabby Soreneſs upon the minds of men, and doth rather widen differences than compoſe them. Abner (either grieved or wearied with the tedious protraction of a Civil War) called to Joab (Captain General of David's Army) Shall the Sword devour for ever? Knoweſt thou not, that it will be bitterneſs in the end? How long ſhall it be ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren? We have but too much cauſe to call and cry upon ſome Leaders in the Scholaſtical War, Shall your Tongues and Pens devour for ever? Know ye not, that it is unpleaſant to many in the way, and is like to be bitterneſs to more in the end? When will ye return from following your Brethren? Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar followed their Brother Job long, but they gave it over at laſt, and returned from following him. Though, I confeſs, there is a neceſſity of contending, and that (as the Apoſtle Jude exhorts) earneſtly, both by Speech and Pen, for the Faith once delivered to the Saints; Yet there are many contentions, which it had been well if they had never been begun, or at leaſt quickly ended. And when men revile and blaſpheme rather than argue, It is beſt to take up that Counſel which good Hezekiah gave in commandment concerning railing Rabſakeh, Anſwer them not. Solomon hath given us the full ſtate of this duty in a ſeeming contradiction, while in one verſe he forbids us to anſwer a Fool, and in the next bids us anſwer him. The Fool muſt be anſwered according to his folly, but the anſwer muſt be framed and drawn up by the ſtrength of reaſon and wiſdom; that is, the Fool muſt be made to ſee his folly, leſt he grow up and be confirmed in his opinion, that what he ſaith is true, becauſe he is not ſhewed the error of it; yet, The Fool muſt not be anſwered according to his folly, that is, if he ſpeak or write vainly and revilingly, ſhewing rather the frothineſs of his Wit, or the overflowing of his Gall, than the ſobriety and ſoundneſs of his Judgment; he that anſwers him muſt not conform either ſpeech or ſtile to his, leſt he be like unto him: The anſwer which we give to another, beareth the Image and is the meaſure of our ſelves: And our ill managing of a matter renders us as bad as others, though our opinion be better. Our Maſter Chriſt being reviled, reviled not again; we his Diſciples and followers ought to imitate him, and not to render evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwiſe to bleſs. While we are called to contending, let us do it fairly and candidly; Chriſt would have us ſhew love and tenderneſs to our Brethren, as well as zeal for him and his Truth. They cannot but do ſo, who ſtand up for Truth purely as 'tis the Truth of Chriſt, rather than as it is their own opinion. And (though I am loth to be ſuſpicious, yet) I greatly ſuſpect, that the reaſon why many caſt ſo much dirt and diſhonour upon the perſons of their Brethren, while they appear as Champions for the Truth, proceeds from a ſecret deſire to procure honour to their own perſons rather than the advancement of Truth. Peace and Truth are a bleſſed pair, and were we more for Peace we ſhould ſooner find out the Truth: But ſo long as men contend rather for a party or an opinion than for truth, rather for victory and the Maſtery than for truth, rather for honour (I had almoſt ſaid humour) and intereſt than for truth, as we are ſure not to meet with peace, ſo we are extreamly hindred and puzzl'd in ſeeking out the truth. The moſt probable way to keep down ſome ill-ſented opinions, is to lay down all diſputes about them; eſpecially, now, when moſt if not all Controverſies on foot, have been ſifted to the bran. What therefore remains but that we wait for light and conviction from Heaven, looking how the holy Spirit of Truth and Peace, will ſtate and determine thoſe points upon the Conſciences of men; And I am fully ſatisfied, that if all would ſuffer their Conſciences to anſwer and reply, rather than their conceits and parts, moſt of our diſputers in this age would (like Job's friends) diſpute no more. O that we could a while leave arguing with and anſwering one another (eſpecially railing upon and ſcoffing at one another) and fall to praying for and loving one another, according to the utmoſt tender of Goſpel-love. For as Love is the complement or fulfilling the whole Law of God, the ſcope or intentional end of the Commandment, ſo it would be the concluſion or finiſhing and determining end of all the Controverſies which ariſe or are ſtarted amongſt men. And I conceive that (in moſt Points of difference) a ſevere and Magiſterial impoſing of an Opinion upon others in way of diſpute, is as bad and as un-Goſpel-like, as to impoſe it upon any by way of Power.

Beloved and Honoured Friends, ye may perceive how far my joy, for being arrived at the end of this diſpute between Job and his friends, hath tranſported me to preſs for at leaſt an amicable carrying on, if not an end of all our diſputes; and that (as the Apoſtle adviſeth) ſpeaking the truth (and for the truth, or Truthing it) in love, we may grow up into him in all things, which is the Head even Chriſt; from whom the whole Body joyned together and compacted by that which every joynt ſupplieth, according to the effectual working of every part, maketh increaſe of the Body to the edifying of it ſelf in Love. Love is a knitting, and therefore an increaſing grace. That which uniteth many in one, muſt needs edifie that one, which is the reſult of ſuch a union. As Faith is that grace by which we conveigh and divide good among our ſelves. There is not the leaſt joynt in the myſtical Body of Chriſt, but giveth ſome ſupply to the whole, becauſe Love is the ligament of it. As we can want nothing while (as the Apoſtle Jude exhorts) we keep our ſelves in the love of God, (whether we underſtand him of the love of God to us, or of our love to God, makes no difference as to this matter) ſo we can hardly want any thing, while we keep our ſelves in the love of one another. That all who love the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in ſincerity; may, by the preſence and influence of the Spirit of love, not only keep themſelves, but increaſe in the love of God, and in the love of one another, till we are fully grown up in him in all things, which is the head even Chriſt, is the wiſh and prayer, as it ought to be the endeavour of all, of him who would

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations UPON THE TWENTY-THIRD, TWENTY-FOURTH, TWENTY-FIFTH, AND TWENTY-SIXTH, CHAPTERS Of the Book of JOB.

CHAP. XXIII. Verſ. 1, 2.

Then Job anſwered, and ſaid,

Even to day is my complaint bitter, my ſtroak is heavier then my groaning.

IN the former Chapter we we had the third and laſt charge of Eliphaz againſt Job; in this and that which followeth Job makes his reply, and defends himſelf againſt what Eliphaz had objected and charged upon him. There are two opinions concerning the tendency of this reply.

Firſt, Some interpet it in favour of Job, as if he only ſummoned his friends to the tribunal of God, being confident of a good iſſue there.

Secondly, Others interpret it as a preſumptuous ſuggeſtion againſt God himſelf, and the ſtrictneſs of his proceedings with him, which they endeavour to prove upon (as they conceive) theſe four grounds of his complaint.

Firſt, Becauſe he complained that his afflictions were beyond all his complaints; and that what he had ſaid was but little to what he felt, or to the greatneſs of his ſorrow (verſ. 1, 2.) Even to day is my complaint bitter, my ſtroak is heavier then my groaning. Theſe words are conceived, to carry in them, at leaſt, an intimation that Job thought himſelf too hardly dealt with, or that there was no juſt cauſe why he ſhould be proſecuted and proceeded againſt with ſo much ſeverity by the continued and renewed ſtroaks of God upon him. And indeed it cannot be denyed, That he (whoſoever he is) is juſtly judged as over-bold with God, who judgeth any of the dealings of God with himſelf or with any other man over-ſevere. But we ſhall find, that though Job complained often that his ſorrows (as to him) were exceeding great, yet he never complained, that (as to God) they were unjuſt.

Secondly, (Say they) becauſe he complained, that he could not get admittance unto God, nor audience with him, which was a further aggravation of his ſorrow. This he proſecutes from verſ. 3. to the end of verſ. 9. O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his ſeat; I would order my cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments; I would know the words which he would anſwer me, &c. As if (according to the ſcope of this expoſition) he had ſaid, I have waited long under my preſſures and burdens, with my petition in my hand; yea I have tendred up my petition, but as yet I can get no anſwer: Alas, I am greatly afflicted, yet ſo far from being relieved, that I cannot be heard; I would therefore get near to God, to ſpread and order my cauſe before him. To be heard and to be relieved, are often in Scripture ſence the ſame thing; and alwayes not to be heard ſignifies as much as not to be relieved. Till the Lord gives us his ear, he never gives us his hand, therefore Job muſt needs think himſelf far from being helped, while he thought that he was not heard.

Thirdly, Becauſe he complained that the Lord did thus afflict and try him, when he already knew what he was, and what he would be after his tryal by the ſoareſt afflictions; when he knew that he was innocent, and that he would continue and hold out in his innocency to the end; that he would not be weary of well doing, though under the worſt of ſufferings (verſ. 10, 11, 12.) He knoweth the way that I take, &c. As if he had ſaid, The Lord needs not do this to try me, for he knoweth well enough who I am, and the way that I go; he knoweth both the frame of my heart and the courſe of my life; he knoweth how it is with me now, and that I ſhall be found ſuch as I have often profeſſed my ſelf to be, when he hath kept me to the utmoſt of his purpoſe in this fiery furnace of affliction. When he hath tryed me I ſhall come forth as Gold; that is, when all's done, he knows that I ſhall hereafter approve my ſelf upright in heart, and that (through his grace, already beſtowed upon me) I have hitherto kept his way, and not declined nor gone back from the commandments of his lips, yea that I have eſteemed the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary food. Thus Job is conceived complaining upon this account, that he ſhould be ſo extreamly afflicted, though the Lord knew his way; and that he was both a lover of his Word, and a keeper of his Commandments, and that he would perſevere with joy in keeping them to the end, though he ſhould not ſee the expected and deſired end of thoſe ſorrows.

Fourthly, Becauſe he is conceived complaining that he found the Lord altogether inexorable, ſo that no impreſſion could be made upon him by any thing he could ſay or do to take him off from his ſeverity towards him (Verſ. 13, 14.) He is of one mind, who can turn him? (there is no dealing with God) and what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth (let it fall where and on whom it will, he will do it) for he performeth the thing that is appointed for me.

From all which Job inferreth, that he had cauſe enough to complain, much more that he did not complain without cauſe (Verſ. 15. 16, 17.) Therefore am I troubled at his preſence: when I conſider, I am afraid of him, for God makes my heart ſoft, and the Almighty troubleth me, becauſe I was not cut off before the darkneſs, neither hath he covered the darkneſs from my face. Thus you have the parts and ſcope of the whole Chapter, as 'tis ſuppoſed to be an over bold complaint in reference to the dealings of the Lord with him.

From all which 'tis concluded, that though the Chapter begins with, Then Job anſwered, and ſaid, yet, that Job doth not anſwer Eliphaz, nor apply himſelf to what he had ſaid; but that being wearied with his often repeating and renewing the ſame arguments againſt him, he doth, upon the matter, leave him and his friends, and all diſcourſe with them; turning himſelf to God, and pouring his ſorrow into his boſom; as if the anſwer were directed to God, and not at all to Eliphaz.

Sæpe antea ſtatuerat Job, ſe amicorum exacerbantibus ſermonibus defeſſum, nolle amplius cum iis differere, ſed potius cum Deo æquiſſimo judice; Nunc hoc ſuum propoſitum ad implere tentans ad Deum ſermonem dirigit, vel ad ſeipſum, i. e. ſecum ipſe ratiocinatur. Bold.

But I rather apprehend (according to the former interpretation of this reply) that Job doth here plainly hold forth an anſwer to what Eliphaz had objected or laid to his charge, and that being ſtill ſo hotly oppoſed, he doth firſt defend his own integrity in this Chapter; and that, ſecondly, in the next he overthroweth the ground or foundation upon which his friends built their general oppoſition; affirming, that there is neither any certain time nor way in which the Lord doth puniſh wicked men in this world, and that therefore no argument can be framed, or judgment given of any mans condition by his preſent ſtate, or the external diſpenſations of God towards him. Taking this ſence, we may reduce the whole Chapter to theſe two parts.

Firſt, A preface; ſecondly, The pleading it ſelf.

The preface is laid down in verſ. 2. Even to day is my complaint bitter, my ſtroak is heavier then my groaning. The pleading follows in the ſubſequent parts of the Chapter; the ſum of which may be collected into this formal Argumentation.

Ye do falſly accuſe him of wickedneſs, and hypocriſie, who is ready to plead his cauſe, and doth earneſtly deſire that he may do it before the throne of God.

But I am ready and do earneſtly deſire to plead my cauſe before the throne of God.

Therefore ye falſly accuſe me of wickedneſs and hypocriſie.

The aſſumption only of this Syllogiſme is handled in this Chapter, from the ſecond verſe to the end; in which it appears, that Job was ready not only to diſpute the point in controverſie with his friends, but was moſt willing that the Lord ſhould have the hearing of it; for ſo he ſaith, O that I knew where I might find him, that I might even come to his ſeat, I would order my cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments; that is, I would produce ſuch arguments for my ſelf, and againſt my oppoſers, as would render my cauſe juſt and innocent before God, how guilty ſoever I am found and repreſented in the opinion of men.

Thus far concerning the general ſtate of this Chapter.

I ſhall next proceed to explicate the parts and particulars of it.

Verſ. 1. Then Job anſwered, and ſaid.

Theſe words have occurr'd often before, I ſhall not ſtay upon them. But what ſaid he? And how did he anſwer?

Verſ. 2. Even to day is my complaint bitter, my ſtroak is heavier then my groaning.

Thus Job begins. This is at once his prologue to what he had to ſay, and his Apology for what he had (paſſionately) ſaid already. Even to day, or even this day. The word Day is taken either more largely for the time near at hand, or ſtrictly, for the preſent time (Pſal. 95. 8.) To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts; that is, Hear his voice this inſtant day, and harden not your hearts one day longer. Again (Deut. 4. 8.) What Nation is there ſo great that hath ſtatutes and judgments ſo righteous as all this law, that I have ſet before you this day, or at this preſent time? Jacob ſaith to Eſau (Gen. 25. 31.) Sell me this day thy birth-right; that is, let me have it now, let us ſtrike up the bargain this hour, or before we part. Thus here, To day, &c. as if Job had ſaid, O friend Eliphaz, I perceive that after all thoſe dayes of diſputation which have paſſed between us, this day is like to be ſpent and run out in as harſh cenſures on your part, and in as bitter complaints on my part, as any of the former.

Even this day is my complaint bitter.

The word rendred Complaint is tranſlated alſo ſometimes Prayer, and ſometimes Meditation (Gen. 24. 63.) Iſaac went out into the field to meditate, we put in the Margin, to pray. Hannah uſeth the ſame word (1 Sam. 1. 16.) Account not thy handmaid for a daughter of Belial, for out of the abundance of my complaint (we put in the Margin, Meditation) and grief, have I ſpoken hitherto. Many complain, who pray not; ſome pray, who complain not; and others meditate, who do neither complain nor pray: yet uſually we meditate, that we may conſider what to pray about, and in prayer pour out our complaints both about thoſe ſins and wants and mercies, which have fallen under our meditation. Even to day is my complaint

Bitter.] The Original word hath a twofold derivation, moſt render it as we, Bitter. Bitterneſs in Scripture is often uſed by a metaphor, to denote any thing which is grievous, troubleſom, afflictive, or diſtaſtful to us, becauſe bitter things are ſo to the pallate or taſte of man. Bitter things are troubleſom to ſenſe, and troubles are bitter to the Spirit. Affliction is a bitter pill; thou writeſt bitter things againſt me, ſaid Job to God before (Chap. 13. 26.) ſo that when he ſaith, my complaint is bitter, it ſounds thus much, my complaint is as great as great can be, and I have the greateſt reaſon to complain. For by complaint, we are to underſtand not only the act of complaining, but the matter upon which he did complain, or the cauſe of his complaint: As if he had ſaid, My afflictions (about which I complain) are exceeding bitter, no marvail then if my complaint be ſo too.

Aliqui deducunt à מרר quod ſignificat amaratudinē, alii à מרה denotans rebellionem ſeu contumaciam.

Secondly, The word comes from a root, ſignifying to rebel, to diſobey, to be exaſperated, or (as ſome learned in the Hebrew give it) to vary or alter the frame of a mans ſpirit ſpirit, and the diſpoſition of his mind; becauſe they who diſobey and rebel, do certainly vary and change their minds from what they ingaged to be, or profeſſed they were before; they turn aſide either from the lawful command given them, or from the promiſe and faith which they had given. So the word is uſed (1 Kings 13. 26.) Where the ſacred Hiſtory tells us of a Prophet who was ſent out upon a Meſſage by the Lord unto Jeroboam, and though he faithfully performed the Meſſage, yet hearkning to the counſel of another Prophet, he was ſlain by a Lion; Thus ſaith the Lord, for as much as thou haſt diſobeyed (or rebelled againſt) the mouth of the Lord (that is, the words that proceeded out of the mouth of the Lord) and haſt not kept the commandment which the Lord thy God commanded thee, &c. Thy carkaſs ſhall not come into the ſepulcher of thy fathers. Thus the word is tranſlated by ſome in this Text, of Job's diſobedience or rebellion; and they render the whole ſentence with an interrogation.

Etiam hoc die, contumacia (habetur) querimonia mea? Contumax eſt queſtus meus, perſtat, q. d. non paret non cedet ſolatiis veſtris. Rab. Sol.

What, is my complaint this day, accounted rebellion? As if I did contumaciouſly ſet my ſelf againſt God, while I am pouring out my ſorrows before him; whereas indeed, my complaint is rather rebellious or ſtout againſt your conſolations, it yeilds not to them, nor is at all abated by them. The way or courſe which you take to comfort me, is too weak to grapple with, much more is it too weak to conquer and ſubdue my ſorrows.

Yet further, This ſence and tranſlation of the word, may be applied to that ſpeech of Eliphaz in the former Chapter (verſ. 21.) exhorting Job to acquaint himſelf with God, and to be at peace; as if he had ſaid, Leave off thy diſtances, lay down the weapons of that moſt unholy war which thou haſt taken up againſt God. To which cloſe rebuke Job anſwers here, What? Is my complaint to God looked upon by you as a combate with God? Or do ye think that while I beg pity and favour of God, I have bid him defiance, or declared my ſelf his enemy? What elſe can be the meaning of it, that you exhort me ſo ſeriouſly to reconcile my ſelf to God? He that is called to make peace with another, is ſuppoſed to be at war with him, or at leaſt to bear him ill will. So then, according to this rendering, and interpretation of the Text, the drift of his ſpeech is to ſhew how little ground there was, yea how unjuſt it was, that he ſhould be accuſed of rebellion and contumacy againſt God, while he was only bemoaning his own ſad condition, and putting up his complaint to God. We may form up his ſence into this argumentation,

He cannot be juſtly accuſed of rebellion againſt God, who complains much, or greatly, when his grief is more or greater.
But my grief is more and greater then my complaint.
Therefore I cannot be juſtly accuſed of rebellion againſt God, becauſe I complain.

Etiam hodiè eſt (vel ſuo loco manet) exaſperatio querelæ meæ. Merc.
Quaſi ex noxio medicamine vulnus crevit, Etiam poſt tot & tanta verba veſtra, quibus ſperabam fore ut me ſolaremini augetur mea querela quia nihil eſt in veſtris verbis conſolationis. Mer.

Again, The Text is thus rendred, Even to day the ſharpneſs or bitterneſs of my complaint remaineth, or my ſorrow is as it was. I am no way eaſed, but rather more afflicted by what you have ſaid for the eaſing of my affliction. An improper plaiſter doth but enflame, not at all heal the wound. So that, as according to the former interpretation, he took off their charge of impatience, contumacy, and rebellion againſt God, according to the mind of this, he ſhews the weakneſs and inſufficiency of what they had ſpoken, as to the allay of his ſorrow, and the curing or ſatisfying of his diſtempered ſpirit. So that here he ſeems to renew and confirm that opinion which he had given of his friends in their procedure with him (Chap. 13. 4.) Ye are forgers of lyes, ye are all Phyſitians of no value: O that ye would altogether hold your peace, and it ſhould be your wiſdom. And again (Chap. 16. 2.) Miſerable comforters are ye all; Shall vain words have an end? Or what emboldneth thee that thou anſwereſt? So here, ye have done nothing yet effectually to remove my complaint: I am like a poor patient, who having been long under the Phyſitians hand, and ſuffered many painful applications, is yet as far from a cure as at the firſt hour of his undertaking. Even to day the bitterneſs the ſharpneſs of my diſeaſed mind remaineth. I have been in pain (as the Church ſpeaks, Iſa. 26. 18.) I have as it were brought forth wind. Ye have not wrought any deliverance, neither hath this inhabitant (my ſorrow) fallen by your hand.

Laſtly, Some refer theſe words to the promiſe made by Eliphaz (Chap. 22. 21.) exhorting Job to acquaint himſelf with God, &c. and ſo good ſhould come to him. But ſaith Job here, Though I am clear from what you accuſe me, and alſo have communion with God in wayes of holineſs; yet I experience no ſuch good as you promiſe. I am not brought into wayes of comfort, but rather my ſorrows encreaſe, and my complaint is as bitter this day, as ever it was.

And (as it follows in the Text)

My ſtroak is heavier then my groaning.

Non ſatis pro gravitate plagæ conquerat; Superat plaga querimoniam. Merc.
Sic ſe excuſat ab impatientia & contumacia objecta. q. d. Injuſtiſſimū eſt me à vobis accuſari quia querar de meis malis cum multo gravior ſit plaga. Manus pro plaga à manu Dei inflicta. Metonymicœs.

This he addeth as a further explication, or as a proof of the former part of the verſe; as if he had ſaid, If ye inquire why my complaint is ſo bitter, it is becauſe my ſtroak is ſo heavy, even heavier then my groaning; And why ſhould ye call my complaint rebellion, ſeeing I do not complain more, no nor ſo much as I have cauſe; my ſtroak is heavier then my groaning. Thus he is ſtill labouring to acquit himſelf of that ſo often repeated accuſation, impatience under the hand of God, and rebellion againſt him.

My ſtroak.] The Hebrew is, my hand. The hand is taken for that which was done by the hand; the inſtrument for the effect, my hand, that is, the ſtroak of the hand that is upon me; whoſe hand was that? The hand of God he means. As if it had been ſaid more expreſly, The ſtroak of the hand of God upon me is heavier then my groaning. In the former part of the verſe, he ſpake of the bitterneſs of his complaint, here of the heavineſs of his ſtroak, or that the ſtroak given him was exceeding heavy. As bitter things are grievous to the pallate, ſo heavy things are burdenſom to the whole body; We are ſoon weary of that which is very heavy. And therefore (Matth. 11. 30.) when Chriſt would convince us that we have no reaſon to be weary of that burden which he layeth upon us (his holy counſels and commandments) he ſaith, My yoke is eaſie, and my burthen light: My burdens are not like thoſe which the Phariſees bind upon you, heavy and grievous to be born, (Matth. 23. 4.) So here when Job ſaith, My ſtroak is heavy, he would have his friends know that his were (in themſelves) no light afflictions (though there is a ſence in which all the afflictions of the Saints are light, 2 Cor. 4. 17.) but grievous to be born.

Secondly, Some read the words thus, My ſtroak is heavier upon my groanings, or when I groan; as if he had ſaid, the more I groan and ſigh, the more I am wounded; I get nothing by my groanings but freſh ſmitings and additional ſorrows.

Manus mea aggravata ſuper gemitū meum, i. e. propter gemitus & planctus quos dolores extorquent, etiam vires meæ deficiunt, manuſq; laſſæ & remiſſæ vix præ imbecillitate attolli poſſunt. Sculc.

Thirdly, Others tranſlate the Hebrew word properly, not ſtroak (by a Metonimy of the effect) but hand. My hand is heavy upon (or becauſe of) my groaning; that is, my hand is weak becauſe of my groanings; a weak hand, is a heavy hand; that is heavy, which is not lifted up without difficulty. Now when the hand is weak we can hardly lift it to our head (as we ſay) the weak hand is a heavy hand, not becauſe of the weight of it, but becauſe of the weakneſs of it, or want of ſtrength to weild any thing with it, or to hold it up. In this ſence we are to underſtand Job crying out, My hand is heavy becauſe of my groaning; as if he had ſaid, My ſtrength fails me, my hands hang down, and through weakneſs I am not able to lift them up. In Chap. 4. Eliphaz told Job, that he by his good counſel had formerly ſtrengthened the weak, or the looſened hands. Which form of ſpeaking anſwers that of the Apoſtle (Heb. 12. 12.) Lift up the hands that hang down. Weakneſs is as a weight faſtned to the hand, and holding it down. The hand is never ſo much faſtned, as when it is (in this ſence) made lax or looſened. The original word here uſed intimates, that much ſorrow and trouble weigh down the hand; My hand is heavy becauſe of my groaning, or (as we read) My ſtroak is heavier then my groaning.

Thus we have Job ſtill complaining and groaning; whence was all this? Even from the ſence of his ſore afflictions. Which may teach us, Firſt, That affliction doth uſually vent it ſelf in complaints and groans.

While we are in the fleſh we are ſubject to affliction; and all affliction is grievous to the fleſh, not only to fleſh as it notes the corruption of the ſoul, but to fleſh as taken for the conſtitution of the body. Affliction will be felt; it makes the fleſh ſmart; and when the fleſh ſmarts, it may make him complain and groan who is ſpiritual; yea complaints and groans give ſome eaſe to our afflictions. As the pain of affliction cauſeth groaning and complaining, ſo groaning and complaining are ſome relief in our pains; and hence it hath been reported as one of the higheſt pieces of cruelty not to allow thoſe who have been under exquiſite pains to complain and groan; for groaning doth not at all abate the pain, yet it doth ſomewhat divert our thoughts from it; and while we communicate it to others in complaints, we are ſomewhat the leſs ſenſible of it our ſelves.

Secondly, Whereas Job checks his friends (according to the ſecond expoſition of the words) for calling or accounting his complaint rebellion.

Obſerve, That we are apt to miſunderſtand and wrongfully interpret the complaints of others.

Many are ready to miſinterpret that which we ſpeak deliberately, much more what we ſpeak paſſionately and complainingly; Job ſpake ſorrowfully, and he was preſently judged to ſpeak rebelliouſly: he was but humbling and bemoaning himſelf before God, yet he was eſteemed as a man riſing up againſt and warring with God. While Hannah was making a prayerful complaint to God, Eli a good man thought ſhe was overgone with wine (1 Sam. 1. 14.) How long wilt thou be drunk, put away thy wine from thee. When the Apoſtles were uttering the great things of God, as ſome were amazed, ſo others mocked, ſaying, Theſe men are full of new wine (Act.2.13.) There are two ſorts of words and actions moſt liable to miſ-interpretation.

Firſt, When we act or ſpeak highly in holineſs; for then the world looks upon thoſe of ſoundeſt minds, as mad, or vain, as diſtracted or drunken, theſe men (ſaith the world) are full of new wine; whereas indeed (as Peter makes anſwer in the Acts) they are not drunken, as is ſuppoſed, but filled with the Spirit. Feſtus told Paul, that he was beſide himſelf, that much learning had made him mad, when he heard the diſcourſe of his wonderful converſion to Chriſt, and holy converſation in Chriſt (Acts 26. 24.) And it ſeems that ſome among the Corinthians had no better nor other opinion of him, elſe he would not have made ſuch an Apology for himſelf and fellow ſervants in Goſpel work (2 Cor. 5. 13.) Whether we be beſides our ſelves it is to God, &c. that's a ſober madneſs indeed which is to God. But thus ſtill we ſee they who act or ſpeak higheſt in grace, are cenſured as acting and ſpeaking below nature. And as thoſe whoſe graces are moving aloft, are often ſuſpected of madneſs,

So, ſecondly, they who lye below complaining under the preſſures of nature by affliction, are as often ſuſpected of and charged with impatience. A troubled ſpirit can hardly judge aright of it ſelf, and is ſeldom rightly judged by others. I will end this point with two Cautions; the firſt, to all, concerning thoſe that are afflicted; the ſecond, to all that are afflicted.

To the former, I ſay, judge charitably of thoſe who complain bitterly; for as a man in a low condition knoweth not what himſelf would either be or do, were he advanced to the heights of honour and power; ſo he that is at eaſe, and well, knoweth not what himſelf would either be or do, were he in pain or overwhelmed with ſorrows. Extreams in any ſtate are rarely born with a well or duely tempered moderation.

Secondly, To the latter, I ſay, let them expect to hear themſelves hardly cenſured, and learn to bear it; let not ſuch think ſtrange of their ſufferings, either under the hand of God, or by the tongues of men. Great ſufferers ſpeak often unbecomingly, and are as often ſo ſpoken of.

Thirdly, Foraſmuch as the matter of this ſuggeſtion againſt Job, tumultuous and rebellious ſpeeches, at leaſt ſpeeches ſavouring ſtrongly of rebellion, are incident to any godly man in Job's condition,

Obſerve, There may be rebellion againſt God in a good mans complainings under the afflicting hand of God.

An unquiet ſpirit is not only a great burden to man, but a diſhonour to God. Our diſſatisfaction with the dealings of God, carrieth in it (at leaſt an implicit) accuſation of him, or that God hath not done well becauſe it is ill (to ſenſe) with us. There is a rebellion againſt the Rod as well as againſt the Word of God. For as our ſtruggling and ſtriving with the Word of God, and the unquietneſs of our hearts under any truth when it takes hold of us, is rebellion againſt God; ſo to ſtrive, and ſtruggle with the Rod of God, or with the croſs that he layes upon us, is rebellion againſt him alſo. God ſpeaks to us by his Rod as well by his Word; and we ſpurn at God in wrangling with his Rod, as well as in wrangling with his Word. Yea to have hard thoughts of God, as that he is ſevere, and rigorous, that he hath put off his bowels of compaſſion towards us, and forgotten to be gracious; ſuch thoughts as theſe of God under affliction, are rebellious thoughts. And as there is a rebellion in the thoughts againſt God in caſe of affliction, ſo alſo in the Tongue. Thus, to murmur is to rebel: I do not ſay that all complaining is rebelling, but all murmuring is; we may complain, and tell the Lord how ſad it is with us, how much our ſouls, our bodies, our eſtates, our relations bleed and ſmart. We may complain, and make great complaints without ſin, but the leaſt murmuring is ſinful, yea in the very nature of it, ſo full of ſin, that it uſually and deſervedly paſſeth under the name of Rebellion. The children of Iſrael were as often charged with rebellion as with murmuring; and therefore when they murmured for want of water, Moſes ſaid unto them, Hear now ye rebels, muſt we fetch you water out of this Rock? (Numb. 20. 10.) And again, Moſes chargeth this upon them with his laſt breath (as it were) Deut. 31. 27. I know thy rebellion and thy ſtiff neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious againſt the Lord, and how much more after my death? yea the Lord himſelf chargeth rebellion upon that unparalleld pair of Brethren, Moſes and Aaron themſelves, becauſe they had not ſo fully as they ought at all times and in all things ſubmitted unto his divine diſpenſations among that people, (Numb. 24.) The Lord ſpake to Moſes, ſaying, Aaron ſhall be gathered unto his people, for he ſhall not enter into the Land which I have given unto the children of Iſrael, becauſe ye (the Lord puts them both together in the ſin) rebelled againſt my word at the waters of Meribah.

Fourthly, Whereas Job ſaith, Even to day my complaint is bitter, Obſerve, The afflictions and ſorrows of ſome eminently godly, ſtick by them, or continue long upon them.

It is with afflictions as with diſeaſes, there are ſome acute diſeaſes, ſharp and fierce for a while, but they laſt not, they are over in a few dayes; for either the diſeaſe departs from the man, or the man departs out of the world by the fierceneſs of his diſeaſe. There are alſo Chronical diſeaſes, laſting, lingring diſeaſes, that hang about a man many dayes, yea months and years, and will not be gone while he lives, but lie down in the grave with him. Such a difference we find among thoſe other afflictions and troubles which are not ſeated (as diſeaſes) in the body, but reach the whole eſtate of man. Some are acute and ſharp, like the fierce fits of a Fever, but they laſt not; or like Summers ſudden ſtorms, which are ſoon followed with a ſucceſſion of fair weather. But there are alſo Chronical afflictions, tuff and unmoveable troubles, which abide by us, which dwell with us day after day, year after year, and never leave us while we live, or till we leave the world. Many a good man hath carried his affliction with him to the grave. If any ſhall object, how then is that of David true (Pſal. 30. 5.) Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning; I anſwer, firſt, That Scripture ſpeaks of that which is often experienced, but not alwayes; ſecondly, It is moſt true alſo that all our weeping is but for a night, yea but for a moment (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Cor. 4. 17.) compared with that morning of joy when the day of our bleſſed eternity ſhall begin. Thirdly, The Pſalm hath this ſcope chiefly, to ſhew, that the troubles of the Saints are not everlaſting, not that they are never laſting; or to ſhew that the night of weeping ſhall at laſt conclude in a morning of joy to the godly, not that their night of weeping ſhall preſently conclude. For as ſome have only a Summers night, or a ſhort night of ſorrow, ſo others have a Winters night, or a long night of ſorrow. And this night of ſorrow, may be as long not only as many natural dayes or as ſome years, but as long as all the natural dayes and years of this preſent life. The morning of joy is not to be underſtood of the next morrow after the ſorrow began, for how long ſoever our weeping continues, it is night with us, and whenſoever joy comes (though at midnight) 'tis morning with us. For ſure enough as thoſe ſons of pleaſure are deſcribed (Iſa. 56. 12.) promiſing themſelves the continuance of their joy (To morrow ſhall be as this day, and much more abundant, therefore come fetch wine and let us drink to day, there will be wine enough for to morrow too; thus they promiſed themſelves that their pleaſures ſhould continue in a ſucceſſion of many morrows. Now as theſe ſons of pleaſure promiſed themſelves the continuance of their delight) ſo many of the ſons and daughters of ſorrow have found and ſtill find a continuance of their troubles, and have cauſe to ſay, this day is even as bad as yeſterday was; yea our bitter cup, our wine of aſtoniſhment is much more abundant, our ſorrow is greater this day then it was yeſterday, that was a black ſad gloomy day, and this is a day more black, ſad, and gloomy then that was.

Fifthly, From theſe words, My ſtroak is heavier then my groaning, > Obſerve, That the afflictions of ſome of the precious ſervants of God, exceed, and ſurpaſs all their complaints and groans.

The groans of ſome are heavier then their ſtroak, and the ſtroaks of not a few are heavier then their groans. Some ſhew more ſorrow then they have, and others have more ſorrows then they can ſhew. I, ſaith Job, cannot tell you, no not ſo much as by the language of my groaning, how heavy my ſtroak is. As there is a peace of God, a peace which he giveth to many of his people in this life, which paſſeth all underſtanding (Phil. 4. 6.) they have a ſence of ſuch peace ſometimes upon their ſpirits as their underſtandings know not what to make of it, they are ſo far from being able to tell you what it is, that they are not able to conceive what it is; but muſt confeſs that their peace is greater and larger then their underſtanding. Now (I ſay) as the peace which God gives his paſſeth their underſtandings, ſo the troubles and ſorrows of many who are dear to God, exceed, or ſurpaſs all their expreſſions, they cannot declare, nor can any for them, how it is with them. Again, as there is in this life a joy in believing, which is unſpeakable (1 Pet. 1. 8.) ſo there is a ſorrow in ſuffering which is unſpeakable. And (which is very wonderful) theſe two meet ſometimes in the ſame perſon, who at the very inſtant while his ſorrow is ſo great that he is not able to expreſs it, hath alſo ſweet and raviſhing joyes beyond expreſſion. Yet I conceive (as to Job's caſe) his ſpirit was dark, and his mind troubled, as well as his body was pained, and his outward eſtate torn and ruin'd.

Sixthly, From theſe words, My ſtroak is heavier then my groaning, > Obſerve, That, it is ſinful to groan and complain beyond the ſtroak that is upon us, or to complain more then we have cauſe.

Job ſeems here to yield it, and confeſs, that if his ſtroak had not been ſo heavy, his groans had not been innocent; and if it be ſinful to groan, and complain more, or beyond our ſtroaks, how ſinful is it to complain without any ſtroak at all? Some complain without cauſe, and groan before they are ſmitten; yea, ſome are ready to complain when they are incompaſſed about with many mercies, and are not ſatisfied when they are filled; they complain, becauſe they have not what they would, or becauſe others have more then they, though themſelves have enough, if they knew what is enough. The Ox and Aſs are a rebuke to ſuch; for as Job ſpeaketh (Chap. 6.) Will the Aſs bray when he hath graſs, or loweth the Ox over his fodder? Irrational creatures will not complain when they have the conveniences of nature. Surely then thoſe men act much below grace, who complain when they have food convenient, and health convenient, yea all things convenient (poſſibly aboundant) for the ſupport of nature; who complain when they have not ſo much as an aking joynt about them, or the ſcratch of a pin, no nor the want of a pin, nor of a ſhoo-latchet. Some complain when they have meat enough, becauſe they have not ſauce; yea ſome complain when they have both meat and ſauce enough, the affluence of all things, not only for neceſſity but for delight. What ſhall we ſay of them who are never well neither full nor faſting; who are ſo far from having learned the Apoſtles leſſon to be content in all eſtates, that they are content in none. The people of Iſrael murmured not only when they wanted bread, but when they had it; when they had Mannah they murmured for Quailes, and at laſt they murmured at their very Mannah, their ſouls loathed that light bread. Conſider how great their ſin is, who complain upon ſuch terms as theſe, who complain before they are hurt, yea who complain when they have no cauſe but to be very thankful. We live in complaining times, many cry out of preſſures and burthens, nothing pleaſeth many among us, becauſe every thing is not as they pleaſe. Take heed your groanings be not heavier then your ſtroak, eſpecially take heed ye be not found groaning without a ſtroak, and complaining over your bleſſings; the Lord hath healed our ſtroaks in a great degree, but our complainings are not healed; if we be found complaining when we have no cauſe, or when we ſhould be giving thanks, we may quickly provoke God to give us cauſe enough of complaining. God hath heavier ſtroaks for them, whoſe groaning is heavier then their ſtroak; and he hath heavieſt ſtroaks for them, who groan when they are not ſtricken. When children cry for nothing, they are uſually made to feel ſomething which will make them cry to purpoſe. This humour is childiſh enough in children, it is worſe in men, but it is worſt of all in Chriſtians, who are alſo the children of God. There are two things which God will not bear in his; firſt, When they grow wanton with a mercy; ſecondly, When they complain without a croſs. To complain under a croſs, is to act below grace; to complain of a croſs, is to act againſt grace; to complain beyond a croſs, is a defect of grace; but to complain without a croſs, is a defect in nature.

The Apoſtles rule is (1 Theſ. 5. 18.) in every thing give thanks, and he gives his reaſon for it in the words which follow, for this is the will of God in Chriſt Jeſus concerning you. Now, if it be the will of God that we ſhould give thanks in every thing, then it muſt be againſt his will that we ſhould complain in any thing. Complaining is contrary to thanks-giving. A godly man may ſee two things in the heavieſt ſtroaks of his affliction, which may provoke him to thankſgiving, at leaſt, which may ſtop him from all immoderate complaining; Firſt, That God hath a reſpect to his good in his heavieſt afflictions, and that the iſſue ſhall certainly be good to him. Secondly, That how heavy ſo ever his ſtroak is, his ſin hath deſerved a heavier, even his little finger heavier upon him, then his loyns have been. That our ſtroak might have been heavier may ſtop our complaining; but that our heavieſt ſtroak ſhall turn to our benefit, ſhould ſtir us up to thankſgiving: In Heaven there will not be the leaſt ſhadow of a cauſe to complain; thankſgiving will be all our work, and the work of all in Heaven; and by how much we are the more in thankſgiving and the leſs in complaining on Earth (unleſs it be of and againſt our ſelves for ſin) the more heavenly we are. When we are ſtricken we ſhould complain as little as we can, and we ſhould alwayes be able to ſay (as Job here) That our complaint is not greater then our ſtroak.

VERS. 3, 4, 5.

Oh that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his ſeat:

I would order my cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments.

I would know the words which he would anſwer me, and underſtand what he would ſay unto me.

JOB having ſhewed in the former verſe, how bitter and how ſad his Condition was, even far beyond his own Complaint, and that his ſtroak was heavier then his groaning; he now turns himſelf from Earth to Heaven, from the Creature to the Creator, from man to God. Job had been among his friends a great while, they had debated the matter long, but all in vain, and without fruit to his ſoul; he had yet received no Comfort: What will he do next? See here his addreſs to God.

Verſ. 3. O that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his ſeat:

O that I knew!] The Hebrew is, who will give me to know, &c. The words are a form of wiſhing, ordinary among the Jews; Who will give, or who will grant me this or that; O that I knew! &c. And it intimates or implies two things.

Firſt, A vehement and ſtrong deſire after ſomewhat much deſirable; who will give me this? Or where ſhall I have it?

Secondly, It implies ſelf-inability, or ſelf-inſufficiency to attain and reach the thing deſired; as if Job had ſaid, I am not able of my ſelf to find him, O that I knew where I might find him! O that I either had the light of this knowledge in my ſelf, or that ſome body would enform and teach me! O that I had a friend to Chalk me out the way, to lead me by the hand, and bring me near to God.

Quis mihi tribuat ut cognoſcam & inveniā illum. Vulg.

The Vulgar Latine Reading fixeth both thoſe acts upon God as the object; O that ſome one or other would give me to know and find him! As if his wiſh and longing deſire were, firſt, to know God; ſecondly, to find him, or in finding to know him. Our tranſlation determines this knowing in Job, and finding upon God. O that I knew where I might find him! Who it is that Job would find is not expreſt in the Text by name, nor is there any Antecedent in the verſe before, with which we can Connect this Relative him. Yet 'tis beyond queſtion or diſpute that he means God, O that I might find him! that is, God. But why did he not ſay, O that I knew where to find God, but, O that I knew where to find him? I anſwer, He doth it becauſe his heart being full of God, he ſuppoſed that thoſe to whom he ſpake had their hearts full of him too, and ſo would eaſily underſtand whom he meant, or that he could mean none but God.

We find ſuch kind of abrupt ſpeeches (as I may call them) in other Texts of Scripture, ſtill ariſing from fulneſs and ſtrength of affection in the ſpeaker. See how Solomon begins his Love-ſong, his Song of Songs. The Song of Songs which is Solomons, that's the Title of it; how doth it begin? Let him kiſs me, &c. Here is a ſtrange Exordium to a Song, none having been ſpoken of before; Let him kiſs me with the kiſſes of his mouth! by whom the Church would be kiſſed ſhe expreſſeth not; but her heart was ſo full of Chriſt, ſo full of love to Chriſt her Bridegroom, her Husband, that ſhe thinks it needleſs to mention him by Name, when ſhe ſpeaks of him whoſe kiſſes ſhe deſired. Her love had paſſed through the whole Creation, through men and Angels, through all things here below, and fixt it ſelf only upon Chriſt her Lord and Love. Therefore ſhe never ſtood ſpeaking perſonally of him, but only relatively, and leaves all to underſtand whom ſhe intended. Thus ſaith Job, O that I knew where I might find him! whenas he had not ſpoken of any diſtinct perſon before in this Chapter. And we have a like paſſage flowing from a like abundant love to Chriſt, in John 20. v. 15. where Mary comes to the Sepulchre (Chriſt being riſen) and the Angel ſeeing her weep asked her the reaſon of it; to whom ſhe replied, Becauſe they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him; having thus ſaid, ſhe turned her ſelf back, and ſaw Jeſus ſtanding, and knew not that it was Jeſus: he ſaith unto her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? Whom ſeekeſt thou? She ſuppoſing him to be the Gardiner, ſaid, Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid him. She never names Chriſt, but only ſaith, If thou have born him hence, &c. becauſe her heart was full of Chriſt, ſhe thought his heart was full of him too, and that he underſtood her well enough whom ſhe meant, though ſhe ſaid not whom ſhe meant. Thus in the preſent Text, Job was to God at that time, as Mary to Chriſt, at a loſs for him, not knowing where to find him, God was as it were removed from him, as Chriſt was riſen from the Sepulchre; therefore he complainingly and affectionately enquires; O that I knew where I might find him! My ſoul is a thirſt for God, my heart pants after him, O that I knew Verbum מצא ſignificat ſæpius obviā habere quēquam vel alicui obviū fieri.

Where I might find him!] The Hebrew word ſignifieth to find, by going out to meet a man, or (as we ſay) to light upon him. As Ahab ſaid to Elijah (1 Kings 21. 20.) haſt thou found (or met) me O mine enemy? And he anſwered, I have found (or met) thee. So the word is uſed (2 Kings 10. 13.) Jehu met with the Brethren of Ahaziah King of Judah; in the Margin we ſay, Jehu found the Brethren of Ahaziah, that is, he met them upon the way, for he went out to meet them. Read alſo (1 Sam. 10. 3.) as if the ſence were thus given, O that I knew where I might find him! that is, whither I might go to meet him; though I ſhould not find him by accident, or (as we ſay) ſtumble upon him, I would go out, I would travel, and take pains upon hopes to meet him.

Secondly, That word ſignifies ſo to find as to take hold and apprehend, to take faſt hold of a thing; and then, O that I might find him! is, O that I might lay hold on him! if I knew where I might have him, I would lay faſt hold on him, and cleave cloſe to him. So the word is uſed (Iſa. 10. 10.) As my hand hath found the Kingdoms of the Idols, and whoſe graven Images did excel them of Jeruſalem and Samaria. Thus ſpake the proud Aſſyrian, my hand hath found them; why, the Kingdoms of the Heathen were not in a corner, that he had need to ſearch after them, he did not make a new diſcovery of thoſe Kingdoms; they were not, Terra incognita, an unknown or a New found Land, that's not the meaning; but when he ſaith, my hand hath found them, the ſence is, I have laid hold on them, and ſiezed them to my own uſe, I have added them to my own dominion, and brought them under my ſubjection. So in verſ. 4. of that Chapter, My hand hath found as a neſt the riches of the people; that is, I have laid hold on their riches, and ſaid all's mine; I have taken the whole neſt with all the eggs, all their goods and treaſures, into my cuſtody and poſſeſſion. Thus Job would find God that he might lay hold on him for his own, or own him as his. Thus alſo the word is uſed (Pſal. 21. 8.) Thine hand ſhall find out all thine Enemies, thy right hand ſhall find out thoſe that hate thee. It is not meant only of a diſcovery of a perſon (though it be a truth, that the Lord will diſcover all that are his Enemies) but thine hand ſhall find them out, is, it ſhall take hold of them, graſp them, and arreſt them. Thy hand ſhall find out all thine Enemies, though cloſe, though covert Enemies, not only thy above-ground Enemies, but thy under-ground Enemies, as well thoſe that undermine thee, as thoſe that aſſault thee. Once more, in Pſal. 116. v. 3. we have an illuſtration of this ſence, The ſorrows of death compaſſed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me. The Hebrew Text is, the pains of hell found me: the pains of hell, that is, the greateſt, the extreameſt pains, gat hold upon me; they found me, that is, they ſiezed upon me, and held me faſt: a word of the ſame root is uſed in both parts of that Text; that which we tranſlate to get hold, is the ſame with that, I found trouble and ſorrow, they found me and I found them; thus ſaith Job, O that I knew where I might find him, that I might take hold of him; why how doth the hand of a Saint find God? How doth he take hold of and apprehend God? How doth he as it were arreſt him and keep him cloſe? I anſwer, By faith, and reliance upon him; O that I knew where to find him! that the Lord might not be at ſuch a diſtance from me, as he hath been, but that I finding him might fix my ſoul upon him. That's a good ſence.

Yet I conceive in this place, we may rather expound Job ſpeaking of God after the manner of Magiſtrates among men, who appoint certain places where to ſit in Judgment, where to hear Cauſes, whither all that are wronged and oppreſſed reſort for relief and right (1 Sam. 7. 17.) Samuel was the chief Magiſtrate, the Judge in Iſrael. Now the Text ſaith at verſ. 16. that he went from year to year in Circuit (as we have the Judges of the Circuit) To Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpah, and Judged Iſrael in all thoſe places, and returned to Ramah, for there was his houſe, and there he Judged Iſrael; as if he had ſaid, his ſtanding houſe was at Ramah, and thither all cauſes were brought, and all perſons grieved reſorted for Juſtice in their ſeveral caſes. He rid Circuit every year, that all the people might the more eaſily find him; yet he had a fixed ſeat. In alluſion to this practice Job appealing from his friends to God ſaith, O that I knew where I might find him, and go to him for Judgment; O that I might have Audience before him in this great buſineſs!

But it may be ſaid, Did not Job know where to find God? Or was Job out of the preſence of God?

I anſwer, the Lord carried himſelf to Job at that time as a ſtranger, and though he were with him (as he alwayes is with all his) yet he did not find him; the Lord is with many of his people when they are not with him, that is, when they do not find him, or are not ſenſible of his preſence. God is with his people, even when they walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, yet they are not alwayes with God: yea God doth not alwayes manifeſt himſelf to them while they walk in the moſt delicious and lightſom paradiſes of this life. God ſometimes hides himſelf, ſo that they cannot make it out that God is preſent with them. God is never ſeen in regard of the inviſibility of his nature, and he is often unſeen in regard of the obſcurity of his diſpenſations: as Job ſhews further at *verſ.*8. Behold I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him. I go forward and backward, that is, I go every way, I take all courſes to find him, but I cannot perceive God, for he hides and covers himſelf with clouds, that our prayers cannot come at him; as the Church complains (Lam. 3.44.) Though we are alwayes preſent to God, yet God is not alwayes preſent to us, that is, to our apprehenſion; as God is not at all preſent to our ſenſe, ſo he is not alwayes preſent to our faith; that's the meaning of Job, when he ſaith, I go forward, but he is not there, &c. God is every where; whither can I go from his preſence (ſaith David, Pſal.139.) If I go up into Heaven, he is there, &c. yet ſaith Job, if I go forward, he is not there, that is, I have no enjoyment of God there; and upon this ground he ſaith in the preſent Text, O that I knew where I might find him! Job was well acquainted with the doctrine of Gods Omnipreſence, he was far from thinking that there was any certain place where God was fixt, and whither he muſt repair, as to the Kings and Princes of this world for help. Job knew better Divinity then this, he was acquainted with the nature and divine perfections of God; but he ſpeaks as to his preſent want, O that I knew where I might find him!

Whatſoever, or whomſoever he finds, he thinks he hath found nothing, or no body, till he finds God; O that I might find him! How doth David (Pſal.42.1,2.) ſhew his unſatisfiedneſs till he found God. As the hart panteth after the water Brooks, ſo panteth my ſoul after thee, O God; my ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God; when ſhall I come and appear before God? Nothing but God was in his mouth, nothing in his deſire; David had a Kingdom, David had a Throne, David had honour and riches as much as he could deſire, why would not theſe ſatisfie his thirſt? Could not he ſit down in theſe enjoyments? No! David was hungry and thirſty, and pining, and empty, and ſtarving, and dying, till he had God, till he had this ſpecial enjoyment of God; for ſo we are to expound that Text, as this. A wicked man can take up on this ſide God, cares not to find him, nay, is afraid to be found of him; he then ſaith (according to the Text touched before) as Ahab to Elijah, Haſt thou found me O mine enemy? He would be glad if God would never find him, nor he find God (*Pſal.*10.4.) The wicked through the pride of his Countenance will not ſeek after God. The ſeat of pride is in the heart, but the proſpect of pride is in the face; through the pride of his Countenance, that is, by reaſon of that pride which doth diſcover it ſelf in his Countenance, which breaks out there, he will not ſeek after God, his pride will not let him ſeek after God. He that is proud, ſeeth not his need of God; and he that ſeeth not his need of God will never ſeek after him. Such a one is ſo far from longing after God, or ſaying, O that I might know where I might find him! that he will not ſo much as look after him, when he is told where he may be found. And not only ſo, but, God is not in all his thoughts; or as ſome render it, all his thoughts are, there is no God; yea not only are all his thoughts, but all his hopes are, that there is no God; if he can but ſtrengthen himſelf in the unbelief of a God, then he is well; all the thoughts and hopes that pleaſe and delight him, are that there is no God, ſo far is he from being ſolicitous to know God. 'Tis a condition equally ſad, either when all a mans thoughts are, that there is no God, or when God is not in all his thoughts. A wicked man may talk of God ſometimes, but God never comes near his heart, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Jer. 12.2.) Thou art near in their mouth, but far from their reins; that is, from their deſires and delights. 'Tis what our reins ſay, not what our mouths ſay, that God reſpects. A godly mans chief care is to be accepted with God, his thoughts are for God, and of God; and were it not for this thought that God is, or that there is a God, and he a holy God, a juſt God, a gracious God, he would not think himſelf (as we ſay) worth the ground he goes upon. And as all his thoughts are that there is a God, ſo all his hope and faith is in him, and his deſires are after him; O that I might find him, enjoy him, graſp him, take hold on him, who is The All of my deſires, and hopes, and thoughts.

Secondly obſerve, That a godly man is ſometimes at a loſs for God, and cannot tell where to find him.

He hath no ſenſibly-ſpiritual enjoyment of him. The children of light often walk in darkneſs; they who fear the Lord much, may be without the feelings of his love; and they who obey his holy Commandments, without the comfort of his precious promiſes. Even Chriſt himſelf was at ſuch a loſs for God, when he cryed out, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? (Pſal.22.1.) Chriſt being to ſuffer for ſinners, taſted of all thoſe ſorts of ſufferings which are due to ſin; he endured not only the puniſhment of ſenſe in the pains of his body, but the puniſhment of loſs in the hidings of his fathers comfortable preſence from his ſoul. If this were done to the green tree, much more to the dry; and if our head found an interruption of the preſence of God, much more may we, who are his members.

Thirdly obſerve, That while Saints are at a loſs for God, their deſires are often more quicker and more ſtirring after God.

It is a ſad thing not to find God, but it is far ſadder to have no deſires after him: Unbelievers are alwayes at a loſs for God, they live without God in the world, ſuch a life is a very death; but this is more deadly, that they have no deſires after God, that they make no enquiry, no ſearch after him. Though Job were at a loſs for God, yet his heart was full of deſires to find him; and God (I may ſay) is moſt deſireable to Saints while they are at a loſs for him. Thus the Spouſe ſpeaks (Cant. 3.1.) By night on my bed I ſought him whom my ſoul loveth; I ſought him, but I found him not. But becauſe ſhe found him not, when ſhe ſought him, did ſhe give over ſeeking him? No, her deſires of ſeeking and finding him were enflamed by her not finding him when ſhe ſought him; as it follows in verſ. 2. I will riſe now, and go about the City, in the ſtreets, and in the broad wayes, I will ſeek him whom my ſoul loveth: I ſought him, but I found him not. Thus her ſecond labour in ſeeking of him was loſt alſo. But doth not this quite diſcourage her, and kill her deſires after him? Will ſhe not now give over ſeeking him? No not yet (verſ. 3.) The watchmen that go about the City found me, to whom I ſaid, ſaw ye him whom my ſoul loveth? She is ſtill enquiring and ſeeking, and as laſt ſhe found (verſ. 4.) It was but little that I paſſed from them, but I found him whom my ſoul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, &c. Many who enjoy Chriſt have not ſuch ſtrong deſires after him as they who enjoy him not; as it is with other mercies, ſo with this, which is the higheſt and chiefeſt, the ſum of all mercies, the enjoyment of God; our deſires to him grow quicker upon his abſence, and we ſeldom prize his preſence as we ought, till he is departed or withdrawn from us.

Again, we may conſider Job here in a very afflicted condition, what doth he now? O that I knew where I might find him!

Fourthly note, God is moſt ſweet to an afflicted ſoul.

The preſence of God is ſweet, precious, and delicious to Saints at all times; but then ſweeteſt when they find moſt bitterneſs in the world. How pleaſant is the love of God when we are ſenſible of mans hatred? Some good men have ſo much ſweetneſs and love in the world, that they cannot ſo well reliſh or taſte the ſweetneſs of the love of God; though indeed nothing argues the excellency of the ſpirit of a Saint, then this, that the ſence of the love of God to him, takes off the reliſh of all creature love, in the midſt of his higheſt enjoyments of it. That ſoul is purely ſpiritual, which having abundance of worldly enjoyments, riches, friends, relations, all that he can deſire; yet in the affluence and higheſt float of all theſe can ſay, that the ſweetneſs which he taſteth in God drowns the reliſh of all theſe, and makes them as taſtleſs as the white of an Egg in compariſon of that ſweetneſs which he hath taſted in the goodneſs of God; this is ſpiritualneſs in the very height of it; but uſually God is then ſweeteſt to us when the world is bittereſt to us. Afflicted ſouls make moſt haſt after God; and it is well to do ſo; it is a very ſad ſign, the worſt ſymptom that can appear upon the ſouls of any, when afflictions draw them off from God, or when they grow cold in their affections towards God, while the love of the world grows cold towards them. The Prophet (Amos 6. 7.) foreſheweth a very great calamity that ſhould fall upon the people of God; Thou ſhalt go captive with the firſt that go captive, &c. And in verſ. 8. The Lord God hath ſworn by himſelf, ſaith the Lord the God of hoſts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his Palaces (As if he had ſaid, though I have inveſted him with excellent priviledges, and though he make a great profeſſion of my name, yet becauſe of his provocations and unworthy walkings) I will deliver up the City and all that is therein, there's Captivity: then comes Peſtilence in verſ. 9. And it ſhall come to paſs, that if ten men remain in the houſe, that they ſhall dye; and they ſhall not bury them after the ordinary way, but burn them, and the neareſt relations ſhall do it (Verſ. 10.) And a mans Uncle ſhall take him up, and he that burneth him, to bring the bones out of the houſe, and ſhall ſay unto him that is by the ſides of the houſe, is there yet any with thee? and he ſhall ſay, no: then ſhall he ſay, hold thy tongue, for we may not make mention of the Name of the Lord. As if when all theſe Evils and Plagues were come upon them, they had been ſtopt or reſtrained from prayer, and totally withdrawn from God, by ſome prohibition from men, who were ſo far from calling the people to ſolicite God by prayer to take off his hand, that they forbid them ſo much as make mention of his name; as if they were either afraid or abhorred to mention the name of God, becauſe he had been ſo terrible among them in his Judgments. And whereas we tranſlate, We may not make mention of the names of the Lord; Our late Annotators take notice of two other readings. We have not, or, we will not make mention of the name of the Lord; implying that the ſtop lay only in their own ſpirits, they being either ſo generally wicked, that they had no mind to call upon God, or ſo unbelieving that they thought their caſe deſperate, and had no hope of help if they ſhould. A Heathen hath ſaid, That their gods were moſt worſhipped when moſt diſpleaſed; but we have ſome Chriſtians in name who will not worſhip God at all when they are under the tokens of his diſpleaſure. Thoughts of God are never more pleaſing to a gracious heart, nor more troubleſom to a wicked, then when they are in trouble.

Fifthly, (Which will further clear what was laſt obſerved)

Obſerve, That, The unkindneſs and trouble which a godly man findeth among his friends or others in the world, drives him nearer to God.

Job beſides the hardſhip he found from ſtrangers, had been hardly uſed by his friends. The uſe which he made of all this, was to make more uſe of or to get near unto God. O that I knew where I might find him. This was David's wiſdom alſo (Pſal. 142. 4, 5.) I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man would know me, refuge failed me, no man cared for my ſoul. When all ſlighted him, when none took care of him; what doth he in this caſe? The next words tells us what; I cryed unto thee, O Lord, I ſaid thou art my refuge, and my portion in the land of the living; as if he had ſaid, upon theſe unkindneſſes, diſreſpects and ſlightings which I found in the world, I took occaſion, yea I was ſtirred in my ſpirit to cry unto thee, O Lord, and to ſay, thou art my refuge, that is, then I made thee my refuge more then ever. Having made thee my choice in my beſt times, when men honoured and embraced me, I am much encouraged in theſe evil times when men regard me not, and the more becauſe they regard me not to make thee my refuge, to ſhelter my weather beaten ſelf in thy name and power. As the natural ſpirits in the body, when the Air is very ſharp, cold, and unkind to the outward parts, retire inwards, reſort to the heart, keep cloſe to the heart; whereas in warmer weather the ſpirits are drawn forth, and therefore we are more ſubject to faintings and ſwoonings in hot weather then in cold: ſo when it is cold weather in the world, when it is as it were froſt and ſnow, ſtorm and tempeſt, then our ſpiritual ſpirits reſort and come in to God, and keep cloſe to him. When we have moſt friends in the world, or when the world is moſt friendly unto us, then God is our beſt friend; his favour is the moſt beneficial and deſirable favour, when we have as much as we can deſire of favour among men. But when the world hates us and frowns upon us, eſpecially when (as the Prophet ſpeaks of ſome, Iſa. 66. 5.) Our brethren hate us, and caſt us out for the name ſake of God himſelf, ſaying, let the Lord be glorified. When 'tis thus with us (I ſay) our ſouls are even forced into the preſence of God, to renew our intereſts in his love, and to aſſure our ſouls that we are accepted with him. If under ſuch meaſure from men, we find not help in God, we muſt remain for ever miſerable. God alone is enough, all without God is nothing to a godly man. The fulneſs of the creature without God cannot ſatisfie him, and the utmoſt want of the creature cannot diſcontent him while he enjoyeth God; the more he wants in the creature, the more he ſeeketh his content in God; and when he finds nothing below, he cryeth out with greateſt earneſtneſs, O that I knew where I might find him! whoſe throne is above, and who is the only happineſs of man while he is below.

Sixthly, We ſee how inquiſitive Job was after God, as he had a deſire and mind to find God, ſo he layes about him for Information where and how to find him.

Hence obſerve, They who truly deſire to find God, are diligent in ſearching after him.

O that I knew (ſaith Job) where I might find him! This was not an Idle wiſh; many are much in the Optative mood, full of wiſhings and wouldings; but their wiſhes are altogether wiſhes, and their deſires nothing but deſires; and ſuch deſires are killing deſires, as Solomon hath taught us, The deſire of the ſloathful killeth him (Prov. 21. 25.) an idle deſire is a death to the deſirer; a godly mans deſires are active deſires, they put him upon enquiry, lead him to the means of enjoying the good deſired. And though God be unexpectedly found of ſome that ſeek him not, yet no man can expect to find God, but he that ſeeketh him. And indeed what ſhould the Creature do, but be upon an enquiry after God? There is a naturality in it, he being the ſupreme being, that we who have our being from him ſhould ſeek after him. And the Apoſtle tells us (Acts 17. 26, 27.) that this is the deſign of God in making of one blood all Nations of men, for to dwell on the face of the earth; and in determining the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation (namely) That they ſhould ſeek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us, for in him we live, &c. The Lord is near all, he hath a preſence in all places, with all perſons; but the Lord would have all ſeek, feel, grope after him, even as ſuch as have but a dim light of him, as thoſe have that do not ſeek ſo much with their eyes as with their hands, they only feel after the things which they would have. There is a light in the ſpirits of all men, that haply they may feel after God, and find him; they who have not Scripture light, Goſpel light, the higheſt light, yet have ſome kind or degree of light; they have ſome glimmering, though no clear diſcernings. And that ſhould put them on to ſeek God; much more ſhould they ſeek after him, who have cleareſt light. And where there is any heat of affection to God, a little light will ſerve them to ſeek after him; they that are true deſirers will be diligent ſeekers. And they, who ſeeking God, have found him, will ſeek him yet again, yea they will ſeek him more and more, as long as there is any thing more of God to be found; and there will alwayes be more of God to be found, for here we know God but in part, and therefore have found him but in part; and hence it is that all the Saints in this life, or on this ſide glory, even they of the higheſt form and greateſt proficiency in grace and knowledge, are called Seekers (this is the generation of them that ſeek him, Pſal. 24. 6.) but not ſuch ſeekers (as we find too many in theſe dayes) who, as if all were upon uncertainties in religion, ſay, they have as yet found nothing; for as there is ſomething wherein the moſt knowing and ſtrongeſt Chriſtians may be to ſeek, ſo there are many things, yea all things neceſſary to ſalvation, or without which we cannot be ſaved, which the weakeſt may find and know ſufficiently, though not fully. And as they who deſire to find theſe things, will be diligent in ſeeking them, ſo they may know in themſelves, or be fully aſſured that they have found them; and ſo even while they ſtill continue to be ſeekers, know that they are already finders.

Laſtly obſerve, God is every where, yet eſpecially ſome where to be found.

As there is a finding time, ſo there is a finding place, and finding means; there is a finding time, ſaith holy David (Pſal. 32. 6.) For this ſhall every one that is godly pray to thee, in a time when thou mayeſt be found. The Hebrew is, in a finding time; though I would not give any one a ſtop from ſeeking God at any time, yet I muſt ſay there is a ſpecial finding time. And this the Apoſtle calls the accepted time (2 Cor. 6. 2.) that is, the time which we ought to lay hold upon, or accept; as alſo, the time, wherein we ſhall be acceptable or find acceptation. There is alſo a finding place, there is a where as well as a when God ſpecially is to be found; I mean it not of a meer locality, as if God were now to be found more in one place then in another; for Paul ſaith (1 Tim. 6. 8.) I will that men every where lift up pure hands without wrath and doubting. And Chriſt told the woman (Joh. 4. 21.) The hour cometh when ye ſhall neither in this Mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem worſhip the Father; not as if Chriſt had forbid the worſhip of the Father in thoſe places for the time coming; but he enlargeth publick worſhip to all places, or abrogates all differences of place under the Goſpel as to the worſhip of the Father. Yet if any man ſhall enquire, where may I find God? or ſay as Job here, O that I knew where I might find him! I would anſwer, firſt, Seek him in his Promiſes, ſearch the Scriptures, there you will find God. Secondly, Look for him in his Ordinances, of Prayer and Preaching, &c. for there he hath promiſed to be preſent; Where two or three are met together in my Name, there am I in the midſt of them (Matth. 18. 20.) When the Church or Spouſe in the Canticles (Chap. 1. 7, 8.) asks the queſtion, Tell me (O thou whom my ſoul loveth) where thou feedeſt, where thou makeſt thy flocks to reſt at Noon; Chriſt her beloved, anſwers, If thou know not (O thou faireſt among Women) go thy way forth by the footſteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beſides the Shepherds tents; that is, follow the holy practices and examples of the Saints in all former ages, which the Apoſtle calls walking in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham (Rom. 4. 12.) And again, hearken to the voice of faithful Teachers, who as Shepherds feed the flock of God with knowledge and underſtanding. Wait at theſe Shepherds tents (ſaith Chriſt) and there thou ſhalt find a preſence of God with thee, and his bleſſing upon thee.

Thirdly, And above all, Seek God in Chriſt; the Father is only to be found in the Son; Look to Jeſus Chriſt, and in him you cannot but behold God; for he is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon (Heb. 1. 3.) and therefore as he that hath the Son hath the Father alſo, ſo he that (by an eye of faith, and in the light of the Word and Spirit) beholdeth the Son, beholdeth the Father alſo. For the light of the knowledge of the glory of God is given us in the face of Jeſus Chriſt (2 Cor. 4. 6.) The light of the knowledge of the goodneſs of God, of his Mercy, Juſtice, Holineſs (which are his glory) ſhineth forth from Jeſus Chriſt; that is, in and by Chriſt it appears glorioully, that God is exceeding good, merciful, juſt, and holy. Therefore to every wearied ſoul complaining of the loſs of God, and crying out, O that I knew where I might find him! The ſum of all the Counſel that I can give, or indeed that can be given, is this; ſeek God in Chriſt, and he will be found. O that I knew where I might find him,

That I might come even to his ſeat.

Some conceive theſe words as the iſſue of a diſtempered ſpirit: others tax Job with too much boldneſs, that he being but duſt and aſhes ſhould thus preſs upon God, and that he was afterwards reproved for it in Chap. 38. of this Book; verſ. 1, 2. Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the whirlwind and ſaid (there he found him) who is this that darkeneth Councel by words without knowledge; gird up now thy loins like a man, for I will demand of thee, and anſwer thou me. And again in Chap. 40. Verſ. 2. 3, 4, 5. Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty inſtruct him? he that reproveth God let him anſwer it. Then Job anſwered the Lord and ſaid; Behold I am vile, I will lay my hand upon my mouth. Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer, yea twice, but I will proceed no further. As if he had acknowledged his error and overboldneſs in preſſing upon God; as in other places, ſo alſo in this, O that I might come even to his ſeat.

Yet I conceive that Job in this paſſage, doth but put forth the nobler and higher actings of his faith, and that he ſpeaks this, not as forgetting the diſtance of duſt and aſhes, from the glory of God, or from the glorious God; but as remembring the promiſe, and as inſiſting upon his priviledge as a believer who is invited to come, and to come with boldneſs to the throne of Grace. For though that promiſe was not given out as to the formality of it in thoſe times, yet the vertue of it was, though in a lower degree then now. To come with boldneſs to the throne of Grace, ſounds much like this, to come even to his ſeat; and this Job did, not only as emboldned by the clearneſs of his conſcience towards men, but as by the freeneſs of the Grace of God in Chriſt towards him. In purſuance whereof it is well conceived by a learned Interpreter, that there is a metonymie in the word which ſignifies a prepared ſeat, that is, ſuch a ſeat as whereon God preſents himſelf to poor ſinners, prepared and ready to give them both admittance to himſelf and a gracious audience of their requeſts and ſuits. The word which we tranſlate ſeat, ſignifieth a prepared place, a place fitted, implying ſomewhat ſpecial and peculiar unto God. Heaven is called the habitation of his holineſs and his glory (Iſa. 63. 15.) yet whereſoever the Lord is, he makes it a heaven. Thus alſo he can make any place where he is a hell. The wicked ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting fire from the preſence of the Lord, (2 Theſ. 1. 9.) that is, the very preſence of the Lord ſhall be a hell and torment to them. The Lord can be both terrible and gracious in his preſence any where; yet he is ſome where more graciouſly, ſome where more terribly preſent. Some cannot bear thoſe expreſſions, The throne of God, the ſeat of God, Heaven, and Hell: As if theſe were but the imaginations, fancies, and fictions of mens brain. But the Lord hath his ſeats and dwelling places, whence and where he declares himſelf, both in mercy and in judgment, both in his holineſs and in his glory (Iſa. 6. 1.) I ſaw alſo the Lord ſitting upon his Throne, high and lifted up. Thus the Lord manifeſted himſelf in viſion to the Prophet; and David confeſſeth, Thy Throne, O God, is for ever and ever (Pſal. 45. 6.) that is, thy Power and Soveraignty. David ſpeaks not of a material Throne, ſuch as Kings have; the Power and Soveraignty of God are his Throne whereſoever he is, and is pleaſed to declare himſelf in his Soveraignty and Power. So that when Job ſaith, O that I might come even to his ſeat or throne, the meaning is, O that I might come as near him as poſſibly I may. I would not ſtand at a diſtance, or keep aloof off, as a guilty malefactor, but draw near to him in a holy and well grounded confidence. Thus Job ſpeaks in anſwer to that

תבונה Denotat locum præparatum à radice כון

Charge of Eliphaz in the former Chapter, Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquities infinite? Now (ſaith Job) you ſhall ſee what my ſins are, and what my guilt, ſeeing I dare venture even to the very throne of God, where no hypocrite dares appear. While Job profeſſeth, That if God after the manner of men ſhould ſit in open Judgment (there will be ſuch a Judgment at the laſt day) he would come near to him, and not be afraid; he ſeems fully aſſured of his own integrity, or of the goodneſs of his cauſe, as alſo that God would be good unto him.

Hence obſerve, That true holineſs and uprightneſs hath abundance of confidence before God.

Adam having ſinned, and the guilt of his ſin being upon him, durſt not come to the Seat, to the Throne of God. God came to him in the cool of the day to examine and queſtion him about his ſin, but he hid himſelf among the trees of the garden, he withdrew, not daring to abide him: and that's the ſtate of all ſinners, who have the guilt of ſin upon them, they hide, they run from God, when once their Conſciences are awakened. As ſin in the act of it is a turning or departure from the holineſs of God, ſo ſin acted, or ſin in the guilt of it, cauſeth not only a departure but a running and a hiding from the juſtice of God. Guilty ſinners are ſo far from coming up to his Seat, that they cannot endure to come in his ſight; a malefactor hath little mind to come before the Judge, or to the Bench where the Judge ſitteth. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 20. 8.) A King that ſitteth in the Throne of Judgment, ſcattereth away all evil with his eyes. We may underſtand it thus, he ſcattereth evil actions, and evil perſons, evil works, and evil workers with his eyes; there's not an evil man willing to appear, or that dares to appear before him. They who are ſelf-condemned, muſt needs be afraid that others will condemn them alſo. Magiſtrates ſitting in Judgment are terrible to guilty malefactors: Or thus, He ſcattereth the evil with his eyes; that is, he makes evil men reveal and ſcatter their moſt ſecret evils, by his prying into them, and induſtrious examination of them; that evil or wicked practice which they had bound up in their hearts, and ſaid, none ſhall know it, he ſcatters and diſcovers. Solomon's proverb carries an experienced truth in it both wayes: and we may argue from it, that if an earthly King or Magiſtrate, ſitting on the Throne ſcattereth all evil with his eyes, how much more doth God? Neither any evil matter, nor any evil man can ſtand before him. And ſeeing the Lord diſcovers all the evil that is in the hearts and wayes of men, what can give perfect boldneſs in coming to the Throne of God, but only an intereſt in Jeſus Chriſt, in whom the Throne of God is become a Throne of grace to ſinners? Were it only a Throne of Judgment and Juſtice, no fleſh could ſtand before it; but being a Throne of grace, the worſt of ſinners, who wait for grace, may come near, and the nearer they come the welcomer they are. A godly man is never better then when he is near God, and then thinks himſelf beſt when he is neareſt unto God; all his happineſs in this life, and his glory in that which is to come, doth conſiſt in his nearneſs unto God.

Secondly, Whereas Job ſaith, O that I might come even to his Seat.

Obſerve, A godly man is willing that God ſhould Judge both his Perſon and his Cauſe.

That's the deſign of Job, he had appealed from the Judgment of his friends, and begged the Judgment of God; he was reſolute in it, to ſtand or fall according to his ſentence. But why was Job ſo deſirous of the Judgment of God? Why would he go to his Throne, and appeal to him? When men make appeals from one Throne to another, they have their reaſons for it; when Paul ſaid, I appeal to Cæſar (Act. 25. 11.) doubtleſs he was fully perſwaded that he ſhould find better terms with Cæſar then among the Jews; ſo when Job ſaith, I appeal to God (which is the higheſt appeal, and beyond which there lyes no appeal) doubtleſs Job was fully perſwaded that he ſhould find better terms at Gods tribunal, then he had found among his friends. And Job might have many grounds of better terms from God. For Firſt, God is wiſe, even a God of Judgment; who would not receive Judgment from a wiſe and underſtanding Judge, eſpecially from him who is wiſdom and underſtanding?

Secondly, God is Omniſcient; there are many wiſe Judges, but no Omniſcient Judges in the world. Princes are ſaid to have long hands, and very clear eyes, they can reach far, and ſee far, but they cannot ſee all; but God is able to Judge the ſecrets of all hearts, for he ſees all ſecrets, and knows what man cannot. For that reaſon a godly man loves the Judgment of God, becauſe he knows his heart; and for the ſame reaſon wicked men, hypocrites eſpecially, are afraid of the Judgment of God: they know if their outward actions ſhould come to be ſcan'd, much more if their hearts ſhould be turn'd outward, it muſt needs go ill with them. Moſt hypocrites carry it fair only for a while before the world, they at laſt diſcover themſelves, the diſeaſe breaks out at their fingers ends, or at their tongues end; their words or works diſcover the rottenneſs of their hearts, and the formality of their profeſſion. But ſome hypocrites carry it fair to the world all their dayes, and fear not the Judgment of men, yet even then a thought of the Judgment of God is dreadful to them; whereas the Saints, even all who are ſincere, deſire God to judge them; for indeed their hearts are better then their wayes, and their affections then their actions; and they know that God diſcerns with what heart and ſpirit every thing is done, as well as what is done. He doth not Judge by appearances (as we ought not, Joh. 7. 24.) and therefore his is a righteous Judgment. God doth not judge things as they appear, but as they are, unleſs they are as they appear; and whatſoever their appearance is, he can judge them as they are. He can judge by diſcerning what is in the deep, and follow a matter to the very ſpring of it; therefore I'le go to God (ſaith the upright heart) my deſire is that he ſhould Judge my cauſe.

Thirdly, The Lord is a gracious and a merciful Judge; he is as full of pity as he is of wiſdom, and as ready to relieve as he is quick ſighted to diſcern.

Fourthly, The Lord is very patient; firſt, Patient to hear; and ſecondly, Patient to bear. Patience to hear is a great encouragement; many Judges are weary of the work, they will not hear a poor man out, but God will; and God is patient alſo to bear with and paſs by the failings of his people, whoſe uprightneſs he knows.

Laſtly, A godly man knows that God his Judge hath received an atonement, that he is made for him, and upon grounds of Juſtice and Righteouſneſs is become his friend. Some who have bad Cauſes, yet come unto the Throne of man boldly, becauſe they know the Judge is made for them by a bribe, and ſo will give ſentence on their ſide, be it right or wrong. Saints know that the Judge is made for them, but made in a holy manner, not with baſe bribery to blind his eyes to pervert juſtice; but he hath received an atonement, he is appeaſ'd and ſatisfied by a Mediator at his own appointment. If God ſhould ſearch the beſt of Saints narrowly, they muſt needs fall in judgment; yet they know they ſhall ſtand in judgment, becauſe the Judge is reconciled to them by Chriſt, yea Chriſt who made the Atonement, and is the reconciler, is the Judge: this encourageth Saints to come to God; For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we ſhall be ſaved by his life (Rom. 5. 10.) The caſe ſtanding thus with believers, who ſeeth not ground for their appeal from the judgment, either of open enemies, or (as Job did) miſtaken friends; O that I might come even to his ſeat.

In the two next verſes, Job tells us what he would do if his appeal were granted and himſelf admitted to the ſeat of God.

Verſ. 4. I would order my Cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments.

Verſ. 5. I would know the words which he would anſwer me, and underſtand what he would ſay unto me.

Thus he deſcribes his intended behaviour before his Judge, in alluſion to legal proceedings, where the Plantiff brings in his bill, and the Defendant his anſwer.

I would order my Cauſe before him.

The Hebrew word which we tranſlate to Order, is a military term, properly uſed for the ordering of an Army, or the putting of them into a poiture for a battel, we call it Marſhalling an Army. And hence it is applied to the ordering of any other thing (Pſal. 23. 5.) Thou wilt prepare a Table for me in the midſt of mine enemies; to order a Table is to ſet diſh by diſh, there is a kind of method in ſetting diſhes at great feaſts; Thou wilt prepare a Table for me. Again (Pſal. 50. 21.) God ſpeaks to the hypocrite about his ſinful doings; I will ſet them in order before thee; that is, thoſe ſins, and confuſed practices of which thou haſt ſaid in thy heart, I ſhall never hear more of them, ſhall be brought forth and ſet like a terrible Army in rank and file before thee. Job ſpeaks to this ſence, I would order my cauſe before him, or, to his face, as the Hebrew Text hath it, that is, in his preſence.

And fill my mouth with arguments.

Pleno ore fidenter, conſtanter pro me dicā. Bold.

I would have arguments enough or good ſtore to prove that your proceeding hath been unequal toward me; and when he ſaith, I would fill my mouth with arguments, it ſhews that his heart was full of arguments. Chriſt teacheth us to argue ſo (Luke 6. 45.) Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh; Job's heart was full, therefore he would fill his mouth. David prayeth (Pſal. 71. 8.) Let my mouth be filled with thy praiſe. And the Church ſpeaks of her joy when God had turned their Captivity, (Pſal. 126. 2.) Then was our mouth filled with laughter. In this language God beſpeaks his people (Pſal. 81. 10.) Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it. Open it by faith, and I will fill it, with what? Fill it with mercy, and with bleſſings. So here, I would fill my mouth with arguments; that is, I would not want matter to ſpeak for my ſelf, or in my own cauſe. The Vulgar reads it, I will fill my mouth with chidings, or, with reproof. The word properly ſignifies, Conviction; and then we are to underſtand it in reference to his friends; I would abound with convincing, reproving, or chiding arguments againſt you, who have thus long reproached me; I would bring ſuch arguments as ſhould not only be a proof of mine own integrity, but a reproof of my friends ſeverity. Some arguments have only a proof in them; others have a reproof too. Job would fill his mouth with arguments, which ſhould be both proofs for himſelf, and reproofs to his oppoſers. Job had not a word to ſay againſt God, but he had much to ſay againſt his friends. I would fill my mouth with arguments. Note from it,

Os meum replebo increpationibus. Vulg.

> Troubled ſpirits have many things to ſay, and uſually abound much in their own ſence.

Furor arma miniſtrat.

As the paſſion of anger will adminiſter weapons to a man though he be no great fighter, ſo thoſe paſſions of grief and ſorrow will adminiſter arguments to him, though he be no great diſputer. A troubled ſoul will hardly be put to a ſtand or non plus, they who ſuffer much will alwayes have ſomewhat to ſay; If nature deny (ſaid one of old) yet Indignation will make a man a Poet; and if nature deny, yet ſorrow will make a man a Logician; and trouble will make a man an Advocate in his own cauſe. The tongues of many are tipt with Oratory, they have excellent words and ſtrong reaſons too from the preſſures that are upon their ſpirits: trouble of ſpirit fills the mouth with arguments two wayes.

Firſt, Againſt themſelves, how ſtrongly will ſome in that caſe diſpute againſt their own peace? What arguments will they bring againſt any comfort that is offered them; and how nimbly will they reply to any one that goes about to anſwer them? How will they find out new mediums, when thoſe are foiled by which they have formerly nouriſhed their unbelief, and diſcouraged themſelves from taking hold on mercy. 'Tis wonderful to hear the pleadings of a troubled ſpirit; and 'tis one of the hardeſt taſkes in the world to anſwer the doubts which ſuch a man will make againſt himſelf.

Secondly, The troubles of many fills their mouths with arguments for themſelves; that's the meaning of Job here in this place, I would fill my mouth with arguments to maintain my Cauſe; I ſhould not want either matter or words, to plead this buſineſs, were I before the Throne of God; and yet I would not be ſo free and forward to ſpeak, as to neglect or ſlight what is ſpoken to me, as it follows.

Verſ. 5. I would know the words that he would anſwer me, and underſtand what he would ſay unto me.

Some are ſo haſty to ſpeak, that they will not hear; they are ſo forward to plead their own Cauſe, that they will not receive the opinion of another. Job diſcovers an equal ſpirit to both, As I would order my Cauſe, and fill my mouth with arguments, ſo I would know the words that he would anſwer me too; I would have the good manners, or the grace rather, to heed and underſtand what God would ſay to me.

Cognoſcam ſanationes quas loquetur mihi. Sept. Quam mihi laboranti curationem adhibiturus eſſet intelligerem. Chryſoſt.

The Septuagint render it thus, I would know the healings which he would ſpeak to me; or as another, What medicine or way of cure he would preſcribe and adminiſter to me; and this might reſpect either the quieting of his Spirit, or the repairing of his credit and good name, which had been ſorely and deeply wounded by his friends, not only ſuſpecting but charging him as an hypocrite or wicked man. This is a fair ſence, only it ſtraitens the Text; for we may ſuppoſe Job in this addreſs and application to God ready to hear whatſoever God ſhould ſay unto him, whether his were words of approbation or reproof, whether for him or againſt him. Though Job had (doubtleſs) a ſtrong confidence, that God would approve of him and give ſentence on his ſide; yet conſidering his own weakneſſes and diſtempers of mind, he might well conceive that ſome things had fallen from him or been done by him which might deſerve and call for chidings and rebukes, as the iſſue indeed was. And therefore it was moſt congruous that he ſhould preſent himſelf before the Lord in a frame of heart to receive reprehenſions as well as conſolations. I would know the words that he would anſwer me, and underſtand, &c.

Knowing and underſtanding, may be taken here two wayes; firſt, for conſidering and weighing what God would ſay, or what Award he would make; in which he ſeems cloſely to check his friends, who thought him ſo dull and incapable, that ſurely he did not apprehend nor underſtand their anſwers. Well (ſaith Job) whatſoever you think of my dulneſs to underſtand your anſwers, or what you have ſaid, yet I doubt not but I ſhall underſtand the anſwers of God, or what he ſhall ſay unto me.

Secondly, They note a reverence and reſpect to the Word of God; I would know the words that he would anſwer; that is, ſubmit to them, I would not oppoſe the Judgment or Opinion of God concerning me. Though Job did not ſit down or acquieſs in the judgment of his friends, yet he would reverence and ſit down quietly in the judgment of God, and in the anſwer which he ſhould pleaſe to give. In either of theſe interpretations, the ſence is good. I would know, that is, I would ſtudy to find out the mind of God, and underſtand what he ſaith to me, and then reverently ſubmit thereunto.

Further, This form of ſpeaking, I would know the words, and I would underſtand, &c. ſeemeth to imply a vehement deſire in Job to know the mind of God concerning him. As a man that is accuſed longs to hear the mind of the Judge; as for others 'tis not much to him what they ſay for him or againſt him. As Paul ſpake in a like caſe (1 Cor. 4. 3.) With me it is a very ſmall thing to be judged of you, or of mans judgement, &c. he that judgeth me is the Lord; that is, to his judgment I muſt ſtand; he is above all.

> Firſt, Hence note, That a godly man is careful to underſtand the anſwer and determinations of God concerning him.

I would know the words that he would anſwer me.] And this not only (according to the ſuppoſition which Job makes here) if God ſhould ſpeak to him perſonally, or mouth to mouth; but in what way ſoever God ſhould ſpeak to him. It is the great care of a godly man to know the Word of God written and deliver'd over to us, as the rule of our life and faith; for indeed therein we have our judgment, and our anſwer: as Chriſt ſaith, the words that I ſpeak, they ſhall judge you at the laſt day; that is, by the Word you ſhall be judged. Likewiſe it is the care of a godly man to underſtand what God ſpeaks to him by his Works and Providences, by his Rods and Chaſtnings. In theſe the Lord ſpeaks to us, and gives us anſwers: They who are wiſe, will ſtudy to know and underſtand them. We may conceive that Job had reſpect to two things eſpecially, about which he deſired that he might underſtand the anſwer, and words of God to him.

Firſt, That God would ſhew him the true Cauſe of his affliction; for he did not take that to be the Cauſe which his friends had ſo often ſuggeſted, and ſo diſputed upon that Fallacy all along, which Logicians call, The putting of that for a Cauſe which is not the Cauſe. Therefore Job hoped to know of God what he would ſay, as to the reaſon why he did contend with him.

Secondly, What God would ſay to him by way of Direction and Councel, by way of remedy and redreſs; he was ſollicitous to underſtand the mind of God, and what God expected from him under this diſpenſation. So that Job's ſcope was not at all (as Eliphaz ſuſpected) to plead his own righteouſneſs and holy walkings before God, as if God had been beholding to him for them, and ſo muſt needs grant him (as having deſerved it) whatſoever he ſhould ask. But that he might be acquainted with the holy will and purpoſe of God concerning himſelf, and to be inſtructed by him about the grounds and ends of his long and ſharp affliction, that ſo he might bear it more chearfully, and more fruitfully. As alſo (and that principally) that he might hear from his Majeſty (which was the great point in controverſie between him and his friends) whether he did correct and chaſten him as a ſon, or puniſh and take vengeance on him, as on a rebell; and ſo ſet him among the examples of caution for ſinners in time to come.

Secondly note, A godly man reſts in the Judgment of God.

Si me inſontem pronunciaret, cum gaudio, ſi ſontem cum patientia ſuſciperem ſententiam ejus. Scult.

Job would not reſt in his friends judgment, but in Gods judgment he would reſt, and enquire no further; I (ſaith he) freely yield up my ſelf to that, if the Lord ſhould pronounce me innocent, I would reſt in his ſentence, and be thankful; if the Lord ſhould pronounce me faulty, yet I would reſt in his ſentence, and be patient; yea then I would ask mercy and beg his grace for the pardon of my failings. God is an Infallible Judge, and therefore no man ought to queſtion his determinations; indeed, Every mouth ſhall be ſtopped, and all the world become guilty before God (Rom. 3. 19.) that is, acknowledge themſelves guilty before him when he judgeth. And as there is no avoiding the judgment of God, ſo a godly man deſires to rejoyce in it. Good is the Word of the Lord, ſaid Hezekiah (2 Kings 20. 19.) when a very ſore ſentence was paſt againſt him, and he ſaid, is it not Good? if peace and truth be in my dayes? By good in the former part of the verſe, he means juſt and equal; as if he had ſaid, though this Word be full of gall and wormwood, yet it is no other then I and my people have deſerved and drawn upon our ſelves: by good in the latter part of the verſe, he means gracious and merciful; as if he had ſaid, God in this ſentence hath mixed the good of juſtice and equity, with the good of graciouſneſs and mercy, or in the midſt of Judgment he hath remembred mercy. Thus alſo when God gave ſentence by fire againſt the two ſons of Aaron; Moſes ſaid to Aaron, This is that the Lord ſpake, ſaying, I will be ſanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified (Lev. 10. 3.) Now when Aaron heard this, the Text ſaith, And Aaron held his peace. He murmured not, he contradicted not, but reſted patiently in the judgment of God. And thus Job was reſolved to give himſelf up to the judgment of God whatſoever it ſhould be. And we ſhall find him (in the next words) hoping ſtrongly to find God very ſweet and gracious to him, could he but obtain a hearing at his Judgment ſeat.

VERS. 6, 7.

Will he plead againſt me with his great power? No, but he would put ſtrength in me.

There the righteous might diſpute with him: ſo ſhould I be delivered for ever from my Judge.

JOB ſtill proſecutes the proof of his integrity from his willingneſs to appear before God, and plead his caſe at his throne; and as in the two former verſes he told us what he would do upon ſuppoſition that he could find God, and have acceſs unto him, even that he would ſtate his caſe, and then fill his mouth with arguments; he would alſo ſeriouſly attend and ſtrive to underſtand the anſwer which God ſhould give him. So in theſe two verſes, he holds out what entertainment he aſſured himſelf of, in this his addreſs to God, as alſo what confidence he had of a fair hearing and of a good iſſue; as if he had ſaid, O Eliphaz, you have often deterred and over-awed me with the Majeſty of God, as if he would certainly cruſh ſuch a worm as I am, and that I could not at all ſtand or abide a trial before him in Judgment (Eliphaz hath ſpoken to that ſence at verſ. 4. of the former Chapter) Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? Will he enter with thee into judgment? (Doſt thou think that God will condeſcend ſo far, as to treat with thee) But know, O Eliphaz, that I am not afraid of the preſence of God; for, though I confeſs, if God ſhould put forth his power, I were not able to hold up my head before him, and that he could eaſily overthrow me with a breath, yet I am perſwaded he will take a more favourable courſe, and deal with me in mercy, not with rigor or ſeverity.

Verſ. 6. Will he plead againſt me with his great power.

I know he is cloathed with Majeſty, and that the greatneſs of power is his; but will he plead with me. To plead with and to plead againſt are the ſame. To plead is a Law-term: He that pleadeth againſt another, diſcovers either the faultineſs of his perſon when accuſed, or the weakneſs of his Title when controverted. This word is uſed by the Prophet (Iſa. 57. 16.) I will not contend (or plead) for ever. I will not argue my own prerogative, nor will I argue thy ſinfulneſs alwayes, or without end; why not? If I ſhould, the ſpirit would fail before me, and the ſouls which I have made; where, though ſpirit and ſoul are put ſynechdochically for the whole man, that is, for fleſh and ſpirit, for ſoul and body together, yet the Lord mentions only ſpirit and ſoul, becauſe of their ſtrength to bear divine contendings beyond the body or the fleſh: As if he had ſaid, even that which is ſtrongeſt in man would fail, if God ſhould alwayes contend.

Will he plead againſt me with his great power? or ſtrictly to the Letter, with the multitude of his power, with the forces of his power. The power of God is great, yea the power of God is greateſt, all his power is Almighty power, yet God doth not alwayes put forth the greatneſs of his power; he is a moſt free agent, and ſo can reſtrain and hold in his own power, when he pleaſeth, and not uſe it to the terror of a poor creature, or plead againſt him with it.

ברב כח Nam copia ſui roboris, &c.

Again, The power of God may be taken two wayes; Firſt, for his ſtrength, or his power of doing and executing; ſecondly, for his Prerogative authority, or his power of commanding and ruling: we may interpret it here of the latter; will God deal with me by his Prerogative power, think you? Will he oppreſs me with his meer authority? I have another opinion of God, ſurely he will not do ſo; for he is good and gracious, and he will attemper his Prerogative with pity, and his great power with much mercy. Will he plead againſt me with his great power? Job's queſtion is a confident negation (ſuch negative interrogations are frequent in Scripture) will he? is, he will not plead againſt me with his great power; but Job is not ſatisfied that his ſpeech carrieth a negation in it, and therefore leſt any ſhould not fully enough underſtand him ſo, he expreſſeth his Negative; will he plead with me with his great power? no, his power is not, nor ever will it be againſt me. He will take ſome other courſe with me, he will deal with me upon the account of goodneſs and mercy, not upon the account account of power; he will not break me a bruiſed reed, nor quench me who am but ſmoking flax, he will rather bind me up, and cheriſh the leaſt ſpark which he perceiveth alive in me; Will he plead againſt me with his great power? Hence obſerve, Firſt, God hath great power, much power, all power is his.

The power of men and Angels is his; what power ſoever, whether for kind or degree, is in the hand of any creature, that power belongs to God. Thus David, a man of great power, ſtates it, God hath ſpoken once, twice have I heard this, That power belongeth unto God. The power that is ſcattered and divided all the world over, is centered and united in him. God hath a greatneſs of power, in commanding and diſpoſing what and how things ſhall be done; he hath alſo a greatneſs of power in doing and executing what he hath commanded. The commands of men are often unperformed, either becauſe they to whom their commands are ſent, have no power to perform them, or becauſe they want power to back their own commands. We may conſider the greatneſs of the power of God ſeveral wayes.

Firſt, As he can do all things, and is omnipotent; there is nothing too hard for him, his hand is not ſhortened in reference to the longeſt or the greateſt works and difficulties. And as he can do whatſoever he hath a will to do, ſo he will do whatſoever he pleaſeth to have done, whatſoever he purpoſeth to do, whatſoever is upon his heart to do; none of his counſels ever failed, nor have any of the thoughts of his heart been fruſtrated. Men often purpoſe to do, but they ſeldom have power to do what they have purpoſed; they are big with the conceptions of many great matters, but when the children come to the birth, they have no ſtrength to bring forth. God never failes in his power to do whatſoever he hath a purpoſe or a mind to do. God hath power enough to back his commands, and he can ſupply power to thoſe whom he calleth to execute them.

Secondly, The greatneſs of Gods power is ſeen in this, that he hath a right to do all that he doth. As he hath a fulneſs of ſtrength, ſo a fulneſs of authority; he doth not uſurp or intrench upon any other power in what he doth, nor upon any mans property in what he hath; it is his due to do what he doth, and to have what he hath. God is ſupream, giving the Law to all, receiving the Law from none; his is not a tyrannical, but a juſt and a righteous power; his is not a might without right, but a might with right. What the Prophet ſpeaks of the Chaldeans (Hab. 1. 7.) is true of God in every ſence, in the ſtricteſt ſence; His Judgment and his Dignity proceedeth of himſelf; he is a Law unto himſelf, his rule is internal, and his power intrinſecal. All derive power from him, therefore his power is altogether underived. Power underived muſt needs be great power, yea, the greatneſs of power.

Thirdly, The greatneſs of his power appeareth further in this, That no man may preſume to queſtion him for what he doth. He hath great power in what he doth, whom none may ſo much as ask, what doſt thou? Nebuchadnezzar (a Heathen, in higheſt earthly power) confeſſeth as much of the power of God, as ſoon as he regained the reaſon of a man (Dan. 4. 34, 35.) At the end of the dayes (that is, after the term of ſeven years was accompliſhed, when for the heart of a Beaſt, a mans heart was reſtored to him) I Nebuchadnezzar lift up mine eyes to heaven, and mine underſtanding returned unto me, and I bleſſed the moſt high, and I praiſed and honoured him that liveth for ever, whoſe dominion is an everlaſting dominion, and his Kingdom is from generation to generation; and all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing, and he doth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can ſtay his hand, or ſay unto him, what doſt thou? that is, none may ſo much as queſtion, much leſs reprove him for any thing that he doth. Though there are many who in the pride of their hearts, and through the forgetfulneſs of their duty, will preſume to queſtion God about what he hath done, and even controul his doings, yet of right or according to rule, none can. Hence the Apoſtle having aſſerted the Soveraignty of God, He hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth, brings in ſome queſtioning his proceedings; but he checks them ſoundly for their boldneſs in queſtioning, and inſtructs them by many upbraiding queſtions, that they ought not to put that or any ſuch queſtion. Thou wilt ſay then (verſ. 18, 19, 20.) why doth he yet find fault, for who hath reſiſted his will? Nay, but who art thou, O man, that replieſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed, ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the Potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump to make one veſſel of honour, and another of diſhonour? What if God were willing to ſhew his wrath in ſome, as well as his grace and mercy in others, what have you or I to do with it? Who gave you or I leave to examine God upon interrogatories about it? Thus he pleads the power or prerogative of God; this muſt ſilence all our Queries, and ſatisfie all our doubts; none may ask him a reaſon of what he doth; the reaſon is in himſelf. The will of God is his reaſon; and there is all the reaſon in the world it ſhould; for his is not only a ſoveraign will, but a juſt and a holy will. Solomon ſaith (Eccleſ. 8. 4.) Where the word of a King is, there is power, and who may ſay unto him, what doſt thou? In all lawful adminiſtrations, it is true of Kings and ſupream earthly powers, in what form ſoever, none may ſay unto them, what do ye? Their word muſt ſtand; much more is this true of him who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, who is the ſupream power of heaven and earth; all whoſe wayes are equal, and his diſpenſations righteous, though we ſee not the equity and righteouſneſs of them. That is not only great, but the greateſt power, which none may queſtion.

Fourthly, this alſo demonſtrates the greatneſs of Gods power, that none can ſtop or hinder him in what he hath a mind to do: what he appoints, he executes, and none can ſtop it; or (as Nebuchadnezzar ſpeaks in the place beforementioned, Dan. 4. 35.) ſtay his hand. The hand of the ſtrongeſt power upon the earth may be, and hath been ſtaid; Kings have had a check, their hands have been ſtaid; but none can ſtay the hand of God: I will work (ſaith he) and none ſhall let it (Iſa. 43. 17.) God ſhould do but little work in the world if men could let it. Wicked men would let or hinder God in all his works; and the godly (through their miſtakes) would hinder him in ſome of his works; but none can: He ſpeaks to the Sun, and it ſhineth not; yea, he ſpeaks to the Sun, and it moveth not. This is the greatneſs and the muchneſs of the power of God.

But, ſaith Job, Will he plead againſt me with his great power? All this power God hath (and this power he can put forth) but he will not put it forth againſt me (ſaith Job 1.) And what was Job, that he ſhould be thus confident, and riſe up to ſuch a ſtrong aſſurance that God would not uſe his ſtrength againſt him? Job was a godly man, a man fearing God, a man perfect and upright, a man full of faith (though he lived in dark times, and under dark diſpenſations, yet, I ſay, he was a man full of faith) in the Redeemer. Now it is no wonder if a man of this character, a man thus qualified and priviledged, had this confidence, and was much aſſured that he ſhould proſper and ſpeed in it; That God would not plead againſt him with his great power. Hence obſerve,

A godly man may be confident that God will deal gently and graciouſly with him: Or, That God will deal with him according to the greatneſs of his mercy, not according to the greatneſs of his power.

The greatneſs of the power of God is an exceeding great comfort to the ſincere, becauſe they know it is acted towards them in the greatneſs of his mercy. It is comfortable to hear that the Lord, who (as the Prophet deſcribes him, Nah. 1. 3.) is great in power, is alſo ſlow to anger (the greatneſs of mans power doth uſually quicken, not clog his paſſions) but it is more comfortable to know, that God, who is great in power, is quick and ſpeedy to ſhew mercy. And hence it is, that a true believer rejoyceth in the power of God as well as in his mercy, becauſe he knoweth that God hath declared himſelf powerful for him as well as merciful. He knoweth God will not put forth power alone, or nothing but power towards him. God doth exerciſe all his refreſhing Attributes and divine Perfections, in dealing with Saints; whereas upon the wicked he exerciſeth his power chiefly, though not only. What if God to make his power known, endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, ſaith the Apoſtle (Rom. 9. 22.) God pleads with the wicked according to the tenour of the Covenant of works, but with Believers according to the Covenant of Grace, in which he doth, as it were uncloath himſelf of his power, and cloath himſelf with Love, Mercy, Goodneſs and Tenderneſs to his people. The Lord (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, Pſal. 93. 1.) is cloathed with ſtrength, wherewith he hath girded himſelf; he is cloathed alſo with Mercy, and with that he hath girded himſelf; he pleads with his people (I grant) in righteouſneſs, as well as in mercy (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 3. 25, 26.) God hath ſet forth Jeſus Chriſt to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs, for the remiſſion (or paſſing over) of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God, to declare, I ſay, at this time his righteouſneſs; and the juſtifier of him that believeth in Jeſus. The juſtice or righteouſneſs of God was never ſo fully declared, as in Chriſt; for God did not ſpare him at all, but he having taken our debt upon him, diſcharged it to the utmoſt farthing. God pleaded againſt Chriſt with his great power, and with his perfect righteouſneſs; to which plea, Chriſt made anſwer with as great a power (his being the power of God) and with as perfect a righteouſneſs, his being alſo the righteouſneſs of God. And hence it is, that when God comes to plead with Believers, he pleads not againſt them with his power and righteouſneſs, ſeeing Chriſt with both pleads for them; he pleads for them not only as he is Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, but as he is the mighty, the all-powerful God. This is the chiefeſt ground of a Believers confidence, that God (as Job here ſaith) will not plead againſt him with his great power. What then did Job believe would God do with him? The next words inform us what his Faith was in that particular.

But he would put ſtrength in me.

Veruntamen ille ponet in me. Heb.

(So we render.) The Hebrew is only thus, He will put in me; what he would put is not expreſſed in the Orignal; which hath cauſed ſome variety of opinion what it ſhould be that the Lord would put into him; and I find a threefold conjecture in the point.

Poneret & afferret in me ſuas rationes. Mer. Ipſe poneret contentionē in me, id eſt, non robore mecum ageret, ſed verborum contentione, Ch.

Firſt, The Supplement is made thus, He would produce arguments or reaſons againſt me; and this is conceived moſt ſuitable to the context and ſcope of the place, as alſo to the action of pleading before ſpoken of; Would he plead with or againſt me with his great power? no, but he would ſhew me the reaſon of his dealings with me; he would not proceed againſt me in a martial, but in a legal way; not in a prerogative, but in a diſcourſive argumentative way; he would ſhew me the cauſe why he thus contendeth with me, and hath ſo ſorely afflicted me; God would condeſcend ſo far to my weakneſs, as to give me an account, though I dare not preſume to call him to an account; and though he hath both power and right to deal with me as he pleaſeth, yet I am much aſſured that he would be pleaſed to tell me why he deals thus with me. This interpretation is clear to the general ſcope of the context, and argues nothing unbecoming that holy confidence which the Grace of the Goſpel alloweth a Believer in; yea, encourageth him unto, when in any diſtreſs he approacheth unto God for the relief and comfort of his troubled ſpirit.

Ponet in me ſc. cor ſuum, i.e. compleEleretur me favore. Piſc.

Secondly, Another thus; Will he plead againſt me with his great power? no, but he would put his heart upon me; that is, he would embrace me with his favour, and lay me in his boſom. Though his hand hath been exceeding heavy upon me, yet I believe his heart is towards me; though he hath ſmitten me with the wound of an enemy, yet he will receive me as a friend, and give me ſignal teſtimonies of his love. I ſhould not feel the weight of his hand, but ſee the tenderneſs of his bowels, and his heart moving towards me. This is alſo an interpretation full of truth, and as full of comfort to a wearied ſoul.

Alii ſubaudiunt & repetunt בח in me robur poneret ad conſiſtendum coram ſe, me infirmum fulciens & roborans. Merc.

Thirdly, The Supplement made in our Tranſlation, reacheth both the former, and ſuits alſo to the former branch of the Text with much elegancy; Would he plead againſt me with his great power? no, but he would put power or ſtrength into me; he will be ſo far from putting out his ſtrength againſt me, that he will put his ſtrength into me; he knoweth my weakneſs, how unable I am to contend with or bear up againſt his power, and therefore he would put power into me. Mr. Broughton renders clearly to this ſence, Would he by his great power plead againſt me? no, but he would help me: help is power, and he that helpeth another, adminiſters power to him; he either puts new ſtrength into him, or joynes his ſtrength with him. So then, Job was aſſured that God would put ſtrength into him, or be his ſtrength to help and carry him through all the difficulties that lay before him. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, A Believer hath no opinion of his own ſtrength, or that he can do any thing in his own ſtrength.

He truſts no more to his own ſtrength and power, then to his own righteouſneſs or worthineſs. As our Juſtification before God is purely founded in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſo all the actings of our ſanctification are maintained by the ſtrength of Chriſt. Holy Job ſpake nothing of his own ſtrength, yea, he ſpake as having no ſtrength of his own. A godly man knows his own ſtrength is but weakneſs, and that when he prevailes with God, it is with a power which he hath from God. Paul uſeth a form of ſpeech which we may call a divine Riddle (2 Cor. 12. 10.) When I am weak, then I am ſtrong; he predicates or affirms one contrary of another; weakneſs is contrary to ſtrength: how a weak man ſhould be ſtrong, and then eſpecially ſtrong when he is weak, is hard to conceive by thoſe who are ſpiritual, and is unconceivable by thoſe who are carnal. This aſſertion is enough to poſe and puzzle Nature; He that is weak is ſtrong; or, the readieſt way to get ſtrength is to be weak. The truth and the Apoſtles meaning is plainly this; When I am weak in my own ſence and opinion, when I am convinced that I have no power of my own, then I feel power coming in, then Chriſt ſtrengthens me, and I am ſtrong, then I experience that word, My Grace is ſufficient for thee. When I find the waters of my own Ciſtern low and failing, then I have a ſupply from the Spirit. So the Apoſtle ſpake (Phil. 1. 19.) I know that this alſo ſhall turn to my ſalvation through your prayers and the ſupply of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt. The firſt Adam received all his ſtrength at once, we now receive our ſtrength by dayly freſh ſupplies from the ſecond Adam. The word there uſed by the Apoſtle, which we render ſupply, ſignifieth an under-ſupply, implying thus much, that as the natural body and each particular member of it, is ſupplied with ſence and motion, together with a ſuitable ſtrength and ability from the head, ſo Believers who are altogether the myſtical body of Chriſt, and each of them members in particular, are ſupplied from Chriſt their head, by the Spirit, with ſpiritual life, motion, and ſtrength of Grace for every duty to which they are called, or which is required of them. And becauſe as this is ſo in it ſelf, ſo Believers are inſtructed in it; therefore they diſclaim and go out of their own ſtrength, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon them. Chriſt fills none but the hungry, nor doth he ſtrengthen any but the weak. They who think they have any thing of their own, ſhall receive nothing from him; unleſs Chriſt be all in all to us, he will not be any thing at all to us.

> Secondly obſerve, God himſelf puts ſtrength into humbled ſinners, that they may ſtand before him.

As he knows what ſtrength ſuch need, ſo he gives them the ſtrength they need; He will put ſtrength in me, may be the confidence of any ſoul in Job's caſe. We are not able to ſtand before God under the burden of our corruptions, nor yet are we able to walk before him under the burden of our duties, unleſs himſelf be pleaſed to adminiſter ſtrength to us. And ſurely if we have cauſe even to glory in our infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon us (2 Cor. 12. 9.) Then much more have we cauſe to glory in the power of Chriſt, when we find ſo many infirmities reſting in us. The Prophet ſaw this fully, while he ſaid (Iſa. 45. 24.) Surely ſhall one ſay, in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength, even to him ſhall men come, in the Lord ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and ſhall glory. That we have ſtrength in and from the Lord, is to us a ground of holy glorying, as well as that we have righteouſneſs in him. For though to be juſtified be a higher favour then to be ſtrengthened, yet unleſs we were ſtrengthened, as we could not take in the comfort of our Juſtification freely, ſo neither could we give God the glory of it ſo fully as we ought. And as it is the joy of Believers, that God will put ſtrength into them when they are humbled under the greateſt weakneſſes, ſo that their ſtrength is ſtill in him: For God doth not ſo put it into us, as to put that ſtrength out of himſelf. The ſtrength which God puts into us, is a ſtrength ſtill reſiding in himſelf. The ſtrength which we have received, as well as that which we have not yet received, is ſtill in the hand of God; and from his hand we ſhall receive renewals of ſtrength for all our needs and purpoſes. Take five inſtances in ſpecial.

Firſt, A Believer ſhall receive ſtrength to do, or an acting power from Chriſt; though Chriſt hath done all for us, yet we have much to do for Chriſt; and (ſuch is the myſtery of Godlineſs) that the ſame Chriſt who hath done all for us, will alſo do all in us. Chriſt layeth a yoke upon the necks of his people, and a burden upon their ſhoulders, but he puts power and ſtrength into their ſhoulders to carry his yoke and bear his burden; and that's the reaſon why he calls his yoke eaſie, and his burden light; it is not ſo conſidered in it ſelf, as if we could make light work of the work of Chriſt; but his burden is light, becauſe he hath promiſed to give his, at leaſt, a ſufficient ſtrength to bear it. A heavy burden is not grievous to equal ſtrength, and it is light to a ſuperior or greater ſtrength. As all our ſins (the leaſt whereof is a burden too heavy for us to bear) are light to us through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſo all the Commandments of God (the leaſt of which is too hard for us alone) are light to us through the ſtrength of Chriſt. This was the Apoſtle Paul's profeſſion, I can do all things through Chriſt that ſtrengtheneth me (Phil. 4. 13.) A little is too much for us, all is but little for Chriſt; as we have the anointing of the Spirit, whereby we know all things (1. John 2. 20.) So we have tho ſtrengthening of the Spirit, whereby we do all things. It is a high priviledge, that Saints who receive their work from heaven, receive their ſtrength from heaven too. And that as God puts his commands upon them, ſo he puts this power into them. The Lord is ſo far from requiring work of us without giving us wages for what we have done, that he doth not require work of us without giving us ſtrength to do it. When we look upon our reward, it might ſeem that we have done all our ſelves; but when we look upon his aſſiſtance, it is as evident that we have done nothing of our ſelves. The Lord is not like thoſe Egyptian Task-maſters, who called for brick, but would not give ſtraw; no, the Lord who calls for brick, doth not only give us ſtraw, but ſtrength, even hands and hearts to do our work. Goſpel-Grace or new-Covenant-Grace promiſeth us ſtrength to do what we are commanded to do.

Secondly, The Lord gives us, as ſtrength to do, ſo to ſuffer; ſtrength to bear his Croſs, as well as his Yoke: So the Apoſtle comforts the Corinthians (1 Cor. 10. 13.) No temptation (that is, no affliction; for as every temptation hath trouble in it, and is therefore juſtly called an affliction, ſo every affliction hath a trial in it, and is therefore juſtly called a temptation, in which ſence the Apoſtle there ſaith, no temptation) hath taken hold of you, but that which is common to man; but God is faithful, that will not ſuffer you to be tempted above what ye are able, but with the temptation will make a way of eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it. As if he had ſaid, be not afraid that you ſhall be oppreſſed with the burden of any affliction or temptation which ye endure in my cauſe or for my name ſake; for ye ſhall receive an ability commenſurable to your affliction, whatſo ever it is; you ſhall be ſupported in thoſe afflictions which are immediately from the hand of God, much more in thoſe which are from the hand of man, even in the extreameſt and hotteſt perſecutions. Paul had experience of this (2 Tim. 4. 17.) There he tells a ſad ſtory of the fearfulneſs, if not of the unfaithfulneſs of men, even of good men to him in an evil day; and he tells as comfortable a ſtory of the preſence and faithfulneſs of God to him in an evil day, even in the worſt and blackeſt day that this world could lowr upon him in; At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me (that is, no man appeared to ſtrengthen, to comfort me) all men forſook me, I pray God it be not laid to their charge: (What then? was he left of all, becauſe left of all men? no ſuch matter; all men left him, but God who is but one, One moſt God, and who alone is more then all men abode by him, as it follows in the Text) notwithſtanding the Lord ſtood with me and ſtrengthened me, that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear; and I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lion, that is, out of the danger of my deadly perſecutors, even out of the danger of Nero himſelf, by whoſe power ſo many had been deſtroyed. The Lord alwayes ſtands by his in time of affliction and trial, either to ſtrengthen them in it, or to ſtrengthen them out of it, that is, to eſcape it; either to deliver them from the danger of it, or to encourage them in the dangers of it.

Thirdly, The Lord puts ſtrength into his people to mortifie corruption; he gives us not only power againſt, but power over our luſts. Fleſhly luſts and corruptions are ſtrong, and if we have not ſtrength from Chriſt to ſubdue and conquer them, they will be too hard for us, and foil us. We are eaſily and preſently foiled, by pride, by covetouſneſs, by wrath, by envy; all theſe paſſions and luſts will trample us under their feet in the dirt of all ſinfulneſs and pollution both of fleſh and ſpirit, unleſs we receive power from on high to ſubdue and mortifie them (Rom. 8. 13.) If ye through the Sirit mortifie the deeds of the Body, ye ſhall live; that is, ye ſhall live confortably, holily and eternally. The deeds of the body, that is, ſinful deeds, and the root of them, ſinful luſts, count all weapons (as Leviathan doth ſpears and ſwords) but ſtraw and ſtubble, rather to be laughed at, then feared, except only the weapons or power of the Spirit. And when once we take our luſts to task with the weapons of the Spirit, they preſently fall and die before us. The Spirit is the ſtrength of God in us for the mortification of corruption.

Fourthly, We are ſtrengthned, or God puts ſtrength into us for the reſiſting and conquering of the temptations of Satan; we meet with many aſſaults from the Devil, and from the world, who are confederate with our Luſts. Theſe we muſt reſiſt ſtedfaſt in the faith, and that not only in the faith, as the faith imports ſoundneſs of doctrine or divine truth, but as the faith imports dependance upon Chriſt for ſtrength and aſſiſtance. Peter, being a Chief, a Grandee in the train of Chriſt, or among the Diſciples of Chriſt, was Satans eye-ſore, and the fairer mark for his fierie darts. Satans fingers itcht to be doing with him; he (ſaith our Saviour) deſired to have him that he might ſift him as wheat (Luke 22. 31.) that is, to ſift him throughly, not to fetch out his chaffe from him, but indeed to make him chaffe. How was Peter upheld? I have prayed for thee (ſaith Chriſt) that thy faith fail not; that is, I have prayed that God would put ſtrength into thee, that thy faith fail not; if once faith fail, we are overcome. But is faith our ſtrength? No, but faith goes to, and takes hold of him who is our ſtrength, or who puts ſtrength into us that we fall not in temptation. But you will ſay, Peter fell, and he fell grievouſly, his fall was great; he denied his Maſter. 'Tis true, Peter fell, but he did not fall away, his faith did not fail, that is, it was not totally loſt, and therefore when Chriſt lookt upon him, and by that look renewed his ſtrength, he gat up again; even when he denied Chriſt, there was a ſeed of faith remaining in him; though like a tree in the winter, his fruit was gone, yea, and his leaves too, and he looked dead and withered; yet there was ſap in the root; his faith failed not: whence was this? he had an inviſible ſupply of ſtrength from God; I have prayed (ſaith Chriſt) that thy faith fail not. The prayer of Chriſt failed not, and therefore his faith did not: Chriſt prayed that he might have ſtrength by believing, and though he had not ſo much faith as to preſerve him ſtanding, yet he had ſo much faith as to raiſe him from his fall. And what Chriſt prayed for Peter, he prayed for all that ſhould believe on his name, that in all their reſiſtings of, and contendings with temptation, their faith alſo may not fail. As faith is one principal piece of our ſpiritual Armour whereby we overcome temptation, ſo it fetches in that which is the whole of the whole Armour of God, even the ſtrength of God. When the Apoſtle exhorts Saints (Eph. 6. 11.) To put on the whole Armour of God, he premiſes another moſt needful exhortation, or exhorts them firſt (v. 10.) To be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; implying that it is not any one piece, no, nor the whole armour of God abſtractly or preciſely taken, which is our ſtrength; but that the God of this Armour is our ſtrength in the ſpiritual combat. Though our loynes were girt about with truth, and we have on the Breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs; though our feet were ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, and we have the Shield of faith in our hand; though we ſhould take the Helmet of ſalvation, and the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; yet, if thus arrayed, it were poſſible for us to neglect or forget the God of the Word, it were not poſſible for us to conquer the Footmen, leſſer; much leſs the Horſemen, greater; leaſt of all, the Chariots of iron, the greateſt temptations of the Prince of darkneſs. As no carnal weapon hath any thing at all to do, ſo no ſpiritual weapon can do any thing at all in this war without the ſtrength of God; or rather (to conclude this Point) all theſe ſpiritual weapons and Armour are nothing elſe but the ſtrength of God, or the various puttings forth of the ſtrength of God in weak man.

Fifthly and laſtly, God gives us ſtrength to pray to & plead our cauſe before him; he will not dazle us with his glory, nor confound us with his Majeſty when we come to plead with him, but he will put ſtrength into us. In prayer we prevaile with God, but the ſtrength whereby we prevail with God, comes from God; yea he doth not only give us ſtrength in prayer to act by, but acts that ſtrength in prayer. (Rom. 8. 26.) Likewiſe the Spirit helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought, but the Spirit it ſelf maketh interceſſion for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. Prayer is ſtrong work, it calls forth the whole ſtrength of the ſoul; nor doth the ſoul in any thing ſhew its ſtrength more then in Prayer: Prayer is wreſtling, and how can we wreſtle without ſtrength! Even the King of Nineveh gave this direction at his Faſt (Jon. 3. 8.) Let them cry mightily. And our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in the dayes of his fleſh offered up prayers and ſupplications with ſtrong crying and tears (Heb. 5. 7.) Now the Spirit is the ſtrength of God in us for prayer; he helpeth our infirmities, and we are only a bundle of infirmities without his help. There is a threefold ſtrength needful in prayer, and God by the Spirit puts theſe three ſtrengths into us.

Firſt, The Spirit helps us with ſtrength of argument to plead with God.

Secondly, The Spirit helps us with the ſtrength of Faith in taking hold upon God.

Thirdly, The Spirit helps us with ſtrength of patience in waiting upon God till we receive what we have prayed for. Jacob by this threefold ſtrength had power with God in prayer (Hoſ. 12. 3.) And it was the power or Spirit of God by which he had this threefold ſtrength to prevail with God. Thus we are ſtrengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man (Eph. 3. 16.) We are ſtrong to do, and ſtrong to ſuffer; we are ſtrong to mortifie corruptions, and ſtrong to conquer temptations; we are ſtrong to pray, and ſtrong to plead our cauſe at the throne of Grace, when God puts ſtrength into us. Job, who had received great ſtrength from God in all the former caſes, was aſſured that he ſhould receive ſtrength alſo in the laſt, were he admitted to the ſeat of God. Would he (there) plead againſt me with his great power? No, but he would put ſtrength in me, to plead with him. And as he was thus aſſured that God would put ſtrength into him to plead his cauſe, ſo alſo liberty and freedom to do it, as appears more fully in the next verſe.

Verſe 7. There the righteous might diſpute with him; ſo ſhould I be delivered for ever from my Judge.

There, where? He means at the Seat of God; as if he had ſaid, Could I but once come to the Throne or Seat of God, I ſhould have free leave and liberty enough to open and argue, to ſtate and debate my caſe, my long controverted and yet unreſolved caſe with him. He would not plead againſt me with his great power of Authority, but he would give me the power of liberty to diſpute and reaſon out that matter with him. Several paſſages in the former part of this Book clearly hold out this ſence (chap. 9. 34, 35.) Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrifie me; then would I ſpeak and not fear him; but it is not ſo with me: as yet God pleadeth againſt me with his great power. Again (chap. 13. 21, 22.) Withdraw thy hand far from me, and let not thy dread make me afraid (as if he had ſaid, Plead not againſt me with thy great power) then call thou, and I will anſwer; or let me ſpeak and anſwer thou me. Thoſe Texts already opened, are of the ſame general ſcope and tendency with this under hand: There (that is, All things being put into ſuch a poſture) the righteous might diſpute with him.

Some read the Text in the firſt perſon; There, I, being righteous, might diſpute with him. Others thus, I ſhould be found righteous if I did diſpute with him; As if he had ſaid, I make no doubt of proving my ſelf righteous or innocent in this controverſie with my friends, there I ſhould not be found a falſe-hearted hypocrite; God who knows both my thoughts and my wayes, would judge otherwiſe of me then men have done.

We read the Text indefinitely, not reſtraining it to his perſon, but as taking in any that are righteous; the righteous, that is, any righteous man might diſpute with him there; his Court, his Tribunal is free and open for all that are upright or righteous. In what ſence the word righteous is uſed in this Book, hath been opened more then once. In a word, the righteous man is not he that is legally righteous, but righteous in a Redeemer, or righteous as oppoſed to an hypocrite. In both theſe ſences we may take the word here, The righteous may diſpute with him.

The word is properly applied to Scholaſtick exerciſes; where Queſtions being put, Arguments are brought by the Opponent, which the Reſpondent takes away, and the Moderator ſtates between them both. This is the nature and manner of a ſtrict Diſpute: But in a large or vulgar ſence every diſcourſing and reaſoning about a doubtful Point, is called diſputing. There the righteous may diſpute with him. Hence note, הוכח Eſt apud alium ita argumentari ut petas reſponſionem qua viciſſim ſi quid erraveris redarguaris. Merc.

> God is free and ready to hear the pleadings and reaſonings of thoſe who are upright and righteous.

As the prayer of the upright is the delight of God, ſo their modeſt and humble diſputings are not diſpleaſing to him. A righteous man may plead with God freely, but he muſt not plead with God proudly, either crying up and boaſting in his own righteouſneſs, or laying the leaſt imputation of unrighteouſneſs upon the wayes of God in dealing with him. The righteous diſpute with God, yet they know and keep their diſtance; and while they do ſo, God is willing they ſhould, and welcomes them when they do draw nigh to him, diſputing as well as praying. In oppoſition to which, 'tis ſaid (Pſal. 5. 5.) The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight, thou hateſt all workers of iniquity. The fooliſh, that is, the wicked man, the hypocrite with his falſe-hearted and flattering tongue, are an abomination to God. The fooliſh man that the Pſalmiſt means, is not the man low in parts, but unſound in ſpirit; this fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in the ſight of God, nor will God hear him either diſputing or praying, but reject him with his diſputes and prayers. Thou hateſt all the workers of iniquity; and to the wicked God ſaith, what haſt thou to do to declare my ſtatutes, or that thou ſhouldeſt take my Covenant in thy mouth? (Pſal. 50. 16.) God will not endure it, that wicked men ſhould ſpeak of him, much leſs will he endure that a wicked man ſhould diſpute with him. God will have nothing to do in way of arguing and reaſoning, either with a perſon or with a people, while he or they continue in their ſins (Iſa. 1. 15, 16.) When ye ſpread forth your hands, I will hide my eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear; your hands are full of blood, that is, either of bloody ſins in ſpecial, as murder and oppreſſion, or of ſins in general; for every ſin is blood and bloody: every ſin may be called blood; and while the hands are full of blood in either ſence, God will not hear, that is, he will not graciouſly hear or accept ſo much as one of many prayers. But are the wicked, and their prayers, and their diſputings excluded for ever while they continue ſuch, or to do ſuch things? they are; and therefore in the next words, the Lord by his Prophet gives them this counſel, Waſh ye, make ye clean, put away the evil of your doings from before my eyes, ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well, ſeek judgment, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow; here's a deſcription of a righteous perſon, righteous in his way, upright with God and men; and with ſuch God will ſpeak: ſuch may diſpute with him, as it follows (v. 18.) Come now, and let us reaſon together. We know (ſaith the blind man after he was healed) John 9. 31. that God heareth not ſinners (that is, ſuch as plead for, or pleaſe themſelves in any ſin) but if any man be a worſhipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth; him he heareth praying, and him he heareth diſputing. Whereas of the preyings of the wicked he ſaith, they are but meere bablings, and of their diſputings, they are but vain janglings. If (ſaith David, Pſ. 66. 18.) I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear me. God will not regard his prayers, therefore not his diſputes, who regards iniquity ; but to the righteous, and to ſuch as repent of and turn from their unrighteouſneſs, the Lord ſaith, come let us reaſon together, let us diſpute the point ; though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow, though they be red as crimſon, they ſhall be as wool. Where take notice, by the way, that while God ſaith, your ſins which were as ſcarlet ſhall be as white as ſnow, we are not to think that ſin ſhall ever change colour, or be other then it is in the eyes of God: ſo that your ſin ſhall be as ſnow, is you ſinners ſhall be ſo. It is a very hard thing, and next to an impoſſibility to change the nature of a ſinner, yea or the cuſtome of a ſinner (Jer. 13. 23.) but it is altogether impoſſible to change the nature and conſtitution, yea or the complexion and colour of a ſin, that looks very red; but the reddeſt ſinner may turn white as ſnow. And when once the ſinner is turned white, God is ready to hear both his prayers, and diſputes. God loves to hear ſuch penitents confeſſing their ſin, unburdening their conſcience, pleading the promiſe. And he loves to hear the righteous holding out and maintaining the righteouſneſs of their wayes (againſt all the clamours and calumnies of men) before him. There the righteous may diſpute with him.

Secondly Note, The righteous are willing and have priviledge to diſpute or argue their cauſe with God.

The righteous have acceſs to God, and boldneſs with him in the blood of Chriſt ; ſo that they dare not only, firſt, tell him of their own wants ; or ſecondly, of their wrongs from others ; or thirdly, of their integrity, and the uprightneſs of their hearts with him, and that he knows it is ſo; but fourthly (which argues the greateſt height of holy boldneſs) they dare tell him of all the ſins which they have committed againſt him, and diſpute with him for mercy as their right upon the account of his own promiſe and covenant made with Chriſt in their behalf, while reſpecting and reflecting upon themſelves they can juſtifie God in condemning them for ever under wrath. Here is the right Goſpel-Logick ; theſe are the holy ſubtleties which the Spirit teacheth ; theſe are none of the diſputers of this world, whoſe wiſdome (as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 1. 20.) God hath made fooliſh and will deſtroy ; but theſe are divine Diſputants indeed, or diſputers for another world, whoſe wiſdome is of God, and who are wiſe unto Salvation. Theſe righteous ones may diſpute with him.

So ſhould I be for ever delivered from my Judge.

Job proceeds from the theſis to the hypotheſis, from the third perſon to the firſt ; the righteous man pleads with him, but he doth not ſay, ſo ſhould the righteous be delivered for ever from his Judge ; but ſo ſhall I be delivered for ever from my Judge ; thus he puts himſelf expreſly into the number of the righteous or upright, and his argument ſtands thus ;

He that is righteous, or upright, may diſpute and be acquitted or delivered when he diſputes with his Judge.

But I am righteous or upright,

Therefore I ſhall be delivered from my Judge when I diſpute with him.

The Major propoſition is laid down in the former part of this verſe ; the aſſumption in verſe 11, 12. The concluſion appears in the latter part of verſe 7, and in verſe 10.

So ſhould I be delivered for ever from my Judge ; that is, I ſhould eſcape the ſeverity of his ſentence. The Judge hath him that comes before him in hold, he hath him in his hand or power when his caſe is pleading ; but when a man is acquitted, then he is delivered from his Judge, that is, from the condemning ſentence of his Judge, then he is pronounced free, or (as we ſay) acquitted by Proclamation ; no man may then meddle with him, or charge his crime upon him. Job was aſſured that he ſhould come off well at his tryal, and that there could be no bringing of the matter about again. I ſhould be delivered for ever; that is, I ſhould never be queſtioned more, I ſhould ſee an end, or final determination of my cauſe.

Liberarer evaderē ſemper a judice meo, i. e. abſolverer, vitarem ejus condemnationem. Merc. Probata cauſa impetrarem ab eo liberationem Jun.

The word which we tranſlate for ever, ſignifies both victory and eternity ; I ſhould be delivered victoriouſly and eternally, or unto victory or eternity from my Judge. The ſame word ſignifies victory and eternity in the Original, becauſe eternity gets the victory over all. Time is a great Conquerour that eats up all things here below, whoſe pedigree is from below ; but eternity will eat it out, and conquer Time it ſelf ; eternity is the greateſt conquerour. For ever is the ſaddeſt and ſweeteſt word (upon different accounts) in the whole Bible. To be condemned had not ſo much ſadneſs in it, were it not for ever ; and to be juſtified, had not ſo much ſweetneſs in it, were it not for ever. This word for ever weighs moſt both in reference to mercy and to judgment. Job ſaid the utmoſt to his own comfort, when he ſaid, I ſhall be delivered, or (as Mr. Broughton tranſlates) be quit for ever by my Judge.

Vindicabor ad victoriã vel eternitatem; utrum enim לנצח ſignificat. Hoc ſupremo judicem decidentes, a vobis iniquis judicibus veſtriſque ſuſpicionibus quovis alio. Ariſtarcho liberabor victor totalitèr. Scult.

There is yet a queſtion concerning the Judge, or who the Judge is from whom he ſhould be delivered. Our reading ſeems to intend it of God himſelf. Others by the Judge underſtand his friends or others who charged him ſo hardly. There is yet a third opinion which ſuppoſeth the Judge to be ſome third perſon. who ſhould umpire the buſineſs between God and him. I rather conceive that by his Judge he means God himſelf, to whoſe righteous and merciful tribunal he appealed from the hard ſentence and judgment of his friends ; and who having once declared his judgment, not only the cenſures, but even the ſuſpitions of all men, whether friends or enemies, would be ſilenced for ever. And ſo laſtly, we may take the word Judge, which is here indefinitely propoſed, univerſally. As if he had ſaid ; when once God hath had the hearing of my cauſe, I ſhall not need to fear any, what they can ſay, or do againſt me, in the capacity of a Judge. So ſhould I be delivered for ever from my Judge.

Judicem intelligit apud quem ipſe ſuam cauſam ageret adverſus deum ; facitenim deum velut litigatorem ; quaſi coram tertio quodam judice cauſa diſceptetur. Merc.

Hence Obſerve, God will for ever acquit the righteous, nor ſhall any have power to condemn thoſe whom he hath once acquitted.

There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt (Rom. 8. 1.) as much as to ſay, ſuch ſhall be for ever delivered from their judge. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods Elect? It is God who juſtifieth (Rom. 8. 33.) Though ſome will preſume to lay many and grievous things to the charge of Gods Elect, yet God having juſtified them, all their charges ſhall be reprobated and rejected. God who hath once juſtified a perſon, will never lay any thing to his charge; and what charge ſoever others bring againſt him, Gods juſtification will take it off. The Apoſtles challenge is univerſal, who ſhall lay any thing ? &c. It is univerſal two wayes. Firſt, in regard of perſons accuſing, he excepts none in Earth, Heaven, or Hell. Secondly, in regard of crimes, he excepts no ſort of ſin, let them ſeek and find what they can, be they ſins againſt God or man, be they ſins of omiſſion or commiſſion, be they ſins never ſo much aggravated, or ſadly circumſtantiated, though againſt both light and love, yet they will not do againſt a perſon Elect and Juſtified. Who ſhall lay anything to the charge of Gods Elect ? wipes away all charges. Accuſed they may be, though juſtified ; but condemned they cannot be, becauſe juſtified. The beſt of Saints on Earth have much in them, and much is done by them, which might be matter of charge againſt them (for he that ſaith he hath no ſin in him, hath indeed no truth in him, 1 Joh. 1. 8.) but juſtifying Grace is their full diſcharge.

Hac ratione liber evaderem ab iniquis vita mea judicibus & calumniatoribus, ut ultra mihi diſceptatione & contentione opus non erit.

Again, as the word Judge is expounded univerſally, for all thoſe that did or might accuſe Job.

Obſerve, The beſt and moſt righteous on Earth, meet with many harſh accuſers and hard Judges.

David had thoſe who laid to his charge things that he knew not (Pſal. 35. 11.) The Jews returned from Babylon to build their City and Temple, were charged with ſedition ; Jeremy was charged with treaſon ; Paul was called a peſtilent fellow, and the Primitive Chriſtians were generally loaded with ſlanders by the Heathen. Miſreport and reproach are the portion of Saints from the world. And how ſadly Job was charged all along by his friends, and how ſeverely cenſured, hath appeared every where in this Book, eſpecially in the former Chapter (verſ. 5, 6, 7.) Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquities infinite? for thou haſt taken a pledg from thy brother for nought, and ſtripped the naked of their cloathing, &c. Had not Job reaſon to look upon it as a great mercy to be delivered from ſuch a Judge? And hath not every Godly man reaſon to make Davids choice (2 Sam. 24. 14.) Let me fall into the hands of the Lord (for his mercies are great) and let me not fall into the hands of men. Now as men are for the moſt part over-ſevere executioners of Gods ſentence, ſo they are uſually over-ſevere Judges in giving their own whether ſence or ſentence concerning others. And therefore Jobs faith did propheſie this good to himſelf, that God having heard him and judged him, he ſhould be delivered for ever from (man) his judge. And let this be the comfort of the righteous who are oppreſſed with the hard opinions of men, that, God will at laſt deliver them for ever from every righteous and unrighteous Judge. In that great day (as the Apoſtle Jude calls it) the cauſe of every righteous man ſhall be diſputed before God, and then they ſhall be delivered for ever from their Judge. And this did exceedingly bear up the ſpirit of the Apoſtle Paul in the midſt of the various cenſures and judgements of men concerning him; he knew their judgment ſhould be taken off at laſt, (1 Cor. 4. 3, 4.) with me it is a very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of you, or of mans judgment, yea I judge not my own ſelf; but he who judgeth me is the Lord: therefore judge nothing before the time till the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and make manifeſt the councels of the hearts, and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God; that is, every righteous man, though diſpraiſed, and deſpiſed, though judged and condemned by men, though blackt over with falſe reports and reproaches, yet then every righteous man ſhall have praiſe from the moſt righteous God. He will then do all his people right who have been wronged, and paſs a juſt ſentence upon thoſe who have ſuffered much and long under unjuſt cenſures. And ſo ſhall they be for ever delivered from their Judge.

VERS. 8, 9, 10.

Behold I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him.

On the left hand where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himſelf on the right hand that I cannot ſee him.

But he knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tryed me, I ſhall come forth as Gold.

IN the two former verſes, Job expreſt much confidence of a good iſſue in his cauſe, could he but find God and come to tryal. And he reneweth this again at verſ. 10. expreſſing the ſame confidence; when he hath tryed me I ſhall come forth as gold. But though he was thus confident of a fair coming off in caſe he could find God, yet he ſeems in theſe words to caſt off all confidence of finding him; foraſmuch as yet he could not, or had not. Expreſſing himſelf here as a man that had travelled into all parts and quarters of the world, Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, to find a friend, yet could not meet with him. Behold I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him. On the left hand where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himſelf on the right hand that I cannot ſee him.

There is a threefold ſcope held forth about theſe words.

Firſt, As if Job did here deplore his fruitleſs pains, in wiſhing for his appearing before God, and in appealing to his Tribunal, for as yet he ſaw himſelf unanſwered and fruſtrated in his expectation; God did not appear to him in his troubles, nor declare his purpoſe towards him.

Secondly, His ſcope may be to aſſert the hiddenneſs of the wayes of God, or that the wayes of God are not to be found out, nor underſtood by all the pains and induſtry, by all the endeavours and diſquiſitions of man; let him turn himſelf which way he will, Eaſt or Weſt, North or South, yet he muſt ſay, I cannot behold him.

Declarat Job ſe non poſſe ratione humana, res naturales (quas per quatuor mundi plagas ſignificat) cognoſcere certo & clarè rationes divinorum judiciorum. Pined.

Thirdly, Some conceive that Jobs intent is to declare his own underſtanding or meaning in that earneſt wiſh which he lately made, about his admittance to the throne of God. O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his ſeat (verſ. 3.) He was not ſo groſs as to think that God was confined to any place, or that he had a ſeat on which he ſate, as the Princes of the Earth have; and therefore he affirms, that God is every where, and no where, that he is every where indeed, though he could not find him appearing to him any where; as if he had ſaid, I do not circumſcribe God in my apprehenſions to this or that place; I enquire after him Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, that is, all the world over, yet I miſs of him, and have not attained my purpoſe to this hour; for he hath not yet manifeſted himſelf unto me. This ſeems to be the general ſcope of theſe three verſes, which have two things eſpecially conſiderable in them.

Hæc ſubjungit ad declarandum dei immenſitatem, ne quis putaret eum exiſtimaſſe deum corporeum eſſe aut corporali loco circumſcribi cum de illius tribunali loquutus eſt, Id.

Firſt, Jobs ſolicitous complaint of the Lords hiding himſelf from him after all his ſearchings.

Secondly, The comfort which Job took in the integrity of his own heart, and in the clearneſs of his Conſcience, that if once he came to tryal, all would be well with him.

The Eighth and Ninth verſes are all of one importance, which I ſhall briefly open, and then give ſome notes from them.

Verſ. 8. Behold!

He ſpeaks here as of ſome ſtrange thing, that God who is every where, ſhould be no where found by him; I go forward, and backward, to the right hand, and to the left, and find him not.

Behold, I go forward.

The word is applyed in Scripture to ſignifie both a priority in time, and a priority in place. Some interpret it here of time, I look on the times which were before, and now are paſt. In which ſence the word is uſed (2 King. 19.25.) haſt thou not heard long agoe? that is, haſt thou not heard of the times which are forward, or which have been before. So (Pro. 8. 23.) wiſdome thus ſpeaks, I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, ere ever the Earth was. So we tranſlate it; the Hebrew is, I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the head of time, before the Earth was. Chriſt was before the head of time, or the beginning of time; we tranſlate it here as referring to a place; behold, I go forward, that is, as ſome render, I go Eaſtward, or toward the Eaſt. The world conſidered in it ſelf hath neither forward nor backward, but man being conſidered as ſetting himſelf to the Sun-riſing (for that's the natural poſture of man) then forward is Eaſtward, the Sun riſeth in the Eaſt. And then backward is Weſtward. The left hand is the North, and the right hand is the South; ſuch is the poſition of every man ſtanding with his face to the Eaſt. Thus here, Behold, I go forward, that is, to the Eaſt, or I go Eaſtward; for a man may go forward, in a large ſence, though he go to the North, or to the South, towards Eaſt and weſt, which way ſoever he goes, he goes forward. But to go forward, according to this ſtrict notion is to go Eaſtward, not only becauſe the Jews and Arabians were wont to worſhip toward the Eaſt; but eſpecially becauſe man doth naturally turn himſelf toward the Eaſt, or the Sun-riſing. So the word is uſed (Gen. 2. 8.) The Lord planted a Garden Eaſtward in Eden, or forward in Eden. Behold I go forward,

In Scriptura pars antica orientalis, poſtica occidentalis, auſtralis dextra, aquilonaris ſiniſtra.

But he is not there.

And not he, ſaith the Original, that is, he is not to be found, or he is not to be had; not that Job did think the Eaſtern part of the world empty of God, for he was acquainted with the doctrine of Gods Omnipreſence, he knew that God is every where; but his meaning is only this, he doth not manifeſt himſelf to me, nor appear according to my appeal to him, that I might argue my caſe, and reaſon my matters with him. I obtain no diſcovery of God, but continue ſtill in darkneſs and diſſatisfaction; behold I go forward, but he is not there,

Ante ibo, & non ipſe. Heb.

And backward, but I cannot perceive him.

The ſame word in Scripture (as was noted of the word forward) ſignifieth that which is behind both in time and in place. It is applyed to that which is behind in time (Iſa. 41. 23.) where the Lord challengeth the Idols to give a proof of their Deitie, or that they were gods; ſhew the things that are to come hereafter, or the things that are backward, and behind in time, things that are to be done or to come to paſs hereafter, and we ſhall have ſome teſtimony of your God-head, or that ye are Gods. And as it ſignifies that which is behind in time, ſo that which is behind in place. Thus we render it, I go backward, and then (according to the former notion, forward being Eaſtward) backward is Weſtward. The Weſtern parts of the world are called the back parts of the world; not as ſome (groſſely enough) give the reaſon, becauſe the weſt parts of the world are the worſt parts of the world, or were fit only to be caſt behind the back and be forgotten, as a more ignoble part of the world; but becanſe according to the poſition of a man looking towards the Sun-riſing which is Eaſtward, the Weſt is backward, or upon his back.

And backward, but I cannot perceive,] or (as the Original word ſtrictly bears) underſtand him; that is, I cannot find any mark or print of Gods ſpecial preſence with me there. God is as much hidden or ſecrets himſelf from me as much in the Weſt, as in the Eaſt, both here and there my purſuits after him are fruitleſs. I go backward, but I cannot perceive him; nor do I yet give over my enquiry; for as it follows;

Verſ. 9. I go on the left hand where he doth work, but I cannot behold him.

Theſe words are a deſcription of the Northern part of the world, for that is on the left hand (as was ſaid) according to the moſt natural poſition of mans body. And he addeth, where he doth work; which addition gives a peculiar character or deſcription of the place, and is variouſly tranſlated.

Quando operatur. Pag. In faciendo ipſum. Pag. Dum operatur. Vatab. Ubi facit opus ſuum. Iſidor.

Firſt, On the left hand when he doth work. Secondly, on the left hand in his work or working. Thirdly, on the left hand while he worketh; we render, on the left hand where he doth work, or where he doth his work. Here a queſtion is raiſed, why is this deſcription given of the left hand, or of the Northern part of the world? doth not God work on the right hand, or in the South, as well as on the left hand, or in the North.

I anſwer; though God worketh all the world over, yet God worketh in ſome parts of the world in a more eminent manner. God worketh ſo in ſome places, as if he did work no where elſe; all places are the work of God by Creation, and God worketh in all places by his providence. The works of creation would run to ruine, if God did not ſuſtaine, and as it were keep them in reparation by the works of providence. Yet as God worketh in ſome men, and by ſome men, more then in, and by others, ſome perſons are to him as his right hand, he calls them forth to be greatly inſtrumental to him: So he worketh in ſome places, and nations, and by ſome places and nations more then he doth in and by others. God is a free Agent, he worketh where he will, and he pitches upon ſome ſpecial places, and perſons, (according to the pleaſure of his own will) to work in, and by, more then many others. And ſeeing according to this interpretation, the left hand where he is ſaid to work ſo eminently, is the North,

We may Obſerve;

Firſt, That God worketh more in the Northern parts of the world then he doth in the South.

And the reaſon of this may be, becauſe the Northern parts of the world are more inhabited and peopled then the Southern are. And which may be a ſecond reaſon of it, the Inhabitants of the Northern parts of the world are more civilized and better inſtructed then the Southerne. Now the providences of God are moſt remarkable where there are moſt people, and they beſt taught and inſtructed, where the natural faculties of man are moſt raiſed and ſublimated by art and regular education, there or by them God doth his greateſt works; thoſe places are (as it were) the ſtages whereon he acts and brings to iſſue the ſecret purpoſes and counſels of his heart, both in wayes of judgment and in wayes of mercy.

Beſides, we find that the Northern Nations have in all ages been the moſt active and warlike.

The Fourth Monarchy, that of the Romanes, whoſe ſeat was more Northerly then any of the former three, was the moſt active and warlike of the Four, and extended its Dominion by extream and unwearied induſtry further then any had done before. And thoſe irruptions of enemies and Armies which gave the greateſt check to the Roman greatneſs, and often plum'd or pull'd off the Feathers of that mighty Eagle, were ſtill made by thoſe people who lived and were bred up in climates more cold and Northerly then they; as all Hiſtories do with one conſent make good. Inſomuch that it grew into a famous Proverb; all evil comes from the North, that is, all troubles, invaſions, and devaſtations are brought upon the Nations by ſome hardy people or other coming out of the North. And the holy Scriptures of the Prophets are full of this obſervation (Jer. 1. 14, 15.) Then the Lord ſaid unto me, out of the North an evil ſhall break forth upon all the Inbitants of the land. For lo, I will call all the families of the Kingdome of the North, ſaith the Lord, and they ſhall come, and they ſhall ſet every one his throne at the entrance of the gates of Jeruſalem, &c. By the North in this prophecy, he means Caldea and Babylon, which are ſcituate North from Jeruſalem. And by all the families of the Kingdomes of the North, he means all the Northern parts under the obedience of the King of Babylon, who ſhould readily follow and ſerve him in his warrs againſt Judea. Again in the ſame Prophet (Ch. 4. 6.) I will bring evil out of the North (Ch. 6. 1.) evil appeareth out of the North (verſ. 22.) a people comes from the North (Ch. 10. 22.) behold a great commotion out of the North. And when the Lord promiſed to remove far away from his people the Northern Army, (Joel. 2. 20.) he therein promiſed them the removal of all Armies and troubles, becauſe the North had moſt of all, if not alone troubled and harrazed them with Armies. Again, in the North, the Goſpel (which is the higheſt teaching and inſtruction) hath been more generally and more clearly publiſhed then in the Southern parts of the world; ſo that in alluſion to that of the Prophet (Iſa. 30. 26.) we may ſay, that the light of our Northern moon hath been as the light of the Southern Sun, and that the light of our Sun hath been ſeven-fold to theirs, even as the light of ſeven dayes. And according to the greatneſs of Goſpel light, the diſpenſations, and changes, which we have been under, have been very great; we eſpecially in this Northern Nation, with thoſe adjoyned to us and united with us under one Government, have had full experience of, and may therefore (giving glory to God) ſeal to the truth of Jobs poſition; that God worketh on the left hand, or in the North. Have not we found God working in the North? what changes, what variety of action have our Northern parts both ſeen and felt? what wonders of mercy and ſalvation? what terrible things in righteouſneſs hath God wrought of late among us? the Heavens and the Earth, States of all ſorts, the Heavenly and the Earthly, and of all degrees, the higher and the lower, have been terribly ſhaken in theſe Nations. Providence hath wrought to amazement in our dayes; the Nations round about have heard the report of it, and wondered. Many have had and will have cauſe to ſay of us, what hath God wrought! on the left hand, in our North, God hath been at work indeed!

Omne malum ab aquilone.

Moreover, we find that Mount Sion (which was not only an eminent part of the literal Jeruſalem, but a figure alſo of the myſtical Jeruſalem, or whole Church of God under the Goſpel (Heb. 12. 22) this Mount Sion (I ſay) is Geographically deſcribed in our Northerly ſcituation (Pſal. 48. 2, 3.) Beautiful for the ſcituation, the joy of the whole Earth is Mount Sion; on the ſides of the North, the City of the great King. God is known in her pallaces for a refuge. As if he had ſaid, in Sion, on the ſides of the North God worketh wonderfully, as it follows expreſly (verſ. 4, 5.) for lo, the Kings were aſſembled, they paſſed by together, they ſaw it, and ſo they marveiled, they were troubled and haſted away: That is, Kings conſpiring againſt the Church were ſo terrified with the evidences of Gods power working mightily there, that they fled away, or as another Scripture phraſeth it, they came one way and returned ſeven. And in this form of ſpeech is both the then Jeruſalem, and the Church ever ſince expreſſed, in that boaſt which the King of Babylon (who was a type of all the enemies of the Church cloathed with mighty power and ſoveraignty) makes againſt her, (Iſa. 14. 13.) I will ſit alſo (that is, erect my throne) upon the Mount of the Congregation on the ſides of the North. Mount Sion was called the Mount of the Congregation, becauſe there the people of God the Jewes were famouſly known to congregate often together; and this (ſaith that proud boaſter) on the ſides of the North. And to compleat this notion of the workings of God in and from the North, Chriſt himſelf is ſaid to be raiſed out of the North, for ſo ſome expound that Scripture (Iſa. 41. 25.) I have raiſed up one out of the North, and he ſhall come, from the riſing of the Sun ſhall he call upon my name, &c. This propheſie (I ſay) ſome expound of Chriſt, who ſhall gather his diſperſed and deſpiſed ones from all Quarters of the world. The greateſt works of God that ever were done, Chriſt did them; and therefore the North, may juſtly be called the place where he worketh, ſeeing he raiſed Chriſt from thence.

Secondly, As the words are read thus; on the left hand while he worketh; as if Job had ſaid, I look after God on the left hand, or in the North, even in the time while he is working, or doing great things, and yet I cannot behold him. Obſerve,

> That God may be, and often is, working great things, and we not able to apprehend or behold him at his work.

The inviſible things of God, even his eternal power and Godhead are ſeen in the things that are made; and that not only in the things that he made while he created the world, but alſo in the things which he makes while he governs the world, and yet himſelf is not ſeen in making them; and that not only becauſe he is inviſible in his nature, but becauſe (which is the point in hand) the manner of his working is inviſible. In ſome things God works ſo evidently, that the natural man cannot but ſay, the finger of God is here. But in other things he works ſo ſecretly, that the ſpiritual man is not able to ſee where the finger of God is, unleſs upon that general acknowledgment, that the finger of God is every where. Solomon (Pro. 30. 18.) ſaith, there be three things which are too wonderful for me; yea, four which I know not; the way of an Eagle in the Ayre, the way of a Serpent upon a Rock, and the way of a Ship in the midſt of the Sea; even ſuch are the motions of God, the wayes and workings of God among the ſons of men. A Ship in the Sea leaves no track, no path; you cannot ſee where the Ship hath ſailed; the Ship plows the Ocean, but the furrows are unſeen as ſoon as made. A Serpent upon a Rock, makes no dint, leaves no footſteps behind him. The flying Eagle parts the Aire, but there's no diſcerning where ſhe hath paſt.

And thus Job ſeems to ſpeak here; though I go to the North while God worketh, yet I can ſee no more of him, then of the way of an Eagle in the Aire, or of a Serpent upon a Rock, or of a Ship in the Sea, I cannot behold him while he worketh, nor the way of his working. And further,

He hideth himſelf on the right hand that I cannot ſee him.

The word which we render Hideth, ſignifieth to wrap up with a covering, implying that God doth cover himſelf from the eye of man, in or with the right hand part of the world. Some render it thus; he hideth his right hand, or his working hand, that I cannot ſee him. We render it well, he hideth himſelf on the right hand that I cannot ſee him. The right hand, is put in oppoſition to the left, mentioned in the former part of the verſe. There, in the South God doth (as it were) purpoſely and artificially hide, and caſt a vaile over himſelf (ſaith Job) leſt I ſhould ſee him there, he keeps himſelf yet more out of my view and reach then elſewhere. The word which we tranſlate, the right hand, ſignifies the Southern parts of the world (Cant. 4. 16.) Awake O North-wind, and come thou South, blow upon my Garden. (Ex. 26. 18.) On the South (or right) ſide Southward. The word is alſo rendered, the right ſide, (2 Sam. 24. 5.) On the right ſide of the City. Further, the word ſignifies, as the right hand, ſo alſo ſtrength, becauſe the right hand is ſtrongeſt in moſt men and readieſt for uſe. And ſo he hides himſelf on the right hand may import (as was toucht before) that God hideth himſelf even there, where he puts forth his ſtrength and power.

From all theſe expoſitions laid together, in that Job here ſaith, he went forward and backward, or Eaſt and Weſt, on the right hand, and on the left, or North and South, (from all I ſay) it appears that Job was a great traveller, that he travel'd all the world over; yet where was Job when he ſpake all this? was he not upon his Bed? was he not Gods Priſoner, ſhut up in his Chamber, when he ſaid, I go forward and backward, Northward and Southward, and yet I find him not, perceive him not, ſee him not?

Hence learn, Firſt, That God is every where.

Job knew there was a preſence of God forward and backward, Northward and Southward, he knew that God fills Heaven and Earth with his preſence. There is a preſence of God from which the worſt of men cannot go; and there is a preſence of God into which, many times, the beſt of men cannot get; there was a preſence of God out of which Job could not get, while (according to his deſires) he could not get into the preſence of God.

Secondly, From thoſe various negatives here uſed, I cannot perceive him, I cannot behold him, I cannot ſee him, Obſerve,

> God is a Spirit, not viſible at all in himſelf; and he only appears, as and to whom himſelf pleaſeth to appear to and among men.

The appearances of God are not natural, but voluntary; when his will is to be ſeen, he gives man the priviledge to ſee him. It is altogether impoſſible to ſee him with a bodily eye, (1 Tim. 6. 16.) God only hath Immortality, dwelling in the light that no man can approach unto, whom no man hath ſeen, nor can ſee, that is, with bodily eyes; and as it is impoſſible to ſee him at any time with an eye of ſenſe, ſo he will not always be ſeen by the eye of our underſtanding, no nor always by the eye of faith. Faith ſhall hereafter be perfected in the viſion of God, but here faith is ſometime quite deprived of the Viſion of God, He hideth himſelf from the houſe of Jacob. Faith is oppoſed to all bodily ſight (2 Cor. 5. 7.) we walk by faith, not by ſight; and faith hath not always a ſpiritual ſight. It is ſaid (Heb. 11. 27.) that Moſes ſaw him that is inviſible, he ſaw him with a ſpiritual eye, the eye of faith; we have reaſon to believe, that Job at that time, ſaw God with an eye of faith, but he ſaw him not with an eye of underſtanding to diſcern the way of his working with him. They who are moſt ſpiritual and of the largeſt underſtanding in ſpirituals, can no more comprehend God then a cockle-ſhel can contain the Ocean; and many who are ſpiritual, are ſo dark in their underſtandings, or God is ſo dark to their underſtandings, that they cannot ſo much as apprehend or diſcern him, ſee or perceive him.

Thirdly, When Job ſaith, God hideth himſelf on the right hand, or in the South, ſo that I cannot ſee him, This teacheth us,

> That God doth ſometimes purpoſely withdraw and reſerve himſelf from his moſt precious ſervants.

The Prophet hath a ſtrange deſcription of God (Iſa. 45. 15.) Verily thou art a God that hideſt thy ſelf (as if he had ſaid, it is thy uſe and cuſtome to do ſo) O God of Iſrael the Saviour; he was the God and Saviour of Iſrael, yet Iſrael could not ſee him, for he hid himſelf; when God will conceal himſelf, his Iſrael cannot ſee him. And hence we find in Scripture ſo many earneſt Deprecations, that God would not hide himſelf, and ſo many vehement Expoſtulations when he did, Wherefore hideſt thou thy face (ſaith the Church, Pſal. 44. 24.) and forgetteſt our affliction and oppreſſion? God hides himſelf five ways, or in five things from his people.

Firſt, He hides his favour and the light of his Countenance from his people. And (when this is hid God is hid) he will not let them ſee the love which he hath in his heart towards them, yea (poſſibly) he lets them ſee anger, wrath, diſpleaſure; he puts on the habit of an enemy, and deals with them as with enemies. Job complains more then once that God hid his favour from him, and ſhewed him nothing but his dread and terrour.

Secondly, God hides his works from his people, he will not let them be ſeen, nor be ſeen them; O how unſearchable are thy judgments, and thy wayes paſt finding out! God hath wayes and judgments which man cannot reach unto. Some of his works are acted (as we ſay) above-bord, they are done in a clear light, he that runs may ſee and read them, and God in them. He that runs may read love written upon ſome of them in letters of Gold, or with beams of light. And he that runs may read wrath written upon others of them in letters of blood, or with ſtreams of darkneſs and the very ſhadows of death; but ſome works of God are ſo curtained about and vailed, ſo hidden and obſcured, that we cannot perceive them. Though all the works of God are works of light, yet many of them are in the dark to man: While judgment and righteouſneſs are the habitation of Gods Throne, clouds and darkneſs are round about him (Pſal. 97. 2.)

Thirdly, God hideth the reaſon of his working. His works are often hid, but the reaſon of his working is oftner hid. Jeremy complains, Why doth the way of the wicked proſper? He would know a reaſon of it; he ſaw that God let the wicked proſper, but the reaſon he ſaw not.

Fourthly, The deſign or end of the work of God is a hidden thing; as God doth not let men ſee the reaſon why he doth this or that, ſo not his aim and end, what he would have, or what he drives at in doing it. When God afflicts a godly man, whether it be for the trial of his Graces, or to chaſten him for his failings, or for the purging out of his corruptions, is often his doubt: and as 'tis thus in perſonal workings, ſo alſo in publick workings; Whether God hath to do with a Nation, or with a man only, he hath his ſecrets.

Fifthly, As God hides what himſelf doth, ſo he hides from us what he would have us to do; he hides his own will from us in ſome things: We have indeed his Letters Patents, his proclaimed Laws before us in all things needful to ſalvation; but there are ſome things which concern particular actings in our lives, wherein a godly man may be very ignorant of the will of God, and much puzled in his ſpirit, what to do, whether this or that be the courſe which God would have him take, God hides himſelf from us in the hidings of his will from us. For as when the Apoſtle ſaith (Eph. 4. 20.) Ye have not ſo learned Chriſt, we are not to underſtand Chriſt perſonally, but Chriſt according to the revelation of himſelf in the Goſpel; Chriſt there is the will or mind of Chriſt; ſo when God hideth himſelf from, or doth not diſcover himſelf to us, the meaning may be this, he doth not diſcover his mind and will to us, what he would have us to do as to our particular caſe and condition. God keeps ſome long in ſuſpence, long in the dark about this point, ſo that they often cry out with that good King in his dangerous ſtraight, We know not what to do, but our eyes are towards thee (2 Chron. 20. 12.) Many a man is in as great a ſtraight what to do in regard of the darkneſs of his condition, as Jehoſhaphat was, in regard of the dangerouſneſs of it. Hence note, > Fourthly, That, A gracious ſoul uſeth all means to attain what he deſires, eſpecially to find out the mind and will of God in his workings.

What elſe is the meaning of all this? why elſe went Job forward and backward? why went he on the right hand and on the left? why did he thus traverſe his ground, and repreſent himſelf in theſe buſie enquiries after God, travelling in the multitude of his thoughts upon his bed, from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, leaving no ſtone unturned (as we ſay) nor path untroden, that he might get his cauſe determined, and his heart ſetled? Obadiah tells Eliah after he had met him (ſee how induſtrious the malice of Ahab againſt that holy man, made him, to find him out whom his ſoul hated, 1 Kings 18. 10.) As the Lord thy God liveth, there is no Nation or Kingdom whither my Lord hath not ſent to ſeek thee, &c. Not that Ahab had ſent Meſſengers into every quarter of the world; but the meaning is, that he had been very diligent and induſtrious to find out Elijah. And ſo ſaith Job, there is not any corner under heaven, where I have not been ſeeking to find him whom my ſoul loveth and longeth for; thereby importing his exceeding diligence to find God. They who have a deſire after God indeed, will take pains for him; they will ſeek him Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, and never complain of the length of their journey. They will not ſtay till God comes home to their doors, but out they will go to ſeek him. For though it be a truth that no man can ſeek or look after God, till God hath firſt looked after, and found him; yet they whom God hath once found, have ſuch an impreſſion left upon their hearts, that when God ſeems to leave them, and to be as loſt to them, they will more then ſeem to look after and ſeek him while he is abſent from them, that is, while he hides himſelf from them. Surely God hath never toucht the hearts of thoſe lazie profeſſors that would fain be ſaved, but will go neither forward nor backward, neither North nor South after Jeſus Chriſt; whereas if their deſires were true and genuine, they would uſe all means, go all due wayes, leave nothing unaſſayed that might probably bring them to the knowledge and enjoyment of him: O how buſie was Job's ſpirit to find out God! And ſo buſie ſhould our ſpirits be to find him out, both for comfort and for counſel in all the turnings of our lives.

> Laſtly obſerve, That, After the uſe of much means to find God, yet poſſibly God may not be found by us as to our apprehenſion.

Job ſpared no pains to find out God, and yet he could not ſpeed at that time; after all his ſearch he found him not, he perceived him not, he did not behold him; you may pray, and ſeek, and adviſe, and wait, follow this means and that means to find out God, or to recover the ſence of his gracious preſence with your ſouls, and yet (for a long time) miſs of him. This is one of the exerciſes which God is pleaſed to put his people to; he therefore hides, that we may ſeek him; he doth not hide himſelf becauſe he will not be found; but he hides himſelf becauſe he will be ſought; and yet when he is ſought, and ſought in a right way too, he will not preſently be found; for though none that ſeek him in ſincerity, but ſhall find him at laſt (He hath not ſaid to the ſeed of Jacob, ſeek ye my face in vain, that is, ſeek me and never find me, the Scripture ſpeaks no ſuch thing) nor did Job alwayes ſeek and not find; yet, as he in his time, ſo we in ours, may ſeek him long, and not find him, and yet ſtill we muſt continue ſeeking, becauſe God hides himſelf that we may ſeek him more, not that he would have us give over ſeeking: And therefore in times of deſertion, in hiding and withdrawing times, do not give over ſeeking; for the reaſon why God doth withdraw, is, that we may ſeek him more, and follow harder after him; that we may ſeek him (as Job did) Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, that is, in all means, duties and ordinances, he will not alwayes hide himſelf; that's the ſum and ſcope of the eighth and ninth verſe.

Verſe 10. But he knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I ſhall come forth as gold.

Job could not find the wayes of God, well (ſaith he) though I cannot find out Gods way, yet God hath found out my wayes; though he is pleaſed to vail his own wayes, yet mine are open; he hideth himſelf from me, but I am not hid from him. He knoweth the way that I take.

Connecto hunc verſum cum ſeptimo, obtinerem à judice, nam is novit. Eſt igitur ætimologia ſpei, cætera autē quaſi per parentheſin interſeruntur illo loco. Coc.

Further, In this verſe Job ſeems to give a reaſon of his hope to ſpeed well at the Seat or Throne of God, whither he had appealed (v. 3. 7.) As if he had ſaid, Seeing my heart tells me, my way is good, and my Judge knows it to be ſo; how can it be but that my judgment from him ſhould be good? He knoweth the way that I take.

To know, may be taken here two wayes; Firſt, As an act of the Underſtanding only; he knoweth, that is, he fully perceiveth and apprehendeth what my way is.

Secondly, As it takes in an act of the Affection too; He knoweth, that is, he approveth the way that I take; my way is pleaſing to him. When God is ſaid to know the way of the righteous (Pſal. 1. 6.) The meaning of it is, he is well pleaſed with their way, and will proſper them in it, they ſhall have good ſucceſs in what they go about.

Quamvis illum non poſſit homo perſpicere, at ille perſpectas habet omnium mortalium actiones.

Again, Whereas we tranſlate, He knows the way that I take, that is, my courſe of life or converſation among men. The Hebrew is, He knoweth the way that is in me; he doth not only know my outward way, or the way that is without me, but he knows my inward way, the way that is within me. We have a way within us, and that is the way of our thoughts; and we have a way without us, and that is the way of our works. He (ſaith Job) knows the way that is in me; therefore much more the way without me; he knows me through and through: As if he had ſaid, what though I cannot find him, yet I will leave my cauſe with him; for he needs no information of mine, to lead him into the underſtanding of it; he himſelf knows all things by himſelf; He knoweth the way that I take, or that is in me.

There are three things which Job might aim at in this ſentence.

Firſt, An account why he was ſure of a right judgment from God, becauſe he was not only a Judge, but an eye-witneſs of all the wayes that he had ever gone.

Secondly, A confutation of his Friends opinion of him, as if he were a man that did not fear God, whereas he did acknowledge that both himſelf and all his wayes were viſible and manifeſt unto God.

Thirdly, A ſtrong aſſertion of his own innocency, ſeeing he could ſpeak thus rejoycingly, that God knew all his wayes. Hence obſerve,

The way of man, even his moſt ſecret way, or the way within him is known to God.

God wraps up himſelf often in the darkneſs of ſecrecy, as to man, but man is never in that darkneſs as to God; the very children of darkneſs, and the wayes of darkneſs are in the light to him. And as the wayes of evil men, and the evil of their wayes, ſo the wayes of good men, and the goodneſs of their wayes are known to God. We need not fear that the good we do or have done (though no eye of man ſee it) ſhall be loſt in the dark. We ſcarce know our own wayes, and we cannot know our own hearts, but God doth (Jer. 17. 9.) The heart of man is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked, who can know it? No man can know all the wayes of his heart; he cannot come to the bottom of his own heart, though he may know the bent of it; but (ſaith God) I ſearch the heart: much of our heart is a ſecret to our ſelves; but to God nothing of it is; he knows our inſide full. As he knows our actions, ſo the grounds upon which we act, and the ends for which we act, and the heart with which we act; thus God knows the way that every man takes: and thus none but God can know the wayes of man. We can trade no farther then upon the borders of mens wayes, their outward acts; as for the ſpirit and principle of them, whence they flow, as for the aimes and ends of them, whither they are flowing, with theſe God alone is intimate. And with theſe God is more intimate then man can be with that which is wholly outward.

And ſeeing God knows all the wayes which man takes, let no man go about to hide his wayes from God. 'Tis vain to hide any thing from him who ſees all that is hidden. He that comes before a Judge that knows what he hath done, and is able to prove it, why ſhould he deny it? The heart of a natural man is not more buſied about any thing then in making veils for his ſin; the firſt thing that man did after he had ſinned, was, to make ſuch a veil. As all men have ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, ſo they cover their tranſgreſſions according to the ſimilitude of his covering. The Holy Ghoſt (Pſal. 32. 1.) calleth them bleſſed, whoſe ſins are covered, but it is with a covering of Gods providing, not of their own; woe to thoſe whoſe ſins are hid by a covering of their own providing; God hath given us his Son our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in his righteouſneſs, for our covering; while our ſins are ſo covered, bleſſed are we; but if we cover them with a covering of our own, God will lay them open for ever to our ſhame. Woe to the rebellious children, ſaith the Lord (Iſa. 30. 1.) that take counſel, but not of me, and that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may add ſin unto ſin: If we cover our ſins with any thing but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, we cover them with a ſin; not only becauſe all our righteouſneſs (which is the beſt thing of our own that we have to cover them with) is ſinful; but becauſe the very act of covering them ſo, is a ſin; and therefore in ſo doing, what do we but add ſin unto ſin? And if to cover our ſins with our own righteouſneſs, be a ſin, how do we heap ſin upon ſin while we cover it (as many endeavour to do) with our denials, diſſemblings and excuſes?

Secondly, Conſider with what confidence Job ſpeaks; he had diſcourſed of his fruitleſs labour and travel in the uſe of all means to find God; well (ſaith he) yet it is a comfort that God knows my wayes, though I cannot find out his. Hence note,

It is the joy of the upright that God knows them and their wayes, yea, the wayes that are in them.

Thus Jeremy (chap. 12. 3.) Having complained of the proſperity of evil men before the Lord, concludes, But thou O Lord, knoweſt me, thou haſt ſeen me, and tried my heart toward thee: This was the Prophets joy, and ſo it was the Apoſtles, when he ſaid, But we are made manifeſt unto God (2 Cor. 5. 11.) That's the thing that pleaſeth us. David (1 Chron. 29. 17.) ſpeaks in the ſame frame of ſpiritual contentment; I know alſo, O my God, that thou trieſt my heart, and haſt pleaſure in uprightneſs: This was a pleaſure to David, this was his joy and Crown of rejoycing, that God knew him; and a godly man hath much cauſe of rejoycing in this, that God knows him perfectly; conſidering how much he is miſtaken and miſunderſtood by men, When our wayes are miſtaken by men, 'tis great content to remember, that God knows the way that we take, without the leaſt miſtake: For this aſſures a godly man of three things.

Firſt, That God will reckon his wayes ſuch as they are, and him ſuch a one as he is. He is much aſſured that God will never put a falſe gloſs or an unjuſt conſtruction (which men are apt to do) upon the text of his life.

Secondly, This aſſures him that his works of righteouſneſs ſhall not want a reward; for God is not unrighteous, to forget our work and labour of love (Heb. 6. 10.) that is, he will not let us go without a reward for ſuch works; for as then we are ſaid not to forget the Word of God, when we obey it; ſo God is ſaid not to forget our works, when he doth reward them.

Thirdly, This aſſures him that God will give teſtimony to his integrity, and bear his witneſs (when moſt ſeaſonable) to his righteous works. Though men will not give him teſtimony, yet God who knows his wayes, will; God will not do leſs for a good man, then a good Conſcience will: For as an evil Conſcience will accuſe, ſo a good Conſcience will excuſe (Rom. 2. 15.) Their Conſciences in the mean time accuſing or excuſing one another. Conſcience knows our wayes, and therefore Conſcience gives teſtimony againſt them that do evil, and Conſcience will give teſtimony with thoſe that do well; let all the world clamour againſt them, Conſcience will not; becauſe Conſcience knows the way that a man takes. Much more then will God teſtifie for that man whoſe way is good; and how ſweet is this? 'Tis ſweet and ſatisfying to a gracious ſoul to do good; but when God himſelf ſhall teſtifie for a gracious ſoul, that he hath done good, this is much more ſweet and ſatisfying (1 John 3. 20, 21.) If our heart (or Conſcience) condemn us, he is greater then our heart (or Conſcience) and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God; even this confidence, that God will not only not condemn us, but acquit us, yea, and teſtifie for us: And as it is worſe to be condemned by God, then by Conſcience; ſo it is better and ſweeter to be acquitted by God, then by our own Conſcience, when once our Conſciences are acquainted with his acquittal of us and teſtimony for us. Yea, there is this further comfort in it, that foraſmuch as our wayes are known to God, he will give teſtimony of them to others, as well as to our own Conſciences. The world ſhall know what or wayes are one time or other, as well as God knows them now: they who are moſt prejudiced againſt them, and draw the blackeſt lines over them, ſhall one day be made to know, that they did not know the beauty of them. And this God will do, either, Firſt, In this world, by ſome extraordinary providence; as David ſpeaks (Pſal. 37. 6.) He ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſs as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day. A mans righteouſneſs may lie in obſcurity or in the dark, no man knowing it, and moſt men judging him unrighteous and wicked; but Providence ſome time or other will bring forth this mans righteouſneſs as the light, and his juſt dealing as the noon-day.

Or ſecondly, If a good mans wayes lie hid from the world all the dayes of his life in this world, yet the Apoſtle aſſures him, that in the Great Day God will proclaim them in the ears of all the world (1 Cor. 4. 5.) Judge nothing before the time, till the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of the heart. So then a day is coming which will make through-lights in the world, and bring to light the moſt hidden things of the darkeſt darkneſs. And by theſe hidden things of darkneſs and counſels of the heart, we are to underſtand not only evil things and wicked counſels (ſure enough God will bring them to light) but even thoſe righteous things, and good counſels of the heart, which have lain in the dark, or unrevealed: God will bring to light all the hidden things of darkneſs, the good as well as the bad, and then ſhall every man, that is, every good man, every godly man, have praiſe of God. The praiſe of man is very pleaſing unto man; but O how unſpeakably pleaſing is the praiſe of God! And this opens a vaſt difference between the hypocrite and the ſincere: Can a hypocrite rejoyce in ſecret, ſaying thus, God knoweth the way that I take? He cannot ſay thus; and I may ſay three things of the hypocrite in oppoſition to this.

Firſt, The hypocrite endeavours to hide and put his wayes out of the light of God, as much as he can. As he hath not the light of Gods countenance, or of his favour ſhining upon him, ſo he deſires not to have the light of his knowledge ſhining into him (*Iſa.*29. 15.) The Prophet deſcribes ſome ſeeking deep to hide their counſels from the Lord, and their works are in the dark (both in natural and moral darkneſs) and they ſay, Who ſeeth us, and who knoweth us? The endeavour of the hypocrite is that he may be hid. And,

Secondly, He cries all's hid; as it is his endeavour, that God ſhould not, ſo it is his hope that God doth not know his wayes, much leſs his heart; he is often ſure that men do neither ſee nor know, and he alwayes preſumes that God doth not; and therefore as one out of doubt he puts his doubts, who ſeeth? and who knoweth? Though flaſhes of fear come in upon him ſometimes, yet he flatters himſelf with preſumptuous hopes and falſe perſwaſions, that God knows him not, ſees him not, and that his dark way ſhall never be diſcovered; and as in that place of the Prophet, they ſpeak indefinitely, thereby inferring that God doth not ſee them; ſo we have them in the Pſalm ſpeaking directly that God ſhall not (Pſal. 94. 5, 6, 7.) They break in pieces thy people, O Lord, and ſlay the widow and ſtranger, and murder the fatherleſs; yet they ſay, the Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it: As if they had ſaid, though God ſhould ſet himſelf to ſearch us out, and would never ſo fain ſee what we are doing, yet he ſhall not. We will carry it ſo cloſely and cunningly, that the eye of God ſhall not reach us. Their works were ſo foul and bloody, that the Sun might be aſhamed to look upon them, and they were ſo cloſe, that they believed God could not look upon them, or bring them to ſhame for them.

Thirdly, 'Tis a terror for a hypocrite to remember, that God knoweth his wayes. That which Job ſaith of the wicked in general, is moſt proper to hypocrites (chap. 24. 17.) The morning is to them even as the ſhadow of death; if one know them, they are in the terrors of the ſhadow of death. The Hebrew is very conciſe, if know; we make up the ſence thus, if one know them, that is, if God or man know them and their wayes, if they be apprehended and diſcovered any way, in their abominable wayes, they are in the terrors of the ſhadow of death, that is, they are ready to die with the fright and terror of it. Hypocrites are ſo far from rejoycing in this, that God knows the way which they take, that to be known either of God or man, is their torment.

Thirdly, Conſider why doth Job appeal to God in this cauſe depending between him and his friends? The reaſon was, becauſe he knew his friends miſjudged him through their ignorance; therefore he deſired to be heard by a Judge that perfectly knew his wayes, and ſo was able to make a righteous judgment of him. Hence obſerve,

God is every way fitted to be a righteous Judge.

There are two things eſpecially that fit a man to be a Judge.

Firſt, That he hath a principle of righteouſneſs in him, that he be not byaſſed and turned aſide from doing right indifferently without reſpect of perſons.

Secondly, That he hath a principle of light in him, that he be (as Jethro adviſeth Moſes) a man of knowledge. Both theſe meet perfectly in God; he is juſt and righteous in all his wayes, and he knows all our wayes. Some earthly Judges err for want of a Principle of righteouſneſs; and ſo in things which they plainly know and ſee as clear as the light, are ready to be drawn and wrought off by reſpects and intereſts. Again, there are other earthly Judges, who are right and honeſt enough in their Principles, nothing can take them off, or miſlead them to the right hand or to the left, but they want knowledge and underſtanding to diſcern between good and evil, right and wrong; they cannot ſee into the merit of the Cauſe, or integrity of the perſon before them; and thereupon ſtumble in Judgment. Indeed the beſt of earthly Judges cannot alwayes (when they have done their beſt) find out who hath the good Cauſe, and who hath the bad; and many times they that plead, blind them with their Rhetorick, ſetting a fair gloſs upon a foul Cauſe, or making a fair Cauſe look foul, and ſo the Judge is deluded: ſeeing he judgeth of things as witneſſed and repreſented, as alledged and legally proved, and ſo it may fall out that while he judgeth righteouſly, his judgment may not be right. But we (as Job here) have cauſe to rejoyce that we have to do with a Judge, who, as he is both righteous and knowing, ſo he knows all things and perſons in themſelves, and not from others. He needs not that any ſhould teſtifie of man, for he knoweth what is in man (John 2. 25.) He knows the way that is in me, or, the way that I take: and as it follows,

When he hath tried me, I ſhall come forth as Gold.

Mr. Broughton reads thus, Tried he me, I ſhould come forth Gold, that is, if God (as I deſire) would vouchſafe to try me, I ſhould appear what I am indeed, not what I now appear.

When he hath tried me.] There are divers wayes of trial, three eſpecially; God tries, Firſt, By proſperity, that's a trial: a full eſtate diſcovers a man, as well as a low and empty eſtate doth. To know how to abound is as high a point of Grace, as how to want (Phil. 4. 12.) To have power in our hands, diſcovers us as well as to be oppreſt by power. Magiſtracy ſhews the man, and it ſhews many to be but men. Great power over men, is a great temptation to man, and ſo likewiſe is the praiſe of men (2 Cor. 6. 4.) But in all things approving our ſelves as the miniſters of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes, &c. And by what elſe? By the Armour of righteouſneſs on the right hand, and on the left; by honour and diſhonour, by evil report, and good report. We approve our ſelves, and trial is taken of us as well by things on the right hand, as by thoſe upon the left; as well by honour, as by diſhonour. The good report or praiſe which a man meets with in the world, is as great a trial as the ill report or diſpraiſe which he meets with in the world; 'tis a great trial to be diſpraiſed, to have dirt thrown in our faces; and it is a great trial to be praiſed, to be commended and applauded, to be lifted up in the thoughts and upon the tongues of men. Solomon hath an excellent paſſage (Prov. 27. 21.) As the fining pot for Silver, and the furnace for Gold, ſo is a man to his praiſe; that is, a man is tried by his praiſe, as the Silver is tried in the fining-pot, and as the Gold is tried in the furnace. Whenever you are praiſed, you are tried; then your humility and ſelf-denial are tried; then you are tried, whether when you are praiſed by men, you can give the whole glory to God. Herod's praiſe was the fining-pot, and the furnace wherein he was tried; it made him to appear to be but droſs indeed: His hearers cried the voyce of God and not of man. When you cry up ſuch a Preacher, ſuch a Magiſtrate, ſuch a Souldier, ſuch an Orator, you put him into the fining-pot, and he that is but droſs, conſumes. The worms eat up Herod becauſe he gave not glory to God (Acts 12. 23.) As it was a moſt dreadful, ſo it was a moſt righteous judgment, that he ſhould be eaten up of Worms, who forgot that he was one, and forgot it ſo far, that he was pleaſed with their applauſes, who cried him up for a God. Worldly proſperity, power and praiſe are the right-hand-way by which God trieth the ſons of men.

Magiſtratus indicat virum.

Secondly, God doth uſually try by affliction, and that's the left-hand-way (Jam. 1 12.) Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation (meaning affliction) for when he is tried, he ſhall receive the Crown of life, &c. That is, when thoſe temptations and afflictions have tried him, and he hath approved himſelf in the trial, then, he ſhall receive the crown of life, &c. (1 Pet. 1. 6.) Though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations, that the trial of your faith being much more precious then of Gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found to praiſe, &c. Affliction is the trial of our faith in God, and of our patience under the hand of God. When Nature is vext, it ſhews it ſelf, and ſo doth Grace. Affliction diſcovereth both what our virtues are, and what our corruptions are.

Thirdly, God trieth man by a kind of examination. David ſpeaks of that (Pſal. 17. 3.) Thou haſt proved mine heart, thou haſt viſited me in the night, thou haſt tried me, and ſhalt find nothing. In the night the ſoul is free from buſineſs with the world, and therefore freeſt for buſineſs with God; and then did God prove and viſit David, that is, examine and ſift him, by calling to his mind all his wayes and works in former paſſages; and the iſſue of this trial was, he found nothing; not that his ſoul was empty of good things, or that there was nothing evil in him; but God upon examination found nothing of that evil in him, which ſome men ſuſpected him of; namely, either an ill will or evil deſign againſt Saul, in reference to whom, he called his cauſe a righteous cauſe, or, the right (verſ. 1.) Hear the right, O Lord, &c. Thus God tried David; and thus earthly Judges try men; they examine them and their caſe, that's call'd a trial: In this third ſence we are chiefly to underſtand the meaning of Job in this place. Job had long before undergone a trial by proſperity and praiſe; Job was at that time under trial by affliction, he had paſt the former, and was under the latter; yea, he was deep in it; but as yet, he had not come to his trial of Examination, or to a judiciary trial, which he earneſtly begg'd of God. All men ſhall come to ſuch a trial in the Great Day. We muſt all appear before the Judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad (2 Cor. 5. 10.) Some expound Job appealing here to that Judgment: But I conceive that the whole tendency of his Diſcourſe aimes at an earlier Judgment or day of trial then that. And though (poſſibly) his expectation was not great, if any at all, that God would grant him a private Seſſion (as we may call it) for his perſonal trial, yet (to ſhew that he had not the leaſt ſuſpition of being acquitted in that day, whenſoever it ſhould be) he importunately profeſſeth he could wiſh it might be the next day, and that he would refuſe no pains nor travel for the procuring of ſuch a day, were it to be obtained; being fully ſatisfied from the light and dictates of his own Conſcience, that when the Lord had ſo tried him, he (as David ſpake in the place lately opened) ſhould find nothing; no ſuch fault or guilt as was charged upon him. Chriſt writing to the Angel of the Church of Epheſus, gives him this among other commendations (Rev. 2. 2.) Thou haſt tried them which ſay they are Apoſtles, and are not, and haſt found them liars. Many appear fair in holineſs, and boaſt highly of their priviledges (even as high as an infallible Spirit and immediate miſſion) who yet being tried and throughly examined by the Church, or by thoſe who are ſpiritual, and have ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil, will be found liars, counterfeit ſtuff, and lighter then vanity. But Job was perſwaded that though God ſhould try him, not only ſhould nothing be found againſt him, nor he found a lier, but that much would be found for him, and himſelf be found in the truth, as he plainly expreſſeth in the cloſe of the verſe; When he hath tried me, what then?

Intelligitur de ſtricto Dei examine in ſuo judicio, ad quod Job provocaverat. Merc.

I ſhall come forth as gold.] Here's the iſſue of the trial. There are ſeven words uſed in the Original for Gold: That in the Text notes the colour or yellowneſs of it, and is applied to ſignifie any thing that is bright, or ſhining, pure and ſplendid, as Gold is (Zech. 4. 12.) We read of Golden Pipes which did empty the Golden Oyl (or according to the Letter of the Hebrew, the Gold) out of themſelves. That ſpiritual Oyl was called Golden, or Gold, becauſe, like Gold, ſhining, pure or precious. The gifts and graces of the Spirit are Golden Oyl indeed. So (Jer. 51. 7.) Babylon hath been a Golden Cup in the hand of the Lord; which ſome expound tropically, taking the Continent for the thing contained; the Cup for the Wine; called Golden Wine, becauſe of the ſplendidneſs and beauty of it (as Solomon ſpeaks, Prov. 23. 31.) When it giveth its colour in the Cup. Or, Babylon is called a Golden Cup, Firſt, Becauſe of the great glory, wealth and illuſtrious pomp of that Empire, deſcribed in Daniel (chap. 2. 32, 38.) by a head of Gold, and marked out in Iſaiah, by the name of the Golden City (Iſa. 14. 4.) And ſecondly, Becauſe God had cauſed other Nations to drink deep of his wrath, by the power of the Babylonian Empire: Upon which account, Myſtical Babylon is ſaid to have a Golden Cup in her hand (Rev. 17. 4.) Gold is the King, the chief of Metals; Gold is among Metals as the Sun is among the Stars and Planets of Heaven, the glory and Prince of them all. So that when Job ſaith, I ſhall come forth as Gold, his meaning is, I ſhall come forth pure and in much perfection. Gold is firſt, The moſt precious metal; ſecondly, the moſt honourable metal; thirdly, the moſt weighty metal; fourthly, the moſt durable metal; fifthly, the moſt deſirable metal: Every one is for Gold; So that when Job ſaith, I ſhall come forth Gold, his meaning is, as if he had ſaid, my trial will not diminiſh, but rather add unto me; I ſhall be precious, honourable, weighty, durable, deſirable, after I have been in the Furnace or Fining-pot of my moſt ſoreſt and ſevereſt trials. And he ſpeaks thus in oppoſition to his friends, who had an opinion of him, as if he were but droſs or the off-ſcouring of all things (as the Apoſtles were reckoned in their time) I ſhall come forth not droſs and traſh, but gold; as if he had ſaid, Were I once tried, I ſhould be for ever quit of thoſe Charges brought in againſt me, and of thoſe ſcandals caſt upon me, I ſhould ſhine in reputation and honour like pure Gold coming out of the fire; I ſhould recover my good name, and be found a man loyal to God, and righteous towards men. Hence note,

> Grace renders man excellent and precious.

Every godly man is Gold, yea, he is more precious then fine Gold; The fineſt Gold is but droſs to Grace; the wicked of the world are reprobate ſilver, or refuſe ſilver (Jer. 6. 30.) The Saints are finer then Gold refined in the fire; for they are precious, they are honourable, they are uſeful, they are durable and laſting, they ſhall endure everlaſtingly, they are weighty in their worth, and their portion is an eternal weight of glory.

Secondly, Whereas Job ſaith, When I am tried, I ſhall come forth as Gold, > Obſerve, A godly man is no loſer by being tried; yea, he gains by it.

He who before was reputed but as droſs, and had much droſs in him, comes out of the trial as Gold, and loſeth nothing of his weight, worth or beauty, by being tried; he only loſeth (a good loſs) his droſs and the rubbiſh of his corruptions. Grace is not only Grace ſtill, but more gracious, even glorious after trial. Some ſpeak of Grace as if it were but droſs, conſumable in the fire; as if every temptation and trial endangered it to an utter conſumption; or, as if like Lead, it would quite evaporate and ſpend to nothing in the fire. They ſtick not to affirm, that a true Believer may loſe all his Graces, and how much ſoever enricht before by the Spirit, yet prove a Bankrupt in ſpirituals. Job was confident that his Gold would hold the trial, both of the hotteſt afflictions and of the ſtricteſt examinations: He had been tried long in the furnace of affliction heated ſeven times more then ordinary, and yet held his integrity; and though he ſhould come to trial at the Judgment-Seat of God, which is more then ſeventy times ſeven times ſtricter then the Judgment-Seat of man (according to truth) can be, yet he nothing doubted, that nothing (as to the general bent of his heart and frame of life) ſhould be found or appear but integrity ſtill. That is but droſſie Grace, natural Grace, if not hypocritical Grace, or a counterfeit only of Grace, which abides not in the day of trial. They who loſe the Grace which they have ſhewed, had only a ſhew of Grace. Hypocrites ſhall loſe all at their tryal; their paint, their varniſh will not endure the the fire, either of a laſting affliction, or of that laſt examination: When once a Hypocrite is tried, then he is ſhamed. He may go currant for pure gold a great while, but at laſt he appears but as a gilded Sepulcher, or droſs of Gold (Pſal. 119. 119.) Thou putteſt away all the wicked of the earth like droſs. And the Lord ſpeaking of the degenerate houſe of Iſrael (Ezek. 22. 18.) ſaith, The houſe of Iſrael is to me become droſs, all they are braſs, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midſt of the furnace, they are even the droſs (or droſſes) of ſilver; that is, though they are a profeſſing people, and hold out my Name, yet I having tryed and examined them through, find them to have nothing but a name of profeſſion.; they being tryed are come forth like droſs. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 3. 13.) Allegorically ſhadowing out all ſorts of ſuperſtructive doctrine, by Gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, wood, hay, ſtubble; ſaith, If any man build upon this foundation (that is, Chriſt) Gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, wood, hay, ſtubble: every mans work ſhall be made manifeſt. For the day ſhall declare it, becauſe it ſhall be revealed by fire, and the fire ſhall try every mans work of what ſort it is. If any mans work abide which he hath built thereupon, he ſhall receive a reward; if any mans work ſhall be burnt, he ſhall ſuffer loſs, &c. The wood, hay, ſtubble, ſhall be burnt, but the gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, will abide the tryal of fire. Whether it be the fire of perſecution, tribulation, and temptation (nothing but holy Truth can abide theſe fires) or the fire of the holy Spirit (who in Scripture is often compared to fire, and) who together with the light of the Word revealeth the ſoundneſs or falſeneſs of all doctrines delivered by men, and like fire conſumes what is falſe, but gives a further brightneſs and luſtre to the Truth. Even truth untryed may be counted droſs, but being tryed it comes forth like Gold. Now, as the truth of doctrines, ſo the truth of perſons in their works and graces will abide when they come to the teſt or tryal; God who puts away all the wicked of the earth as droſs, will gather up all the godly of the earth as Gold, when he hath tryed them, and try them he will. We read (Dan. 7. 9, 10.) how dreadfully God comes to Judgment, I beheld till the thrones were caſt down, and the ancient of dayes did ſit; his Throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire; a fiery ſtream iſſued and came forth from before him, the judgment was ſet, and the books were opened. Which whether it be meant of the laſt Judgment, or of ſome ſpecial Judgment upon a particular State or oppreſſing power, comes all to one as to the point in hand; while it ſhews that God in the tryal of men will examine their perſons, and their actions, as by fire. Of every ſuch tryal it may be ſaid (as Mal. 3. 2, 3.) Who may abide the day of his coming? And who ſhall ſtand when he appeareth? (The Prophet ſpeaks of the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, at which time he was alſo mighty in Spirit) For he is like a Refiners fire, and like Fullers ſoap, and he ſhall ſit as a Refiner and Purifier of ſilver. When Chriſt came in the fleſh to redeem us, he came with fire alſo to purge and ſanctifie us, and he comes with fire whenſoever he comes in the Spirit to comfort and enlighten us; and at laſt when he comes in glory, he will come with fire to try, examine, and judge us. When he comes to try us thus, all the faithful ſhall come forth as Gold, but the wicked and their works will burn and be conſumed. When Saints come to tryal at laſt they will ſtand; and when they are tryed here, they will mend: Firſt, Their Corruptions will be the more outed: And ſecondly, Their Graces will be the more acted. We may read this iſſue of their tryal (Zach. 13. 9.) And it ſhall come to paſs that in all the Land, ſaith the Lord, two parts therein ſhall be cut off and dye, but the third ſhall be left therein. Whether we take the Land in particular for Iſrael and the people of the Jews, or typically for all Profeſſors throughout the world, Two parts ſhall be cut off and dye, but the third ſhall be left therein. And what will God do with them? Or how will he deal with them? We may ſee what, at the ninth verſe, And I will bring the third part through the fire (of affliction and examination) and I will refine them as ſilver is refined, and try them as gold is tryed (And what will be the iſſue of this?) And they ſhall call on my Name, and I will hear them. Here faith and prayer (in which all graces are exerciſed) are put for all graces. When they are in this fire they ſhall call on my Name, and I will hear them, and I will ſay (when they are in the fire) it is my people, and they ſhall ſay, the Lord is my God. They who pray in the fire of tryal, or in the fiery tryal, declare evidently, that they are Gold in the fire; but they to whom God ſaith in the fire of their tryals, Ye are my people, and they who (being ſtill in the ſame fire) can ſay, The Lord is our God, are declared both by God and themſelves eminently, that they are Gold in the fire. They are as the choiceſt Gold, as the Gold of Ophyr, of whom the Lord ſaith, (by an act of diſtinguiſhing love) Ye are my people, and who can ſay to God (by an act of appropriating faith) The Lord is our God. Surely then Saints loſe nothing in the fire (but what is not worth the holding) while God finds and owns them, and they find and own God in the fire.

Dum probantur toti in fumum abeunt.

In igne deum amanter invocant & candido & germano ſunt erga illum ſtudio. Theod.

Further, Some read this latter part of the verſe as an offer; Let him try me, and I ſhall come forth as gold: As if Job had ſaid, I do not refuſe, but deſire a tryal; God knows my way, the way that is in me, let him come and try me; yea, I am ready to come to him for my tryal.

Probat me.

Hence Note, A ſincere heart is willing to be tryed.

'Tis a great part of the work of a godly man to try himſelf and his works; and it is one of his greateſt wiſhes, that God would try him and his works. They who are ſincere are much in trying themſelves; Let us ſearch and try our wayes (ſay they) and turn again unto the Lord. And they who are much in ſelf-tryal and examination, are willing to be tryed and examined both by God and man; ſure enough, They that try themſelves much, are not afraid of the tryal of man, no nor of the tryal of God. If we compare the firſt verſe of the hundred thirty-ninth Pſalm with the twenty-third we ſhall ſee what an anſwer there is in them as to this point. At the firſt verſe David ſaith, O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me and known me: At the twenty-third verſe he prayes, Search me, O God, and know my heart: Why did David pray thus to God, Search me and know my heart, having ſaid before, Thou haſt ſearched me, and known me? Seeing David knew that God had ſearched him, what needed he to pray that God would ſearch him? Why did he beg God to do that which he had done already? The anſwer is at hand, David was a diligent ſelf-ſearcher, and therefore he was ſo willing to be ſearched; yea, he delighted to be ſearched by God; and that not (as was ſaid) becauſe himſelf had done it already, but alſo becauſe he knew God could do it better. He knew by his own ſearch, that he did not live in any way of wickedneſs againſt his knowledge, and yet he knew there might be ſome way of wickedneſs in him that he knew not of. And therefore he doth not only ſay, Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thonghts: But he adds (ver. 24.) See if there be any wicked way (or any way of pain and grief) in me. (The ſame word ſignifies both, becauſe wicked wayes lead in the end to pain and grief) And lead me in the way everlaſting: As if he had ſaid, Lord, I have ſearched my ſelf, aud can ſee no wicked way in me; but Lord thy ſight is infinitely clearer then mine, and if thou wilt but ſearch me, thou mayſt ſee ſome wicked way in me which I could not ſee, and I would ſee and know the worſt of my ſelf, that I might amend it and grow better; therefore, Lord, if there be any ſuch way in me, cauſe me to know it alſo; O take that way out of me, and take me out of that way; Lead me in the way everlaſting. David had tryed himſelf, and he would again be tryed by God, that he being better tryed, might become yet better. He found himſelf Gold upon his own tryal, and yet he feared there might be ſome droſs in him that he had not found; and now he would be re-tryed that he might come forth pureſt gold. Pure Gold fears neither the furnace nor the fire, neither the teſt nor the touchſtone, nor is weighty Gold afraid of the ballance: He that is weight will be weight, how often ſoever he is weighed; and he that is gold will be gold, how often ſoever he is tryed; and the oftener he is tryed the purer Gold he will be; what he is he will be, and he would be better then he is. Every man of Job's metal ſaith or may ſay, Let him try me, and I ſhall come forth as Gold.

VERS. 11, 12.

My foot hath held his ſteps, his way have I kept, and not declined.

Neither have I gone back from the Commandment of his lips: I have eſteemed the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary food.

At the twenty-firſt and twenty-ſecond Verſes of the former Chapter, Eliphaz having ſharply rebuked Job gave him very wholeſome and holy counſel. Acquaint thy ſelf now with him, and be at peace, receive the Law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thy heart. In theſe two Verſes Job profeſſeth that he had done ſo; that he had kept cloſe to God, followed him ſtep by ſtep, that he had not declined, or turned back, and that he had done all this out of pure love to the Word. So that each member of this context ſeems to carry a direct anſwer to every member of that counſel which Eliphaz had there given him: As firſt, to that of Eliphaz, Acquaint thy ſelf with God (he ſaith) I have held his ſteps. That man takes and holds near acquaintance with another, of whom it may be affirmed, that he treads in or holds his very ſteps. Again, Eliphaz adviſed Job thus; Receive the Law at his mouth: Job anſwers, I have not gone back from the Commandment of his lips, &c.

Or thus;

Firſt, He that takes hold of the ſteps of God, acquaints himſelf with God.

Secondly, He that keeps the way of God and declines not from it, is at peace with God.

Thirdly, He that goeth not back from the Commandment of his lips, receives the Law at his mouth.

Fourthly, He that eſteemeth the Word of God more then his neceſſary food, hath ſurely laid up the Word of God in his heart.

Job profeſſeth in theſe two Verſes, that he had done all this, and therefore he had already done what Eliphaz preſſeth him to do. His whole converſation had exactly hit the counſel given him.

My foot.] We are not to take the word foot, ſtrictly, for that ſpecial member of the body ſo called; but by the foot we are to underſtand the whole man; My foot, that is, I my ſelf have held his ſteps; I have held them: And he means ſuch a holding as hath a kind of honeſt pertinaciouſneſs in it, or a reſolvedneſs not to let go what is held, a reſolute holding, a cleaving faſt to, a holding with a kind of violence, ſuch as Jacob expreſſed to the Angel (Gen. 32. 26.) I will not let thee go except thou bleſs me.

My foot hath held.] To lay hold is the proper action of the hand, not of the foot; and it is uſed here only as it ſignifies the keeping of a thing cloſe and faſt any way, ſo as not to part with it; or as it imports, a conſtant walking with God.

My foot hath held his ſteps, or, upon his ſteps.

The word which ſignifies to go, ſignifies alſo to be happy or bleſſed; and the reaſon is, becauſe our way or motion ſheweth what our end and reſt ſhall be; our happineſs in the end lyeth virtually in our way.

But what were thoſe ſteps that his foot took hold of? Steps in the Text may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, For thoſe ſteps which God hath appointed man to take, walking as and where God would have him; ſo theſe ſteps are the ſame with the law or way of God: Not actively, for the ſteps which God takes; but paſſively, for the ſteps which he directs and appoints us to take.

Secondly, We may expound theſe ſteps for Gods own ſteps, not for the ſteps which he ſhews us in his Word that we ſhould take, but for the ſteps which he ſhews in his practice, or in his example that himſelf hath taken. My foot hath held his ſteps; ſo to follow the ſteps of another is to imitate him; and to follow the ſteps of God is to imitate him; the ſteps of God are thoſe holy actings wherein he goeth before us, and ſets us an example. Some of the works of God are a rule, his actions are directions to us. Then Job's meaning is, I have imitated God, and followed his example in all things that are imitable by man. I have ſo much acquainted my ſelf with God, and have been ſo familiar with him, that I have, as it were, copied out his way in my life and converſation. Thus he ſpeaks of God as leading the way, and going before us; and (ſaith he) I have not ſatisfied my ſelf to follow him at large, or in the ſame common path, but I have ſet my feet in his very ſteps, or I have followed him ſtep by ſtep.

Hence Note, That a godly man doth example himſelf by God.

He followeth the way of God in his works, as well as in his word; or he obeyeth God doing, as well as commanding. Many of the works of God are infinitely beyond our imitation, yet he works ſo in other things, that he hath deſcended to our imitation. And though we cannot follow God in any thing as to an equality, yet we may follow him in many things as to the ſimilitude of his workings; we may go the ſame way that he goeth, and take the ſame ſteps that he hath taken, though we cannot take them in that perfection, nor go with ſuch exactneſs as he hath gone before us. A Child may write the ſame letters, the ſame words and lines, which the moſt acurate Pen-man or Artiſt in writing hath preſcribed him for a copy, and ſo the Child may be ſaid to hold the ſteps of his Maſter, letter for letter, word for word, line for line, though there be a wide difference diſcernable between their writings. To follow God is our duty; Godlineſs is Godlikeneſs, or, an imitation of God: And practical Chriſtianity is nothing elſe but our imitation of Chriſt, and that not only in doing but in ſuffering (1. Pet. 2. 21.) For even hereunto are we called; becauſe Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving us an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps. Chriſt is not only a principle of holineſs in us, or our ſpiritual life, but he is alſo a pattern of holineſs according to which we ought to live. And the ſame Apoſtle repreſents the holineſs of God, both as a rule and as a motive of that holineſs which ſhould be acted by us (1 Ep. 1. 15, 16.) As he that hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation; becauſe it is written (Levit. 11. 14.) Be ye holy, for I am holy. To be holy as God is in all manner of converſation, is ſtedfaſtly to hold the ſteps of God. And when (as Chriſt exhorts, Matth. 5. 55.) We are merciful as our Father which is in Heaven is merciful. When as the Apoſtle exhorts (Epheſ. 4. 32.) We forgive as God for Chriſt ſake hath forgiven us; when we are patient and long-ſuffering one towards another, as God is towards us all, then we take hold of his ſteps; this ſhould be our buſineſs every day, to follow God in his word, and in his works, to follow him fully. It is ſaid of Caleb (Numb. 14. 24.) My Servant Caleb hath another ſpirit, he hath followed me fully. Here ſome may object, To follow the counſel of God fully, is the duty of all; but to follow the example of God is ſurely beyond the attainment of any. This ſeems to be a height of holineſs too high for man. For if Solomon ſaid (Eccleſ. 2. 12.) What can the man do that cometh after the King? Even that which hath been already done, or (more cloſe to the Original) in thoſe things which have been already done. How much more may we ſay, What can the man do that comes after God the King of Kings? Can he do that which hath been done already? I anſwer, No man can parallel the works of God; but all men are called to imitate him in his works: though we cannot follow him with equal ſteps, yet we may follow the equity and holineſs of his ſteps. This Job did, and we (through grace) may do. My foot hath held his ſteps.

Sequere deum. Epict.

His way have I kept, and not declined.

The way of God is his Law, in that he will have us to walk, and that is called his way, becauſe he hath preſcribed it, and is the Author of it; as that is mans way wherein he walks; ſo that is Gods way wherein he will have man to walk; Bleſſed is the undefiled in the way (Pſal. 119. 1.) What the way is, he tells us in the next words, Bleſſed are they that keep his teſtimonies, and who walk in the Law of the Lord. His Law and Teſtimonies are his way: Now ſaith Job, As I have held his ſteps, or followed his example, ſo I have kept his way; that is, I have done that which he hath commanded. The way of God is put ſometimes in Scripture for that which himſelf hath done (Ezek. 18. 25.) Hear O houſe of Iſrael, Is not my way equal? That is, the way wherein I my ſelf have gone, the way of my diſpenſations to you, both in rewarding and puniſhing. And as the works of providence, ſo the work of Creation is called the way of God (Prov. 8. 22.) The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way (that is, before he came forth in the work of Creation) before his works of old; his way and his works are the ſame, or, his works are his way. But in this Text (as I toucht before) we may rather take way for that which God would have us do, or for the way in which we ought to walk; and ſo we have the compleatneſs of Job's obedience, he imitated the example, and he obeyed the command of God.

Via dei & hominis ſumitur;
1 Pro itinere & greſſibus.
2 Pro ipſa via ſtrata.

His way have I kept.] Yet further, There is a twofold keeping of the way of God:

Firſt, By practice and obedience; thus we keep the way of God by ſubmitting to it.

Secondly, There is a keeping the way of God by protection and defence; thus we keep the way of God, when we ſtand up to maintain it. We may take it here in both ſences; and in both, doubtleſs, Job's Spirit was led out to keep the way of God.

Hence Note, A godly man keeps cloſe to the Word of God.

He keeps cloſe to it by obeying it; and he keeps it cloſe by defending it; and this he doth as Job did it univerſally (for ſo this indefinite propoſition, His way have I kept; is to be underſtood) it was not this or that way, but any or every way of God which he kept. And thus a godly man keeps the way of God, though it be a difficult and (to the fleſh) an uneaſie way, though it be (among men) a reproachful and ignominious way, though it be (as to his outward concernments) a diſadvantageous and dangerous way, yet he keeps it: He that is through with God, doth not only keep thoſe wayes which ſuit with his own pleaſure and credit, with the ſafety of his own intereſts and accommodations in the world, but if the way of God lye through difficulties, through dangers and diſgraces, he will yet keep it. And if we thus keep the way of God, we may be ſure, that the way of God, or rather the God of this way will keep us, and keep us in perfect peace, in ſpiritual freedom, ſafety, and honour, though we have trouble in and from the world. His way have I kept; and which doth heighten his obedience, care and zeal in keeping it. He adds,

And not declined.] The word ſignifies, to be unſteady, or to move every way: As if he had ſaid, I have kept his wayes ſtedfaſtly and unmovably. Job ſpeaks both in the affirmative; I have kept, and in the negative, I have not declined. Some keep the wayes of God a while, but they keep not on, much leſs do they keep up in keeping them. There is a twofold declining. Firſt, A declining from the way of God to evil and ſinful wayes: And theſe are of two ſorts; Firſt, Erroneous opinions: Secondly, Wicked practices: Secondly, There is a declining in the way of God, when though we keep the good way, yet we are not ſo good in the way as we were, but ſlack our pace, and cool in our zeal to the good wayes of God. We may expound Job's Negative in reference to both theſe: As if he had ſaid, I have neither gone out of the way of God, nor have I been ſloathful in it. 'Tis the higheſt commendation of man, thus to keep the way of God, and not decline.

Hence Note, A godly man is, or ought to be, and 'tis his honour to be ſteady in a good way.

Perſeverance is our Crown. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15. 58.) exhorts to be ſteady and unmoveable, alwayes abounding in the work of the Lord. We ſhould be alwayes moving in the work of the Lord, but never moving out of the work of the Lord: We ſhould be as a rock in regard of ſtedfaſtneſs; and as fire in regard of activeneſs. The Author the Hebrews (Chap. 10. 23.) gives this admonition to Believers, Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering, or without declining. There are ſome of whom we may ſay, they hold nothing, they hold no profeſſion, they dare not make a profeſſion leſt they ſhould be bound to ſtand to it, or they ſtand not to that which they have made; and as they hold no profeſſion, ſo they hold no poſition, but as to the Doctrine of faith are meer Scepticks, they are alwayes querying, but never concluding. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſome (2 Tim. 3.7.) Who are ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth: And there are others ever learning, but never willing to declare their knowledge of the truth; and they who hold nothing in doctrine, will not hold long in practice. Therefore ſaith the Apoſtle, Let us hold faſt our profeſſion; let us be ſteady in it, and that without wavering. And this is the great Argument which the Apoſtle carries through that whole Epiſtle, to eſtabliſh the Saints, that ſo they might hold faſt without wavering and declining in the profeſſion of the faith. Let us take heed of either of thoſe waverings and declinings before explained. Firſt, Let us not decline in the way, but keep up in the ſame degree of holineſs and love to Chriſt. The Church of Epheſus is charged with this ſort of declining; and therefore after Chriſt had given that Church a great and a deſerved commendation (Rev. 2 2.) I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canſt not bear them which are evil, and haſt tryed them that ſay they are Apoſtles, and are not, and haſt found them lyars; yet Chriſt comes with a rebuking, Neverthleſs(at ver. 4.) I have ſomewhat againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt love; that is, thou haſt declined from, or abated in thy firſt heat of love. Epheſus did not totally forſake, nor caſt off Chriſt out of her love: Epheſus did not chuſe other lovers, nor ſay, ſhe would have no more to do with Chriſt: The chief object of her love was the ſame, but her actings were not the ſame. The ſtreams of her affection did not run into another channel, but they were fallen and ebb'd in their former channel. 'Tis ſad, when Saints decline thus; we ſhould keep up to the ſame height, to the ſame heat, to the ſame degree of love without declining, we ſhould not only run at firſt ſetting out, but continue running, or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Heb. 12, 1.) Run with patience, that is, run conſtantly, or with perſeverance, the race that is ſet before us. They that run in a worldly race, the nearer they come to the Goal, the faſter they run, and the more they ſtrive; ſo ſhould we in our holy race; we ſhould ſtill be growing and encreaſing with the encreaſe of God. A Saint ſhould be thankful for the leaſt degree; but he ſhould not ſit down in the greateſt degree he hath already attained unto. And though ſome who have grace, do not actually reach after more; yet they who ſay they have enough, or need no more, give too clear an evidence againſt themſelves, that they have none at all. As the higher degrees of grace (under a temptation or deſertion) may be unthriving and unſtriving after perfection; ſo the loweſt degree of ſaving grace is (in its own nature) thriving and ſtriving after more perfection. He that believes truly, would believe more; and he that loves truly, would love more and more, till his love become a vehement flame, ſo vehement a flame, that many waters ſhall not be able to quench it, nor the floods (of trouble and perſecution from the world) drown it.

Secondly, As we ſhould thus take heed of declining in the way of grace, ſo we ſhould much more take heed, that we decline not from the way of grace; or as the Apoſtle Peter expreſſeth it (2 *Ep.*2.31.) That we turn not from the holy Commandment delivered unto us. This declining or turning from the Commandment is twofold: Firſt, To the right hand: Secondly, And to the left. The Scripture gives warning againſt both (*Joſh.*1.7.) Be thou ſtrong and very couragious, that thou mighteſt obſerve, and do according to all the Law which Moſes commanded, turn not from it to the right hand, or to the left. Again (*Prov.*4.25,26,27.) Let thine eye look right on, and let thine eye-lids look ſtreight before thee; ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy wayes be eſtabliſhed; turn not to the right hand, nor to the left; remove thy foot from evil: As if he had ſaid, There is evil both on the right hand, and on the left, therefore turn neither to the one, nor to the other, that thou mayſt remove thy foot from evil. But ſome may ſay, What is here meant by the right hand, and what by the left? And what are theſe declinings, or turnings? I anſwer, To turn to the right hand, notes exceſs, when we will take upon us to do more then God hath commanded; when we will needs over-do, this is to decline to the right hand; for though, when man hath done his utmoſt through grace in this life (conſidering his in-dwelling corruption) he alwayes falls ſhort of that exactneſs which the Law requires, and ſo cannot poſſibly exceed the Law in holineſs; yet all they may be ſaid to act beyond the Command, or to out-act the Law of God, as to the matter of their obedience, who do that which God never commanded, nor ever came into his heart (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Jer. 7. 31.) to command them. They who thus do what God requires not, and as if God had been too ſcant in his rules, will needs give a new rule either to themſelves or others; and as if God had not given them Laws enough, will (in this ſence) be a law to themſelves or others, either in matters of practice or worſhip. (And ſo indeed make void the Law of God by their tradition) Theſe exceeders are the men who turn to the right hand, though indeed (except they repent this raſhneſs) themſelves are likely to be ſet upon the left hand. Men never act more left-handedly, then when they thus turn to the right hand; nor do they ever wrong God more, then when they do that which is right in their own eyes: Men never ſhewing themſelves ſo fooliſh, as when they will be wiſer then God.

Again, Declining or turning to the left hand implyeth a ſin in defect, when we do leſs then God commands, when we ſhorten and ſtreighten the will of God in our obedience to it. Every natural man thinks a little much; yea, he thinks much to do a little; and may therefore be ſaid to turn to the left hand, becauſe that is the unworking hand, or the hand which doth the leaſt work. A natural man either makes the Law of God void by doing that which is againſt it, or he lets it lye void by not doing it, and would be glad that this talent committed to him might for ever be wrapt up in a napkin, or be buried in the earth. Both theſe turnings, whether to the right hand, or to the left, are evil. The way of holineſs, the good way, lyeth ſtreight forward, right on; it hath no turning either to the right hand, nor to the left. All the wayes of ſin are called crooked wayes, and they are our own wayes (Pſal. 125. 5.) As for ſuch as turn aſide to their crooked wayes, the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity. The Pſalmiſt calls them, Their crooked wayes; that is, wayes of their own deviſing; whereas the way of holineſs is the Lords way. To exceed or to do more, to be deficient or to do leſs then God requires, both theſe are crooked wayes; the way of the Lord lyes ſtreight forward, right before (Prov. 28. 18.) Whoſo walketh uprightly ſhall be ſaved, but he that is perverſe (or crooked) in his wayes ſhall fall at once. The motion of a godly man is like that of the Kine that carried the Ark (1 Sam. 6. 12.) Who took the ſtreight way to the way of Bethſhemeſh, and went along the high way, lowing as they went, and they turned not aſide to the right hand, or to the left.

But you will ſay, Do not good men, even the beſt of good men, decline ſometimes, and go aſide? Or doth it argue every man to be wicked who declines at any time? I anſwer, Job ſpeaks of what he had not done, not of what it was impoſſible for him to do; he had not declined, yet he might have declined. We find many declinings among the godly; How many are there that decline in degrees, who are godly in the main: They love ſtill, but they have not the ſame warmth of love, the ſame heat of affection: They obey ſtill, but they have not the ſame ſtrength of obedience. There may be a declining alſo not only in the way, but from the way, to the right hand ſometimes, and ſometimes to the left; there may be an exceeding, and there may be a coming ſhort in thoſe, as to actions, who, as to their ſtate, are come home to God; theſe things are poſſible, yea, common, but we ſpeak of what many godly men do, and what ſhould be the aim and deſign of every godly man; that is, to keep the way of God, and not to decline; to keep himſelf up in ſpiritual ſtrength, and to keep himſelf on in a ſpiritual courſe; yea, every godly man may, and can ſay as David did (Pſal. 18. 21.) I have kept the wayes of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God. Though every godly man cannot ſay as godly Job did, I have kept his way, and not declined; yet every godly man may ſay as David, I have kept his wayes, and have not wickedly departed from my God: We ſhould be afraid of declining and decaying; we ſhould ſtrive to be alwayes advancing and encreaſing. And as Saints are under a command to be ſuch, ſo they are under a promiſe to be ſuch (Pſal. 92. 12, 13, 14.) The righteous ſhall flouriſh like a Palm-tree; he ſhall grow like a Cedar in Lebanon. Thoſe that be planted in the Houſe of the Lord, ſhall flouriſh in the Courts of our God, they ſhall ſtill bring forth fruit in old age; they ſhall be fat and flouriſhing. Here is not only a mention of growing, but of flouriſhing; and here's flouriſhing three times mentioned; and 'tis growing and flouriſhing not only like a tree, but like a Palm-tree (which flouriſheth under oppreſſion) and like a Cedar (not growing in ordinary places, but) in Lebanon, where were the goodlieſt Cedars. Nor doth the Spirit promiſe here a flouriſhing in boughs and leaves only (as ſome trees do, and do no more) but in fruit: And this not only fruit for once in a year, or one year, but they ſtill bring forth fruit; and that not only in the years of their youth, or beginnings in grace, but in old age; and that not only in the entrance of that ſtate which is called old age, threeſcore years, but that which the Scripture calls the perfection of old age, threeſcore years and ten, as the learned Hebrews obſerve upon the word uſed in the Pſalm. What a divine climax doth the Spirit of God make in this Scripture, to ſhew that the godly man, as to his ſtate, is ſo far from declining, that he is ſtill climbing higher and higher? And if any ſhall ask how comes it to paſs then, that ſome godly men are obſerved not only by themſelves, but by others, to decline often in and ſometimes from the wayes of God?

I anſwer, Theſe declinings may be aſſigned to ſeveral Cauſes.

Firſt, To the power of ſome Corruption remaining much unmortified in them; as in a Garden, when the Weeds grow high, the good Herbs decline; and as in a Field, when the Weeds are ſtrong, the Corn is weak: So it is here, the prevailing or growing of Corruption, is the declining of Grace in degree, and by reaſon of it, ſome (for a time) decline from the way.

Secondly, Declinings are from the prevalency of temptation; while Satan plieth ſome with temptation, he turneth them out of the way, or cauſeth them to walk but ſlowly in it. As temptation is a tryal of, ſo a hinderance unto Grace; yea, though Corruption be kept much down, yet ſome through a violent guſt of temptation have been over-born.

Thirdly, Declinings are cauſed in the good by the example of thoſe that are evil; therefore the Apoſtle gives that Caution (Rom. 12. 2.) Not to be conformable to the world. A godly man is apt enough to write by a falſe copy, and to do as he ſees the world doth. What was all their way, or their only way before converſion, they after converſion (through neglect of their watch) may be found ſtepping into, or taking a ſtep or two in? Before converſion our whole courſe, ſaith the Apoſtle (Epheſ. 2. 2.) is according to the courſe of this world: And the examples of the world have drawn many aſide, after they have come out from the world. The faſhions and vanities of the world, in pride and pleaſure, are very drawing. All examples, eſpecially evil examples (like the Loadſtone) have an attractive vertue in them; and many of the godly have been drawn aſide thus, and have declined, with much ſcandal, for a while from the way of God.

Fourthly, Declinings are ſometimes from afflictions; and thoſe we may conſider of two ſorts, perſonal or publick; both or either of theſe have cauſed many to decline. The cold froſt of affliction hath nipped the graces of ſome, and made them to turn aſide from the way of God. Therefore the Church (having reported her great troubles) ſpeaks it as an argument of much ſincerity towards God, and ſtrength of Grace received from him (Pſal. 44. 17, 18.) All this is come upon us (that is, all theſe common calamities and afflictions) yet have we not forgotten thee, nor dealt falſly in thy Covenant; our hearts are not turned back, neither are our ſteps declined from thy way: As if ſhe had ſaid, Theſe afflictions have been ſtrong temptations upon us to cauſe us to decline from thy wayes, but through grace we have kept our ground, nnd remained conſtant in thy Covenant; Yea, though thou haſt ſore broken us in the place of dragons, and covered us with the ſhadow of death. As many, yea, moſt of the Saints, have improved under the croſs; ſo there have been ſome, who either through their preſent unbelief, or forgetfulneſs of the exhortation which (as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 12. 5.) ſpeaketh unto thm as unto children, have had their faintings and declinings under it.

Fifthly, Others decline through proſperity and worldly injoyments; when they grow rich in temporals, they grow poorer in ſpirituals. As their outward man encreaſeth, ſo their inner man decayeth; and as they flouriſh in the fleſh, ſo they wither in ſpirit. Hence holy Agur prayed (Prov. 30. 8, 9.) Give me not poverty, leſt I be poor and ſteal, and take the Name of God in vain (that would be a ſad declining) give me not riches, leſt I be full and deny thee, and ſay, who is the Lord? That's a ſadder declining then the former. Poverty endangers Grace much, but riches more. To be rich or great in the world, is a great temptation; Food convenient is the moſt ſweet and moſt untemptationleſs condition. As Hypocrites fall quite off from God when they come on much in the world; ſo the ſincere may be much hindred in their way. And as many godly men have declined through their own proſperity; ſo ſome have declined, or at leaſt have been in great danger of declining by the proſperity of others. David was ready to decline from God, when he ſaw the proſperity of ungodly men (Pſal. 73. 2.) As for me, my feet were almoſt gone, my ſteps had well-nigh ſlipt, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked. David was almoſt down, when he ſaw the wicked up; Their ſtanding had almoſt given him a fall; My ſteps (ſaith he) had well-nigh ſlipt; now if it put David, a man eminent in godlineſs ſo hard to it to keep his ſtanding (all the grace in his heart, and aſſiſtance from God could ſcarce hold him up) how much more may they who come far ſhort of David, decline by ſeeing the proſperity of wicked men? Are not they ready to conclude, ſurely we ſhall thrive and do well enough, though we do as others do who do not trouble themſelves in a ſtrictneſs about matters of Religion as we have done, Verily (as it follows at the thirteenth Verſe) we have cleanſed our hearts in vain, and waſhed our hands in innocency. If we have ſpared our pains of labour, we could not have endured more pain of trouble; For all the day long have we been plagued, and chaſtened every morning. Such arguings as theſe ſhew great declinings. Yet they who are ſincere will ſoon recover themſelves again, and ſay as David after he had reviewed this temptation (ver. 15.) If we ſay we will ſpeak thus, we ſhould offend againſt the Generation of the righteous.

Now ſeeing the godly are ſo many wayes endangered to declining, let us be warned of it, and beware of it. Theſe are declining times, many Profeſſors have ſhamed themſelves, and the profeſſion of the Goſpel. He is a Chriſtian indeed that can ſay in truth as Job did, I have kept his words, and not declined: They that knew me many years ago may find me in as good, yea, in a better plight then I was then. Hypocrites and true Believers may look and act very like one another; but as the nature of their eſtates have alwayes a vaſt difference to the underſtanding, ſo the event gives a vaſt difference between them to the eye. Hypocrites keep the Word of God a while, but they ever decline in the end finally from it, and ſometimes throw it off in the way totally. When they are in the way they grow weary of it, and a ſmall matter working either upon their hopes or fears, will put them quite out of it. Every difficulty, every danger is to them a Lyon in the way, cauſing them to decline from it; whereas to thoſe that are ſincere, difficulties are not ſtops, but incitements and ſpurs, they do but provoke their zeal, they cannot quench it. And hence the holy Apoſtle ſends a challenge (Rom. 8. 35.) to all the troubles, afflictions, and evils in the world; he bids them do their worſt, and when they have done it, they ſhall not be able to ſeparate him from the love of God, neither from the love wherewith God loved him, nor from that love wherewith he loved God. I have kept his wayes and not declined.

Secondly, Obſerve, That ſin is a declining from the way of God.

That's the Apoſtles definition (1 John 3. 4.) Sin is the tranſgreſſion of the Law: And tranſgreſſion is a going aſide, or a going over the line by which God hath chalked us out our way. God hath not left us at our liberty, though he hath left us (as the Apoſtle James calls it, Chap. 1. 25.) A perfect law of liberty. He hath not left us to travel over hedge and ditch, but hath ſhewed us our way, a high way, and a way (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 35. 8.) And it ſhall be called the way of holineſs: the wayfaring men, though fools, ſhall not err therein. Yet fools are alwayes erring from it, all their walkings are wandrings, and their goings are going aſtray, who walk and go on in a ſinful way. The word which ſignifies ſin in the Hebrew, imports moſt properly the miſſing of a mark; becauſe ſinning is a miſſing of the mark, and declining from the way: I have kept his way, and not declined.

Verſe 12. Neither have I gone back from the Commandment of his lips, &c.

Job proceeds with his negative profeſſion; having ſaid before, I have not declined, he ſaith the ſame thing again in other words, I have not gone back from the Commandment of his lips. See how often he repeats and inculcates this point, both that he might be believed, and that he might ſhew how confident he was in the uprightneſs of his own heart; I have not declined, neither have I gone back. By theſe various expreſſions, and often repetitions, Job ſets forth in general the exactneſs of his care in keeping cloſe to God; neither have I gone back. The word ſignifies both to depart, and to touch; and ſome put both ſignifications together here, implying ſuch a departure from a thing or perſon, as not at all to touch or come near it again, which is a total apoſtacy, or deſertion from it: As if Job had ſaid, I have not apoſtatiz'd from the wayes of God. But this ſeems leſs then what he ſpake before; for having ſaid, I did not decline, what need he ſay, I did not apoſtatize? for he that doth not ſo much as decline, is far from apoſtatizing. I anſwer, that in this negative there is that ordinary figure extenuation, ſpeaking leſs then is intended, or intending more then is expreſſed; and ſo, not to go back from, is to go forward in, or to proceed on in the Commandments of God; and ſo the ſence riſeth higher; I have kept his way, and have not declined, neither have I gone back from his Commandment: I have kept cloſe to it without the leaſt willing declenſion. I have not laid the Commandment out of my hand, much leſs have I put it out of my heart. And then we are to interpret this negative, I have not gone back, by this affirmative, I have ſtood to thy Commandmentt conſtantly and reſolvedly. The Scripture is full of ſuch negatives. Thus when the Lord makes that Promiſe (Joel 2. 26.) My people ſhall never be aſhamed: It ſeems to be but a ſmall matter, that the people of God ſhall not be aſhamed; but the meaning is, they ſhall be highly honoured, they ſhall have a name and reputation in the world, they ſhall make their boaſt in and of me their God all the day long. So when the Apoſtle gives that negative counſel (1 Theſ. 5. 18.) Deſpiſe not propheſie, his purpoſe is to exhort the Theſſalonians, and us in them, to the readieſt embraces and higheſt eſtimations of it. Not to deſpiſe, is to honour propheſie; that is, the preaching of the Word in a due expoſition and application of it to exhortation, and edification, and comfort. So then, there is much more in theſe words, I have not gone back from the Commandment, then thus, I have not turned, or apoſtatized from the Commandment, I have not thrown up, nor abjured my profeſſion: Job's meaning is, I have kept ſtrictly and firmly to it, I have aſſerted it, and affirmed it, and will maintain it to the end: As I have hitherto lived, ſo I am purpoſed to dye in the obedience of it. I have not gone back from the Commandment of his lips. We find the word is uſed in ſuch a ſignification (Prov. 17. 13.) Whoſo rewardeth evil for good, evil ſhall not depart from his houſe, or, evil ſhall not go back from his houſe. As evil ſhall come, ſo evil ſhall not go back; he ſhall not be able to diſmiſs it when it cometh; evil ſhall keep cloſe to his houſe, dwell and abide in his houſe, or hang upon him like an unwelcome gueſt, he ſhall not get it out for ever. Again (Iſa. 54. 10.) The mountains ſhall depart, and the hills ſhall be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the Covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the Lord that hath mercy on thee. Thus the Lord aſſures his people of the grace and good of the new Covenant; The mountains ſhall depart; that is, though the mountains depart, or let them depart, and the hills remove, yet my kindneſs ſhall not depart, or it ſhall not go back from you; that is, my kindneſs ſhall imbrace you, ſtick cloſe to you, and abide with you for ever; ſo here, I have not gone back; that is, I have imbraced, and ſtuck to the Commandment of his lips. We alſo find ſuch a ſence of the word (Mich. 2. 3.) Therefore thus ſaith the Lord, Behold, againſt this family do I adviſe an evil, from which you ſhall not remove (or withdraw) your necks; that is, the evil which I deviſe againſt you ſhall remain upon you, and ſtick by you, ye ſhall not get this yoak off your necks, nor your necks out of this collar; it ſhall be an abiding evil, which will not go back; as ye have not gone back from the evil of ſin, ſo ye ſhall not go back from the evil of puniſhment; it will not remove from you, nor ſhall ye remove from it. So here, I have not gone back, or removed my neck from the Commandment of God, I have not ſtirred a foot from it.

Yet further, That which before he called the way of God, here he calls, the Commandment of his lips: Lips are the inſtruments of ſpeech. God is a Spirit, and hath no corporeal parts; the Scripture ſpeaks thus of God after the manner of men; becauſe men ſpeak with their lips (their lips being a principal inſtrument of ſpeech) therefore the Commandment which God hath made known, and ſpoken (in a way peculiar to himſelf) is called, The Command- ment of his lips. Mr. Broughton tranſlates ſtrictly to the letter; His lips Laws I caſt not off. And when Job calleth the Commandments of God, The Commandments of his lips, it hath a great force in it, to oblige man to reverence and obey them. They are not Commandments which he hath publiſhed by others only, he hath alſo publiſhed them himſelf. They are the Commandments of his lips; that is, thoſe Commandments which as he made, and others ſpeak in his Name, ſo he hath ſpoken them too. He is both the Author and the Publiſher of them. (Exod. 20. 1.) And God ſpake all theſe words, and ſaid. David (Pſal. 66. 13, 14.) puts that emphatically upon his holy Vows, to ſhew how he was engaged to perform them; I will go into thy houſe with burnt-offerings, and I will pay thee my Vows that my lips have uttered, and my mouth hath ſpoken when I was in trouble: As if he had ſaid, My Vows are not only ſuch as I have conceived in my heart, and reſolved in my own thoughts, but I have ſpoken them out and declared them openly, therefore it lyes upon me not only in conſcience, but in honour to pay and perform them. If we muſt do what our lips have uttered, much more muſt we do what God hath uttered with his lips. Lip-labour will not anſwer thoſe Commandments which are the labour of Gods lips. Therefore ſaith Job, I have not turned back from the Commandment of his lips.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, A godly mans way is forward, he doth not turn back.

He doth not decline, either to the right hand or to the left, much leſs doth he go back; he doth not only ſtay where he was, but he is better then he was, his courſe is onward and forward (Job 17. 9.) The righteous ſhall hold on his way. It is bad enough not to go forward; but to go backward is far worſe; If any draw back (ſaith God, Heb. 10. 38.) my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in them. And what pleaſure can their ſouls take, in whom the ſoul of God takes no pleaſure? To draw back is perdition: as they who draw back are the moſt forward to deſtroy others (Hoſ. 5. 2. The revolters are profound to make ſlaughter) ſo they ſhall be ſure to be deſtroyed themſelves. The people of Iſrael in their travels through the Wilderneſs to Canaan, did often diſcover this ſpirit of Apoſtacy (Pſal. 78. 41.) They turned back and tempted God: We find them at a conſultation about it (Numb. 14. 4.) They ſaid one to another, Let us make us a Captain, and let us return into Egypt. Our Lord Jeſus had ſuch a ſort of men, who followed him in perſon (John 6. 66.) From that time many of his Diſciples went back from him, and walked no more with him. They were Diſciples who went back, and there were many of them, ſo many, that Chriſt (in the next verſe) ſaid to the twelve, Will ye alſo go away? Then Peter anſwered, Lord, whither ſhall we go? Thou haſt the words of eternal life: As if he had ſaid, We cannot mend our ſelves whitherſoever we go; Why then ſhould we go from thee? As a godly man goeth on, ſo he ſeeth reaſon why he ſhould. 'Tis as irrational as ſinful, to go back from him who hath the words of eternal life, or from the Commandment of his lips, who hath given the Promiſe of life. The Apoſtle Paul had a reaching ſpirit, and he was alwayes reaching forward (Phil. 3. 12, 13.) Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect, but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that, for which alſo I am apprehended of Chriſt Jeſus: As if he had ſaid, I would to the utmoſt anſwer the deſign which Chriſt had upon me, when he firſt took hold of me effectually by his grace. Paul was ſo far from going back, that he forgot what was backward. Some remember what is paſt, or what they have done, ſo much, that they forget what is to be done. But (ſaith Paul) this one thing I do, forgetting thoſe things which are behind, and reaching forth unto thoſe things which are before, I preſs towards the mark, for the price of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus. The mark and the price are alwayes before us; there is no coming at the mark, nor winning of the price by turning back (Prov. 4. 18.) The path of the juſt is like the ſhining (or morning) light, which ſhineth more and more unto the perfect day. The path of the unjuſt (if it have any light in it) is but like the evening light, which ſhines leſs and leſs, which declines and goeth downward, till the perfect night, and till himſelf be wrapt up in everlaſting darkneſs. The Sun in the Firmament went back by miracle for a ſign to Hezekiah, that he ſhould recover the health of his body. But if we ſee any go back who have heretofore ſhined like the Sun in a Goſpel-profeſſion, we have juſt cauſe to look upon it as a ſad ſymptom, that their ſouls are in a dangerous, if not an irrecoverable condition, I have not gone back (ſaith Job) from the Commandment of his lips.

Again, from all theſe expreſſions, in that Job ſpeaking of the ſame thing, calls it, The way of God, the Commandment of his lips, and (in the latter part of this verſe) the word of his mouth, to which he had cleaved and wholly devoted himſelf for the guiding of his whole man in the duty which he owed and had been careful to pay both to God and man.

Obſerve, The Word of God is the only rule of life.

And in this point the Word or Commandment of God is to be taken in a double oppoſition: Firſt, To our own deviſes and rules: Secondly, To the deviſes and rules of other men: Man muſt not preſcribe to himſelf, nor may we receive the preſcriptions of men, to order our practice by. God is the only Law-giver, and we muſt receive the Law from his mouth. He that will pleaſe God, muſt ſhut all his own imaginations out of doors, and have nothing to do with them: 'Tis not what man hath a mind to do, but what the mind of God is he ſhould do, that pleaſeth him, or is either a worſhip or a ſervice acceptable to him. We never diſhonour God more then when we take upon us to ſerve him our own way, and leaving his rule make a rule for our ſelves. Such a ſerving of God is rebellion againſt him; as was told Saul by the Prophet (1 Sam. 15. 22.) Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings, and ſacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord. Saul thought he had done very well when he ſaved the Sheep and Oxen for ſacrifice: But he was told, That to obey is better then ſacrifice; and to hearken, then the fat of Rams. God had commanded burnt offerings, and ſacrifice, but he had no delight in them when his own voice was not obeyed, or when they were offered, either beſide or againſt his command (Luke 16. 15.) That which is highly eſteemed among men, is an abomination to the Lord: His thoughts are not our thoughts, either in the doing of what is good, or in the pardoning of what is ſinful. As man is apt to think, that God will not pardon what he hath done ſinfully; ſo that he will accept of what he thinks he hath done holily, though he hath no rule for the doing of it, but what himſelf hath deviſed. We alwayes fail in our meaſure, while we meaſure God by our ſelves. And it is as dangerous to take the rule of our actions from men, as not to take the rule of God. In this ſence we muſt call no man Maſter, nor may we be the ſervants of the wiſeſt men. And as we muſt not be the ſervants of men, becauſe (which is the Apoſtles reaſon, 1 Cor. 7. 23.) We are bought with a price; that is, dearly redeemed by Chriſt; ſo neither may we be the ſervants of men, in following their dictates, becauſe we have received a word from God, whom alone we ought to follow, and none elſe, but in ſubordination to, or complyance with his Word and the Commandment of his lips, or as it follows in the concluſion of this verſe, The words of his mouth.

I have eſteemed the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary food.

Job having given us two negatives, I have not declined, I have not turned back, as proofs of his integrity and holineſs, now gives us an affirmative to make up the fulneſs of his proof. Not to do evil is commendable, but to do good is a higher commendation. I have eſteemed the words of his mouth. The Hebrew word ſignifies two things: Firſt, To hide or conceal: Secondly, To prize, value, or eſteem. Some render this Text by the former, not as we, I have eſteemed the words of his mouth, but, I have hid or laid up the words of his mouth; that's a good rendring, and ſo Maſter Broughton tranſlates; More then my daily bread have I laid up the words of his mouth. The Vulgar gives another reading, In my boſom have I hid the words of his mouth: In this following the Septuagint, who by the change of a letter in the Original, tranſlate the word which we render, More then my neceſſary or ſtatute food in my boſom: But I paſs that as a miſtake of the Text in that word, yet in the former part it conſents with Maſter Broughton; I have hid or laid up the words of his mouth more then my daily bread. And as this tranſlation holds out a truth in it ſelf, ſo the ſence meets with with ours; for as the Original word doth as properly ſignifie to hide, or lay up, as to eſteem, ſo thoſe things are laid up or hidden by us which are of moſt eſteem. And this action of hiding or laying up the Word, is often ſpoken of in Scripture, both as the practice, and as the duty of the Saints (Pſal. 119. 11.) I have hid thy Commandments in my heart. And the rule is given by Wiſdom (Prov. 2. 1.) My Son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my Commandments with thee. Wiſdom counſelleth us not only to receive, but to hide the Commandments. And (Prov. 4. 20. 21.) Wiſdom goeth yet further, My Son, attend to my words, incline thine ear to my ſayings, let them not depart from thine eyes, keep them in the midſt of thy heart. The heart (as Naturaliſts ſay) is in the midſt or center of the body. Holy truths muſt be kept in the midſt of the heart, in the midſt of the middle; that is, in the ſafeſt place, in that moſt retired chamber, the midſt of the heart. But why ſhould theſe words be hidden in the heart, which are and ought to be proclaimed in the ear and upon the houſe top? I anſwer, We hide things, firſt, that we may know where to have them; what is thrown at our heels, we know not where to have. Secondly, We hide things for ſafety, or from danger, as well as to have them ready at hand for uſe. There are enemies who watch their opportunity to ſteal the Word away from us, and therefore it is our wiſdom as well as our duty to hide it or lay it up ſafe. So that in both notions we ought to hide the Word of God: Firſt, That we may have it hand for uſe: As it is ſaid of the good Houſholder in the Goſpel, that he layeth up, and hath in his treaſure, things both new and old. Secondly, That it may be kept out of the hand of the thief, who would rob us of that precious treaſure. Satan and the World are Word-ſtealers, and they ſteal away the Word, not becauſe they deſire to make any uſe of it, but leaſt we ſhould; therefore as Gideon (Judges 6. 11.) threſhed wheat by the wine-preſs to hide it from the Midianites; ſo ſeeing there are myſtical Midianites, who daily ſteal away the Word (that moſt neceſſary and precious Wheat) from thouſands who have heard and received it, we ſhould (in a holy jealouſie and ſuſpicion of them) hide it out of their reach. In converſion God puts the Law in our mind, and writes it in our heart: And through that grace received and daily renewed, we alſo are enabled to lay it up there. A good man (as one of the Ancients ſpeaketh) makes his heart Gods Library, there he layeth up whole volumes of holy Precepts, and of precious Promiſes. And look what Precepts or Promiſes he finds in the Bible, or written Book of the Word of God, the ſame he finds tranſcribed into his own heart, and ſo into his life. But I will not inſiſt upon that reading, I have laid up the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary food.

Pectus meū feci Bibliothecam dei. Hieron. de Nepotiano.

We render, I have eſteemed the words of his mouth, &c. Theſe two rendrings of the word give light to each other. That which we eſteem, we hide; and the more we eſteem a thing, the more carefully we hide it. No man will lay up that which is worth nothing; what we hide is of value, at leaſt we judge it to be ſo. Childrens pockets are often full of Bables, but to them they are no Bables; they eſteem them as men do Gold and Silver, elſe they would not take them up, much leſs lay them up.

I have eſteemed the words of his mouth.

Before it was The Commandment of his lips; ſome make a diſtinction between theſe, expounding the Commandment of his lips, for the preceptive part of the Word, and the word of his mouth, for the promiſſive part of the Word or for the Promiſes, which are gracious declarations and manifeſtations of the love and good will of God to ſinful man. As if Job in the former words had a reſpect chiefly to the Law, or rule of doing; and in this latter, to the Goſpel, or ground of believing. But though I ſee not well how theſe terms can bear that diſtinction, yet the matter doth, yea, and ſeems to require it; for though a godly man eſteems the Precepts of God as well as the Promiſes, and the Commandments are the words of Gods mouth as well as the Promiſes, yet the Promiſes are the moſt feeding, fatning, and refreſhing part of the Word; and if ſo, ſurely they were not left out, yea, poſſibly, were principally intended by Job in this place, that he might ſhew how his ſpirit was carried out to the full latitude and compaſs of the mind of God, both in the Law and in the Goſpel. And becauſe the Promiſes have ſo much ſoul-food in them, he doth therefore elegantly prefer them before his neceſſary food. I have eſteemed the word of his mouth.

But how much, or at what rate did he eſteem them? It follows in the next words.

More then my neceſſary food.] There is yet ſome variety obſervable in the reading of theſe latter words. Some give it thus, I have eſteemed or hid the word of his mouth, according to my former manner, or as I was wont to do: As if he had ſaid, What I now profeſs is no new thing with me, I have not taken up this eſtimation of the Word now on the ſudden, upon my ſick bed, I have done ſo long before now, and ſo I do ſtill. As it was ſaid of Timothy, That from a child he had learned the Scripture.

Again, Taking the ſame reading, the ſence may be given thus; Upon election and deliberation, I eſteem the word of his mouth: As if he had ſaid, I do not eſteem the word of God for nothing, or as not having conſidered it, and judged of the excellency of it, but upon long debate, conſultation, and tryal, I have pitcht my election upon it.

Further, Some in theſe words conceive Job alluding to thoſe things which men do out of long cuſtom, or according to their ancient courſe of life: As if he had ſaid, There is nothing more fixed and ſetled either in my heart, or in my practice, then the Law of God: Obedience to it is now become to me as another nature. I ſlight, in compariſon of that, all humane Laws and Conſtitutions, as alſo my own moſt practiced forms and cuſtomes.

We render, I have eſteemed the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary food. The Original word ſignifies a Statute, or a Law, and ſo any thing which is eſtabliſhed or appointed for our uſe, as a Law, or Statute is. And becauſe our food, our neceſſary food, is that which is cut out or appointed to us, either by God or man, therefore this word is applied to ſignifie daily bread, or neceſſary food. Banquets, and great Feaſts, are without all meaſure and bounds, they know no Law, but are uſually full of exceſs, both as to what is prepared, and to what is conſumed; 'tis ſeldom that either providers or eaters keep the rule in feaſting. But a due neceſſary food, which is for the maintaining of our lives, and the renewing of our ſtrength, to go on in our callings, this food hath a bound, and we eat (as it were) by meaſure, or by ſtatute, therefore we tranſlate neceſſary food, others appointed food, or a portion. So the word is uſed (Gen. 47. 22.) Only the Land of the Prieſts bought he not, for the Prieſts had a portion aſſigned them of Pharaoh, and they eat the portion which he gave them. Their aſſigned portion is expreſſed by this word; a portion it was to live upon; ſuch as Scholars have in Colledges, and Almſ-men in Hoſpitals by the Statute of their Founders. And in the Book of the Proverbs, we have it twice uſed in ſuch a ſence (Prov. 30. 8.) Remove from me vanity and lyes, give me neither poverty nor riches, feed me with food convenient for me, or with my ſtatute bread; that is, give me ſo much only as the Law of nature, or the law of my neceſſity and conveniency calls for, to fit me for duty; with this ſtatute bread let me be fed, let others have their full tables, this ſhall ſerve my turn. Again (Prov. 31. 15.) She ariſeth alſo while it is yet night (ſpeaking of the good Houſe-wife) and ſhe giveth meat to her houſhold, and a portion to her maidens; ſhe doth not throw the houſe out at windows, or make havock of all, as not caring which end went forward: And as ſhe is no prodigal waſter, ſo ſhe is neither niggardly nor ſcraping, neither pining nor pinching, but giveth a meet portion to her Maidens. So here, I have eſteemed the word of thy mouth more then my neceſſary food. This ſmall proportion of food greatens the ſence of the text, and heightens Job's holineſs and piety very much; for when we come to full tables, where there is exceſs, our ſtomachs loath the meat; and the more meat there is, the leſs ſome are able to eat, becauſe the ſtomach is over-charged with the ſight of it. Appetite may be dull'd with abundance; but when we find only a convenient, neceſſary ſtatute portion, as it were, ſo much as is needful to ſatisfie hunger, and give ſome moderate delight, this pleaſeth moſt, and is more eſteemed by temperate perſons then the greateſt feaſt in the world. A man doth not nautiate his neceſſary food, or loath what hunger craves; a cruſt of bread, and that which is courſe, is pleaſant then; neceſſary food is the ſweeteſt food, and we are beſt ſatiſfied with that which breeds no ſatiety. We live moſt comfortably with that food, without which we cannot live at all comfortably.

fortably. So then, when Job ſaith here, I eſteemed the word of his mouth more then my neceſſary food, it is as if he had plainly ſaid, I took more care for, and had a higher eſteem of the food of my ſoul, then for that food of my body, which neceſſity forceth every man to eſteem.

Hence Note, Firſt, That a godly man hath a high eſtimation of the Word of God.

First, He doth not only eſteem it, but he eſteems it as food.
Secondly, He eſteems it as neceſſary as food.
Thirdly, He eſteems it more neceſſary then food.

Here are three ſteps, by which his eſtimation of the Word of God is to be taken. David ſaith of a godly man (Pſal. 1. 2.) His delight is in the Law of the Lord. The word there uſed ſignifies both will, and delight. Some render it (voluntas) will, and others (voluptas) delight. We may take in both, his will and his delight is in the Law of the Lord, or he delightfully wills it. Would you know where the delight and joy of a godly man is? It is in the Law of the Lord, there 'tis fixed, and no where elſe comparatively, but in the Lord of the Law. Theſe two are inſeparable; he that delights in the Law hath firſt delighted in the Lord, and he that delights in the Lord, cannot but delight in the Law. There are two Metaphors uſed in Scripture, which ſhew the eſtimation and delight which Saints have in the Law of God, or in the word of his mouth.

Firſt, As the Word is compared to food: Secondly, As the Word is compared to treaſure: The Word is often compared to food, and the moſt delicious food (Pſal. 119. 103.) How ſweet are thy words unto my taſte, yea, ſweeter then honey to my mouth. And (Pſal. 19. 10.) They are ſweeter then the honey and the honey-comb: He doth not mean the honey-comb barely, as the veſſel wherein the honey is kept; but by the honey-comb he means the honey that flows or drops immediately and (as I may ſay) naturally without any art, or preſſing out of the comb, which is eſteemed the pureſt honey; ſuch is the Law of God to the ſpiritual palate of a godly man. That feaſt (Matth. 22. 2. Luke 14. 16.) to which ſinners are invited, is only the declaration of the Word and Mind of God in the Goſpel. The word of Grace is the greateſt feaſt which God makes his people. Again, the Word is as often compared to treaſure: What the eſteem and deſire of man is to treaſure, I need not ſtay to tell you. The Judgments of God (ſaith David, Pſal. 19. 10.) are more to be deſired then Gold, yea, then much fine Gold. And again (Pſal. 119. 72, 127.) The Law of thy mouth is better to me then thouſands of Gold and Silver. And (ver. 127.) when he ſaw how ſome made void the Law of God, he ſaith, Therefore I love thy Commandments above Gold, yea, above fine Gold: As if he had ſaid, Becauſe I ſee ſome men eſteem and reckon thy Law as if it were droſs, and throw it up as void and antiquated, or taking the boldneſs, as it were, to repeal and make it void, that they may ſet up their own luſts and vain imaginations, becauſe I ſee both prophane and ſuperſtitious men thus out of love with thy Law, therefore my love is more enflamed to it, I love it above Gold, which leads the moſt of men away captives in the love of it; and I eſteem it more then that which is moſt eſteemed by men, and gains men moſt eſteem in this world, Fine Gold; yea, as he ſaid (Pſal. 19.) More then much fine Gold.

Secondly, Obſerve, A high and reverential eſteem of the Word of God, works the heart, and keeps it cloſe to the obedience of the Word.

Job having ſaid before, I have kept the Commandments of his mouth; I have kept his wayes, and not declined, I have not gone back; now comes to the ſpring of all this conſtancy in obedience, I have eſteemed the words of his month, &c. Love is the ſpring of action, and eſteem is the top of love; we love nothing which we do not eſteem; and what we love much we think we can never eſteem enough; and what we thus love and eſteem, we ſtrive to keep cloſe unto. They that receive the truth, and do not receive the love of it, quickly turn from it to believe a lye, yea, God therefore ſends them ſtrong deluſion to believe a lye, becauſe they received not the love of the truth. As not to love the truth is a ſin; ſo it is puniſhed with another ſin, the love of error. Though we have taken much truth into our underſtandings, yet unleſs we take it into our affections alſo, we cannot hold it long. 'Tis love which holds the heart and the word together. No man willingly obeys that Law which he doth not love. Before David could ſay, The Law is my meditation all the day, he ſaith, O how I love thy Law (Pſal. 119. 97.) The Hypocrite, who hates inſtruction, and caſts the Word of God behind his back; that is, ſlights and viliſies it to the utmoſt (for ſo much to caſt behind the back imports; the Hypocrite, I ſay, who thus caſts the Word of God behind his back) will be talking of the Word, and have it much in his mouth, yea, he will mouth it ſo, or be ſo talkative about it, that God reproves or checks him for it (Pſal. 50. 16.) Unto the wicked ſaith God, What haſt thou to do to declare my Statutes, or that thou ſhouldſt take my Covenant in thy mouth? So then, the Hypocrite was very buſie with his tongue, and he could ſpeak much of that which he loved never a whit. But was the Hypocrite a man of his hands alſo? Was he buſie in obeying the Word which he had caſt behind his back? The next words of the Pſalm (ver. 18, 19, 20, 21.) tells us what he was buſie about, even this, he was breaking the Law as faſt as he could; When thou ſaweſt a thief, then thou conſentedſt with him, and haſt been partaker with Adulterers, &c. The Indictment is large, and upon many heads, yet all true, and is therefore cloſed with, Theſe things thou haſt done (ver. 21.) I the Lord am witneſs, and ſo is thy own Conſcience. That Scripture is a clear glaſs, wherein we may ſee how all they will uſe the Law of God, who do not highly eſteem the words of his mouth. We may read Job's Text backward for their character; Their feet have not held his ſteps, his way have they not kept, but declined, they have gone back from the Commandment of his lips. And why ſo? For they have eſteemed the words of his mouth no more then their unneceſſary food, no more then the ſcraps that fall from their table; no more then (as the Proverb ſaith) their old ſhooes. I have eſteemed the word of his mouth more then my neceſſary food.

When Job ſaith, I have eſteemed the word of his mouth, &c. it is, as if he had ſaid, this is enough for me that God hath ſaid it, to make me eſteem it.

Hence Obſerve, Thirdly, Whatſoever God ſaith, is to be eſteemed for his own ſake, or becauſe he hath ſaid it.

As God needs not borrow light from any what to ſpeak, ſo he needs not borrow teſtimony or authority from any to ratifie what he hath ſpoken. He is to be believed for himſelf. His words need no ſanction, but (ipſe dixit) I the Lord have ſaid it, or thus ſaith the Lord; that is enough to ſilence all queries and diſputes both about the truth of what is delivered, and the neceſſity of our obedience to it. As the word of Gods mouth is to be obeyed; ſo it is therefore to be obeyed, becauſe it is the word of his mouth. That he hath ſaid, it muſt command our faith: As he is the true God, ſo he is the God of truth. Every word of his mouth is precious. As what God hath ſpoken muſt be the rule of our faith; ſo that he hath ſpoken, muſt be the reaſon of our faith, I have eſteemed the words of his mouth, &c.

Laſtly, From both theſe verſes, we may take notice of the ſeveral ſteps, by which Job's piety did ariſe to ſo eminent a height.

Firſt, He ſtrongly took hold of the ſteps of God.

Secondly, He diligently kept his way.

Thirdly, He declined not, either to the right hand, or to the left.

Fourthly, He went not back from the holy Commandment; both which negatives may be reſolved into this affirmative, He walked very cloſely and exactly with God, in utmoſt perſeverance.

Fifthly, He took a delightful care about all thoſe things, which the Word of God called him unto, even beyond all the care which he took for thoſe things which are moſt conducible to, and neceſſary for the comforts of his body or natural life.

VERS. 13.

But he is in one mind, and who can turn him? And what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth.

IN this Verſe, Job is conceived by ſome, at once making diſcovery of his own infirmity, and of the Soveraignty of God: But though all agree that they carry a full diſcovery of the Soveraignty of God, yet many are ſo far from judging them a diſcovery of Job's infirmity, that they rather diſcover the ſtrength and height of his Grace and Holineſs. To clear the whole matter, we may take notice, That there are three apprehenſions about the ſcope and ſence of theſe words.

Firſt, As if in them Job rendred a reaſon of what he ſpake in the Verſe immediately foregoing, here giving an account, why he had kept ſo cloſe to God, and to his wayes; My foot hath held his ſteps, his way have I kept, and not declined, neither have I gone back from the Commandments of his lips, &c. And why all this? For he is of one mind. That is, God will have his way, there's no reſiſting, his Commandments muſt be obſerved; that which he once made a law and rule for me to walk by, continueth ſo ſtill: He is of one mind. Therefore I muſt keep cloſe to his mind. It were a vain thing for me to turn any other way, when God holds the ſame way. It were folly for me to change my practice, when I find no change at all in his Precepts; they being ſtill one and the ſame in themſelves, and having the ſame obligation upon me.

Secondly, Theſe words may give an account, or a reaſon of his afflictions: As if he had thus expreſſed himſelf, Though my conſcience beareth me witneſs, that I have not gone on in any ſuch ſinful way as ye tax me with, nor defiled my ſelf with ſuch groſs iniquities, as uſually draw down the viſible Judgments of God upon men: Yet I find God going on ſtill to afflict me, he keeps his rod upon my back, and his burden upon my ſhoulders, his terrors ſtill incamp about me, and his arrows drink up my ſpirit. Nor will he be moved by any entreaty of mine to withdraw his hand from me. Whatever pleaſeth him, he will do, how unpleaſant ſoever it is to me. And what's the reaſon of all this? He is in one mind: God is unalterable, therefore do not think, that becauſe he continueth theſe afflictions and burdens upon me, that therefore all muſt be reſolved into my ſin. No, we may reſolve all this into the ſoveraignty and unchangeableneſs of God, he is in one mind, and he will do what his mind is, and none ſhall turn him.

Thirdly, (which ſutes the former) That Job here ſhews his Friends, the true way of reconciling his own innocency, with the ſharp afflictions and troubles which were upon him. Job felt and ſaw (and others either did or might) that he was ſorely afflicted, and Job knew (though others did not) that he was innocent as to the charge brought againſt him. Then how ſhall he reconcile the juſtice of Divine providence with his own innocence? His Friends knew not how to reconcile the innocency of an afflicted man, and the Juſtice of an afflicting God: This was a riddle which they could not unfold. And therefore when they ſaw God thus afflicting him, they concluded as ſtrongly as if they had ſeen it, that Job had greatly offended God. But Job knew how to unlock this ſecret, and expound this riddle: He knew how to maintain and aſſert his own integrity while he ſuffered, and yet acquit the Juſtice of God in laying thoſe ſufferings upon him, He could ſay, God is ſupream; He is in one mind: And what he doth he may do becauſe he hath a mind to do it; He hath deep purpoſes and deſigns, which I am not able to reach or fathom: Therefore though I complain, I do not complain as if God had done me wrong, but becauſe I ſmart, becauſe I feel ſuch pains, and ſo heavy a preſſure upon me. I am far from ſaying that he hath injured me, though he hath thus afflicted me; nor can any thing which he hath done or ſhall further do, be an injury to me, for I confeſs that he hath a right to do whatſoever he pleaſeth to do. Thus we have an excellent defence made by Job in theſe words to vindicate the Lords ſharp dealings with him from the leaſt ſuſpition of injuſtice, and to accord the aſſertion of his own afflicted innocence, with a believing reverence of the righteouſneſs of God; and ſo theſe words of his are the breathings of a very gracious ſpirit, teaching us far better then his Friends had done, how to anſwer for God in his ſaddeſt diſpenſations towards man. They knew no other way to do it, but by rendring Job a notorious Hypocrite, an hainous Offender, and theſe his ſufferings to be the puniſhments of his hypocriſie and offences. But Job reſolves all into the unchangeableneſs of Gods will, and the ſoveraignty of his power. Thus much for the general ſcope of theſe words.

Egregie tuetur divinā providentiā nam cum amici iſta tantum ratione pro divina providentia pugnent, quod ſcelera puniat, at Job illam agnoſcit cum ærumnas ille immittit propter præclaros fines nobis occultos ſoli deo notos. Pin.

Verſe 13. But he is of one mind.

והוא

Theſe words undergo variety of readings, I will name four.

Firſt, Some tranſlate thus, For he is alone: That is, He is the only Judge, there is none above him, to whom I might appeal from him, nor hath he any equal to ballance him. There's none to be found upon the Earth, no nor in Heaven, that can alter and controul his decrees, or ſupercede and check any of his proceedings; He is alone.

Ipſe enim ſolus eſt. Vulg.

Secondly, Others conceive there is a redundancy in the affix (beth) in. And ſo inſtead of He is in one, the words are thus given, He is one: As if Job's meaning were this, There is none One but He, or none One as He. As Chriſt ſaith, There is none good but God, or there is but one good, that is, abſolutely good; ſo there is none one but God, that is, abſolutely One, God is ſuperlatively one, the one-moſt-one.

Ipſe unus eſt. Pagn.

Aliqui ב redundare putant. Merc.

Cum nemo abſolutè ſit niſi deus & nemo ſit abſolutè bonus niſi deus: Deus eſt uniſſimus.

Thirdly, Thus, But if he act againſt one, who can turn him? And ſo Mr. Broughton, Yet when he is againſt me, who can ſtay him? This hath a clear truth in it, and fully hits the ſcope of the place.

Sed ſi ipſe contra unū agit, quis revocet eū? Jun.

But I conceive a fourth reading (which leads to ours) to be yet more clear, and that is, He is in one, and who can turn him? In one; What one? We anſwer, In one mind; Noting the ſtability of the thoughts and purpoſes of God, his mind is one, his purpoſe is one, his decree is one, he is alwayes like himſelf in all theſe. He doth not change his mind, as man doth; He is conſtant and fixed to his own purpoſes, to the dictates of his own will and wiſdom; He is one,

Et ipſe in uno. Mont.

In uno, ſupple, fixus, ipſe perpetuo ſui ſimilis eſt. i. e. non mutatur ut homo.

And who can turn him?

ישיבנו

Or, Who can turn him away? Or, as another renders, Who can make him return backwards? That is, Who can make him go back from what he hath determined and once reſolved upon? True repentance or converſion is the change of the mind in man. Every man that is converted from his ſinful ſtate and courſe by the power of God, becomes another man (as to his morals and ſpirituals) then he was before, but man cannot turn God, and make him any other then he is. God can cauſe man to change his mind; but man cannot make God change his mind, nor turn him backward. The Prophet ſaith of God (Iſa. 44. 25.) That he turneth wiſe men backward, and maketh their knowledge fooliſh. The turning of the wiſe backwards, is the altering of their counſels. When they will not alter them, God can. He ſaith, Their counſels ſhall not ſtand, nor ſhall they reach the end to which they were appointed, And it is ſo. But can the wiſeſt of men, or all wiſe men plotting and laying their heads together, turn the moſt wiſe God backward? They cannot. So that theſe words hold forth the efficacy and ſtability of the purpoſes, counſels, and decrees of God. Who can turn him?

Et quis avertit eum? Mont.

Et quis redire faciet eum retrorſum. Pagn. i.e. ab inſtituto vel à ſemel ſtatuta ſententia.

Sed quid ego? Similis cum ſit ſibi ſemper & idem. Quis rationem ab eo facti dictive repoſcat.

And what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth.

God is not like man, conſiſting of a ſoul and body: Man is the reſult of ſoul and body united together. A ſoul is not a man, nor is a body a man; man is a third thing riſing out of both: But God is a Spirit. And when Job ſaith, What his ſoul deſireth, the meaning is, what himſelf deſireth. The ſoul of a man is indeed the man, becauſe the choiceſt part of man; though man hath another part, namely, a body, yet the ſoul is he. The ſoul of man, being his beſt part, is often put for the whole man. But the ſoul of God is not put here for God, becauſe it is the beſt part of Him; His ſoul is himſelf.

Animam alicujus ſumi pro eo cujus eſt anima res eſt nota, quare anima dei, deus eſt. Sanct.

Further, This phraſe or manner of ſpeaking, What his ſoul deſires, notes only the intenſeneſs and ſtrength of his deſires, or what he deſireth ſtrongly. The Lord ſometimes makes offers to do that which is not in his heart or deſire to do: But whatever his ſoul goes out upon indeed, or would have done, that ſhall be done. Thus the word is uſed frequently, to ſet forth the full purpoſe of God to do a thing (Levit. 26. 30.) And I will deſtroy your high places, and cut down your images, and caſt your carkaſes upon the carkaſes of your Idols, and my ſoul ſhall abhor you. That is extreamly abhor you, I will abhor you with the utmoſt abhorrence. And again (Iſa. 1. 14.) Your new Moons, and your appointed Feaſts, my ſoul hateth. That is, I hate them with a perfect hatred, to ſhew how deep his hatred was of thoſe things (as done by them) he ſaith, My ſoul hateth them: As if he had ſaid, I hate your formality in my worſhip, from the bottom of my heart. We have the ſame ſence (Jer. 6. 8.) Be thou inſtructed, O Jeruſalem, leſt my ſoul depart from thee: That is, leſt I totally depart. I will depart not only by withdrawing ſome of your outward comforts, but even thoſe which are the more intimate and immediate diſcoveries of my love, My ſoul ſhall depart from thee, or, be looſed and diſ-joynted from thee (as we put in the Margin) that is, I will be of no more uſe to thee, or a help to thee, then a member of the body is to the body, when it is diſlocated or removed from its proper joynt. Once more (Jer. 32. 41.) I will rejoyce over them to do them good, and will plant them in this land aſſuredly, with my whole heart, and with my whole ſoul: That is, I will do it for them entirely and affectionately, or with entireſt affection.

Velle eſt hoc loco aliquid peculiarius expetire, concupiſcere, ſolet ad rem quampiam delectabilẽ referri. Optat tantum & protinus factum eſt. Merc.

What his ſoul deſireth.] That is, What he deſireth, or whatſoever pleaſeth him: We deſire only thoſe things which are very pleaſing. And thoſe things which are moſt pleaſing to us, are, to us, very deſirable. The deſire of man is love in motion, as his joy is love at reſt. But in God deſire and joy are not diſtinguiſhable, in him there is no motion, all is reſt. What his ſoul deſireth,

Even that he doth.] The Hebrew is very conciſe, His ſoul deſireth, and doth. That is, he no ſooner deſireth a thing, but he doth; or when he deſireth, it is done. The will of God is execution; though he willeth many things, which (as to man) are not preſently, no nor till a long time after executed, yet as to himſelf whatſoever God willeth is executed, and whenſoever he pleaſeth, his will is actually executed among men. He deſireth, and it is done.

From the words thus opened, we may obſerve according to the firſt reading of the former part of the Verſe,

That, God is one.

Sæpe premente deo, dat deus alter opem.

There is one God, and but one. Thus the Lord ſpeaks of himſelf by the Prophet (Iſa. 44. 8.) Is there a God beſides me? Yea, there is no God. I know not any. (Iſa. 45. 5.) I am the Lord, and there is none elſe, there is no God beſides me. He is one himſelf, and he hath not a ſecond. The Heathens having many Gods, when they were oppreſſed by any one God, they ſought relief from another. As Sorcerers and Witches go to a ſtronger Spirit, for help againſt what a weaker Spirit hath done. Heathen gods were Devil-gods, and they are many. The Jews degenerating into Idolatry, multiplied their Gods according to the number of their Cities (Jer. 2. 28.) But Jehovah, The living God, The Lord, is one God. We affirm from Scripture that there are three Hees or ſubſiſtences in the God-head (commonly called Perſons) Father, Son, and Spirit; but theſe three are one, not only by conſent, but by Nature and Eſſence. Hear, O Iſrael (ſaid Moſes, Deut. 6. 4,) The Lord our God is one Lord.

Secondly, From our reading, He is in one, or (as we ſupply) He is in one mind.

Obſerve that great truth, God is unchangeable.

I the Lord change not (Mal. 3. 6.) The unchangeableneſs of God may be conſidered in divers things.

Firſt, In his Eſſence or Nature: God knoweth no decay. He is a Spirit; an eternal Spirit: He hath nothing mingled or mixed in him which ſhould work or tend to alteration. God is ſimple, He is moſt ſimple, even ſimplicity it ſelf. There is no compoſition in him, no diverſity of qualities in him. Man changeth in his natural conſtitution, becauſe compounded and made up of different elements, qualities, and humours, which contending and fighting one with another, neceſſitate his change. Every day brings ſome, though inſenſible, changes upon us: And in a few years our changes are very viſible, and ſenſible. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaking of the Heavens, which of all viſible creatures are in nature moſt unchangeable, yet calls them changeable in compariſon of God (Pſal. 102. 26.) The Heavens are the work of thy hands; they ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure; yea, all of them ſhall wax old like a garment, as a veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed. The Heavens are the pureſt part of the creation, and freeſt from elementary mixtures, yet they ſhall wax old, they ſhall be changed. In oppoſition to which the Pſalmiſt adds (ver. 27.) But thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall have no end. Nor are the years of God only without end, but himſelf is without change. Indeed there is no change of time to God; paſt, preſent, and to come, are all the ſame to him, and he is the ſame in all; Thou art the ſame, or more emphatically according to the ſtrictneſs of the Hebrew phraſe, Thou art thy ſelf, alwayes thy ſelf. As thou art, thou waſt; and as thou art and waſt, thou wilt be for ever. When Moſes deſired to know the Name of God (Exod. 3. 13.) we find it at the fourteenth verſe; And God ſaid unto Moſes, I am That I am; And he ſaid, Thus ſhalt thou ſay to the children of Iſrael, I AM hath ſent me unto you.

Secondly, As God is unchangeable in his Eſſence, ſo in all his divine Perfections and Attributes; all which are eſſential unto him. God is as powerful and ſtrong as ever he was (Iſa. 26. 4. and 59. 1. As high and ſoveraign as ever he was, Pſal. 92. 8. as wiſe and omniſcient as ever he was, 1 Tim. 1. 17.) As gracious and merciful as ever he was, His mercy endureth for ever (Pſal. 100. 5.) As faithful and true as ever he was (Rom. 3. 3, 4.) And as juſt and righteous as ever he was; he doth and will reward every man according to his works, Thirdly, God is unchangeable in his purpoſes, decrees, and counſels. The Medes and Perſians boaſted of their Decrees, that they altered not (Dan. 6. 18.) But the very unalterableneſs of humane Decrees is alteration it ſelf compared with the unalterableneſs of divine Decrees. We have the Lord thus ſpeaking in the Prophet (Iſa. 46. 16.) I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times, the things that are not yet done, ſaying, my counſel ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure. And as the Lord eſtabliſheth his own counſel, ſo he can unſettle the beſt laid counſels of the ſons of men (Pſal. 33. 10, 11.) The Lord bringeth the counſel of the Heathen to nought; he maketh the devices of the people of none effect: The counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. And hence the Lord, by his Prophet, challengeth the deepeſt Politicians, the Oracles for counſel, the Abithophel's of this world to ſtrain their wits to the utmoſt, for ſecuring of their own counſels from diſappointment (Iſa. 8. 10.) Gird your ſelves, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces; take counſel together, and it ſhall come to nought; ſpeak the word, and it ſhall not ſtand, for God is with us; He is with us as to protect us againſt your open oppoſition, ſo to blaſt your moſt ſecret conſultations againſt us. And as the Lords counſels are immutable in themſelves, ſo he hath condeſcended to aſſure us of their immutability (Heb. 6. 17, 18.) Wherein God willing more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath, that by two immutable things, in which it was impoſſible for God to lye, we might have ſtrong conſolation, &c. Oaths are ſacred, and the ſtrongeſt confirmations between man and man, and therefore though the counſel of God be immutable without an Oath, yet that we might have the greateſt aſſurance that it is ſo, God hath confirmed it by an Oath. That ſo the heirs of ſalvation having two immutable things to reſt their ſouls and build their faith upon, might not only have conſolation, ſtrong conſolation; ſuch conſolation as might maſter and overcome all the fear and unbelief of their own hearts, and the gainſayings of Satan.

Fourthly, God is alſo unchangeable in his Promiſes; whatever he hath ſaid, he will do for his people (He is in one mind) it ſhall be done. A Promiſe from God is the beſt ſecurity; half a promiſe, an it may be (as he ſpeaks to the meek of the earth, Zeph. 2. 3.) Seek righteouſneſs, ſeek meekneſs, it may be ye ſhall be hid in the day of the Lords anger; this half promiſe (I ſay) is better ſecurity then the hand or ſeal, yea, then the oath of the faithfulleſt man on earth (2 Cor. 1. 20.) All the Promiſes of God in him (that is, in Chriſt) are Yea and in him Amen: That is, they ſhall certainly be performed and accompliſhed. God doth not give promiſes (as many men do) to raiſe and then diſappoint and abuſe our hopes: He doth not make promiſes rather for ſnares to catch others, then for bonds to tye himſelf, as ſome men do, (which is not only a great unworthineſs, and diſingenuity in them, but a great iniquity and ſin) the Lords promiſes are our richeſt inheritances; and that not only becauſe he hath promiſed greater and better things then are in the compaſs of any mans power to make good, or in the compaſs of any mans underſtanding to make; but, becauſe he will certainly be as good to us in performance as he hath been in promiſe. For He is in one mind concerning all that he hath promiſed. He will be merciful, as he hath promiſed, and pardon ſin, as he hath promiſed. He will deliver us from trouble, as he hath promiſed, and ſanctifie all our troubles to us, as he hath promiſed. He will give us his Spirit, as he hath promiſed, and ſave us eternally, as he hath promiſed.

Fifthly, He is alſo in one mind concerning his threatnings. He will be as good as his word in the evil which he hath ſpoken againſt ſinners, as well as in the good which he hath ſpoken concerning his ſervants (Zech. 1. 5.) Your Fathers where are they? And the Prophets do they live for ever: But my words and my Statutes, which I commanded my ſervants the Prophets, did they not take hold of your Fathers? And they returned aud ſaid, Like as the Lord of hoſts thought to do unto us, according to our wayes, and according to our doings, ſo hath he dealt with us: That is, his threatnings have arreſted us as Sergeants do a Malefactor, or a Debtor, and carried us away their priſoners. As if the Lord had ſaid, Your Fathers are dead, and my Prophets are dead alſo; but the words which my Prophets ſpake to your Fathers concerning the Sword, Famine, and Captivity which ſhould ſhortly come upon them, theſe dreadful Propheſies dyed not; yea, theſe are not yet dead, but alive and in force againſt you. If we do not take hold of the preceptive part of the Law by obedience, the pœnal part of the Law will take hold of us for our diſobedeence. Thus the Lord profeſſeth (Mal. 3. 5.) And I will come near to you to judgment, and I will be a ſwift witneſs againſt the ſorcerers, and againſt the adulterers, and againſt falſe ſwearers, and againſt thoſe that oppreſs the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherleſs, and that turn aſide the ſtranger from his right, and fear not me, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, for I am the Lord, I change not. I will certainly be not only a Judge, but a Witneſs, and that a ſwift one, againſt ſuch wicked ones. There is no evading my Judgment, ſeeing I am both Witneſs and Judge: As a Witneſs I know all that ye have done; and as a Judge I have power not only to condemn you, but alſo to give you up into the hand of the Executioner; for I am the Lord of Hoſts; I have all the Armies of Heaven and Earth at my command and bidding. Thus I will do, and be ye aſſured of it, that I will do ſo; For I am the Lord, I change not.

Sixthly, God is unchangeable, or of one mind in his gifts (Rom. 11. 29.) The gifts and calling of God are without repentance: That is, the gifts of his effectual calling ſhall never be repented of: As they who receive them will have no cauſe to repent (yea, they will have cauſe to rejoyce in them for ever) ſo God who gives them will not repent, He is in one mind, he will not alter his gifts. As Pilate, when he was moved to alter his writing upon the Croſs of Chriſt, anſwered, What I have written, I have written: That is, what I have written ſhall ſtand; ſo what motion ſoever ſhould be made to God to recal the gifts of effectual calling, he would ſurely anſwer, What I have given, I have given, my gift ſhall ſtand. There are gifts of a meer outward calling, which God takes away again. His gifts do not ſtand with ſuch, becauſe they ſtand ſtill with his gifts. That was the doom of the idle ſervant who had one talent given him, Take the talent from him, and give it to him that hath ten talents (Matth. 25. 15, 28.) But the gift of effectual calling ſhall not be taken away (James 1. 17.) Every good gift, and every perfect gift (ſuch is the gift of effectual calling) is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableneſs, nor ſhadow of turning. And as there is no variableneſs in God, as to the matter or general nature of the gifts which he beſtoweth (they are all good and perfect gifts in their kind, though they are not all in the ſame degree of goodneſs and perfection. God doth not give his people, ſometimes bread, and ſometime a ſtone; now an egg, and anon a ſcorpion; now, I ſay, as there is no variableneſs in God, as to the nature of the gifts which he beſtoweth) ſo there is no variableneſs in him as to the act of giving or beſtowing. As the Lord giveth liberally, and upbraideth not (James 1. 5.) ſo he giveth liberally and repenteth not. Thus we ſee he is not only one, but in one mind: He is unchangeable; and that not only in his Eſſence and glorious Attributes or Perfections, but in his Counſels and Decrees, in his Promiſes and Threatnings, in his Gifts and Bounties to all his people: He giveth and repenteth not.

Before I paſs from this point, it will be needful to anſwer ſome Objections which are raiſed againſt it from thoſe Scriptures which ſeem to ſay, that God is not of one mind, or that his mind doth alter and change.

Firſt, That report which Moſes makes of God, ſeems to ſay ſo (Gen. 6. 6.) And it repented the Lord, that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart: What is repentance, but the change of the mind? Therefore he that repents is not in one mind. Seeing then God repents, how is he unchangeably in one mind? A like appearance of contradiction we find (1 Sam. 15.) not only with this Text in Job, but between the eleventh verſe compared with the twenty-ninth of the ſame Chapter. The eleventh verſe ſpeaks thus, Then came the word of the Lord unto Samuel, ſaying, It repenteth me that I have ſet up Saul to be King, &c. (ver. 29.) And alſo the ſtrength of Iſrael will not lye, nor repent; for he is not a man that he ſhould repent. The ſtrength or victory of Iſrael is God, for it was by his ſtrength that Iſrael had all his victories; and of him Samuel ſaith, He will not repent, when as himſelf had ſaid a little before, It repenteth me, &c. To theſe Scriptures we may add, 2 Kings 20. which in words holds out a great change in the mind of God concerning Hezekiah, if we compare the firſt and the fifth verſes of that Chapter together (ver. 1.) In thoſe dayes Hezekiah was ſick unto death, and the Prophet Iſaiah, the ſon of Amos, came to him, and ſaid unto him, thus ſaith the Lord, ſet thine houſe in order, for thou ſhalt dye and not live. Here is a ſtrong affirmation that Hezekiah ſhould dye; and to the affirmative the negative is alſo added, Thou ſhalt dye, and not live. 'Tis the ſtrongeſt manner of aſſerting any thing, when the contrary is denyed. As it is ſaid of John the Baptiſt (John 1. 20.) And he confeſſed, and denied not; but confeſſed, I am not the Chriſt, &c. So here, Thou ſhalt dye, and not live. Yet we read (ver. 5.) And it came to paſs before Iſaiah was gone out of the middle Court, that the word of the Lord came to him, ſaying, Turn again, and tell Hezekiah the Captain of my people, thus ſaith the Lord the God of David thy Father, I have heard thy prayers, I have ſeen thy tears; behold I will heal thee; on the third day thou ſhalt go up into the houſe of the Lord, and I will add unto thy dayes fifteen years. Doth not this import an evident change in the mind of God? Having diſpatcht the Prophet to tell Hezekiah, that he ſhall dye, and not live, He preſently after, even before he was got out of the Court, ſends the ſame Prophet back to tell him, that he ſhall live, and not dye. We have the ſame difficulty in that known place in the Propheſie of Jonah (Chap. 3. 4.) Jonah is ſent to Nineveh with a direct meſſage, Yet forty dayes, and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown: Notwithſtanding as ſoon as the Faſt was proclaimed and kept, and the Ninevites had repented and turned from their evil wayes, The Lord alſo repented of the evil denounced againſt them; (ver. 10.) And God ſaw their works, that they turned from their evil way, and God repented of the evil that he had ſaid that he would do unto them, and he did it not. Here God repented of his threatning. He had ſaid Nineveh ſhould be overthrown, yet when they turned from what they had done, God turned from what he ſaid he would do. And did he not change his mind, in reference to his promiſe to Zion, as there in reference to his threatning againſt Nineveh? The promiſe to Zion runs in this tenour, This is my reſt for ever; here will I dwell, for I have deſired it (Pſal. 132. 14.) Yet the Lord removed out of Zion, he departed from Jeruſalem, and gave it into the enemies hands. How many miſeries and captivities did that people undergo long ago? And how are they ſcattered from Jeruſalem into all Lands unto this very day? How then ſhall we reconcile the Text and Point in hand, with theſe quoted Scriptures, and many others of a like Interpretation?

How is God unchangeable, or, in one mind, when we read of his repenting what he had done, of his ſaying what he would do, and yet not doing what he had ſaid, both in his promiſes and in his threatnings? How can theſe changes and the Lords unchangeableneſs ſtand together? Or how is he but in one mind, the tenour of whoſe doings doth ſo often vary, both from what he hath formerly done, and from what he hath profeſſed he would do? In a word, How is the Lord conſtant to what he ſaith he will do, when either he doth it not, or doth the quite contrary to it? He that repenteth is not in one mind, ſeeing repentance is a change of the mind.

Firſt, I anſwer, Repentance properly taken notes a change of the mind: But in an improper or alluſive ſence, there may be repentance without any the leaſt change of the mind. When God is ſaid to repent (as in thoſe Texts alledged) we are to underſtand it improperly, or only in alluſion unto man. The Scripture in many other things ſpeaks of God, either as condeſcending to mans underſtanding, or as alluding to the common actions of man. God doth not act as man doth, yet by ſuch expreſſions as hold out, what and how man acts, we may come the more eaſily to underſtand what God doth. As in the preſent inſtance, when man repents, he doth theſe two things.

Firſt, He ceaſeth to do what he began to do, he breaks the thread of his former motions.

Secondly, When man repents that he hath done, or made ſuch a thing, he is ready to deface and deſtroy that which he hath made or done: When man repents that he hath ſet up ſuch or ſuch a thing, he removes and takes it down. Thus God is ſaid to repent, not becauſe his mind is changed, but becauſe (as a man that repenteth) he ceaſeth to do what he did; or he deſtroyeth that which he had made. Thus the Lord is ſaid to repent his making of Saul King, becauſe he meant to remove him from being King: And to repent that he had made the World, becauſe his purpoſe was, for the ſin of man to deface and deſtroy the preſent beauty and excellency of the World which he had made. God often puts forth the effects of repentance toward man, but the repentance of a man never puts forth any effect upon God.

Aliud eſt mutare voluntatem, aliud velle mutationem. Aquin. par. 1. q. 19. art. 7.

Secondly, We may anſwer thus; God often minds a change; but he never changes his mind. And ſo all thoſe Scriptures before mentioned, note only that God did mind a change, or make a change; but not that he did change his mind. There is a vaſt difference between theſe two, to mind or determine a change; and to change the mind or determination. As for inſtance, A man that is reſolved to wear garments ſutable to the ſeaſon of the year, and temperature of the weather; in the heat of Summer it is his mind to wear light and thin garments that he may be cool; and in the cold of Winter, his mind is to wear heavier and thicker garments that he may be warm. Now if this man when Winter comes leaves off his light thin garments, and puts on thoſe that are heavier and thicker, he cannot be ſaid to change his mind, for his mind was alwayes to wear change of garments, according to the ſeaſon of the year, and temper of the weather. And thus the Lord, according to the changes which he finds among men for the better or for the worſe, doth both mind and make eminent changes among them, as to his providential adminiſtrations, whether in wayes of judgment or of mercy; but in theſe he never changes his own mind, for as much as his mind was everlaſtingly fixed, in caſe of ſuch emergencies, to make thoſe changes in his adminiſtrations and dealings with the ſons of men.

Thirdly, For further anſwer, We are to diſtinguiſh between the outward ſentence and declaration of God, and his ſecret purpoſe or decree. God doth often change his ſentence, or the declaration; but he never changeth his purpoſe, decree, or counſel.

Queſt. But is not that external declaration the mind of God alſo?

Anſw. I anſwer; Theſe denounced ſentences or declarations are the mind of God; yet they are not the ſame with the counſels and purpoſes of God; but ſerve for the fulfilling and bringing of them about; for by the change which the ſentence revealed worketh in man, the counſel of God not revealed is effected. The fruſtrating the one fulfils the other: And the Lords deſign in ſuch declarations of his mind, is to bring about or accompliſh his purpoſes and counſels. God did purpoſely declare or pronounce a ſentence of death againſt Hezekiah by the Prophet Iſaiah, to the intent that his counſel concerning the continuance of Hezekiah's life might be fulfilled. And he ſent the Prophet Jonah, to publiſh a ſentence of utter deſtruction againſt Nineveh, purpoſely that his counſel concerning the preſervation of Nineveh might be accompliſhed. The Lords counſel and purpoſe was, that Hezekiah ſhould live, and recover out of that diſeaſe. But how did he fulfil this? Even by ſending him a meſſage of death, which cauſed him to weep ſore, and pray and cry earneſtly to the Lord for life: Thus ſaith the Lord, ſet thine houſe in order, for thou ſhalt dye, and not live. Then he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the Lord, ſaying, &c. But then it may be queſtioned, Was that word of the Lord true which he ſent to Hezekiah by the Prophet, ſaying, Thou ſhalt dye? The ſentence publiſhed was true, and would certainly have come to paſs according to the order and working of ſecond cauſes; for looking to them, Hezekiah muſt dye, his ſickneſs was unto death; In thoſe dayes was Hezekiah ſick unto death. Doubtleſs his Phyſitians, and all that were about him gave him over for a dead man. Only God could reſtore him, and the way wherein he would reſtore him was by prayer. So for Nineveh, if we conſider the deſert of their ſin, the ſentence was true, Nineveh ſhall be deſtroyed. But the Lord ſent his Prophet to tell them of their approaching deſtruction, that they might faſt and turn from their evil wayes, and ſo his purpoſe for their preſervation might be accompliſhed. Thus the outward ſentence is changed, but the mind of God is not changed. And theſe changeable ſentences were decreed by God, to bring about his unchangeable decree.

Fourthly, I anſwer; When God is ſaid to repent, the change is not in God, but in us; God is alwayes the ſame, but we are not. God is ſo much the ſame, that he never alters; and man is ſo little the ſame, that he is alwayes altering; and, when he hath done evil, it is good for him that he is ſo. God did not change, but Nineveh changed by turning from ſin, and Hezekiah changed by improving more in prayer, and therefore he dyed not at that time, nor were they then deſtroyed. The change is in the creature, not in God, when that is changed which God ſpeaks concerning the creature. He is ſtill unmoveable in the ſame mind; all the motion is in the mind of man. It is in this caſe as with a ſhip putting out to Sea. When a ſhip ſets out from the harbour, and ſails by the ſhore, the unexperienced paſſenger thinks the ſhore moves from the ſhip, whereas indeed the ſhip only moves from or by the ſhore. So when we think God changeth, or is moved, the change or motion is only in our ſelves. In one diſpenſation we take notice of the love of God, and in another of his wrath, in a third of his juſtice, and in a fourth of his mercy. Theſe are changes upon us, but not in God. And theſe ſhew that God changeth his courſe towards us; but they are no proofs of a change in God. For the love of God, and the wrath of God, the juſtice of God, and the mercy of God are ſtill the ſame, but we changing are caſt ſometime under the effects of his love, and ſometimes of his wrath, we are ſometimes under the ſaddeſt droppings of his juſtice, and ſometimes under the ſweeteſt influences of his mercy. As when a man changeth his aſpect, and turns about his body to another point; that part of the Heaven which was before at his right hand, is now at his left; yet the Heavens are as they were, they do not change either their poſition, or their motion, but the man hath changed his. Thus the wrath, and love, the juſtice, and the mercy of God ſtand alwayes at the ſame point; but man turneth ſometimes juſtice-ward, and ſometimes mercy-ward; now he faces the wrath, and anon the love of God. And doing ſo, he meets with many changes in the diſpenſations of God toward him, but there is no change in the mind of God toward him.

And ſeeing God is unchangeable, or, in one mind, take this by way of deduction from it.

'Tis the duty of man to ſubmit himſelf unto, and acquieſce in the mind of God.

Seeing the mind of God reſts, we ought to reſt in the mind of God; that is, we ought to reſign up our ſelves, and to reſolve our minds into the mind, and our wills into the will of God. Whatever pleaſeth God, ſhould pleaſe us. He is in one mind, and that one mind of his hath nothing in it but juſtice, and righteouſneſs toward all, nothing but goodneſs, and mercy, nothing but loving kindneſs and faithfulneſs toward his peculiar people. As the mind of God revealed in his word, ſhould be the rule of our actions, ſo the mind of God revealed by his works, ſhould be the reſt or eaſe of all our paſſions. The mind of God is that by which we are to guide our ſelves in all we do, and to that we muſt yield in all we ſuffer. While we ſee ſome ſorely diſcompoſed in their ſpirits, yea vext beyond all reaſon at the diſpenſations of God, have we not reaſon to believe, that they have never heard, or at leaſt not well learnt and digeſted this great truth, That God is in one mind. When the mind of God is done, himſelf is pleaſed; and ſhould not whatſoever pleaſeth God, pleaſe us alſo, yea though it be in it ſelf, bitter and unpleaſant to us? A gracious heart taſts ſweetneſs in Gall and Wormwood, conſidered under this notion, as it is the will and mind of God he ſhould drink it, or feed upon it. It was a ſtrange power that David had over the people of Iſrael, or it ſhews that they had a very ſtrong opinion of his juſtice and integrity, when it is ſaid (2 Sam. 3. 36.) Whatſoever the King did, pleaſed all the people. What was ſaid of him, we ſhould ſay in the higheſt ſence of God, whatſoever he doth ſhould be pleaſing to all his people. It was once the ſaying of a Court-flatterer; That which pleaſeth the King, pleaſeth me. We cannot flatter God in ſaying ſo. It is but our duty to ſay ſo; we ſin if we ſay not, and ſay not with our hearts, Whatſoever pleaſeth God, pleaſeth us. He acts below both the duty and priviledge of a man, who reſolves himſelf into the will of any man, how high ſoever; and he acts above both the ſtate and proportion of a man (though much below the duty of a Chriſtian) who doth not reſolve himſelf into the will of the moſt high God, who is higher then the higheſt of the Kings of the earth. He vainly ſuppoſeth himſelf God-High, who ſubmits not to the will of the moſt High God. Whatſoever God doth or will have done, man ſhould ſay, Even ſo be it, as God will have it.

Placet mihi quod regi placet; dixit Harpulas, Apud Herod.lib.1.

But ſome may ſay, if it be ſo, then it ſeems we may not endeavour to extricate our ſelves from, or to get a removal of any of thoſe evils, troubles, or afflictions, which at any time preſs and grieve us.

For anſwer to this ſcruple, I ſay,

Firſt, It is our duty in every trouble that God layeth upon us, to ſeek unto God, and to uſe all good means for the taking of it off from us. But Secondly, We muſt not ſeek unto God for the removing of any evil from us, as being diſpleaſed with his laying it upon us: we muſt be quiet under our troubles, and yet we may both deſire and endeavour to be quit of them. Though God be in one mind, yet that doth not neceſſitate man to one condition, nor hinder him from ſeeking a better then that wherein he is.

I have inſiſted the longer upon this point, becauſe Job gives it as a general anſwer to all his friends, queries about him, and as the beſt expedient for reconciling the difference between them and him. He is in one mind,

And who can turn him?

Hence Learn, That as God is unchangeable in himſelf, ſo none can alter or change him.

Some men are of a very ſteady ſpirit, they are not in and out, as we ſay, forward and backward: let them alone, and they are true to their own principles, and they will be true to others according to their promiſes. Yet, poſſibly, theſe men may be turned aſide, and led out of the way, by the perſwaſion of others. A ſubtle head and a ſmooth oily tongue, may work them off from their own reſolutions. It hath been a queſtion diſputed among moral Philoſophers, Whether a wiſe man may be an uncertain or a various man; And they reſolve it Negatively; Wiſdom is as balaſt, which keeps the mind from floating. And it hath been ſaid of a wiſe man among the Heathen, that the Sun might as ſoon be thruſt out of his line, as he from the line of Juſtice; yet let no man glory in man, no not in wiſe men. The wiſeſt, and moſt conſtant among men may do unwiſely and prove unconſtant. The moſt reſolved among the children of men, may be wrought upon, and brought over to what they purpoſed not. But this is the glory of God, that as he is in one mind, ſo none can turn him, or make him in two. None can turn him out of the way, either of his intended Judgments, or promiſed mercies; what he hath a mind to do, he will not be put by the doing it.

We may affirm three things concerning the works of God, or concerning God in his workings.

Firſt, The works of God are ſo full of myſtery, that none can fully comprehend them; there is much in his ordinary works beyond man, and his extraordinary works are all beyond man. We (by reaſon of our indiligence) ſee but little of any of his works; and ſome of his works are ſuch, as we can ſee but a little way into them with all our diligence.

Secondly, The works of God are ſo full of righteouſneſs, that no man can juſtly reprove, or find fault with them. They who come with the moſt curious and critical eyes to examine the works of God, ſhall not find any flaw or defect in them. There have been many, who (through their preſumptuous folly) have found fault with the works of God, but there was never any (who with his moſt refined wit) could find a fault in them. The Jews of old complained of, and quarrell'd at the wayes of God as unequal (Ezek. 18. 25.) but when it came to tryal, they could prove nothing but the inequality of their own.

Thirdly, The works of God are ſo full of power, that none can put a ſtop to, or hinder the accompliſhment of them. Theſe are three excellent perfections of the works of God; And the laſt is that which is here under hand. Hezekiah, though a great King, was not able to bring a work about which he had a mind to, the reſcue of Jeruſalem out of the hand of the Aſſyrians, and therefore he ſends this pitiful cry to the Prophet Iſaiah (2 King. 19. 3.) The children are come to the birth (that is, the buſineſs is ripe for execution) and there is no ſtrength to bring forth. The works of the ſtrongeſt men may ſtick in the birth for want of ſtrength to bring them forth: But the works of God never ſtick in the birth upon that or any other account. He is in one mind, and who can turn him? There are four wayes by which men are uſually turned off from or ſtopped in their works, but by none of them will God be turned, when he hath a mind to work.

Firſt, Men are often ſtopt by outward power; they do not either that good or that evil which they would, becauſe they cannot; and their cannot, poſſibly, doth lie in this, that they have not a power in themſelves proportionable to the work, or becauſe they have medled with a matter too great for them, and for which they are no match; but they therefore only cannot do what they would, becauſe they are hindred from doing it. A man may have ability to maſter the work he is about to do, yet not to maſter the impediments that ſtand in the way of it. But all the power of the creature cannot hinder God; If he will work, none can let him (*Iſa.*43.13.) The power of men is weakneſs unto God. And that which looks like weakneſs in God, is ſtronger then the united ſtrength of all men (1 *Cor.*1.25.) The fooliſhneſs of God, is wiſer then men; and the weakneſs of God, is ſtronger then men.

Secondly, Men are, or may be turned by counſel or advice: and ſome who could not be ſtopt by power, have yet been ſtopt by perſwaſion. An eloquent tongue hath prevailed, where a violent hand could not. We read how Abigail prevailed upon David a mighty warriour, and mightily reſolved to deſtroy Nabal, and all his houſe (1 Sam. 25. 22.) So and more alſo do God unto the enemies of David, if I leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall. David ſpake not only peremptorily, but with a kind of adjuration; And he was upon his march with four hundred armed men at his heels to put his purpoſe into Execution; Yet a diſcreet woman goes out to meet and turn him from his courſe, and turn him ſhe did; ſhe did it effectually. But what could Abigail a woman do, to prevail with David and his Souldiers? What ſhe did, ſhe did by perſwaſion, ſhe laid arguments before him, and managed them with ſo much pathetical rhetorick, and clearneſs, that he could not withſtand her (verſ. 32, 33.) And David ſaid unto Abigail, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, which ſent thee this day to meet me: and bleſſed be thy advice, and bleſſed be thou which haſt kept me this day from coming to ſhed blood, and to avenge my ſelf with mine own hand. Thus men may be turned from what they have reſolved, eſpecially when they do not well deliberate before they reſolve. But God cannot be turned by any counſel or advice, ſeeing whatſoever he purpoſeth to do, he doth it upon the unerring advice and counſel of his own will. Thoſe paſſions of anger and jealouſie, in which (as he is ſet forth to us in Scripture) God is ſaid to act, are yet the iſſues of infinite deliberation. He that doth all things by the beſt counſel, can never be turned by any.

Thirdly, Men are often turned by petition, when they will not by argument, and you may entreat them to deſiſt from what they were about to do, though you cannot adviſe them out of it. And we know that of all things prayer is the moſt prevailing with God. Nothing hath ever turned God ſo much as prayer hath; and yet prayer it ſelf (in the ſence here intended) cannot turn God. We muſt not think that we change God by our prayers, though when we pray, God often makes a gracious change for us. Whatſoever his mind is to do, he doth it, yea though prayer ſtand in his way. We may ſay that the greateſt providential changes that were ever made in the world, God hath made them upon the prayers of his people; yet he never changed his own mind in the leaſt at the prayer of his people. The Lord calls his people earneſtly to call upon him ſo, and meeting him by prayer to ſtop him when he is preparing to do ſome great thing againſt them, or to bring ſome great evil upon them. (Amos 4. 12.) Therefore thus will I do unto thee O Iſrael; and becauſe I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God O Iſrael. We may take thoſe words prepare to meet thy God O Iſrael, not ſo much for a challenge as for a direction. But how ſhall Iſrael prepare to meet God? Not with weapons of war, not with ſword, and ſpear, theſe will make no defence againſt God. No: but with tears and prayers, theſe are the arms and ammunition of a Saints, there's no contending with God, but only by humbling our ſelves before him.

But you ſay, prayer cannot turn God.

I anſwer, prayer hath cauſed and may cauſe God to turn from his outward actings and diſpenſations, only, it cannot turn God from any of his counſels or reſolutions. And becauſe prayer hath ſo great a power upon God, to turn him from his outward diſpenſations, therefore he ſometimes hath forbidden prayer, when he was reſolved not to turn from ſuch threatned diſpenſations (Jer. 14. 11.) Then ſaid the Lord unto me, pray not for this people for their good. As if the Lord had ſaid, if any thing could prevail with me, thy prayer would; But becauſe I am fully purpoſed to viſit their iniquities, therefore I will not have thy prayers run waſt. As for them let them pray as long as they will; as their prayers come, only from their neceſſities, not from their hearts, ſo they ſhall not come near mine; nor do I care how long their prayers (which are but puddle water) run waſt; let them pray and ſpare not; but let them be ſure of this, that though they pray I will not ſpare; ſo it follows (verſ. 12.) When they faſt I will not hear their cry, and when they offer burnt-offering, and an oblation, I will not accept them; but I will conſume them by the ſword, and by the famine, and by the peſtilence. Their own prayers had no power in them to turn God; and he who had a power to ſtop God by prayer, is himſelf ſtopt from prayer, as in the place laſt quoted, ſo once before (Jer. 7. 16.) Therefore pray not for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make interceſſion to me, for I will not hear thee. And as the Lord ſtopt Jeremy from prayer for them, ſo he profeſſeth that if they who in former ages had been moſt prevailing with him, ſhould now again mannage their ſuit before him, yet he would not be moved by it. (Jer. 15. 1.) Then ſaid the Lord unto me, though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people. As if the Lord had ſaid, Though they ſhould get my chief favourites, to ſolicite their cauſe, and plead on their behalf, yet they ſhould find me in one mind, and that even they could not turn me. Jeſus Chriſt never ſolicited any cauſe but he ſped in it, but the beſt of men may be earneſt ſolicitors and not ſpeed. For though good men will not ſolicite a bad cauſe before God, or pray againſt his revealed will, yet they do not always hit his ſecret will. And God who ſaith to his people generally (Pſal. 50. 15.) Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee: yet in ſome particular caſes he will not deliver them, though they call upon him. Prayer is not only an allowed, but a commanded means, and ſo the moſt probable means to obtain deliverance, yet that cannot always obtain or fetch it. Yea God who often brings his people into trouble, on purpoſe to provoke them to ſeek his help, yet, ſometimes, will not help them though they ſeek him. And the reaſon is, becauſe he is in one mind, and will not be turned from his purpoſes, no not by prayer. If once the Lord be reſolved to deſtroy, prayer cannot ſave; Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, yet (ſaith the Lord) my mind could not be toward this people, caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth, ſuch as are for the ſword to the ſword, &c.

But if prayer cannot turn God, then you lay a temptation before us to turn away from prayer.

I anſwer, Firſt, As was ſhewed before; prayer may turn God in reference to his outward diſpenſations, though it cannot turn him from any of his counſels and reſolutions.

But then it may be enquired; how ſhall I do to direct my prayer? For I know not what the purpoſe or reſolution of God is, I only ſee what his diſpenſations are. And if ſo, I may pray againſt the mind or purpoſe of God; I may ask for the removing or taking away of that, which he is purpoſed ſhall continue; and I may ask the gift of that, which he is reſolved not to beſtow.

To this I anſwer, Firſt, That though the mind of God to give us ſuch a mercy, or to withdraw ſuch an affliction, be a ſecret to us; yet this is revealed, that it is our duty to pray about theſe things. What God will give or do for us when we pray is a ſecret; but this is revealed, that in all things we ought to pray. That's the Apoſtles rule (Phil. 4.6.) Be careful in nothing, but in every thing by prayer and ſupplication with thanksgiving make your requeſts known unto God.

Secondly, Suppoſe the things we pray about, whether for the having, or removing of them, be ſuch as it is not the mind of God either to give or to remove: Yet we may pleaſe God, in praying for the attainment of thoſe things, which it is not his pleaſure to give; and in praying for the taking away of thoſe things, which it is not his pleaſure to remove. We do not offend God, by asking that which he will not give, if the thing be ſuch, as is in the general nature of it according to his will. The Lord takes it well at our hands that we pray, and is well pleaſed to hear us pray, when he is not pleaſed to hear (that is, to grant) our prayers.

Thirdly, Be not turned from prayer, becauſe prayer cannot turn God, for it is a great argument that the mind or purpoſe of God and his decree is to give ſuch a mercy, or to remove ſuch an evil, if we have an heart to pray much for or about it. For God who hath ſaid, I will be ſought unto, that I may do it for them (Ezek. 36.) hath not ſaid unto the ſeed of Jacob, ſeek ye me in vain (Iſa. 45. 19.) And when God ſtirs up his people to pray, it is an argument he is ready to hear. Thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cauſe thine ear to hear (Pſal. 10. 17.) So that as God takes it well at our hands that we pray for many things which he hath no purpoſe to give us; ſo it is a good ground of faith that he hath a purpoſe to do ſuch or ſuch things for us, when he puts it into our hearts to pray for them.

Laſtly, Let not any ſtumble at the duty of prayer, becauſe of Gods unchangeableneſs; for we pray, not to change the mind of God, but to fulfil it; we pray for the fulfilling of his decrees, not for the altering of them; for the fulfilling of his counſels, not the voiding of them. And becauſe God is in one mind, and none can turn him; we have the more incouragement to pray. For all the good things that are in the mind, counſel, and purpoſe of God to do for us, and beſtow upon us, are born, and brought into the world uſually by the hand of prayer: Prayer is (as it were) the midwife, to bring our bleſſings to the birth. Therefore though prayer cannot turn God, yet we have no reaſon to turn from prayer.

There is yet a fourth thing which may ſtop men, but cannot ſtop God; And that is nearneſs of relation. Men are often turned out of the way when a near relation ſtands in their way. They purpoſed to do this or that, but that ſuch a friend, or ſuch a kinſman hath turned them from their purpoſe. 'Tis rare to find ſuch a ſpirit as the Lord by Moſes obſerved and highly commended in the Tribe of Levi (*Deut.*33.9.) Who ſaid unto his father, and to his mother, I have not ſeen him, neither did he acknowledge his Brethren, nor knew his own children. That is, he was not turned by the neareſt relations from executing that terrible ſentence of the Lord upon the children of Iſrael his Brethren after they had made the Golden Calf, of which you may read at large (Exod. 32. 26, 27, 28, 29.) It is truly ſaid, That relations have little entity in them, but they have the greateſt efficacy in them. And their efficacy hath never appeared more in any thing then in this, The turning of man from his purpoſe or his duty. But relations have no efficacy in them to ſtop or turn the Lord from his purpoſes. (*Iſa.*27.11.) It is a people that have no underſtanding, therefore he that made them, will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will ſhew them no favour. As if the Prophet had ſaid, When Lord threatens to bring evil upon you, poſſibly ye will ſay, we are the work of thy hands, he hath made us, ſurely then he will not deſtroy us. We find that argument pleaded (*Iſa.*64.8.) But now O Lord, thou art our father, we are the clay, and thou our potter, and we all are the work of thy hand: Be not wrath very ſore, O Lord, &c. To plead our relation to God by Chriſt, is the ſtrongeſt plea in prayer, and to plead any relation to God, hath a great ſtrength in it. Yet while ſome urge theſe, they ſignifie nothing, and have no force at all. They who are like that people in the Prophet, a people of no underſtanding, ſpiritual ideots, ſuch as have no knowledge to do good, or no practical underſtanding in the things of God; ſuch, I ſay, may urge their relation, and get nothing by it; He that made them, will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them, will ſhew them no favour. The Lord profeſſeth ſtrongly againſt any power which a relation ſhall have upon him to turn him, or take off the proceſs of his Judgment under high provocations from the higheſt of men. (Jer. 22.24.) As I live, ſaith the Lord, though Coniah the ſon of Jehoiakim King of Judah were the ſignet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence, and give thee into the hand of them that ſeek thy life, &c. To be as the ſignet upon the right hand, notes the moſt intimate nearneſs of relation; yet the Lord breaks through this, and will not be turned away by it, from the ſevereſt actings of his own purpoſes. Thus it hath appeared that as the Lord is unchangeable in himſelf, ſo nothing can change him. He is in one mind, who can turn him?

And what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth.

Hence Obſerve, That God doth whatſoever he will, or whatſoever he deſires to do.

There is no bound to the power of God, but his own will. When the Heathen asked in ſcorn, Where is your God? The Pſalmiſt tells them plainly both where he was, and what he had been doing. (*Pſal.*115.3.) But our God is in the heavens, he hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. The doings of God know no bounds but his own pleaſure; He hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. He will not endure to have any articles put upon him, nor any circles or limit-lines drawn about him. The power of God is regulated and determined by nothing but his will. A great Prince once ſaid, That he had indeed a circle about his head (meaning his Crown) but he would not bear it to have a circle about his feet; he muſt go which way himſelf pleaſed, and do whatſoever his ſoul deſired: Yet there are circles drawn about all the powers of the world, only God hath none. His government is purely arbitrary. Nor is it fit that the government of any but his ſhould be ſo; 'Tis neither fit nor ſafe that any ſhould govern arbitrarily or purely at will, but he whoſe will is altogether pure, but he whoſe will is ſo far from needing a rule, that it is one, yea the only unerring One (Ezek. 24.14.) I the Lord have ſpoken it, it ſhall come to paſs, and I will do it, I will not go back, neither will I ſpare, neither will I repent; according to thy wayes, and according to thy doings, ſhall they judge thee, ſaith the Lord God. As if the Lord had ſaid, It is my will to have it thus, and therefore it ſhall be thus. That which is moſt ſinful in man, is moſt holy in God, to act according to his own will. Mans will is too crooked a rule for others to guide their actions by, or for himſelf to guide his actions by. He that ſaith, I will do this or that, becauſe I will, doth nothing as he ought. There ſhould be much willingneſs, but none of our own will in what we do. But as Gods will ſhould be both the rule and reaſon of our actings, ſo it alwayes is of his own. There is (as I may ſay) an holy wilfulneſs in God. He will have what he will, and he will do what he will. God will not do many things which he can, but he can do whatſoever he will; and whatſoever he will do, he is juſt and righteous in doing it. And this is the glory of God, to have ſuch a power, and ſuch a will. And there being ſuch a power in God, with ſuch a will, we need not fear his power. We leave men to their will as little as we can, whom we truſt with much power. When men in power have nothing but their will to guide them, we preſently fear oppreſſion and tyranny, and that we ſhall be far from leading peaceable and quiet lives under them in all godlineſs and honeſty, which is the moſt deſireable and bleſſed fruit of Magiſtracy. Nor is this a pannick or groundleſs fear, ſeeing the will of man is corrupt and ſinful, ſelfiſh and revengeful. And who can but fear to be under that power which hath no limits but a corrupt will? But who would fear to be under the power of God, acted by his will, ſeeing he willeth nothing but what is righteous, juſt, and good? What can we expect but right from him who is righteouſneſs? what but good from him (in a good cauſe) who is goodneſs it ſelf, how great or how unlimitted ſoever his power is? If ſome men might do what they would, what evil would they not do? There's nothing ſtands between ſome men, and the wronging of all men they have to do with, but the want either of power or of opportunity to do it. The Lord can do what he will, but he will do nothing but what is good. He is able to ruine all men, but he will wrong no man, no not the worſt of men. What his ſoul deſireth even that he doth; but it is impoſſible his ſoul ſhould deſire to do any thing but what is right.

Laſtly, When it is ſaid, Whatſoever his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth, or more cloſe to the Original, He deſireth, He doth. We learn,

That, It is as eaſie with God to do a thing, as to deſire to have it done.

All men would do what their ſouls deſire, but moſt men deſire that which they cannot do; yea though men have a deſire to do a thing, and a power to do it alſo, yet it is not ſo ſoon done as deſired; there muſt be a preparation and the uſe of means before man can do what he hath a power to do; ſo that though a man hath power proportionable to his deſire, yet he is not preſently a partaker of his deſire: But God can make his power as ſpeedy as his deſire. He can make the declaration of his will, and the execution of it contiguous. For though many things lie long in the will of God before they are done, and what he willed from eternity, is done in time, and the time of doing it be yet a great way off, yet he can do any thing as ſoon as will it, and whatſoever he willeth or deſireth, is, to him, as done already. (Pſal. 104. 30.) Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are created. The creation there ſpoken of is providence, for that is a continued creation. The firſt creation was the production of all things out of nothing to that being which they had; but there is another work of creation, which is the continuing or renewing of things in their being; and of this he ſaith, Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, that is, thy power; they are created, and thou reneweſt the face of the earth. Thou makeſt a new world; And thus God makes a new world every year, ſending forth his Spirit, or quickning power in the rain, and Sun to renew the face of the earth. And as the Lord ſends forth his power in providential mercies, ſo in providential Judgments. He looketh on the earth and it trembleth; He toucheth the hills, and they ſmoak (verſ. 32.) A man can ſoon give a caſt with his eye, ſo ſoon can God ſhake the earth, that is, either the whole maſs of the earth, or the inferior ſort of men on the earth. When he looketh, or caſts an angry eye upon the earth, it trembleth. He toucheth the hills (that is, the powers and principalities of the world) and they ſmoak; If he do but touch them they ſmoak, that is, the dreadful effects of the power and Judgment of God are viſible upon them. As ſoon as the Lord calls, all creatures readily tender their ſervice. (Pſal. 105. 31, & 34.) He ſpake, and there came divers ſorts of flies, and lice in all their coaſts. (verſ. 34.) He ſpake, and the Locuſts came; and Caterpillers, and that without number. If the Lord ſpeak the word, it is done. God ſpake the world into this beauty, he did but ſay, Let there be light, and there was light. And he can ſpeak the world into trouble and confuſion, He doth but ſay, Let there be darkneſs, and there is darkneſs. It was an high ſpeech of Cæſar, who meeting with ſome oppoſition from that young noble Roman Metellus, ſaid, Let me alone, leſt I deſtroy thee; and preſently added, It is eaſier for me to do this, then to ſpeak it. Such was his power, that he could eaſier take away a mans life, then give ſentence of death againſt him. This is moſt true concerning the great God of heaven and earth, there is no more difficulty in his doing of a thing, then in his deſiring and willing it to be done.

The general truth of this verſe carrieth in it a twofold inference.

First, Of terrour to the wicked, God is in one mind; the ſame opinion which he had of their wayes and perſons heretofore, the ſame he hath ſtill. The ſame curſes and Judgments which he hath denounced againſt them formerly, are in force ſtill. Is it not a terrible thing to incorrigible wicked men, to remember that what the ſoul of God deſireth, he doth, when his ſoul deſireth nothing but vengeance and wrath for them? Therefore tremble before the Lord ye wicked, and be ſore afraid at the remembrance of his unchangeableneſs.

Secondly, Of abundant comfort to the faithful and righteous; The mind of God is mercy to them, and he is in this one mind towards them, none can turn him, His ſoul deſireth to do them good; And whatſoever his ſoul deſireth, that he doth. What can Saints deſire more, then that God ſhould do all that for them which he deſireth? and all that he will aſſuredly do. Therefore rejoyce in the Lord ye righteous, and give thanks at the remembrance of his unchangeableneſs.

VERS. 14, 15, 16, 17.

For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me: and many ſuch things are with him.

Therefore I am troubled at his preſence: when I conſider, I am afraid of him.

For God maketh my heart ſoft, and the Almighty troubleth me:

Becauſe I was not cut off before the darkneſs, neither hath he covered the darkneſs from my face.

IN the former verſe Job exalteth God; First, In his unchangeableneſs, He is in one mind, who can turn him? Secondly, In his Almightineſs, What his ſoul deſireth even that he doth. In verſ. 14. He ſpeaks of God in reference to his perſonal experience, and brings down the general propoſition to his own particular caſe. As if he had ſaid, I indeed have found, that what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth, mine own ſad experience proves and bears witneſs to this truth, my preſent ſtate makes the Comment of this text; for he performeth the thing that is appointed for me.

Verſ. 14. He performeth.

ישלם In primaria ſignificatione denotat, implere, finire, deinde in pace eſſe; etiam ſolvere, compenſare. Pined.

The word hath various tranſlations, but all are well ſumm'd up in this, He performeth.

Firſt, It ſignifies to pay; payment is performance, therefore the ſame word is uſed both for performing and paying.

Secondly, The word ſignifies, to be at peace; and this agrees well with the former, becauſe he that performeth and payeth according to his word, hath peace, both in himſelf and with other men. An honeſt pay-maſter ſits down in peace, and prevents his own trouble. But to the matter, He (that is, God) performeth

The thing that is appointed for me.

כי ישלים חקי Quia reddet ſtatutū meū. Mont.

'Tis the ſame word which we had at verſ. 12. of this Chapter, I have eſtemed the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary, or my appointed food. Here we render it, the thing that is appointed for me. The word is often uſed in Pſalm 119. and ſignifieth any Ordinance, Law, Statute, or Decree, whether Divine or Humane; for all theſe are the appointments, either of God or man, about things to be done, or forborn. And as God makes appointments of things which he would have us do, ſo of ſuch things as himſelf will do to, or concerning us.

Maſter Broughton tranſlates it here, as we do at the twelfth verſe, implying neceſſary food, or the proviſions of this life. Becauſe he furniſhed me with my daily bread. That which we render, the thing that is appointed for me, he renders, my daily bread.

Perficit neceſſaria mea. Vatab. i.e. perficit quicquid mihi erat opus, ipſe corporis mei artifex & omnium quæ in me ſunt.

Another, learned in that language, agrees in the ſame ſence, and varies very little in words; He hath performed, or accompliſhed thoſe things which were neceſſary for me, or all thoſe things which I ſtand in need of. He who ſet up this frame of my body, and hath given me this life, hath adminiſter'd all things needful for the upholding of this body, and for the maintaining of this life. And ſo, the words carry Job's ſence or acknowledgment of the fatherly care and kindneſs of God towards him. What his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth; for he furniſheth me with daily bread, and he performeth what is neceſſary for me, or ſupplieth all my wants. According to which ſence, Mr. Broughton renders the ſecond part of the verſe alſo; And many ſuch graces are with him. Thus Job ſpake at Chapter 10. verſ. 8, 12. Thy hands have made me and faſhioned me together round about. Thou haſt granted me life and favour, and thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit. So that the mind of theſe tranſlators ſeems to be this, That Job would ſet forth the unchangeableneſs of Gods decree in giving him his appointed comforts, as well as ſorrows.

Quicquid de me decrevit abſolvet ſive in bonū ſive in malum. Merc. Non me miſſum faciet, donec impleverit, quæ inſtituit. Merc.

Yet rather by this appointment (or the thing which God had appointed him) we are to underſtand (as I conceive) his afflictions only and his ſorrow; As if he had ſaid, I find that God will do what he hath a mind to do, how greivous ſoever it be either to the mind or fleſh of man: for he performeth the thing that he hath appointed for me; he hath appointed me to ſorrow, and I have had ſorrow and trouble ſtore; And he will not diſmiſs me or let me go out of his hand, till he hath performed every title of what he hath appointed for my portion of ſorrow and ſuffering in this world. And to ſhew how much he was aſſured of this, He ſpeaks in the preſent tenſe; Not, he will perform, but he performeth, &c. As if he had ſaid, He will as ſurely do it; as if he were now a doing it.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That God will certainly perform all his appointments concerning man; He is able to do it, and he will do it.

This point was largely inſiſted upon from thoſe words of the former verſe, He is in one mind, who can turn him? God doth what he hath a mind to do, therefore I ſhall not here ſtay to ſhew the certainty of Gods performing what he hath appointed, but to ſhew the appointment of all things which he performeth. Take the Obſervation thus formed.

Whatſoever God performeth, or doth to any man, was before appointed, or decreed for, or concerning him.

All the works of God in time, were his decrees before time, he performeth the thing that is appointed, and appointed by himſelf, and his appointments are as himſelf is, from everlaſting. Whatſoever God doth, we find it under an appointment.

Firſt, and eſpecially, as to (the buſineſs in hand) the afflictions and ſuffering of his ſervants; All their ſufferings are under an appointment. (Micah 6.9.) The Lords voice cryeth unto the City, and the man of wiſdom ſhall ſee thy name, hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it. As if he had ſaid, your ſelves by your ſins are the procurers of it; we the Prophets are only the reporters and publiſhers of it; But God himſelf is the appointer of it. As publick and national rods, ſo private or perſonal rods are appointed; And as often as we feel their ſmart, we ſhould conſider their appointment. The Apoſtle (1 Theſ, 3. 3.) moves the Saints to a ſteadineſs of ſpirit under affliction, upon this ground, that no man ſhould be moved by theſe afflictions (he doth not mean that we ſhould be without ſenſe of our afflictions, ſtroaks and ſufferings; but his meaning is, that we ſhould neither be moved by impatience under them, to murmur at them, nor be moved by undue fears to faint in them, why?) for your ſelves know that we are appointed thereunto. The afflictions are appointed to us, and we are appointed to them, and your ſelves know it. This doctrine hath been publiſhed to you, that afflictions are under a divine appointment, that there is a decree of God about them. And that, Firſt, as to the matter, of what ſort the affliction ſhall be; Secondly, As to the meaſure or degree, how great the affliction ſhall be. Thirdly, The appointment reaches the ſeaſon, and that twofold. Firſt, When the affliction ſhall begin; And Secondly, How long it ſhall continue: every thing, in affliction, is under an appointment.

Secondly, As our afflictions, ſo alſo our comforts are under an appointment. As the Lord hath appointed the Gall, ſo the Honey of our cup; as the cold winter, ſo the warm and ſummer ſeaſons of our lives (Iſa. 61. 2, 3.) The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek, &c. To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Sion (and this appointment, in execution, is the fulfilling of the firſt appointment by decree, to appoint unto them that mourn in Sion) to give unto them beauty for aſhes, the oyl of Joy for mourning, the garment of praiſe for the ſpirit of heavineſs. And as our ſpiritual comforts, ſo our temporal, our outward ſalvations and protections are under an appointment. (Iſa. 26. 1.) Salvation ſhall God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

Thirdly, As the wall of protection is ſet up, ſo the ſword, and all other inſtruments of deſtruction are ſent out by appointment. (Jer. 15. 3.) I will appoint over them four kinds, ſaith the Lord, the ſword to ſlay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of heaven, and the Beaſts of the Earth to devour and deſtroy. And as the deſtroying ſword, ſo the place whither the ſword ſhall go to deſtroy is under an appointment. When the queſtion is put (Jer. 47. 6.) O thou ſword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? put up thy ſelf into thy ſcabbard, reſt and be ſtill; The anſwer is made (verſ. 7.) How can it be quiet ſeeing the Lord hath given it a Charge againſt Askalon, and againſt the Sea-ſhore, there he hath appointed it. He hath appointed this place, this ground, this Country, this City, this ſhoar for the ſword; and the ſword being under an appointment, muſt do as it is appointed. If we look all the Scripture over, we ſhall find all things under an appointment. As firſt, our children are appointed. When Adam had another Son, his wife Eve ſaid (Geneſis 4. 25.) God hath appointed me another ſeed inſtead of Abel, whom Cain ſlew. Secondly, our wives are appointed. When Abrahams ſervant was ſent by him to Meſopotamia for a wife for Iſaac, he ſaith, If the woman come whom thou haſt appointed to be wife to my Maſters Son, &c. That this woman rather then any other ſhould be his Maſters ſons wife, was (he knew) by the appointment of God (Gen. 24. 14, 44.) Thirdly, All our Times are appointed by God (Exod. 9. 5.) My times are in thy hand (ſaith David Pſal. 31. 15.) Fourthly, not only things that are or exiſt, but things that as yet are not, come under an appointment. What ſhall be, is as certain to God, as what already is, (Iſa. 44. 7.) And who as I, ſhall call, and ſhall declare it, and ſet it in order for me, ſince I appointed the ancient people? And the things that are coming, and ſhall come? The ancient who have been long and ſtill are, were appointed by me, and the things which are not, but ſhall be in a continued ſucceſſion, like Links of a Chain holding one in another, are appointed by me. The things that are coming (or that are near the birth) and ſhall come (things afar off) all that is to be done, as well as all that hath been done, is under an appointment. Fifthly, as all the paſſages of our lives, ſo death it ſelf is under an appointment (Heb. 13. 27.) It is appointed for all men once to die. And as death is appointed, ſo the ſeaſon or the when of it is appointed. (Job 7. 1.) Is there not an appointed time to man? Again (Job. 14. 5.) Thou haſt appointed his bounds that he cannot paſs. Sixthly, as the dayes of man, ſo The day of the Lord, the day of Judgment, is under an appointment. (Acts 17. 31.) Becauſe he hath appointed a day wherein he will Judge the world in righteouſneſs by that man whom he hath ordained; the time is fixt, he hath appointed a day, a day of Judgment. When the appointed day ſhall be is a ſecret, but, that he hath appointed a day is revealed, and that he hath appointed all the motions and changes that are coming upon the world, till that day come. So then

Firſt, We are not governed by blind fortune. Nor Secondly, By a Stoical Fate.

Thirdly, But by a divine appointment.

Further, The appointment of God determineth, Firſt, The end; Secondly, The means leading to and promoting the attainment of the end. Laſtly, as God appointeth Great things, ſo the leaſt. A ſparrow falls not to the ground without him, that is, without his appointment, or without an order from heaven, yea the hairs of our head are all numbred (Matth. 10. 29, 30.)

This truth well digeſted is enough not only to ſuperſede and ſtop all the undue fears, but to eſtabliſh the comforts of the people of God. What can be better for us, then that all things are in ſo good a hand, that they are appointed and meaſured out by God, that he cuts out our condition for us, that he forms and frames our ſtate for us. It hath been ſaid, Every man is the faſhioner of his own condition; there is ſome truth in that, mens conditions are much according to their actings; but God is the ſupreme faſhioner and orderer of every mans ſtate and portion. The portion of the wicked is ſet out by God. (Job 20. 29.) This is the heritage of the wicked, and the portion appointed to him of God. Theirs is indeed a ſad portion, but it is a juſt and a deſerved one. He alſo faſhions and cuts out a portion for his own people; And though theirs is often for the preſent a bitter one, and ſo deſerved by them, yet he alwayes makes it a good one to them, and hath prepared a better for them which they have not at all deſerved. He performeth the thing that is appointed for me:

And many ſuch things are with him.

Some expound this of the parallel dealings of God with other perſons; He performeth the thing that is appointed for me, and many ſuch things are with him; That is, I am not the only inſtance, or example of this; God doth the like alſo to others, my caſe is not ſingular, I am not alone in the thing, God hath not appointed a portion for me only, and performed it accordingly to me; No, he doth many ſuch like things; yea whatſoever he doth with, or concerning any elſe, it is by appointment and according to the determinate purpoſe of his own will. Many ſuch things are with him.

Hæc multitudo refertur ad ſimilia exempla hominū quos deus ſimiliter exercet ſive exercere poſſit ſi velit. Non unicum (inquit) ego ſum exemplū hujus divinæ dei poteſtatis

But, Secondly, I conceive that we may rather expound theſe words (many ſuch things) of ſuch things as Job had already ſuffered; As if he had ſaid, The Lord hath performed the thing that he hath appointed for me; hitherto (I have had my portion of trouble and ſorrow unto this day) and I am like to have more; I do not yet perceive that God hath done with me; for as our comforts, and the proviſions of this life, ſo our afflictions and the ſorrows of this life, are, or may be renewed or returned upon us every day. Our bread is called (in that prayer which Chriſt taught his Diſciples) daily bread, that is, the bread that is brought out to us every day; And when we have received our bread for one day, we may ſay, many ſuch things are with him; that is, he hath bread enough for us for to morrow, and for next day, for this year and for the next, for all the dayes and years of our lives, many ſuch things are with him; So, when we have ſuffered and been troubled this day, we may ſay, he hath other ſufferings and troubles for us againſt next day, when theſe are gone and blown over; this I ſuppoſe is the thing that Job aims at; ſo that he ſeems to prepare himſelf for new rods, and to ſay, in the ſweeteſt and humbleſt compoſure of a meek and quiet ſpirit, It is the Lord, let him do with me, what ſeemeth good in his own eyes. All that God hath performed to me-wards he hath appointed for me; yet I am not of opinion that God hath ſpent all his appointments upon me; ſurely he hath not drawn his quiver dry, he hath yet more arrows to ſhoot at my poor already wounded and bleeding breſt. My heart miſgives or rather gives me, that he hath not yet ſhewed me all the troubles which he hath appointed for the trial of my graces, for the exerciſe of my patience, and for the purging out of my corruptions. For many ſuch things are with him. And this we may take two wayes.

Cum jam me quibus voluerit tormentis afflixerit, & alta adhuc quāta voluerit mihi infligere poterit. Hieron. Multa jam paſſus ſum, tamen ſi illud voluerit anima ejus fiet. Phil. Videtur ſe patientiſſimè comparare ad nova flagella.

Firſt, In reference to the power of God; he can do many ſuch ſuch things as theſe, he can do what he hath done, his arm is not ſhortned.

Secondly, In reference to his own deſervings; many ſins are with me; and therefore I have reaſon enough to ſuſpect, that many more ſorrows are appointed for me. I may need more humbling and refining, and therefore it is like I ſhall have it, and that another furnace is heating for me. In how holy a frame was the ſpirit of this good man! He juſtifieth God in all that he had done, and he was ready to ſubmit (though it made his fleſh fear and tremble at the thought of it, as he confeſſeth it did in the next verſe; yet I ſay, he was ready to ſubmit) to whatſoever God would yet do, knowing that he could, and being much perſwaded that he would do much and many things more then he had done yet. For (ſaith he) Many ſuch things are with him.

Hence Note, Firſt, God hath variety of wayes to exerciſe and chaſten his in.

As he hath more then one Bleſſing, ſo he hath more then one Chaſtening; as he hath many Comforts, ſo he hath many ſorrows ready at his hand; as he is the God of all Conſolation, ſo he is the God alſo of all tribulation; and as he can make all Conſolation to abound, ſo he can make all tribulation to abound; many ſuch things are with him. When you have ſuffered one affliction, do not think that you have ſuffered all, there may be a ſecond at hand. They are uſually twin-born, and ſometimes we may ſay (as Leah in another caſe, Gen. 30. 11.) A troop cometh. Troubles come by Troops. We read the Lord threatning his ancient people the Jews after great ſufferings, and Judgments had been upon them, with a ſucceſſion of new Judgments. The whole twenty eighth Chapter of Deuteronomie is but a continued deſcription of that variety both of bleſſings and curſes which God hath at hand ſtored up in his Treaſures. Read how various his Judgments are (1 Kin. 8. 37. 2 Chron. 6. 28.) I will puniſh you yet ſeven times more for your ſins (*Lev.*26.18,24.) And that ſeven times more may be underſtood; Firſt, In reference to the variety of their puniſhments, you ſhall have ſeven kinds of puniſhments more then you had; Secondly, In reference to the degrees of their puniſhment; I will make them ſeven times greater then they were. As Nebuchadnezzar commanded the fiery furnace to be heated ſeven times hotter; ſo the Lord can command the furnace to be heated ſeven times hotter: And as the Lord can chaſten and afflict his people ſeven times more both in kind and degree, ſo they may need ſeven ſorts of afflictions more, and a furnace heated ſeven times more then formerly, either for the purging out of their ſins, or for the exerciſe and proof of their Graces. For though the Lord hath a great variety of afflictions at his command, yet he never layeth any one of them upon us, but when there is need. The Apoſtle Peter gives us aſſurance of this from God (1 *Epiſt.*1.6.) For having ſaid, that Saints are kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation, wherein they greatly rejoyce, he preſently adds, though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations. We ſee the temptations wherewith the Lord exerciſeth the heirs of heaven here on earth, are many, yet they never feel theſe but when need is; And many have as much need of the rod for their ſpiritual eſtate, as they have of bread for their natural. Many ſuch things are with him.

Secondly, Note, We deſerve more and ſorer afflictions then God hath yet layd upon any of us.

They who ſin leaſt ſuffer leſs then their ſin, how much ſoever they ſuffer here. (*Pſal.*103. 10.) He hath not dealt with us after our ſins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities, ſo great is his mercy to them that fear him. The Text is to be underſtood of them that fear God: He hath not dealt with us after our ſins, that is, in proportion to our ſins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities, that is, we have not had that meaſure of trouble which anſwers the meaſure of our iniquities. Ezra made humble confeſſion of this in the name of the Jewiſh Church (Ezra 9.13.) And after all that is come upon us, (much is come upon us) for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, ſeeing that thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our ſins deſerve, &c. Their puniſhment was great, yet leſs then their iniquities. As all the afflictions and miſeries of this life are leſs then the glory that is promiſed (*Rom.*8.18.) I count that the ſufferings of this preſent life are not worthy to be compared to the glory that ſhall be revealed; So all the ſufferings of this life are not to be compared with the deſerts of the leaſt ſin committed by us, nor with the leſt comfort of the Spirit which is given to us. As the good things which God beſtows upon us are above and beyond any worthineſs of ours, ſo the evils with which he chaſtneth his children, yea or puniſheth the worſt of wicked men in this life, are below and on this ſide what they are worthy to receive.

Non ſunt condignæ paſſiones hujus vitæ. 1 ad præteritam culpam quæ remittitur. 2 ad præſentem conſolationis gratiam quæ immittitur. 3 ad futurā gloriam quæ promittitur. Punit deus intra condignum, & retribuit bona ultra condignum.

Verſ. 15. Therefore am I troubled at his preſence, when I conſider him I am afraid of him, &c.

This and the next verſe expreſs the ſtate of Jobs ſpirit upon the former diſcovery, or how he was affected with this thing, that many ſuch things were with God. I have often met with other paſſages in this book which have a nearneſs of ſignification with theſe words, and therefore I ſhall with the more ſpeed paſs through them, and part with them.

Therefore am I troubled at his preſence.

The words (probably) are an anſwer to an objection; for his friends had charged him with fear and trouble of ſpirit at the preſence of God upon another account, even becauſe of the guiltineſs of his conſcience, or becauſe of his great wickedneſs. So (*Chap.*22. Verſ. 10.) Eliphaz having ſhewed him his ſin, thou haſt ſent the widow empty away, the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken, preſently adds the ſad effects which were upon him, therefore ſudden fear troubleth thee, and ſnares are round about thee; As if he had ſaid, thou haſt been very wicked in thy actions, and therefore thou art ſo unquiet in thy ſpirit; Thou haſt been uncharitable and injurious to men; therefore thou art troubled at the preſence of God. No, ſaith Job, my trouble of ſpirit doth not ariſe from my guilt (though I have ſin and iniquity enough about me, to deſerve greater Chaſtenings then theſe which are upon me) but the cauſe of my trouble ariſeth from the knowledge and apprehenſions which I have of God, who is in one mind, and who can turn him? he performeth the thing that is appointed for me; and many ſuch things are with him. This is the ſpring and ground of my trouble: I am troubled both with the feeling of my preſent calamities, and with the fear of greater.

Quia ita potens eſt, ut abſolutè quicquid libet facit, & hac poteſtate nunc in me utitur. Merc.

The word ſignifies both to make haſt, and to trouble, the reaſon is, becauſe, as ſome ſay, trouble makes haſt, ill news comes apace; or, Secondly, becauſe we are very haſty to get out of trouble, and uſually over-haſty; he that is in trouble would fain be out of it; no man loves to ſtick in ſuch a condition; therefore the ſame word in the Hebrew elegantly ſignifies both to make haſt, and to trouble. And hence one of the Ancients tranſlates, Therefore have I haſtened to his preſence. Expounding it thus, Becauſe he hath thus afflicted me, therefore leaving all the world, I make haſt to him, I throw my ſelf upon him, and leave my cauſe to him; that's a good ſence, and very ſpiritual; For the Saints being afflicted, make haſt to God, becauſe he is their father, and becauſe he alone is able to be their deliverer; who would not make haſt to God upon ſuch an intereſt? A wicked man turns from God by ſinning againſt him, and he runs away from God afflicting him. He that delights in ſin, cannot delight in God, who is the avenger of ſin. But afflictions draw Saints nearer to God, therefore have I haſtened (ſaith that tranſlation) into his preſence. But we have rendred it (as I conceive) better to the Intendment of this place.

Propterea ad eum feſtinavi, quod ipſe exponit. Quia me tribulavit ideo relicti temporalibus ad eum feſtinavi. August.

Therefore am I troubled at his preſence.

The letter is, at his face, or becauſe of him, that is, for fear of him.

Therefore am I troubled.] Job was troubled upon a twofold account.

Firſt, With the pain and ſmart of his then preſent ſufferings.

Secondly, With fear of further or future ſufferings. I am troubled at his preſence.

Senſu flagellorū præſentiū, metu futurorum. Jun.

The preſence of God is moſt deſireable; what is it that Saints wiſh and rejoyce in comparatively to the preſence of God? My ſoul thirſteth for God; when ſhall I come and appear before God? ſaith David, (*Pſal.*42,2.) How greedy was he of the preſence of God? how did he (as it were) tell the clocks, and count every hour a day, every day a year, till he was reſtored to it. And in another place, how earneſtly doth he deprecate his baniſhment from the face of God, as the foreſt puniſhment, (*Pſal.*51.11.) Caſt me not away from thy preſence. Yet here Job confeſſeth, I am troubled at his preſence.

Hence Note, God can eaſily vary the appearances of himſelf to us.

He can diſcover himſelf ſo to us, as that his preſence ſhall be better to us then life, better to us then ten thouſand of theſe lower worlds, or as the heaven of this lower world, yea as the only felicity of that heaven which is above. What is heaven, but this preſence of God? Thou wilt ſhew me the path of life; In thy preſence is fulneſs of Joy (Pſal. 16. 11.) Thus God can make himſelf known with a delightful preſence; yet he can make himſelf known, and often doth, even to his own, with a dreadful and an amazing preſence. God in whom there is no variableneſs, nor ſhadow of turning, can vary the demonſtrations of himſelf to us, as much as light varieth from darkneſs, or life from the ſhadow of death. God hath a light ſide, and a dark ſide, as to manifeſtation, though in himſelf he is light, and in him there is no darkneſs at all. Sometimes his preſence is ſweetneſs and joy, even joy unſpeakable and glorious; at other times, his preſence is bitterneſs and ſorrow, even ſorrow unſpeakably grievous. There is nothing ſo dreadful to wicked men at any time as the preſence of God. As it hath been their wretched care to hide [illegible] ſins from God as much as they could, ſo they would count it their happineſs to have their perſons hid for ever from the preſence of God. That which is both the ſin and trouble of the wicked at all times, is the trouble, if not the ſin of ſome godly men at ſometimes, namely, the preſence of God, not in it ſelf, but with reſpect to the manner of his manifeſting himſelf to them, and dealing with them. As will appear further in the next clauſe of this verſe. I am troubled at his preſence.

When I conſider I am afraid.

As if he had ſaid, When I ſeriouſly weigh and have deep thoughts in my mind, when I ſet my underſtanding throughly on work to conſider the ſeverity of Gods proceedings with me, and when I remember the wormwood and the gall, thoſe bitter taſts and ſad experiences which I have had already of his dreadful power, then I am afraid. And this fear ariſeth not from the guilt or accuſations of my own conſcience, but leſt the Lord ſhould again act and put forth that his terrible power upon me.

Cum diligentius conſidero ejus tantam potentiam, cujus nunc in me ſpecimen vides, non poſſum quin expaveſcam, non quid in me ſit iniquitas, ſed ne deinceps pergat ſua potentia me affligere. Merc.

But what fear is here meant? or how was Job afraid upon the taking up of this conſideration? I anſwer,

There is Firſt, A pure filial or ſon-like fear, when we are afraid to ſin againſt and diſpleaſe our father. This fear is a ſpecial grace promiſed in the new Covenant, and the beginning of wiſdom.

Secondly, There is a pure ſlaviſh-fear, when we dread God as a Judge, and revenger. This fear is the iſſue of the Covenant of works, and the beginning of ſorrow.

Thirdly, There is a mixt fear, not a pure filial, nor a pure ſlaviſh fear, but with a mixture or ingrediency of both. Such I conceive the fear of Job was; his was a mixt-fear; it had ſome tang of ſlavery in it, and it had ſome touch of Son-ſhip in it; there was much of the Spirit of Bondage in it, and ſomething of the Spirit of Adoption in it. With the former fear many good men have been much exerciſed in all ages, eſpecially before Chriſt came in the fleſh, and the clearer breaking and beaming out of Goſpel light, (*Rom.*8.15.) Ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage to fear again. And (John 14.27.) Let not your hearts be troubled, nor be ye afraid; that is, be not burdened and oppreſt with that ſervile and ſlaviſh fear which you are ſubject to. Chriſt ſpake it to his own Diſciples, for even at that time deep impreſſions of that fear were upon them, doubting much what would become of them, when he ſhould (of which he had told them) leave the world, and be gone from them. And beſides that ſpecial reaſon which the Diſciples then had to fear at that time, this fear uſually ariſeth from two reaſons, in others, at all times.

Firſt, From the Conſideration of their own weakneſs and failings.

Secondly, From the Conſideration of the Majeſty and greatneſs of God: when they conſider theſe things they are afraid. And though believers are freed from the prædominancy of ſlaviſh fear, and are indued with infuſions of true filial fear, yet they are often taken with this mixt fear, as in reference to their own weakneſs, ſo reſpecting the Majeſty of God, with whom they have to do. When I conſider I am afraid of him.

Obſerve, That the Majeſty and power of God duly conſidered, are terrible even to his own people.

Many men have ſlight thoughts of the great God, they tremble not, they fear not; what's the reaſon? they conſider not, they are careleſs, and therefore they are fearleſs, they are ignorant, and therefore they are confident. There are none ſo bold as they who are thus blind. Who is the Lord (ſaid hard-hearted Pharaoh) that I ſhould obey his voice, to let Iſrael go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael go. That's a ſad Confidence that proceeds from ignorance, and a ſad fearleſneſs that hath no ground but careleſneſs. I remember what the anſwer was of a very godly man upon his death-bed; who having much trembling upon his ſpirit at the apprehenſion of the greatneſs, Majeſty, and glory of God, it was ſaid to him by a godly friend that came to viſit him; Sir, you have known God, and been long acquainted with him, why are you thus full of fear and trembling? O, ſaith he, if I knew God more, I ſhould tremble more. If we were but more acquainted with, and did more conſider of the infinite greatneſs of God, and of our own diſtance from him as creatures, much more as ſinners, how ſhould we be ſwallowed up with Divine amazements; ſo that we muſt charge it upon the want of Conſideration, that ſo many have ſuch undue and unbecoming thoughts of God, as alſo that their thoughts fall ſo much below both their duty, and their ſins: if we did but conſider how ſinful we are, and how holy God is, we ſhould alwayes ſerve him with fear, and rejoyce with trembling; When I conſider I am afraid of him. Job was afraid of him when he conſidered him; and ſo was Aſaph (Pſal. 77.3.) In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord, my ſore ran in the night and ceaſed not, my ſoul refuſed to be comforted. I remembred God, and was troubled; I complained, and my ſpirit was overwhelmed. Such a remembring of God is not a bare act of the mind, in oppoſition to forgetfulneſs, as if Aſaph had ſaid, I remembred God; that is, I did not forget him, but I remembred God, that is, I fixed my heart upon him, I minded him fully, or ſet him fully before my mind: though the remembrance of God is the ſpring of Comfort to us, and that many wayes, yet an Aſaph, a holy man, the holieſt among many men, may be troubled when he remembers God, when he conſiders his glory, greatneſs, power, and Majeſty, and himſelf a poor worm. When the holy Prophet Iſaiah ſaw the Lord (in viſion) ſitting upon a throne high and lifted up, and ſaw the Seraphims covering their faces and their feet, and heard them crying one unto another, and ſaying, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hoſts, the whole earth is full of his glory. Then he ſaid, Wo is me for I am undone, becauſe I am a man of unclean lips, &c. What a concuſſion was there upon his ſpirit upon the meeting of theſe two viſions; Firſt, That of the holineſs of God; Secondly, That of his own uncleanneſs, (*Iſa.*6.1,2,3,4,5.) Moſes who had ſuch intimacy with and acceſs unto God, is yet deſcribed trembling at his giving the Law (*Heb.*12.21.) And ſo terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid, I am exceedingly afraid and tremble: Moſes knew that God was his friend, a God in Covenant with him, yet Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake; the ſight and voice of God is our Bleſſedneſs, yet there may be a troubleſome and a terrible both ſight and voice of God, even Moſes was afraid: and ſo was Habakkuk (*Chap.*3.16.) When I heard (that is, thy Speech, verſ. 2.) my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice, rottenneſs entred into my bones, and I trembled in my ſelf, &c. And at laſt wicked men (though now ſo unconſidering who God is) ſhall have ſuch Conſiderations of him as ſhall for ever drown and ſwallow them up in a deluge of fear; the thoughts of the preſence of God will be Eternal terrour to them, who now are unmoved with the thoughts of his preſence, or who have not God in all their thoughts. There is a preſence of God which ſhall be death to them, who have not lived in a due and awful conſideration of his preſence. Thus the Apoſtle deſcribes the puniſhment of wicked men (2 Theſ. 1.9.) They ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord. We may underſtand it two wayes.

Firſt, They ſhall be puniſhed by being put from the preſence of the Lord; That's the puniſhment of loſs, they ſhall be for ever excluded and baniſhed from his preſence: That which was their deſire here, ſhall be their miſery hereafter. They who care not for the preſence of God in this world, ſhall be everlaſtingly curſed with the want of it, in the world which is to come.

Secondly, I rather conceive the meaning of that Text to be this, there ſhall be a manifeſtation of the wrathful preſence of God to them, and that ſhall be their puniſhment; the preſence of the Lord is everlaſting life, and light, and joy to his own people; but the preſence of the Lord ſhall be terrible and dreadful, even everlaſting deſtruction to wicked men; they ſhall at laſt conſider it ſo much, that they ſhall fear to purpoſe. God will pour out ſuch a preſence upon them as they ſhall be equally unable to hide themſelves from or ſtand before, but muſt lie down and ſink under it into the bottomleſs gulf of deſpair for evermore. If the godly are ſometimes afraid, where ſhall the wicked appear when God appears. When I conſider (with Job) I am afraid of him.

Verſ. 16. For God maketh my heart ſoft, and the Almighty troubleth me.

This verſe is near in ſence with the former. Job herein further ſhewing both a reaſon why he was afraid of God, as alſo the effect which Gods dealing with him had upon his own heart, or how he was affected with it. For God maketh my heart ſoft.] The word rendred, to make ſoft, ſignifies the abating of the ſtrength of the heart.

But it may be enquired, what was this ſoft heart which God made him?

I anſwer, Firſt, Negatively, by a ſoft heart here we are not to underſtand a penitent heart, or a heart broken with godly ſorrow at the ſight, either of ſin acted, or wrath threatned (2 King. 22. 29.) The Lord ſaith by the Prophet to Joſiah, Becauſe thy heart was tender (ſoft or melted) and thou haſt humbled thy ſelf before the Lord, when thou heardeſt what I ſpake againſt this place, therefore, &c. The heart of fleſh promiſed and given in the new Covenant, is a relenting and repenting heart. (Ezek. 36.26.) I will take away the heart of ſtone, and give you an heart of fleſh; that is, I will make your heart ſoft, which before was hard. Job had ſuch a heart, a ſoft heart, in this notion, when he ſpake thus, but that's not the heart here meant; God had given him that ſoftneſs of heart before; for he is deſcribed (Chap. 1. 1.) A man that feared God; and a man that feareth God, is a man of a ſoft heart (Prov. 28.14.) Bleſſed is the man that feareth alwayes, but he that hardneth his heart ſhall fall into miſchief. Where the hard heart and the fear of God are oppoſed; For whereſoever the true fear of God is in the heart, that is a ſoft heart.

Secondly, By a ſoft heart, is not here meant the patient heart; that's a ſoft heart in Scripture, a heart which is willing to ſubmit to and bear the burden that God layes upon it: in this ſence God makes the heart ſoft, when, as he accuſtoms his to ſufferings, ſo he fits them to ſuffer. Man naturally is (like Ephraim, Jer. 31. 18.) As a Bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoke, both of active and paſſive obedience. Only God makes man ſubmit his ſtiff-neck and hard heart to a ſuffering condition, and to anſwer the call of his ſufferings. Pharaoh is ſaid to have a hard heart, becauſe he did not yield to what God called him to by Judgments, he had not a patient but an unquiet ſpirit under the plagues ſent upon him, nor did he obey what he was ſummoned to by the Lords voice in thoſe terrible plagues. Now, though I grant that an heart made ſoft in patience is an excellent frame of heart, yet we cannot underſtand it ſo here; for Job had a patient heart, yea he had abundance of patience before, as he fully diſcovered at the very beginning and breaking out of his troubles; he did not flinch at the Croſs, but did embrace it. The Apoſtle exhorts all Chriſtians to Remember the patience of Job. And we muſt apply that Scripture to Job before he came to this point. Therefore the ſoftneſs of heart intended in this text is ſomewhat beſides this.

Thirdly, Much leſs are we to underſtand by a ſoft heart, a fearful or a Cowardly heart; that's a ſoft heart indeed, but in a bad ſence. We have it ſo expreſſed (Deut.20.3.) Hear O Iſrael, you approach this day unto Battel againſt your Enemies, let not your hearts be faint, &c. The Hebrew is, let not your hearts be ſoft or tender: a ſoft heart is not for a ſword, nor for a battel: How ſhall they ſtand in dangers, who are fallen below them? A penitent heart, and a patient heart are proper in dangerous undertakings, but a cowardly heart is the greateſt diſadvantage in the world; therefore the Lord commanded this to be proclaimed to his people, Let not your hearts be tender when ye go forth againſt your Enemies, or as it is expreſt afterward, Fear not, neither tremble, neither be ye terrified becauſe of them. Job had not ſuch a ſoft heart, he was no coward when he complained before, that the terrours of the Almighty did encamp againſt him as a dreadful Army, nor while he ſaid here, God hath made my heart ſoft.

Fourthly, A ſoft heart, is an effeminate, delicate, wanton heart. There are too many who have ſuch ſoft hearts. Men that are fit for nothing but what is worſe then nothing, to wallow in the ſinful delicacies and delights of this preſent world. The Apoſtle uſeth a word (1 Cor. 6. 9.) which expreſſeth this fully. We render it effeminate, but both the Greek and the Latine is ſoft; that is, perſons wantonly and vainly given. And Moſes applies the very word of Job's text to this kind of ſoftneſs (Deut.28. [illegible] The tender (or ſoft) and delicate woman, that would not adventure to ſet the ſole of her foot upon the ground for delicateneſs and tenderneſs, (or ſoftneſs) her eye ſhall be evil towards, &c. This is not only a ſinful ſoftneſs of heart, but the worſt of ſinful ſoftneſſes. Job's heart was far from this ſoftneſs. As he was at that time a man of ſorrows, ſo he had not been at any time a man of pleaſure. But if Job's ſoft heart were none of theſe, what was it then?

μαλακοι. Molles.

I conceive the ſoft heart proper to this place is, a heart weakned and laid low through the burden of affliction. A heart ſo worn out and ſpent that it can hardly bear any more, God had ſoftned and even conſumed his heart with ſorrow and affliction. As he abhorred a hardneſs of heart to reſiſt the hand of God, ſo now he feared that his heart was not hard enough to bear it with that chearfulneſs and conſtancy of courage which he deſired. Hard things are firm, compact, and knit together; thoſe that are ſoft, are weak and unable to bear any weight. So that Job's ſoftneſs of heart was his weakneſs to bear; And he gives this as an account why he was afraid of the power of God in any new-ſuffering. O (ſaith he) God hath made my heart ſoft; that is, I begin to faint, I find my ſelf drooping, I have not that ſtrength of ſpirit (and though I am not a coward, yet) I have not that courage, that hardneſs, or hardineſs of ſpirit which I have had heretofore. He queried indeed (Chap. 6. 12.) Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones, or is my fleſh braſs? He had much ſtrength, but not the ſtrength of ſtones, nor was he hard as braſs. Now he ſaith plainly, my heart is made ſoft, it melteth like wax at the fire, I am ſo little like braſs or ſtones in ſtrength or hardneſs, that I am altogether like wax or water. I am ſo far from having a mind to ſtrive with, or riſe up againſt God, that I know not how to ſtand before him, if he (which he ſeems to intend) ſhould ſtill go on to afflict me. I am grown weak and unable to bear, yet my burden remains, and will probably be made yet more heavy. This interpretation carrieth a diſtinct ſence in it, and that which is moſt genuine to the ſcope of the place. Mr. Broughtons tranſlation of the latter clauſe of the verſe, ſuites this expoſition of the former with much clearneſs; For the Omnipotent hath ſoftned my heart, and the Almighty hath made me ſhrink. Whereas we ſay the Almighty troubleth me, he ſaith, The Almighty hath made me ſhrink: For ſo a man commonly doth who either fears or feels that which he is not well able to bear.

Hence Note, The heart of a godly man, even of the moſt godly, may be ſo weakned under long continued ſufferings, that he may find himſelf utterly unable to bear them any longer.

Wicked men labour to ſtrengthen and harden themſelves all they can, to bear in oppoſition to God, and Saints would ſtrenthen and harden themſelves all they can to bear in ſubmiſſion to God. Pharaoh hardned his heart to oppoſe God ſtriking him; he had ſtroak after ſtroak, and Judgement after Judgement, yet he would not yield; but at laſt God made his heart ſoft in one ſenſe, though he hardned it in another. God appeared at laſt too hard for Pharaoh, he could hold out no longer. And we find the Lord ſpeaking thus by Ezekiel to his people, who (it ſeems by the language which God uſeth concerning them) had, as it were, ſet themſelves with unholy reſolutions to ſtand, or rather ſtout it out with God, and bear the worſt that he could do unto them; But (ſaith the Lord, Ezek. 22.14.) Can thine heart endure? or can thine hands be ſtrong in the day that I ſhall deal with thee; When I deal with thee in wayes of Judgment, when I take thee in hand to puniſh and repay thee according to our works, can thine heart endure? no, it cannot endure, it ſhall not be able to endure. The Lord doth not mean it of an enduring with ſubmiſſion and patience; So it is the honour of Saints to endure what ever God layes upon them; but to endure with ſtoutneſs and reſiſtance: Art thou able to ſtand it out, or can thine hand be ſtrong? no, thy heart and hand will be ſoft and weak, thou wilt not be able to bear it when I come to deal with thee. It is ſaid of Chriſt by David his type (Pſal. 22.13.) When he was under thoſe terrible ſufferings for our ſins, that his heart was made ſoft (and if it were ſo with the green tree, what muſt it be with the dry?) I am poured out like water, and all my bones are out of joynt: my heart is like wax, it is melted in the midſt of my bowels. Thus the ſufferings of Chriſt our head (who was alſo the Captain of our ſalvation, and the mighty God) made his heart ſoft and melted him. His heart was not melted with ſorrow for his own ſin (for he was without ſin) but the ſorrow that was upon him for our ſins, melted his heart. Whoſe heart will not melt and grow ſoft, (that is, unable to bear it) when God layeth his hand heavy and long upon him? Therefore we read in the Prophet, how the Lord takes notice of this, and condeſcends to the weakneſs of man (Iſa. 57.16.) I will not contend for ever, neither will I be alwayes wrath. I will not go on to do, as I have done. Why? What's the reaſon of it? not but that God is able to continue his Contending, and to carry on his war whether with perſons or with Nations for ever; but he hath reſpect to the poor Creature; for (ſaith he) I will not do it, leſt the ſpirit ſhould fail before me, and the ſouls which I have made. How can ſouls fail? the ſoul is an immortal ſubſtance, and ſhall not fail for ever. The ſouls of the damned ſhall be under everlaſting Contendings, and never fail; they ſhall bear wrath for ever and not fail, yea their bodies ſhall not fail, but through the power of God (ſuſtaining them under his Juſtice) ſhall endure everlaſting torments. The meaning of that expreſſion in the Prophet, is the ſame with this in the text, Their heart will be made ſoft; as yet they have ſtrength, faith, and courage to bear theſe afflictions, but if I continue them longer, their ſpirit and ſtrength, their faith and patience will fail, and be ſo worn out that they will not be able to abide it. God would not contend for ever, leſt (as Job here complains) he ſhould make their hearts ſoft.

And the Almighty troubleth me.

That is, his preſence, or his diſpenſations trouble me. We ſee how much the ſpirit of Job was carried out in the thing; And he uſeth a word here that ſignifieth the power of God to comfort and refreſh, or God in his alſufficiency to comfort, yet (ſaith he) this Almighty troubleth me; that is, the thoughts or remembrance of him troubleth me. He hath caſt down and grieved my ſoul already, and I am much troubled with fearful apprehenſions of like ſeverities from him again. Theſe words, the Reader will eaſily perceive to be of the ſame mind and meaning with verſ. 15. of this Chapter, lately opened, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon them, but proceed to the laſt verſe.

Deus, in cujus potentia ſufficientiaq; divitiarū, ſolatium meum eſſe debebat, is me privavit omni ſolatio, & animam meam planè dejecit, deſerit me, terret me. Sanct.

Verſ. 17. Becauſe I was not cut off before the darkneſs, neither hath he Covered the darkneſs from my face.

Here Job gives another reaſon of his being thus troubled at the preſence of the Almighty. It is (ſaith he) becauſe I was not cut off before the darkneſs; or, becauſe I died not by thick darkneſs (ſo Mr. Broughton) we ſay, becauſe I was not cut off, he, becauſe I died not; both meet in the ſame meaning; for death is a cutting off, and death will cut off or mow down the ſtrong, yea the ſtrongeſt, as the ſythe doth either corn or graſs. Thus ſpake Hezekiah in his ſickneſs (Iſa. 38.10.) I ſaid in the cutting off of my dayes, that is, when I thought I lay a dying. Job was troubled becauſe he was not cut off.

Before the darkneſs, or, from the face of darkneſs.

Death it ſelf is darkneſs, and yet Job would fain have died before the darkneſs. There is a darkneſs of affliction and trouble ſpoken of often in this book and elſewhere, which is more bitter to man then death it ſelf. Some had rather be taken out of the world, then endure the troubles of it. This is the firſt part of the reaſon, I am troubled, why? becauſe I was not cut off before the darkneſs, or before this trouble came; As if he had ſaid, I ſhould have been glad, or it had been good for me, if death had prevented theſe troubles; this troubles me that I died not, that I went not to the grave before theſe troubles came upon me. Thus Job gives way again to his paſſion; he broke out much in this ſtrain or language at the third Chapter, where at large he openeth his wiſh for death, either that he had died before, or preſently after he was born into this world, that he might have been at reſt, and ſo out of the reach of thoſe evils and calamities that did encamp againſt or beſet him round about. The reader may conſult what hath been done upon that Chapter, of which this verſe is an Epitome, and there find the nature of this wiſh for death explained, as alſo what lively deſires Job had of death, or as this text ſpeaks, that, he had been cut off before the darkneſs. I ſhall here only take notice; That to ſome, the ſorrows of this life are much more bitter then death it ſelf; yea, that God himſelf hath ſometimes in a way of mercy and favour called ſome out of the world before he would let great troubles in. There was a promiſe made to Joſiah King of Judah, that, God being reſolved to bring trouble upon that people, yet he ſhould be cut off before the darkneſs. (2 King. 22.20.) Becauſe thy heart was tender, &c. Behold therefore I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou ſhalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, and thine eyes ſhall not ſee all the evil, which I will bring upon this place. And when Ahab had humbled himſelf before the Lord, even he went not without a reward for it, and his reward was this (1 King. 21.29.) I will not bring the evil in his dayes, He ſhall be cut off before the darkneſs. Jerome ſpeaking of the troubles that came upon the Church, doth as it were appland the death of Nepotian, upon that conſideration, Happy he that died before theſe troubles lived. It hath ſomewhat of mercy in it, to go out of the world before extraordinary affliction comes in; yet in theſe things we muſt take heed of being our own carvers: it is one thing to have a promiſe from God, that the cloud ſhall not break in our time; and another thing for us to wiſh and deſire to be out of the world before the cloud breaks: The former argueth the tenderneſs and care of God towards us, but the latter muſt needs argue either our unwillingneſs to ſuffer either from or for God; or our diſtruſt of his aſſiſtance and preſence with us to ſupport us in our ſufferings. If God will not cut us off by death before the darkneſs, we ſhould be willing to live in the darkeſt darkneſs of outward calamity that ever fell upon this world. Job adds a ſecond reaſon of his troubled ſpirit in the laſt words of this verſe and Chapter.

Fœlix Nepotianus qui hæc non videt. Hiere.

Neither hath he covered the darkneſs from my face.

I am troubled becauſe I have lived in troubleſome dayes, but though I have, yet God could have hidden me from thoſe troubles, or thoſe troubles from me; but as he hath let me live in the darkneſs of trouble, ſo he hath not at all covered the darkneſs of trouble from me. I do not only live in troubles, but I am alwayes looking troubles in the face. Mr. Broughton renders thus, Nor he yet hideth gloomineſs from my face; which he alſo paraphraſeth in theſe words; Becauſe I find neither death nor eaſe of ſickneſs, that I ſhould not feel theſe afflictions. So that as he complains becauſe he died not before the darkneſs came; ſo becauſe God did not hide the darkneſs from him when it came, but let him have ſuch ſad viſions of it. This ſtill imports that Job had not that fulneſs of ſubmiſſion to the diſpenſations of God, as duty called him to; and for this Elihu reproves him: yea God himſelf chid and rebuked him, becauſe he took upon him ſo often to give the rule, and did not ſit down more quietly under his appointment and portion for him. Though Job's patience was great, yet he had not all patience, or all of patience. And though, I doubt not, but his patience had a perfect work, yet he did not attain to the perfection of patience. This (according to our tranſlation) is the ſence and ſum of theſe words, concerning which many things have been ſpoken in the former part of the Book, whither I refer the Reader: yet before I paſs them quite out of my hands, I ſhall gather up ſome other rendrings of this verſe, and leave them to the Readers Judgment and conſideration.

Nam ubi tantum non exciſus ſum propter tenebras à facie mea ſo operit caligine. Coc.

Firſt, Thus, when I was only not cut off by darkneſs, he hath hid himſelf in darkneſs from my face. This tranſlation the Original may bear with ſome little ſupplement, which is uſual in like caſes, when there is no ſtrain upon the general ſcope of the place; and the meaning is clearly this, Whereas I am only not cut off by darkneſs, that is, whereas my troubles are ſuch as have only not extinguiſhed my life, when I am in this pitiful miſerable plight, He (that is, God) hath hid himſelf from me in darkneſs. So that here he ſpeaks of a twofold darkneſs or evil that was upon him: Firſt, Affliction upon his body; Secondly, Deſertion upon his ſpirit, and ſo the negative particle not, is rendred by ſome only not, it is only not death with me, yet the Lord is pleaſed to hide his face from me; whereas we ſay, He hath not covered the darkneſs from my face, this tranſlation ſaith, He hath covered his own face with darkneſs, or, covered himſelf with darkneſs from my face. Firſt, Thereby intimating that God doth often joyn ſpiritual troubles with a corporal, the hidings of his face with the troubles of our fleſh. Secondly, That outward troubles are then moſt grievous to us, when God hides or withdraws his preſence from us.

לא Non, μονον ϰ Tantum non, q.d. hoc effecit in me abſconſio ejus ut non quidē exſcindere, ſed excisioni proximus eſſem. Coc.

Another reading gives it as an admiration; I am exceedingly troubled becauſe I was not cut off by the preſent darkneſs, and that he hath turned away darkneſs from my face: As if Job had ſtood wondering that his life were thus prolonged, that his ſickneſs and ſorrows had not made an end of him; that ever he ſhould continue ſo long in ſuch a ſtorm as he had done, and who or what power it was that in thoſe his great preſſures, both of mind and body, did hinder or ſtay him from being covered with the ſhadows and darkneſs of death.

Quod non fuerim exciſus à præſentibus tenebris, & quod à facie mea averterit caliginem. Bez.

Calvin.

A third renders; Becauſe he hath not cut me off through darkneſs, but hid darkneſs from my face; and he gives the meaning of it thus, the reaſon why I am ſo much troubled and afflicted, is becauſe God hath not cut me off through darkneſs; that is, becauſe I have not had ſome ſecret or private affliction, but all the world hath taken notice of what hath been done to me. God hath not chaſtened me in the dark; theſe things have not been done to me in a corner. Job might ſpeak as the Apoſtle, I am made a ſpectacle to the world, to Angels and men, all beholding me in this pitiful condition. And this occaſions me much trouble of mind, becauſe, as I ſee plainly, that the hand of God is gone out againſt me, ſo all others ſee it too, and they make ſeveral Interpretations of it. Had I been loſt in the dark I ſhould have born it better, now I am made the common talk of the world, and how to anſwer their deſcants upon my condition, is more then a little trouble to me. This tranſlation hath a fair ſence as to the general truth; but the textual conſtruction (as they who are skilful in the Grammar of the Hebrew know) will not bear it. And therefore I ſhall ſtay in our own tranſlation, which is fair and clear as to the ſcope of the Chapter, ſhewing this good mans paſſion, breaking forth into ſome kind of quarrel with the diſpenſations of God, becauſe he was not carried out of the world before theſe troubles came in; or if he muſt needs ſtay, and be contemporary with them, becauſe he found no cover, no ſhelter from either the beholding or feeling of them.

Thus I have done with the firſt part of Jobs Anſwer to the third and laſt aſſault which Eliphaz made upon his Innocency. But as Eliphaz ſpake much againſt him, ſo he could not be ſatisfied to ſpeak but a little for himſelf; He had more to ſay, both for his own vindication, and the refutation of his opponent. What he ſaid, the twenty fourth Chapter will tell us, which comes next in order to be opened.

CHAP. XXIV. Verſ. 1.

Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not, ſee his dayes?

Ad propoſitam queſtionem rectè pergit Jobus, rurſum affirmans, deum cum in aſſertandis probis, tum in puniendis ſceleratis, non palam ſemper, ſed plerumq; occulta quadā ratione, notis ipſi uni temporibus agere. Bez.

THIS Chapter containeth the ſecond part of Job's anſwer to Eliphaz: the general ſcope whereof, is to pull up the foundation of his friends ſuſpition of him, and diſpute againſt him, ſhewing that many men do much evil in this life, who ſuffer none, and that many who are innocent, ſuffer much evil, and are not relieved: from both he concludeth, that the ſuffering of evil can be no concluding argument that any man is ſo; for then it muſt be ſo with all men, which moſt mens experience contradicteth.

So that here Job falls down-right upon the point in debate, affirming what he had often affirmed before, that God both in aſſerting the innocency of the righteous, and in puniſhing the ſins of the wicked, uſeth much variety; and that his proceedings with the ſons of men, are ſo far from being alwayes open and plain, that uſually they are very ſecret, concealed, and ſo much in the dark, that there is no print of his ſteps to be found, This ſeems to be the deſign and tendency of the whole Chapter; and the argument of it may be formed thus;

Ye, my friends have ſaid, that God puniſheth all evil doers in this life; ſeeing then he knoweth the length and continuance of their dayes in this world, why doth he yet ſuffer them to ſlip out of this world unpuniſhed? And if they are ſo frequently puniſhed in this world (as ye affirm) why do not they who know God ſee it, and take notice of it?

But ſo it is, that many wicked men ſlip out of the world unpuniſhed, and the godly who know him do not ſee judgment executed; therefore ſurely it is not the way of God preſently in this life to puniſh every offendor; nor can ye conclude that they who are afflicted are wicked, ſeeing many of his people are not only afflicted by himſelf, but lie under the rod of the wicked a long time unrevenged and undelivered.

In the whole Chapter we may obſerve theſe three parts,

Firſt, A queſtioning propoſition in the firſt verſe, Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not, ſee his dayes?

Seecondly, We have the confirmation of this propoſition; and that in two branches; Firſt, Of innocent perſons not relieved; Secondly, Of wicked perſons not puniſhed; Thirdly, He concludes his whole diſcourſe in the laſt verſe of the Chapter by a ſtronger affirmation of what he had ſaid before; And if it be not ſo now, who will make me a liar, and make my ſpeech nothing worth?

Again, More diſtinctly in this Chapter, we have the propoſition in the firſt verſe. Secondly, The confirmation of it, made by an enumeration, of many groſs ſins, which wicked men commit, and feel no ſmart, but paſs unpuniſht; and thoſe ſins are either, firſt, againſt man, or ſecondly, againſt God.

Againſt man, firſt, by removing of the Land-marks in the ſecond verſe; Secondly, violently taking away of cattel, in the third verſe. Thirdly, turning the poor out of houſe and home, in the fourth verſe; Fourthly, Lying in wait and watching their opportunities to rob and get their prey like wild beaſts, at the fifth verſe; Fifthly, reaping and carrying away other mens corn out of the fields by violence, at *verſ.*6. Sixthly, Uſing all manner of oppreſſion upon the poor, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, verſes.

Secondly, Job diſcovers their rebellion againſt God, and their ignorance of his wayes: for though both theſe be included in the former acts (whoſoever ſins againſt man, ſins againſt God too) yet there are ſins that are more peculiar and immediate againſt God. And of theſe he ſpeaks at verſ. 13. They rebel againſt the light; againſt the light of the knowledge of God ſhining with much evidence and clearneſs, both in his word and in his works; And then takes occaſion more particularly to deſcribe, Firſt, The murderer, and his dark wayes, verſ. 14. Secondly, The adulterer, and his dark wayes, verſ. 15, 16, 17.

Thirdly, Job ſheweth, that though the wicked do all this, and are not preſently puniſhed, yet that they are under a ſecret curſe, which ſhall ſurely overtake them (*ver.*18, 19, 20.)

Fourthly, Upon this, he again revives the mention of their ſin; Firſt, Againſt the poor, *verſ.*21. Secondly, Againſt the rich, verſ. 22. Together with their puniſhment, though late, yet at laſt, verſ. 23, 24.

Fifthly, He re-aſſerts all that he had ſaid, by challenging all men to diſprove him (if they could) in what he had ſaid, verſ. 25. So much of the ſtate and general ſcope of the whole Chapter.

Verſ. 1. Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him, not ſee his dayes?

Locus ſubdifficilis & ſalebroſus. Merc.

This (as a learned interpreter gives his opinion of it) is a hard Text, and there are various rendrings of it. I ſhall touch upon them, and then draw out that which may be ſutable for obſervation.

Firſt, The whole verſe may (as ſome conceive) be rather read thus, Why are not times hidden from the Almighty, ſeeing they that know him do not ſee his dayes? The meaning of which tranſlation is this, it might make a man that is not well inſtructed in the wayes and providences of God, to think that God takes no notice of the times that paſs, nor of the things done here below, ſeeing the beſt of his ſervants could never yet make it out, that he puniſheth ungodly men according to their deeds in this world. Surely then we may ſay, That times are hidden from God, for were it not ſo, godly men could not but ſee his dayes, his judgment-dayes upon the wicked, and things would not be in ſuch confuſion and diſorder as they are. So that Job either ſhews what men do ordinarily conclude from Gods indulgence and patience towards the wicked, and his ſeeming ſlackneſs and ſlowneſs in avenging the wrongs of his own people, even that as God is in heaven, ſo thick clouds are a covering to him there, and that he ſeeth not what is acted on the earth. As if either the Lords eye did not reach this inferiour world, or that he would not trouble himſelf about it. Surely times are hidden from the Almighty, Or

Secondly, that Job ſpeaks his own paſſions, and temptations about this point; As if he had ſaid, I am tempted to think that times are hidden from the Almighty, becauſe he doth not ſend preſent relief to his people, nor preſent wrath upon his enemies. Such temptations are diſcovered in other Scriptures, (*Pſal.*73.2.) My feet (ſaith David) had almoſt ſlipt when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked. When the wicked and unholy were not puniſhed preſently according to Juſtice, he was urged and tempted to think that God did not regard Juſtice, nor declare himſelf in his holineſs as he ought. And though the Prophet Jeremiah durſt not queſtion the righteouſneſs of God, yet he knew not (in this caſe) how to give an account of it, as hath been noted heretofore from his queſtionings (*Jer.*12.1,2.) Why doth the way of the wicked proſper? &c. And with this the following parts of the Chapter ſeem to carry a fair correſpondence, wherein he enumerates many groſs practices and impieties of wicked men, notwithſtanding which they paſs out of this world in worldly peace.

Quare non ſunt abſcondita? q.d. equiori animo ferrem ſi eſſent abſcondita. Aben.Ezr.

Thirdly, One of the ancient Rabbins reads the word as a wiſh, or a deſire, Why are not times hidden from the Almighty? As if he had ſaid, I could wiſh they were hidden from the Almighty, and I could bear it better if God did take no notice of times, then that taking notice of them, he ſhould not ſet them in order, and redreſs what is amiſs; but I paſs that.

Ab omnipotente non ſunt abſcondita tempora. Vulg. Latini videntes interrogationem blaſphemam opinionem continere; quaſi aut abſcondita eſſe dicat aut optet, i. e. dominum tempora & quæ hic fiunt: non curare aut non videre, ſine interrogatione verterunt. Merc.

Fourthly, The Latine tranſlation is poſitive, and direct; Times are not hidden from the Almighty, yet they that know him are ignorant of his dayes; and the reaſon why they leave out the interrogation is given thus; becauſe they thought there was a kind of impiety, yea blaſphemy in it, to ſay or querie, Why are not times hidden from the Almighty? As if Job muſt in ſaying ſo either affirm that times were indeed hidden from the Almighty, or that he wiſhed they were. Therefore to avoid that inconveniency they turn it into a direct negative propoſition, Times are not hidden from the Almighty. And many of the Jewiſh Writers ſtumbling at the ſame ſtone, have judged Job as denying the providence of God, or his care of times and ſeaſons here below; but (upon divers occaſions) Job hath been vindicated concerning this point, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

A Fifth tranſlation gives it thus, If times are not hid by the Almighty, how comes it to paſs that they that know him do not ſee his dayes? as if he had ſaid, were it not for this, or were it not thus, that God doth hide times, or that times are hidden by God, that is, that Gods providences are carried in ſecret, and run a great while (as ſome rivers do) as it were under-ground, it could not be, but that they that know him, that is, wiſe and holy men (as we ſhall ſee afterward) ſhould ſee the effects and iſſues of thoſe judgments. The judgments of God (ſaith Job) are delayed in their execution, or executed in ſo ſecret a way, that they are moſtly and to the moſt of men undiſcerned. Wherein he fully oppoſeth what Eliphaz ſaid (*Chap.*20.16.) They are cut down out of time, that is, they are preſently cut down: no, ſayes Job, God hideth their times, that is, he puts ſtops and delayes upon the times of his revenge; or as he ſpeaks (*Chap.*21.19.) He layeth up wrath for his children, but themſelves are not preſently cut down.

מרוע Cur quare: Cur à Shaddai non occultata ſunt tempora?

Sixthly, Thus, Why are not, or why ſhould not times be hidden by the Almighty? ſo Mr. Broughton. As if he had ſaid, What reaſon can be given of this, why times are not hidden by the Almighty? or why ſhould it not be thought right, and juſt, that times ſhould be hidden by the Almighty? who can queſtion God if he will hide times and judgments, or who ſhall ſay, it is unequal? The Hebrew particle (Min) ſignifies as well by as from, we ſay, why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, they ſay, why ſhould not times be hidden by the Almighty? This rendring bears a clear and a profitable ſence, and therefore I ſhall give this obſervation from it.

God doth hide times from men.

The providences of God and their ſeaſons are not carried plain to every mans eye; and why ſhould not times be thus hidden by the Almighty? God doth not hide that time from us wherein we ought to do our work (he ſheweth us plainly not only what we ought to do, but when we ought to do it; to every work there is an appointed time, and the preſent time, is our time for moſt works, yea for all thoſe works which have a proper tendency to eternity) but though God doth not hide the times from us wherein we ſhould do our work, yet he doth often hide the time from us wherein he will do his own work, and why ſhould he not? he hides the time wherein he will puniſh the wicked, and break the power of his enemies, and he hides the time wherein he will revive his own people, and deliver the afflicted. There are ſome times which God keepeth, and will keep in his own power; as Chriſt told the Diſciples (Acts 1.6,7.) when they asked him, Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the Kingdom unto Iſrael? It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons which God hath put in his own power. That is, which he hath not put forth or diſcovered to the ſons of men. All times are in Gods power, but thoſe which he reſerves from men, and keeps under lock and key, theſe he hath more eſpecially put in his power. God will not let thoſe times appear to men, wherein himſelf is purpoſed to appear. The time of thoſe works of God are wrapt up in greateſt darkneſs when they ſhall be done, which being done ſhine forth with greateſt light; and God will have it ſo,

Firſt, To reprove and ſtop the curioſity of man. There is nothing more natural to man then a deſire to know both what ſhall be hereafter, and when that hereafter ſhall be: we are very negligent and careleſs in ſeeking out the ſeaſon of that which we our ſelves ſhould do, but over-careful and curious in ſeeking out the ſeaſon of what God will do. Man is given to vain curioſity, and he is in nothing more vainly curious, then in an itch to know the times which God hath hidden from him. Moſt men are great queſtioniſts, and their queſtions moſtly are about times, and ſeaſons, when ſhall this, and that be? The diſciples of Chriſt diſcovered this ſpirit more then once. When Chriſt had told his Diſciples that of thoſe goodly buildings to which they admiringly pointed him, There ſhould not be one ſtone left upon another, that ſhould not be caſt down (Mat. 24.2.) They a while after came unto him privately, ſaying, tell us, when ſhall theſe things be, and what ſhall be the ſign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? It did not ſatisfie them that Chriſt had told them ſuch ſhould be, unleſs he alſo tell them the time and ſeaſon when they ſhould be. The Apoſtle found this humour ſtirring much in the Church of the Theſſalonians, for having ſpoken of the reſurrection of the body, and that then the Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from heaven with a ſhout, with the voice of the Arch-Angel, and with the trump of God (1 *Theſ.*4.15,16.) He, to prevent their inquiſitiveneſs about the time when this ſhould be, begins the fifth Chapter thus; But of the times and ſeaſons brethren ye have no need that I write unto you. Which implies, that either they had intimated ſuch a query to him, deſiring to be acquainted with the time and ſeaſon of thoſe things, or that he foreſaw they would be enquiring and making it their next queſtion, when ſhall theſe things be? when ſhall the deceaſed Saints be raiſed, and the living caught up, when ſhall Chriſt deſcend from heaven with a ſhout? &c. Some have made it their ſtudy to unvail the times which God hath hid, and to uncover his ſecrets. And it is no part either of the honour or ornament of theſe times, that Aſtrologers and Mathematicians have been ſo bold in theſe ſtudies. As if the ſtars of heaven were either betruſted with the ſecrets of the God of heaven, or being ſo would be unfaithful Secretaries, bewraying his ſecrets, and putting thoſe times and ſeaſons into the power of man which God hath put into his own power. Ancient hyſtories tells us that the Princes of the world have been very greedy after this forbidden, or at leaſt unrevealed knowledge. Being more deſirous to know what ſhould come to paſs in after-times, then diligent in the duties of the preſent time; Whereas indeed, which is

Homo eſt animal curioſum.

Mathematicorum & genethliacorū viſana temeritas.

A ſecond reaſon why it is ſo, God therefore hides the iſſues and events of future times, that we might be kept to preſent duties, to the work and buſineſs of the day. He conceals from man the preciſe day of his death, that he might every day be preparing to die. If men had all times in their hands, they would quickly lay the greateſt and beſt part of their work out of their hands.

Thirdly, God hideth times to try the faith of his own people, whether they can depend upon him in the dark; whether when they know not when the time ſhall be, or what a day may bring forth, they can yet freely truſt him for all their dayes. He that lives by faith at all times, troubles not himſelf about what ſhall be next in time, nor what the next times may be.

Fourthly, God hideth times, that we may be guided by rules, not by events; That we may ſteer our courſe through this world according to his divine appointments, not according to humane ſucceſſes. Upon all theſe and many more accounts, why ſhould not times be hidden by the Almighty?

But I ſhall proceed with our reading, to open that, and give ſome notes from it.

Why ſeeing times, &c. As if Job had ſaid, ſeeing the Lord knoweth all times, ſeeing times are not hidden from him, what is the reaſon why thoſe who know him, and are neareſt to him, do not know times alſo? or thus, God knoweth times, they are not hidden from him, why do not they know times that know him?

We are not to take time here nakedly or naturally as it notes dayes, moneths, and years, meaſured out by the motion of the Sun, Moon, and Stars; but time is to be conſidered providentially as cloathed with all the varieties of action and event, which are imaginable, as incident to the affairs of mankind in this life.

Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty.

When Job ſaith, Seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, his meaning is, that times are clearly and fully known to the Almighty.

The whole verſe taken together ſeems to be a denial of what is in it ſelf very probable; for ſeeing God knoweth times, it is moſt probable that they who know him ſhould know times too: for to whom ſhould God communicate his ſecrets, but to thoſe who are near to him, to thoſe that are his? As if he had ſaid, Give me a reaſon, if you can, why God, to whom all things and times are known from eternity, ſhould not make known theſe times to thoſe that know him? And ſo the argument may be formed in this manner.

Poteſt eſſe negata connexio cauſæ probabilis cum effecto. Coc.

Such as know God, ſhould know his dayes, if any know them.
But they that know God, do not know his dayes; therefore God keeps his dayes cloſe to himſelf: ſo that whereas Eliphaz ſuppoſed Job as doubting the providence of God (Chap. 22. *verſ.*12,13,14.) and asks the queſtion, *verſ.*15. Haſt thou marked the old way, which wicked men have trodden? Job anſwers here, I deny not the providence of God, but I deny that all the wayes of Gods dealing with wicked men, are obvious to the eye of Godly men; and ſhew me reaſon, if you can, ſeeing God knoweth all times, why the way of his judgments are ſo little viſible to them which know him.

But who are they that are deſcribed by this circumlocution, They (or the men) that know God? We may take them in a twofold notion.

Firſt, More generally for all godly men, for all who are truly ſuch know God.

Secondly, More ſpecially for thoſe godly men who know God more then others: there are ſome who have a peculiar knowledge of him, and daily intimacy with him, who live as it were in his boſome, and ſee what is in his breaſt, comparatively to others.

And further (becauſe words of knowledge comprehend the affections in Scripture) by thoſe that know him much, we are to underſtand thoſe that love him much, that delight in him much, that fear him much, and obey him much. Now though we may expound this of truly godly men at large, yet the latter ſort are chiefly meant: why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do not they that know him, godly men, yea his favourites, who know moſt of his mind, who as they are after his heart, ſo in his heart eminently, why do not they who know him thus,

See his dayes?] Whoſe dayes, and what dayes doth Job here intend? The former part of the verſe anſwers the firſt queſtion, They are the dayes of God. And to the ſecond queſtion I anſwer, The dayes of God are thoſe dayes wherein he worketh, or brings forth ſome great work, whether it be a work of Judgment, or a work of mercy. For as Times in the former part of the verſe, ſo dayes here include the things done in thoſe dayes, and hence Mr. Broughton renders, wayes, not dayes. None (ſaith he) that know him ſee his wayes. Whenſoever God doth ſomewhat among men, which declares him in an eminent manner to be God, that in Scripture is called the Day of God. Thus the Prophet ſpeaks (*Iſa.*2.12.) The day of the Lord of Hoſts ſhall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he ſhall be brought low. And upon all the Cedars of Lebanon that are high and lifted up, &c. Thus the day of the Lord is the day of his judgment among men. I paſs not for mans day, or for the judgment of man, ſaith Paul (1 Cor. 4.3. And when he ſaith, 1 Cor. 3.13.) The day ſhall diſcover it, He means a day of tryal will diſcover every mans work, whether it be ſilver, gold, hay, wood, or ſtubble. The day of diſcovery, will be a glorious glorious day of God. The Civilians have an expreſſion which reacheth this notion of a day; they ſay of a man that hath had judgment in the higheſt Court, from whence there is no appeal, He hath paſſed his laſt day; that is, his higheſt and greateſt trial, becauſe then there is no more meddling with him, or bringing the Suit about again. Such are the dayes of God, of which Job here ſpeaketh.

Summum obiiſſe diem dicunt Juriſconſulti. vid. Bold.

Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not ſee his dayes?

From the former part of the verſe, Note,

Firſt, That times are known, perfectly known to God.

Yea not only are times perfectly known to God, but firmly fixed and moſt wiſely diſpoſed of by him; men may know that which they have no power to diſpoſe of; but the knowledge of God and his power run parallel through all times and things. So that as when the Text ſaith, Times are not hidden from the Almighty, it notes that they are fully known to him, ſo alſo that that they are controuleably diſpoſed and ordered by him. And as times are known to God, ſo he makes them known when and to whom he pleaſeth. When Joſeph had revealed to Pharoah both the matter and the time concerned in his dreams, then (ſaith Moſes, Gen. 41. 45.) Pharoah called Joſeph's name Zapnath paaneah, which ſay ſome ſignifies in the Egyptian Language, The Saviour of the world: Which name, ſay they, Pharoah might give him, becauſe by his adviſe in laying up ſtores of corn in the years of plenty, ſuch a world of men, or ſo great a part of the world, was ſaved from periſhing by famine in the years of ſcarcity. But, ſay others, deriving the word from an Hebrew root, it ſignifies a revealer of ſecrets. Which title of honour Joſeph well deſerved, and was moſt proper to him, ſeeing he had revealed that great ſecret unto Pharoah, both that there ſhould be a famine, as alſo the time and ſeaſon of it. But where had Joſeph this ſecret? Was it from any Aſtrological skill of his own? He tells us plainly whence it was at verſ. 15, 16. of the ſame Chapter; for when Pharoah had ſaid to Joſeph, I have heard ſay of thee that thou canſt underſtand a dream to interpret it; he preſently anſwers, firſt, Negatively, It is not in me; and then Affirmatively, God ſhall give Pharoah an anſwer of peace. See the like in that moſt remarkable paſſage (Dan. 2. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21.) From all which we learn, that God knoweth times and changeth times, that is, makes great changes in times according to the counſel of his own will.

Firſt, If we take time, for the ſucceſſion of dayes, weeks, months, years, and ages, thus the Lord knoweth times. The number of the dayes of man, the preciſe number of the years and ages wherein any worldly ſtate or power ſhall continue, are not hidden from him.

Secondly, Times are not hidden from God, as times are taken for the ſeaſons and opportunities of action. The Lord knows what time will be as a wheele or as a ſocket fitted for the carrying on or eſtabliſhing of every work. We are often troubled at this, and miſs our ſeaſon; but God knoweth every ſeaſon, he knoweth the times, and therefore can time every work exactly. And the Hebrew word here uſed, properly ſignifies a fit or a convenient time, implying that time, in that notion, is not hidden from God (Iſa. 50. 4.) God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I might ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary. Which ſome tranſlate thus, That I might know the appointed time to the afflicted. An afflicted ſoul muſt be watched, and a ſeaſon taken; theſe times are not hidden from the Almighty, he knoweth the opportunity, and therefore can direct him that ſpeaks to a wearyed ſoul, as to ſpeak proper and taking matter, ſo to ſpeak it in a proper and taking time, when it ſhall be as welcom to the ſoul as rain to the dry and thirſty ground. David ſaith to the Lord (Pſal. 119. 23.) It is time Lord for thee to work for they have made void thy Law; that is, now is thy ſeaſon, and opportunity for thee to work, if ever thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf do it now. And when David confeſſed (Pſal. 31. 15.) My times are in thy hand. He means that the ſeaſons of his comforts, and of his ſorrows, all the turnings and changes of his life from one condition to another, were caſt and ordered by the power and wiſdom of God. Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty,

Do they that know him, not ſee his dayes?

Thus Job deſcribes the perſons that ſee not the dayes of God, they are ſuch as know him. Which character, as was ſhewed before, belongs to every godly man, though it be more peculiar to ſome.

Firſt, Hence note, Every godly man knoweth God.

And none but the godly know him indeed; many ungodly men profeſs they know God, and they may know him notionally, but no ungodly man knoweth him truly, experimentally, or practically. Many ungodly men have a form of knowledge, and of the truth in the Law (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Jews, Rom. 2. 20.) but no ungodly man feeleth the power of knowledge, and of the truth in the Law. And therefore the wicked are ſpoken of in Scripture, as not knowing God (Jer. 10. 25.) Pour out thy fury upon the Heathen that know thee not. And when the Prophet deſcribes the wickedneſs of the Jewiſh State, he ſaith (Hoſ. 4. 1.) There is no knowledge of God in the Land. Which the Chaldee Paraphraſt renders thus, Neither are there any who walk in the fear of God in the Land; where there is no knowledge of God, there is no fear of God. We neither love nor fear him of whom we have no knowledge, nor can we believe in or truſt him, whom we know not (Pſal. 9. 10.) They that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee; that is, the truly godly will truſt in thee, for they know thy name; but they that know thee not, how can they truſt upon thee? And therefore the Prophet calls us to boaſt in the knowledge of God (Jer. 9. 23.) Thus ſaith the Lord, let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he underſtandeth, and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exerciſeth loving kindneſs, judgment, and righteouſneſs in the earth; for in theſe things I delight, ſaith the Lord. There is nothing in this world worth the boaſting in, but the holy knowledge of a holy God, or ſuch a knowledge of God, the fruit whereof is a godly life here, and the end whereof is an eternal life hereafter, Joh. 17. 3. This is eternal life, that they may know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent. This knowledge of God doth not float in the brain, but ſinks into the heart, and is rooted in the affections. Thus the Apoſtle John argues (1 Epiſt. Chap. 2. v. 3, 4, 5, 6.) Hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his Commandments; he that ſaith he knows him, and keepeth not his Commandment is a liar, and the truth is not in him; as if he had ſaid, the true knowledge of God is an obediential knowledge; ſo that if any man ſaith he knoweth God, while his life is not ſuitable to what he knoweth, this mans profeſſion is vain, and himſelf is a lyar; Whoſoever keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected; that is, he loveth God with a perfect or ſincere love, and the love of God is perfected towards him. The ſcope of his whole diſcourſe there is, to ſhew, that the true knowledge of God is the keeping of the Word of God. Many are ſo ignorant of God, that they know not the Word which they ſhould keep; and all they who knowing the Word keep it not, will at laſt be numbred among the ignorant, or among thoſe that knew not God: But their condition will be worſe, and their puniſhment greater then theirs who never knew God according to the teachings of his Word. Their eſtate will be bad enough, who periſh for want of the knowledge of God; then, what will their end be, who periſh in the neglect or abuſe of plentiful knowledge!

Pietas eſt cognitio ſcientiaq; Dei. Triſmeg.

From the ſecond notion of the words, they that know him, as they intimate a ſort of godly men, who have nearer acquaintance with, and freer acceſs to God then others,

Obſerve, That as all godly men know God, which the wicked do not; ſo ſome godly men have ſuch a knowledge of God as many who are godly have not.

Though the knowledge of all godly men be of the ſame nature and kind, yet not of the ſame degree and height. We read of ſome who in old time were called Seers (1 Sam. 9. 9.) as if they only had been endued with ſight, and all others were blind in the things of God. They were the only Seers, yea they were fore-ſeers, becauſe God did often reveal himſelf, and declare to them what he was about to do in dreams and viſions. Now as in thoſe times there were ſome men called Seers, ſo in theſe times ſome may be called Knowers, as if none knew any thing of God comparatively to them, or as if other godly men were ignorant and underſtood nothing of him. When God (1 Sam. 3.) appeared to Samuel in a viſion, and revealed the doom of Eli's houſe to him; the Text ſaith, at verſ. 7. Now Samuel did not know the Lord; ſurely Samuel did know the Lord as other godly did in thoſe times, though he were but young; yea it is ſaid, The child Samuel miniſtred before the Lord, and did not he know the Lord? No doubt he did. The meaning therefore is, Samuel did not yet know the Lord by any ſpecial intimacy with him, or particular revelation from him, as afterward he did; he became a knower of God at laſt, though then he did not know God, in this peculiar ſence. But God having revealed to him the ſecret what he would do to Eli's houſe, then he knew God, he knew him as a favourite, that is truſted with ſecrets. So David ſpeaks (Pſal. 25. 14.) The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him. There is a ſecret in the plaineſt truths and doctrines of godlineſs, both in Law and Goſpel; and many know the doctrine, who know not the ſecret; any common profeſſor may know the doctrine, but the ſincere only know the ſecret, that is, the power and efficacy, the ſweetneſs or comfort of the doctrine. There is alſo a ſecret of God with his in bleſſing and proſpering them in the world; of which Job ſpeaks (Chap. 29. 4.) as there is alſo a ſecret and imperceptible curſe, which the Prophet calls the Lords blowing upon what men have in their poſſeſſion, or for their uſe (Hag. 1. 9.) But beſides theſe there is a ſecret of favour, which is the ſealing of the Spirit, the gift of the hidden Manna, and of the white ſtone, with a new name in it, which no man knoweth ſaving he that receiveth it (Rev. 2. 17.) This ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and there is yet another ſecret of his with them, even the ſecret of his purpoſe and intendment concerning his own providential workings. Which while many or all ſee, yet they know not the meaning of them; I mean it not only of the wicked and carnal, but even of many who are holy and ſpiritual in the main. The ſecrets of providence are known only to ſome choice ones, to ſome of an excellent ſpirit and high attainments, to ſome Abrahams, &c. intimate friends, who are to God as his own ſoul. There is a ſecret of the Lord, which is with all them that fear him, yet ſome of his ſecrets are not with many of them who fear him. What Job ſpake in Chap. 12. of this Book, verſ. 2. reproving the pride of his friends, Ye are the men, and wiſdom ſhall dye with you; you (I trow) have ingroſſed all wiſdom, and others muſt borrow of you; the ſame we may ſpeak ſoberly and approvingly of ſome humble godly men, they have the knowledge of God, and it is but little that others have, though they have a ſaving knowledge. Some conceive the Prophet upbraiding the Jews (Iſa. 58. 2.) as if they affected to be looked upon, not only as ſuch as know God, but as ſuch as know him intimately, and were his boſom friends. They ſeek me dayly and delight to know my wayes, as a Nation that did righteouſneſs, and forſook not the Ordinance of their God; they ask of me the Ordinances of Juſtice, they take delight in approaching unto God. They who do indeed, as theſe Jews ſeemed to do, may be numbred among thoſe of the higheſt form that know God. Why do they that know him, not ſee his dayes.

Here Job hath found out ſomewhat knowable, which they who know God, do not alwayes know; and that is, as hath been ſhewed, the ſeaſon of his judgments.

> Hence note, Firſt, The judgments of God are often either deferred, carried ſo cloſely, and ſecretly, that the wiſeſt and holieſt men cannot alwayes diſcern or ſee them.

The judgments of God are often deferred in this life, and they are very often concealed, though preſently executed. That is not alwayes true which Eliphaz aſſerted (Chap. 22. 19) The righteous ſee it and are glad, the innocent laugh them to ſcorn. The righteous ſometimes ſee the judgments of God upon wicked men, and his care watching over themſelves, but they do not alwayes ſee either; for as a wicked man may do evil an hundred times, that is, very often, and go unpuniſhed, as is intimated (Eccleſ. 8. 12.) So a wicked man may be puniſhed an hundred times, and yet not one of his puniſhments ſeen. Some judgments of God are great and ſore, which yet fall not under the obſervation of the beſt, of the wiſeſt, of the holieſt in the world; They that know him, do not ſee his dayes. God (for terror and warning to others) doth judgment upon ſome openly (Deut. 7. 9, 10.) Know therefore the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, who keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him, and keep his commandments, to a thouſand generations; and repayeth them that hate him, to their face, to deſtroy them; He will not be ſlack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face. Here are two things in this Text concerning the judgments of God; that they ſhall come, firſt, ſuddenly; ſecondly, openly; they ſhall come ſuddenly, God will not be ſlack; they ſhall come openly, God will repay them to their face; as they ſinned openly, ſo they ſhall be puniſhed openly. Thus God repayed the Sodomites, he payed them to their face; ſo he repayed Pharoah, and ſo the rebelling Jews; and he was not ſlack (for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) while the meat was in their mouth, the wrath of God fell upon them. Thus 'tis ſometimes, yet judgments are often deferred and hidden. What the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 9. 22.) is applicable here. God willing to ſhew his wrath, and make his power known, indured with much long ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction. There are veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, thrown to Hell, not only to a temporal, but to an eternal deſtruction; yet God did endure them with much long-ſuffering; that is, he did not preſently pour out wrath upon them, he was ſo far from caſting them preſently to Hell, that he did not afflict them with any trouble in this life, but indured them with much long-ſuffering, and patience. David was much aſtoniſhed with this conſideration (Pſal. 36. 6.) Thy righteouſneſs is like the great mountains, thy judgments are a great deep. Take both together, Thy righteouſneſs is like the great mountains, the mountains of God; that is, thy righteouſneſs indures and remains inviolable. But though it be ſo, yet the execution and actings of thy righteouſneſs are not alwayes diſcernable, for thy judgments are a great deep; that is, when God doth execute, and put forth his righteouſneſs, few ſee it, his judgments are a great deep, many deeps, who can go to the depth of them? How unſearchable are thy judgments? ſaith the Apoſtle (Rom. 11. 33.) they are ſuch and ſo deep that none can reach the bottom of them; and therefore no wonder if they are ſometimes hidden from thoſe that know God.

Secondly, Whereas Job ſaith, Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him, not ſee his dayes?

> We may note, That, if any thing which God doth in this world be ſeen by any, godly men are in the greateſt likelyhood to ſee it.

And that upon a twofold ground; firſt, becauſe they have the beſt eyes, and ſenſes moſt exerciſed to diſcern what God is doing. And as this is, becauſe they have the beſt internal light, and pureſt principles to make this diſcovery with; ſo in the ſecond place, becauſe they ſtand faireſt in the eye of God, to have his providences manifeſted and expounded to them. For as God by the Spirit expounds his Word, ſo his Works to his choiceſt ſervants. Shall I hide from Abraham (ſaid God, Gen. 18. 17.) that thing which I do? And ſo the Lord ſaith to the ſpiritual children of Abraham unto this day, ſhall I hide from them either what I am about to do, or the meaning and ſcope of what I have done? If any in the world ſee the dayes of God, Saints ſhall. So that we may conclude, if they ſee them not, that either they are not yet come, or that God purpoſely concealed their coming. Both or either of which may be the mind of Job in this place.

Laſtly, Conſider the Text as a queſtion, Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not ſee his dayes? What is the reaſon of this? Job here anſwers Eliphaz, who thought that the judgments of God were ever open, and obvious to all beholders; but as it is not ſo, ſo what is the reaſon of this? Why is it not ſo? I have heretofore given an account of theſe whyes and wherefores of theſe queſtions about the diſpenſations of God. Yet here I anſwer further, God is pleaſed to cover or defer his Judgment dayes, Firſt, Becauſe it is his pleaſure to do ſo, that's anſwer enough for man, it is his pleaſure. Times are not hidden from God, but muſt he needs make us acquainted with all times, or ſhew us the way of his judgments preſently; no, it is his pleaſure to do otherwiſe, and it is his priviledge to diſpoſe of times, ſeaſons, actions, and judgments as he pleaſeth; who may ſay to him, what doſt thou? Or why doſt thou ſo? He is ſupreme, and ſoveraign; if he will have it ſo, why ſhould any one oppoſe it, or riſe up againſt it?

Secondly, If it be demanded, Why are not the wicked preſently puniſhed, ſeeing God knoweth times, and ſeaſons, and how all things paſs among the ſons of men? I anſwer, God will leave wicked men more inexcuſable. The more patience is exerciſed towards them, the more long-ſuffering God is to them, the more evident will the juſtice of God be in their ſufferings, and they will have the leſs, or rather nothing at all to plead for themſelves. The leaſt ſin committed by man may ſtop his mouth, how much ſoever he is puniſhed by God; how much more may their mouths be ſtopped, who continued to ſin greatly, while God continued to ſpare them long in their ſin?

Thirdly, The day of the wicked mans ſuffering comes not ſuddainly, that the patience of the Saints may be tried, and exerciſed. There are three things which chiefly exerciſe the patience of the Saints; Firſt, The greatneſs of their own troubles: Secondly, The ſlowneſs of their deliverance out of trouble: Thirdly, The long proſperity of wicked men, or the long deferring of their puniſhment. Theſe delayes and ſtops in the vindicative adminiſtrations of God towards evil men, give the graces of his ſervants preſent work; and God often forbears purpoſely to put forth his power, that Saints may put forth their patience; or that it may be ſaid of them as in the book of the Revelations, Here is the patience of the Saints, in this the patience of the Saints is viſible. Faith and patience can never have ſo fit an opportunity to be ſeen, as when the Juſtice of God in avenging them, and in puniſhing the wicked, is leaſt ſeen. Yea therefore it is that they do not ſee thoſe his dayes with an eye of ſenſe, that they might ſee them with an eye of faith. While the Prophet ſaith (Hab. 2. 4.) The juſt ſhall live by his faith; he ſpeaks in reference to the deferring and delaying of judgments upon the enemies of the Church; as appears fully in Chap. 1. verſ. 12, 13. O Lord, thou haſt ordained them (namely, the Chaldean Empire) for Judgment (that is, to puniſh and afflict thy Church, the Jewiſh Nation) and O mighty God, thou haſt eſtabliſhed them for correction; as if he had ſaid, Thou O Lord, didſt not intend the ruine and deſtruction of thy people, by arming and ſending this bitter and haſty Nation againſt them, but only their amendment and repentance: yea thou haſt no pleaſure at all in theſe Chaldeans, by whom thou haſt poured out thy diſpleaſure upon thine own people. For, as it follows, Thou art of purer eyes then to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquity, to approve of it, or to be pleaſed with it; and ſeeing thou canſt not, wherefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly, and holdeſt thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man, that is more righteous then he? That is, why doſt not thou, O Lord, take vengeance ſpeedily upon theſe evil and treacherous ones? The Prophet having propoſed and urged this queſtion to the Lord, what doth he next? You may ſee at Chap. 2. verſ. 1. I will ſtand upon the watch, and ſet me upon the Tower, and I will watch to ſee what he will ſay unto me, and what I ſhall anſwer when I am reproved; or (as the Hebrew hath it) argued with, by carnal men, or the turbulent paſſions of my own ſpirit? The Lord giveth him his anſwer at large (verſ. 2, 3.) which is ſummed up (verſ. 4.) in this brief direction or aſſertion, But the juſt ſhall live by his faith; as if he had ſaid, proud men will be querying, yea quarrelling, when they ſee my providences croſs my promiſes, or my Works carrying a preſent face of unſutableneſs to my Word; when things go thus, they are preſently offended and nonplus'd, they know not what to make of it, unleſs it be to make me a lyar, as ſpeaking, what I meant not to do; or impotent, as ſpeaking more then I had ability to do: but, my people know how to ſatisfie theſe doubts with a ſaving to my honour; The juſt ſhall live by his faith. And they who live by faith will not have uncomely thoughts of me, whatſoever it is that appears to their ſight: or though that which they hoped would appear be ſtill kept out of their ſight. Though, they that know him ſee not his dayes, with an eye of ſenſe; yet they ſee them by an eye of faith, and by that faith they live.

So then the reaſon why they who know God, or the godly, ſee not his dayes, is not becauſe God is not able to bring a day of vengeance upon wicked men; it is not becauſe he bears any good will to them, but to exerciſe the faith and patience of his people. That's the ſcope of this firſt verſe, which layeth down the propoſition by way of queſtion; times are not unknown to God, yet they that know him do not ſee his dayes, his judgment dayes, as Eliphaz had before aſſerted. In the next part of the Chapter, Job goes on to prove by an enumeration of particulars, that many ſorts of wicked men go on in all ſorts of ſin, who yet feel not the day of God upon them.

VERS. 2, 3, 4.

Some remove the Land-marks, they violently take away the flocks, and feed thereof.

They drive away the Aſs of the fatherleſs, they take the widdows Ox for a pledge.

They turn the needy out of the way, the poor of the earth hide themſelves together.

IN the firſt verſe of this Chapter, it was ſhewed that they who know God, that is, godly men, do not in this world ſee his dayes, that is, the dayes of his judgment and vengeance upon the wicked. In the following part of this Chapter, Job proceeds to deſcribe wicked men, in ſeveral acts of wickedneſs, and how they carry it on, and have many fair dayes in the world, while they are doing fowl and filthy work. They do as much miſchief as they can, and they enjoy as much outward proſperity as they can deſire to have, or tell what to do with it when they have it; ſo that they ſeem equally to abound in the practice of evil, and in the poſſeſſion of good. See what havock they make in the words of this context, Verſ. 2. Some remove the Land-marks, they violently take away flocks, and feed thereof.

Some remove.] Of whom Job ſpake in particular, or of what particular time he ſpake is uncertain. Some refer it to the dayes before the Floud, for that was a time wherein the world was filled with violence; and that was the ſpecial ſin of that age, ſet forth (Gen. 6. 11.) The earth alſo was corrupt before God; that is, men dwelling upon the earth, were corrupt, morally corrupt, corrupt in their manners. Thus, the earth was corrupt before God, and he ſhews wherein that corruption did conſiſt, and the earth was filled with violence. But as the character which Job gives of theſe men, may well ſuite thoſe times: ſo what times have not produced ſuch a ſort of men? And though ſome times have been more tainted with, and notorious for thoſe ſins then others, yet all times have been tainted with them; and therefore we may take the words generally as applicable to any age of the world.

Some remove the Land-marks.] That is, thoſe marks which are ſet up for the diſtinction, or diviſion of Lands, that every man may know his own, and not entrench upon his neighbours inheritance. Theſe Land-marks or bounds they remove; the Hebrew is, they touch, ſo 'tis tranſlated; Some touch the Land-marks. Land-marks were ſacred things; they ought not to be touched nor medled with. The Lord ſpeaks of his holy people (Pſal. 105. 15.) Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm. Another word is uſed in the Pſalm, but we may give the ſame emphaſis here, Some touch the Land-marks, as if it were a fault ſo much as to handle, or meddle with them: yet the word here uſed ſignifies both to touch, and to take, and ſo to take, as violently to carry away (Zech. 1. 6.) Did not my word take hold of your fathers? that is, did it not apprehend and ſeaze upon them, yea remove them out of the land of the living? Where the Word of God toucheth, it taketh away, either to deſtruction or ſalvation. And that word in the Prophet hath a double alluſion, either to the hunting of beaſts, or to fighting and contending with men; the word followed your Fathers, it overtook them, it took them, it laid hold on them, as the hunter layeth hold upon his prey, or as an enemy follows, and over-takes a fleeing enemy; did not my words take hold of your Fathers? Yes, it did, and that to purpoſe. The word is uſed (Pſal. 40. 12.) Mine iniquities (ſaith David) take hold of me, ſo that I am not able to look up; they have dealt with me, as with a fugitive, that runneth away; they have taken hold of me, and they hold me faſt, my ſin hath apprehended me. So that, though this original word ſignifies to touch, yet it is ſo to touch as to offer violence, to take away, to remove, as is expreſſed in thoſe inſtances (1 Sam. 30. 8.) David inquired of the Lord, ſaying, ſhall I purſue after this troop, ſhall I overtake them? ſo (2 Sam. 15. 14.) David ſaid to all his ſervants that were with him at Jeruſalem, ariſe, let us flee, for we ſhall not eſcape from Abſolom, make ſpeed to depart, leſt he overtake us ſuddenly. In which places as this word is uſed, ſo the uſe of it is about violent and forcible acting, ſo that this touching is taking or removing; they remove or pull up the Land-marks, to ſet them in ſome other place for their own advantage. This was their firſt ſin, the removing of Land-marks; which was upon the matter to take away propriety, and to put all men out of poſſeſſion. There can be no poſſeſſion without diſtinction; natural riches conſiſt in lands and cattle, and both bear their owners mark. The care and induſtry of the Ancients was exceeding great and accurate about their land-marks, both in ſetting them up, and in obſerving them, that every man might have his own; wherefore to remove the land-marks, was indeed to take away the land.

Mira fuit in antiquis tum in conſtituendis tum in ſervandis limitibus fides atq; religio.

Hence note, That, God hath given unto man a proper, ſpecial, and perſonal right in his lands, and goods.

If it were not ſo, then, firſt, it were no ſin to remove land-marks, or a vain thing to ſet them up; if there be no diſtinction of inheritances by propriety, what needs there be any diſtinction, by marks, or limits, to ſhew, this is ſuch a mans land, and that anothers. No man may ſet a ſpecial mark, where he hath not a ſpecial right. Secondly, If there were no propriety, there could not be ſuch a ſin as ſtealing, and thieving: that which is every mans, any man may take, and be blameleſs. Thirdly, If there were not propriety, there would be but little induſtry; if mens lands and goods were not their own, who would be found to take care of them, or pains about them? Fourthly, to make all things common, were to run all into confuſion. There is nothing more unequal then this kind of equality. If all had a like right in the things of the world, all would think to have a like power in the government of the world. Propriety and Magiſtracy muſt ſtand and fall together.

But ſome may object that practice of the primitive Church (Acts 2. 44.) who had all things common. And if all things with them were in a community, where was propriety?

I anſwer, Firſt, This practice of theirs was purely voluntary, not at all impoſed; as appears plainly from the words of Peter to Ananias (Acts 5. 4.) While it remained, was it not thine own? or more cloſe to the Greek, Remaining did it not remain to thee? that is, it was properly thine before thou ſoldeſt it, and thou mighteſt have kept thy intereſt in it. No man compelled thee to ſell or give, and if thou hadſt not ſold it, thou mighteſt ſtill have held communion with the Church for all that; but this is thy ſin, to pretend the gift of all to God, and perform but in part.

I anſwer, Secondly, That community did not extend to the whole eſtate of all believers, but to what they did conſecrate to relieve the publick neceſſity. For if they had put themſelves quite out of all propriety by one gift, they could not have exerciſed their charity any more. Whereas the Apoſtle directs them to a conſtant uſe of their charity in making collections for the poor (1 Cor. 16. 1, 2.) And ſurely Paul had made a vain profeſſion, when he ſaid, I have coveted no mans ſilver, or gold, or apparel (Acts 20. 23.) if no man had any peculiar propriety in gold, ſilver, or apparel.

Thirdly, It appears from Verſ. 44. that even they who ſold their goods retained ſome kind of right in them; for all did not come to the common banck, and take what they pleaſed; but they who ſold their poſſeſſions parted the price to all men, allotting to every one a proportion as he had need. It was not ſhare and ſhare like, every man was not his own carver out of the publick ſtock, but diſtribution was made as neceſſity required. God doth to this day keep the eighth Commandment in full force and ſtrength, as a fence or hedge about the worldly eſtates of men; and he that goes about to break this hedge, a Serpent ſhall bite him, as Solomon ſpeaks (Eccleſ. 10. 8.) Hedges are Land-marks; and both are, not only arguments, but ſecurers of propriety.

Again, Seeing Land-marks were ſet up to diſtinguiſh mens eſtates,

We learn, That we ſhould uſe all due means to prevent contentions about worldly poſſeſſions.

As every man hath a title and right to his own, ſo every man ſhould have a rule whereby to know his own; peace is a ſacred and precious thing (even peace about civil things) and therefore whatſoever makes for peace ſhould be accounted ſacred and precious. Bleſſed are the peace-makers, but more bleſſed are the peace-preſervers. It is good to heal breaches among Brethren, but it is better when there are none. Preventing Phyſick is more deſireable then reſtoring.

Thirdly note, To remove Land-marks, which are the means of preſerving the poſſeſſions of men diſtinct, and ſo of preſerving their right and peace, is very ſinful.

This is a ſin condemned by the light of Nature, as well as by the light of Scripture. Hiſtories report how ſtrict the ancient Romans were againſt ſuch offenders; as they were accurate in ſetting up bounds, ſo they were ſevere to puniſh thoſe who removed, and diſturbed the bounds; it was lawful by their Law to take away the life of him who took away his neighbours Land-mark. And if any man in tilling the ground, plowed up the Land-mark, himſelf and his Ox were both ſacred, that is, both were to be ſlain or devoted to death; yea the Romans were ſo intent, and devout about this thing, that they had a ſpecial god of the bounds or limits ſtones. And as the old Heathens, judging by the rule of common Reaſon, and light of Nature, did abhor this practice; ſo the holy Scriptures in the Law of Moſes provides directly and by name againſt it (Deut. 19. 14.) Thou ſhalt not remove thy neighbours Land-marks which they of old times ſet, in thine inheritance, which thou ſhalt inherit, in the land that the Lord thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it. And again (Deut. 27. 17.) Curſed be he that removeth his neighbours Land-mark, and all the people ſhall ſay Amen. A curſe contains all penalties, and Amen ſeals them all upon the perſon of the offender. Solomon renewed theſe Laws (Prov. 22. 28.) Remove not thy neighbours Land-mark, which thy fathers have ſet. And again (Prov. 23. 10.) Remove not the old Land-marks, and enter not into the field of the fatherleſs. Thus Solomon caution'd thoſe times againſt this ſin. And the Prophet (Hoſea 5. 10.) makes this ſin as the Standard of all other ſins, or as that by which we are to take the greatneſs and weight of any ſin; if a ſin comes near to this, or be like this, 'tis a great ſin. The Princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound, therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water; as if he had ſaid, the Princes of Judah are extreamly wicked: how wicked? Even as wicked as they which remove the bound. Now if high-grown wickedneſs be but ſuch a thing as removing the bound, how high is their wickedneſs grown, who remove the bound? But it may be demanded what bound doth the Prophet mean? I anſwer, it may be underſtood of all ſorts of bounds, of the bounds of Laws, of the bounds of Liberty, of the bounds of Religion, as alſo of the bounds of Lands. It is wickedneſs to meddle with or remove any of theſe bounds, though to remove ſome of them be a greater wickedneſs. To remove the bounds of the laws, and the liberties of a Nation, eſpecially to remove the bounds of religion, are hainous abominations; and though to remove the bound of Lands, be not ſo bad as theſe, yet that alſo may be numbred among the abominations which both God and man hate; and therefore when the Prophet would in one word ſpeak all the abominable practices of the Princes of Judah, he choſe to ſay, they are like thoſe who remove the bound; implying, that nothing could be ſaid of them worſe then that. The ſame Prophet uſeth an expreſſion ſomewhat parallel to that (Hoſ. 4. 4.) where deſcribing the wickedneſs of thoſe times, he tells them, that the Lord had a controverſie with the land, becauſe there was no truth, no mercy, no knowledge of God in the land. By ſwearing and lying, and killing, and ſtealing, &c. then at verſ. 4. he concludes, Let no man ſtrive and reprove another ('Tis the ſoareſt judgement of God upon a people or a perſon to let them alone and be quiet in their ſin, to ſay, Let no man ſtrive or reprove another) but why did God give up that people to ſuch a judgment? The greatneſs of their ſin was the cauſe of it; and what was that? The next words ſhew us, For thy people are as they that ſtrive with the Prieſt. It was ſo great a wickedneſs to contend or ſtrive with the Prieſt, that the vileſt of wickedneſſes was but an exemplification of it. God forbids that they ſhould be reproved or ſtriven with for good, who were once grown ſo evil as to ſtrive with the Prieſt; and the greateſt reproof that can poſſibly be given any man, is to ſay, let no man reprove him. Thus we ſee that to ſtrive with the Prieſt, and to remove the bound, are ſins of the firſt magnitude, the one in Spirituals, the other in Civils.

Fourthly, In as much as the word here uſed ſignifies not only quite to remove, but to touch or meddle with the land-marks,

> Obſerve, That we ought to avoid all thoſe acts, that are leading to ſin, as well as the ſin it ſelf.

It was not abſolutely a ſin, or a ſin in it ſelf, to touch or come near the Land-marks, but becauſe this had an appearance of evil in it; and becauſe while men handled the bounds, either it might come into their minds to remove them, or they might poſſibly remove them a little againſt their minds, therefore even that act is forbidden, as having in it a tendency to that ſin. It is good for us to keep at the furtheſt diſtance we can from that which is evil. The Apoſtles rule is, Abſtain from all appearance of evil (1 Theſ. 5. 22.) unleſs all the appearances of all the approaches unto evil be abſtained from, we ſhall hardly abſtain from the evil it ſelf. Solomon gives a like caution (Prov. 23. 31.) Look not upon the Wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth it ſelf aright. It is not a ſin to look upon the wine, yet Solomon ſaith, look not upon it; why? becauſe that act may occaſion another; while you look upon the wine, you may be taken with the beauty and colour of it, and ſo drink intemperately; for he adds, it will bite like a Serpent; which implies that looking may enſnare a man, and cauſe him to drink more then he ought, and then the wine will bite indeed; wine will go down without chewing, but he that lets too much go down ſhall find it biting. And 'tis more dangerous and venemous to be Wine-bitten, then to be Serpent-bitten; therefore look not upon the wine. So here, touch not the Land-marks, be not buſie about them, ſtand off from them, leſt you be enticed to remove or take them away; They that will alwayes do the utmoſt of what is lawful, may ſoon be overcome to do that which is unlawful. It is our wiſdom as well as our duty, not to touch that, which to take away will be our ſin.

Laſtly, When Job ſaith, Some remove the Land-marks; that is not the only thing intended, though it be only here expreſſed, for this removing had a further purpoſe: as touching comes to removing, ſo removing the Land-marks goeth further, even to the taking away of the Land. And they therefore took away the Land-marks, that they might take away the Land alſo; they took away that which diſtinguiſhed their lands from other mens lands, that ſo other mens lands might be accounted theirs, and that they might enter upon the poſſeſſion of them as their own. Thus, to colour and cover their covetouſneſs and oppreſſion in invading other mens lands, they removed the marks whereby they held and claimed their lands. It were not worth the while to remove Land-marks, unleſs it were for the lands ſake. The value of a ſtone, or of a peice of timber, or of a turf of earth (any of which may be made a Land-mark) is not conſiderable, but the land marked by it is. The heart of man is cunning and full of contrivance to compaſs ſinful ends by ſuch wayes, as may keep the ſin (as much as may be) unſeen. Forceably to take away lands were groſs; but firſt to take away Land-marks, and ſo to raiſe a queſtion, or make it a controverſie to whom the land belongs, this is a piece of oppreſſion ſpun with a finer threed. This is robbing without ſeeming to do wrong. Some remove the Land-marks,

They violently take away flocks, and feed thereof.

Theſe words contain the ſecond act of their wickedneſs. Before we had land ſtoln, now cattel, they violently take away. The word notes a fierce violence; as 'tis ſaid of one of David's Worthies (2 Sam. 23. 21.) He ſlew an Egyptian, a goodly man, and the Egyptian had a ſpear in his hand; but he went down to him with a ſtaff, and pluckt the ſpear out of the Egyptians hand. He pluckt it from him by ſtrength of hand, or by fine force. Thus here, They take or pluck away flocks. There are two wayes of taking away what belongs to another; firſt, ſecretly, or by fraud; ſecondly, openly, or by violence; both are forbidden (Lev. 19. 13.) Thou ſhalt not defraud thy neighbour (that is, thou ſhalt not take away his goods ſecretly by deceit and cunning) neither ſhalt thou rob him; he that cozens or deceives another, robs him; but in that law of Moſes, by robbing is meant violent taking away. There are ſome private thieves, ſo are all they who defraud their brethren; others are bold and open thieves, theſe properly are robbers. Might overcomes right. Of ſuch Job ſpeaks here,

They violently take away flocks.] A flock is a collection of cattel, leſs, or great, Sheep, or Oxen, they make prey of all, they take away flocks. See the greedineſs of theſe robbers. Any one flock contains many cattel, theſe took away many flocks, or many a flock; and that violently, they had no law for it, and they asked no leave for it.

> Hence note, Where the rule of what is done is the will of the doer, any thing is done which he hath a power to do, whether right or wrong, makes no matter.

I will have it, ſaith he, and if he be ſtrong enough have it he will. The Prophet Amos gives ſuch a character of the Princes of thoſe times (Chap. 3. 10.) They know not to do right, ſaith the Lord, who ſtore up violence and robbery in their Pallaces. 'Tis ſad for a people when Princes or they who dwell in Pallaces, know not to do right, eſpecially when their know not, is not, an ignorance of the Law, but a wilful perverſion of the Law; when their know not to do right, is they have no mind nor will to do right; when Princes are wiſe (enough, too wiſe) to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge; ſuch were they of whom the Prophet complained in that place, they know not to do right. And what are ſuch like to do then? The Prophet tells us what, They ſtore up violence and robbery in their Pallaces; that is, all the furniture and riches of their Pallaces, are but robbery and violence, or ſuch things as they have taken away by violence and robbery. The Lord therefore threatens ſuch, that they ſhall be ſcourged with violence (Ezek. 7. 11.) Violence is riſen up into a rod of wickedneſs, none of them ſhall remain, nor of their multiude, nor any of theirs, neither ſhall there be wailing for them. Violence riſeth up to a rod of wickedneſs two wayes; Firſt, As violence ſhoots or puts forth from wickedneſs, as a branch or rod ſhoots forth from the ſtock of a tree; all the violence and oppreſſion that ever was committed in the world, is both branch and fruit growing or riſing up from a wicked heart. Secondly, Violence riſeth up into a rod of wickedneſs, when violence puniſheth wickedneſs; they who have afflicted others by violence, often find violence turned into a rod to afflict themſelves. And we may give that ſence of Solomon's Proverbs (Prov. 13. 2.) The ſoul of the tranſgreſſor ſhall eat violence. The words are a threat; as wicked men eat violence, that is, what they have gotten by violence; ſo they ſhall have violence to eat, that is, they ſhall be violently dealt with; either violence ſhall compel them to do their duty, or violence ſhall puniſh them for not doing it; or as they lived by violence, ſo they ſhall die by violence. The ſouls of tranſgreſſors ſhall eat violence, as a puniſhment, becauſe (as it follows in the next clauſe) they eat violence as their portion. They violently take away flocks,

And feed thereof.] The Original words are rendred two wayes. Firſt, as we, They feed thereof; that is, they feed themſelves with the flocks which they have taken away: Secondly, They feed them; that is, they feed the flocks which they have violently taken away. According to our tranſlation the ſence is this, when they have taken away flocks violently, they ſit down quietly and feed themſelves with theſe flocks, they and their families are maintained by the ſpoil. And I conceive Job adds this, not only to ſhew another or a ſecond act of their ſin, but to ſhew the reſolvedneſs and ſetledneſs of theſe men in the wayes of ſin.

> Hence note, Then a wicked man is hardned in ſin, when he feeds, and filleth himſelf with what he hath ſinfully gotten.

They not only act evil, but delight in evil, who take away any thing by violence, and feed thereon. Solomon ſpeaks of ſome (Prov. 4. 17.) Who eat the bread of wickedneſs (that is, bread (by which is meant all the neceſſaries of this life) gotten by wickedneſs) and they drink the wine of violence; that is, the wine which they have gained by violence: or ſuppoſe what they have violently gained be not wine, in ſpecie, or that liquor which we call wine; yet they drink it as wine, like ſweet and pleaſant wine. This is a ſign of a heart ſetled in ſin, when the ſinner eats his ſin as bread, and drinks it as wine. What ſtomachs have they who can digeſt ſuch hard-meats; and though now they ſeem to make a good digeſtion of it, yet unleſs they vomit up ſuch morſels and draughts by true repentance, they will lie heavy upon their ſtomachs, and make them heart-ſick to Eternity. The Prophet threatens (Iſa. 3. 14.) That the Lord will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people, and the Princes thereof, for (ſaith he) ye have eaten up the vineyards, the ſpoil of the poor is in your houſes; that is, ye maintain your houſes by that which is not yours, even by the ſpoils and vineyards of the poor. When Jezabel had got Naboth ſlain, ſhe preſently ſaid to Ahab, Ariſe, take poſſeſſion of the vineyard of Naboth, and Ahab did ſo (1 Kings 21. 15, 16.) But the Lord ſent Eliah to him with this meſſage (verſ. 19.) Haſt thou killed and alſo taken poſſeſſion? As if he had ſaid, art thou indeed ſo hardned in ſin, that thou canſt go down and pleaſe thy ſelf in the uſe and poſſeſſion of what thou haſt gotten ſinfully? How wicked art thou, who art ſo far from having thy heart to ſmite thee with ſorrow, for ſmiting a faithful ſubject of thine to death by thy Authority, that now thou canſt delight thy ſelf in eating up the vineyard of the dead man?. Sometimes a godly man ſins by inordinate deſires after the creature; but 'tis very rare, that his ſtomach doth not turn before he comes to eat his ſin. David (2 Sam. 23. 15.) had a longing deſire to the waters of Bethlem, and upon the making known of his deſire, three mighty men broke through the Hoaſt of the Philiſtines, and fetched him the water; but (verſ. 16.) when the water was brought him, his ſtomach turned, he would not drink becauſe it was gotten by the hazzard of three mens lives. For though David did not ſpeak thoſe words, O that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlem, with an intent to put any of his Souldiers upon that dangerous enterpriſe in fetching it for him; yet that he might declare how far he was from indulging himſelf in ſuch inordinate deſires, to engage any mans life for the pleaſing of his appetite, or ſatisfying of his preſent (though probably a very urgent) thirſt; therefore he would not drink it, but pour'd it out unto the Lord, ſaying, Far be it from me, O Lord, that I ſhould do this, is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? Thus it is with tender conſciences, who though they ſometimes ſpeak and do raſhly and ſinfully, yet before they come to eat their ſin, that is, what they have ſinfully deſired or attained, they repent and cannot make either meat or drink of it. Ungodly men can drink blood, not only that which (as in David's caſe) others have gotten for them with the danger of their lives, but even that which themſelves have gotten with the unjuſt ſpoil (ſometimes) of other mens lives, but often of their lively-hoods. They violently take away flocks, and feed thereof.

Again, I ſhall touch a little upon the ſecond reading; They violently take away flocks, and feed them; that is, they do not only drive other mens flocks away, but keep them openly in their paſtures and feed them; ſo Mr. Broughton, They rob away herds, and feed them. The Original word in the Hebrew, as alſo the Latine, is ſeldom uſed to ſignifie mans feeding upon dead fleſh, but often to ſignifie mans feeding of living fleſh or cattel. A Shepherd is ſaid to feed his flock. Thus, firſt, they play the thieves, violently taking away their neighbours flocks, next they turn Shepherds and Graſiers, and feed them openly.

Vix vel Hebraum רעה vel Latinũ paſcere pro comedere uſurpantur, ſed ſæpe pro paſtoris inſtar, paſcere. Pined.

This implies three things concerning theſe oppreſſors, of whom Job ſpeaks.

Firſt, That they were great men, not petty robbers, who when they have got cattle away, hide them, or ſell them off as ſoon as they can; they dare not put them in their own paſtures, and uſually they have none to put them in. But theſe Nimrods, theſe mighty Hunters take them violently, and then own it broadly; they care not who ſees what they have done. Thus the Prophet Iſaiah reproves the Princes of Iſrael (Chap. 1. 23.) Thy Princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves; that is, they do like thieves, they oppreſs, and vex, and violently take away. They are ſo far (which is the duty of Princes) from repreſſing thieves, that they encourage and countenance them, and not only ſo, but are actually thieves themſelves. Thieves in Authority and Power are the vileſt thieves; who ſhall deliver from oppreſſion, when Princes turn oppreſſors, and Great ones thieves?

Secondly, When it is ſaid, that they take away flocks and feed them; it ſhews, that theſe robbers perſiſted in their ſin, and were not aſhamed of it: they could ſpoil their neighbours, and never bluſh: they declared their ſin as Sodome, they hid it not.

Thirdly, This imports that they had quiet poſſeſſion of their ill gotten goods; what they got unjuſtly, they held ſecurely and unmoleſted. Their ſtoln goods were neither recovered by Law, nor forceably retaken from them; they fed them, and kept them as their own; wickedneſs proſpered in their hand; no man ſaw the day of Gods reckoning with them. This their impunity Job ſpecially aimed at, when he ſaid, They violently take away flocks, and feed them, or feed upon them.

> Hence note, That God leaves ſome wicked men in a long, and quiet poſſeſſion, of what they have unjuſtly gotten.

To hold by injuſtice and oppreſſion is the worſt and moſt ſlippery title and tenure in the world; yet as unjuſt gain makes ſome rich, as they improve and thrive, as they trade in, and encreaſe by wayes of unrighteouſneſs, ſo they live proſperouſly, and hold ſtrongly what they have unrighteouſly gained: They both feed upon and feed the flocks which they have taken away by violence. Though ſome oppreſſors are ſo ſuddainly attached by purſuing vengeance, that they can neither feed nor feed upon their ſtoln flocks; but even before the meat is in their mouths the wrath of God and juſtice of man falls upon them, and will not ſuffer them to roſt what they have got in this kind of cruel hunting; yet others roſt and eat to the full, though indeed, they do but fat themſelves againſt a day of ſlaughter, which though it come ſlowly will ſurely come. Job ſtill proceeds in deſcribing their other acts of violence.

Verſ. 3. They drive away the Aſs of the fatherleſs, they take the widows Ox for a pledge.

There is ſomewhat conſiderable in theſe words, though they are but a continued deſcription of the ſame thing under variety of inſtances.

They drive away the Aſs of the fatherleſs.

Here is more violence ſtill. Some conceive the ſingular is here put for the plural; the Aſs for the Aſſes of the fatherleſs; that is, all the Aſſes that he had, they left not one, but ſwept all away. But if we take the word ſtrictly for one ſingle Aſs, then it aggravates the ſin, They drive away the Aſs of the fatherleſs: Though he hath but one, they drive that away; this heightens the oppreſſion, as (2 Sam. 12. 3.) in the parable which Nathan put to David Abigeus is propriè dicitur qui pecora ex paſcuis vel ex armentis ſubtrahit, & abigendi ſtudiũ quaſi artem exercet. Ulpi.

Inſigne eſt apud Juriſconſultos Abigeatus crimen.

vid to convince him of his ſin ; He tells him of a rich man that had exceeding many flocks and herds, but the poor man had nothing ſave one little Ew-Lamb, which he had bought, and nouriſhed up, and it grew up together with him, and with his children, it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his boſom, and was unto him as a daughter : Now, when the traveller came to the rich man, he ſpared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dreſs for the wayfairing man, but took the poor mans lamb, &c. So here, they drive away the Aſs of the fatherleſs ; though he hath but one, they drive that away.

Further, when he ſaith, They drive away the Aſs, there are two things conſiderable in it. Firſt, The Aſs is a uſeful and ſerviceable beaſt for the bearing of burthens. Secondly, The Aſs is a mean creature , a beaſt of no great value, though of ſome uſe. They drive away the very Aſs, and that the Aſs of the Fatherleſs.] In the former verſe, where it is ſaid, They violently take away flocks, and feed thereof ; there is no mention at all made, whoſe the flocks were, or from whom they took them. But here Job ſeems to lay the emphaſis of their ſin, not ſo much upon what they drove away, as upon the perſon whoſe it was, which they drove away ; they drive away not the great or the rich mans Aſs, but the Aſs of the Fatherleſs. The word Fatherleſs may be taken two wayes, either ſtrictly, for a child that is left without a father to take care of him and provide for him : or ſecondly, we may expound the word Fatherleſs more largely for any that are poor, and in diſtreſs ; as was ſhewed (Chap. 22.9.) How cruel are they, and how covetous are they, who will not ſpare the poor, no not poor Orphans ! To take from the Fatherleſs in either ſence, aggravates the ſin. Which aggravation of their ſin is further proſecuted in the next inſtance of their oppreſſion.

They take away the widdows Ox for a pledge.

What a pledge is hath been opened at Chap. 22. 6. It is not ſinful to take a pledge ; but there is a twofold ſin implied in this place, while they are charged with taking the widows Ox for a pledge. Firſt, In reference to the perſon of whom the pledge was taken, the widow. Secondly, In reference to the thing which was taken for a pledge, it was the widdows Ox. For the Ox being uſed for labour in tilling the ground (a moſt neceſſary uſe) ſhould not be taken or at leſt not detained as a pledge ; therefore we find that thoſe things which were for neceſſary uſe and lively-hood, were forbidden to be taken for pledge (Exod. 22. 26, 27.) or if they were taken, they were preſently to be reſtored before the Sun went down. But theſe cruel men took the widdows Ox for a pledge, and reſtored him not. We may alſo underſtand it (as ſome) that they took the Ox as if it were a pledge, doing it as of right, or under pretence and colour of Juſtice (as being her creditors) for a debt. And ſo the whole proceeding is expounded either of Tyrants, that lay heavy Taxes upon the poor people, and if they are not able to pay preſently take all away by diſtrein : or of common Extortioners, who lend money, or let leaſes, and upon every default of payment take the forfeiture, and carry all away as due to themſelves.

Ipſarum viduarum facultates per vim eripiunt quaſi jure quodam inſtar creditorum pignorarentur. Bez.

Further, we may obſerve in Scripture, that as we have theſe two uſually put together, the fatherleſs, and the widdow, ſo we have theſe two uſually joyned together, the Aſs, and the Ox. Thus they are joyned in the ten Commandments, in the fourth and tenth, and often elſewhere. But ſome may queſtion, Hath the poor widdow an Ox ? The Ox ſeems rather to belong to rich men, then to the poor widdow ; to which we may anſwer, that the Hebrew word which we tranſlate Ox, ſignifies as well the female, as the male, and ſo it is rendred by ſome here, They take away the Cow of the widdow. The poor widdow lives upon the milk of her Cow ; take that from her, and you take away all her living. But whether we underſtand it of the one or of the other, the difference is not material as to the ſcope and purpoſe of Job, who puts the widdows Ox or the widdows Cow, either for the whole or chiefeſt part of her ſubſtance, They take the widows Ox for a pledge.

שור Pro bove fœmina ſumitur. Bold.

Hence note, Some care not from whom or what they take, ſo they may have it.

They will take from the fatherleſs, they will take from the widdow. The Prophet Amos (Chap. 2. 7.) ſpeaking of ſuch oppreſſors, ſaith, They pant after the duſt of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aſide the way of the needy. The former part of thoſe words, hath variety of reading and expoſitions, I will not ſtay upon them : but only touch that which is moſt ſutable to the point in hand, They pant after the duſt of the earth, that is, they exceedingly deſire, and long for it. As David deſcribes his holy deſires (Pſal. 42. 1.) As the Hart panteth after the water brooks, ſo panteth my ſoul after thee, O God ; that is I extreamly deſire thy preſence and communion with thee, even as the Hart, being hunted and heated deſireth the waters. Thus they panted after the duſt of the earth, that is, after thoſe things which are but as the duſt of the earth, or whoſe original and matter is but the duſt of the earth. Gold and Silver, theſe are but the refined duſt of the earth ; but whoſe duſt did they pant after ? It was the duſt on the head of the poor ; if they did but ſee a poor man to have gotten a little about him, though only enough to keep life and ſoul together, to preſerve himſelf and his family from ſtarving or begging , they preſently panted after it , they were paſſionately deſirous of it, they caſt about how to get it. They who are enflamed with covetouſneſs, are buſie to find out, and having found out, are greedy to purſue all advantages and occaſions to enrich themſelves, though it be with the ruine of the poor. They are glad to get ſomething even from them who (according to common ſpeech) have nothing ; they ſcrape from them, who have but ſcraps to live upon. Such was the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Cor. 8. 9.) though he was rich , yet for our ſakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. And ſuch is the covetouſneſs of ſome men, that though they are rich enough , yet they care not to make many, who are poor enough already , poorer , that they by making them poorer, might make themſelves richer.

Secondly, Conſider the matter, they drive away the Aſs of the fatherleſs, and take the widdows Ox (or Cow) for a pledge.

Hence note, Some will ſin for a ſmall matter.

They will do much evil, though they get but little worldly good by it, only a ſilly Aſs, or a labouring Ox from the fatherleſs or the widdow. Who as they never have many of theſe, commonly, but one of each (for both words are of the ſingular number) ſo thoſe that they have are uſually none of the beſt , fatteſt , ſtrongeſt , greateſt, and ſo higheſt prized ones : As the fatherleſs , and the widdow , are poor, ſo their Ox and Aſs are but poor ones too ; yet ſome will unjuſtly drive and take theſe poor things away, They will play at ſmall game (as we ſay) rather then ſit out ; and act baſely to get but an Aſs. The Prophet Amos (Chap. 2. 6.) repreſents the Lord proteſting againſt ſuch, thus, For three tranſgreſſions of Iſrael, and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof , becauſe they ſold the righteous for Silver, and the poor for a pair of Shoes ; that is , they ſold the right of the poor , when they could get but a very ſmall advantage by it , the worth of a pair of Shoes. Some in ſinning are like Eagles , they will not ſtoop at flies ; if they break the rules of righteouſneſs and faithfulneſs, it ſhall be for a Crown or a Kingdom. They who ſin for the greateſt profit, make a looſing bargain of it : What then do they who will ſin for the loweſt profit ?

Thirdly, They drive away the Aſs from the fatherleſs, and take the Ox of the widdow ; from the conſideration of the perſons wronged,

Note, It is ſinful to wrong any, but much more to wrong the poor.

Having met with this point from other paſſages in this book, I only name it, and add, that there are two things which ſhew the ſinfulneſs of taking from the poor. Firſt, Becauſe they are weak and unable either to reſiſt injuries, or to right themſelves ; they cannot help themſelves, nor can they eaſily procure help from others. The poor and him that hath no help, are put together (Pſal. 72. 12.) and uſually they are the ſame. I returned (ſaid Solomon, Eccleſ. 4. 1.)

Sordido lucro aſſervientes, ne calceos quidem pauperum lacrifacere recuſant, qui extremum hominibus uſum prebent. Theo

1.) and conſidered all the oppreſſions that are done under the Sun, and behold the tears of ſuch as were oppreſſed, and they had no comforter: and on the ſide of their oppreſſors there was power, but they had no comforter. And they who have no comforter, ſurely have no helper. Now it is moſt ſinful to hurt them who are leaſt able to help themſelves, or find help from others. And who ſo helpleſs, as the fatherleſs and the widdow? Secondly, it is therefore extreamly ſinfull to wrong the poor, and eſpecially theſe poor, becauſe God hath commended them to the care, and tuition of the rich; they are his charge, God hath taken them into his protection, and hath truſted them over to men of power, that they ſhould look to them. Magiſtrates ſhould be as a wall of defence, to the fatherleſs, and widdow, they ſhould provide for them, and nouriſh them. Therefore to ſpoil, and rob them of all, how great a wickedneſs is this? this is (as much as in them is) to make God a lyar, and unfaithful to his Word and Promiſe. As then it ſhould be a great encouragement to help the godly poor, becauſe in ſo doing we are a means to fulfil the promiſe of God to them: So we ſhould therefore be afraid to wrong them, becauſe in ſo doing we do what we can to make the promiſe of God to them void. No marveil then, if the Apoſtle James placeth all religion, as to practiſe, in the viſitation of the widdow and the fatherleſs in their affliction; and if, in that ſence, all religion be placed in it, what ſhall we judge of their religion, who afflict the widdow, and the fatherleſs? And if to viſit them in trouble, be an act not only of charity to them, but of honour and religion towards God; becauſe God (who provides for all) hath taken upon him to provide for the fatherleſs, and the widdow, by name (So that we diſcharge Gods debt of promiſe to the fatherleſs, and widdow, when we do them good. If, I ſay, it be thus) then how groſs an act is it both of uncharitableneſs to them, and irreligion towards God, to viſit with trouble, to afflict and vex the fatherleſs and the widdow.

Fourthly, From the matter about which they ſinned; The Aſs of the fatherleſs, and the Ox, or Cow, of the widdow, > Obſerve, That the leſs any thing is for or about which we ſin, the greater is that ſin.

It ſhews that we value God little, and that we ſet light by his commands, that we regard neither his favour nor his anger, when we can do evil upon ſuch poor accounts. That, by which many excuſe their ſin, encreaſeth it. They will ſay, 'twas a ſmall matter, a little thing they ſtole, or took away; but to ſin in a ſmall matter may be found a great ſin. What? will you break through the holy commands of God, and venture his diſpleaſure for a trifle? Though no man ſhould encourage himſelf to ſin, becauſe he ſinneth for a matter of importance, yet there is not only more folly, but more ſinfulneſs in ſinning for a little. Wo to thoſe who ſin for the greateſt advantages, but more wo to thoſe who value their ſouls, and the Laws of God ſo little, as to diſobey the one, and endanger the other, when ſcarce any thing which the world calls advantage is to be had. It hath been ſaid of old, If faith or an oath be to be broken, let it be broken for a Kingdom; yet he will be found no gainer, who breaks his oath to get all the Kingdoms of the world; what ſhall we ſay then of thoſe poor low ſpirited perſons, who ſin (as we ſay) for ſix pence, and break the Laws of God, for ſo poor a profit, as will hardly give them a break-faſt. The ſin of theſe oppreſſors is not yet full, see more and greater abominations then theſe.

Verſ. 4. They turn the needy out of the way, the poor of the earth hide themſelves together.

The word which we tranſlate needy, ſignifies to deſire; they who have many wants have many deſires; and the ſenſe of our wants, is the ſpring of our deſires; and though many who have no want in outward things are full of deſires, yet the needy are properly the deſirers; and whoſoever deſires much, either hath many wants, or is not ſatisfied with his fulneſs.

They turn the needy out of the way.] The Prophet (Amos, Chap. 2. 7.) reproving the Princes of Iſrael, ſaith, they turn aſide the way of the meek, or (as others render) of the poor and afflicted. That ſpeech of the Prophet ſeems to be of near alliance, if not altogether the ſame, in ſence with this of Job, They turn the needy out of the way.

What way this ſhould be is expounded four or five wayes.

First, Some take it metaphorically, for a moral way. And that, firſt, the way of righteouſneſs and equity. And the wicked turn the needy out of that way, either, firſt, by their evil examples; or ſecondly, by their threatnings and perſecutions. The ſinful practices of men in power, lead the needy, or the inferior ſort, into the practice of the ſame ſins. And the oppreſſions of the mighty do even compel the needy to turn aſide from the right way of getting their livings, to ſtealing and living by ſpoil and rapine, as they themſelves do. When rich men oppreſs the poor, they turn the poor either to begging, or thieving. When men are vexed and moleſted in honeſt wayes, they lie under a great temptation to turn and betake themſelves to thoſe wayes which are diſhoneſt. Paul ſaith of himſelf being a perſecuter, that he compelled the profeſſors of the Goſpel to blaſpheme (Acts 26. 11.) and this he effected in one or both the wayes above ſpecified; either, firſt, by his example, he being a blaſphemer (as he confeſſed, 1 Tim. 1. 13.) they imitated him in blaſpheming or ſpeaking evil of the wayes of God, and of his people: or, ſecondly, he did it by his cruelty, vexing them ſo in the profeſſion of Chriſt, that ſome who were unſetled fell away, and blaſphemed the name of Chriſt, whom they had profeſſed. But though this be a truth, yet I ſhall not give it as the intent of this place. Therefore

Secondly, They turn the needy out of the way; that is, out of the way of that juſtice or right which is due to them. And ſo it ſuits well with what he ſaid before; they drive away the Aſs of the fatherleſs, &c. and they turn the needy out of the way; that is, from what is his right, or from all means of recovering his right.

Thirdly, They turn the needy out of the way; that is, out of the way of their lively-hood; we commonly enquire, how doth ſuch a man live? And 'tis anſwered, he lives in a very good way, he hath ſuch a way of living, ſuch a trade, calling, or profeſſion; that's his way. Thus, to turn the needy out of the way, is to put them beſides the way of getting their bread, and maintaining their families with neceſſaries for this life. In a figurative ſence, every mans profeſſion and calling is his way, and he that moleſts him in it, turns him out of his way. As ſuppoſe a man live in the Country, where he keeps a farm, if his cattle be taken away, he is turned out of his way, he can live no longer in that way. He that takes away what is inſtrumental to a man in his calling, puts him out of his way; and he that diſturbs a man in the work of his calling, turns him out of his way. Our ordinary work is our way (Pſal. 1. 1.) Bleſſed is the man that hath not ſtood in the way of ſinners, that is, who hath not taken the courſe which (as ſuch) ſinners take. Now as a godly man turns out of, or will not ſtand in the way of ſinners; ſo oppreſſing ſinners turn many that are needy and godly out of the way of their lawful callings, and will not ſuffer them to ſtand or abide in them.

Via pauperum eſt facultus, ſibi neceſſaria parundi. Aquin. Viam pauperum ſubvertit tyrannus, cum illa detrahit ſine quibus ars cui vacater pauper, exerceri non poteſt.

Secondly, We may underſtand this way properly for the way or road wherein men walk or travail upon their occaſions; and then theſe words, They turn the needy out of the way, may be expounded, as an argument of the extream pride of theſe Nimrods, or ſons of violence. They cauſed the needy to turn aſide out of the way to give them place, or they made the poor to keep out of their ſight for fear of them, leſt as they had already ſpoiled them of their eſtates, ſo they ſhould alſo abuſe their perſons, and make them ſlaves. Thus they turned the poor out of the way; that is, they durſt not come in ſight for fear; this ſuits well with the laſt clauſe of the verſe.

Illis graſſantibus, nullis ne terr'us quidē fortis, viatoribus tuta eſt vie; adeo ut deflectere à via publica & latebras quærere paſſim cogantur. Bez.

The poor of the earth hide themſelves together.

The word needy, in the former part of the verſe (as was toucht before) ſignifies one full of deſires; here the word which we render poor, notes one that is humble, meek, lowly; not only one low in eſtate, but lowly in mind; not only him that is poor in purſe, but poor in ſpirit; ſo 'tis tranſlated (Zeph. 2. 3.) Seek ye the Lord, ye meek of the earth, even theſe poor of the earth hide themſelves together. Wicked proud men make the poor ſeek corners; the poor have often had experience of their cruelty, and rough dealing, and three-therefore run together into holes and corners to hide themſelves, as deſiring rather the ſociety of wild beaſts, then of ſuch beaſtly men. Further, the word which we render together, may be tranſlated alike; They hid themſelves alike; that is, one poor godly man as well as another, they all fare alike; they deal no better with one then with another, none have hope to eſcape the hands of theſe unmerciful Tyrants. Thus it was in the time of that great oppreſſion which the Iſraelites were under by the Philiſtines; The Iſraelites hid themſelves; when Jonathan and his Armorbearer got up, and diſcovered themſelves to the Garriſon of the Philiſtines, the Philiſtines ſaid, Behold the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themſelves (1 Sam. 14. 11.) The Author to the Hebrews gives us a deſcription of the poor Saints thus hiding themſelves together (Heb. 11. 37.) They wandred about in Sheep-skins, and Goat-skins, being deſtitute, afflicted, and tormented; they wandred in deſerts, and mountains, in dens, and caves of the earth. The poor and meek of the earth hid themſelves together.

Thus we had a large enumeration of thoſe violences which Job had obſerved among men, and men proſpering in them. Firſt, Violence upon Lands; Secondly, Upon Cattle; Thirdly, Upon Perſons. The needy, and the poor, are forced to run together into corners. While the ſin of ſome encreaſeth, the affliction of others muſt needs encreaſe.

Hence note, Sinners know no bounds.

They who at firſt wrong men in their Lands, will not ſtick to wrong them in their Cattle, and within a while, they make no bones to fall upon their Perſons.

Secondly note, Thoſe evils which are done to men immediately in their perſons, are more ſinful then thoſe that are done to them in their goods, cattle, and eſtate.

Job ſhews the worſt of their doings laſt. 'Tis bad enough to touch the goods of a poor man, but to trouble his perſon, or cauſeleſly to make him hide his head, is far worſe.

Thirdly note, That the promotion and exaltation of wicked men, is the oppreſſion and vexation of poor men, more eſpecially of poor godly men.

It is a ſad time with poor men, moſt of all with poor godly men, when the wicked are exalted. Solomon gives us this note in expreſs terms (Prov. 28. 28.) When the wicked riſe (that is, when they riſe in power and authority) men hide themſelves; that is, good men hide themſelves: poor men hide themſelves when the wicked riſe, but moſt of all ſuch poor men as are godly. The reign of wicked men is the ruine of the godly. Which is more plain by the oppoſition made in the laſt clauſe of the verſe; When the wicked riſe, men hide themſelves; but when they periſh the righteous increaſe. In which Proverb, riſing is oppoſed to periſhing, but men and righteous are the ſame. When the wicked periſh, thoſe righteous men, who before hid themſelves, appear and ſhew themſelves again. Some poor men are turbulent, proud, untractable, ſeditious, men of unquiet ſpirits; if ſuch be dealt with by juſtice, and made to hide themſelves, they have their deſert. But the poor who are alſo humble, meek, and of a quiet ſpirit, (as the word here imports) are the aim of the wicked. Such David found in his low eſtate, and againſt them he prayed (Pſal. 35. 19, 20.) Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully rejoyce over me: neither let them wink with the eye (that is, let them not have occaſion to contemn and deſpiſe me, of which, winking with the eye was a token) that hate me without a cauſe. For they ſpeak not peace, but they deviſe deceitful matters againſt them that are quiet in the land.

Laſtly note, The poor go by the worſt, and the weakeſt to the wall; the needy are turned out of the way, and the poor hide themſelves.

And therefore ſaid God (Pſal. 12. 5.) For the oppreſſion of the poor, and for the ſighing of the needy, now will I ariſe and ſet him in ſafety from him that puffeth at him. Oppreſſion may quickly empoveriſh the rich, but uſually the poor fall under oppreſſion: they that are full ſigh, when they are made needy and empty, when all is taken from them; but uſually the needy and empty are made to ſigh; For the oppreſſion of the poor, will I ariſe ſaith the Lord. Rich and great men can defend themſelves from oppreſſion, but the poor have no ſhelter; rich men will purchaſe their right, but the poor who hath nothing to give, ſeldom finds a friend to deliver him, and get him his right. The ſtorm falls upon the poor, and moſt upon Gods poor, they are moſt ſubject, or lie moſt open to the evils of this world, of whom this preſent evil world is not worthy, and for whom the good of the next world is prepared. And therefore they ſhould fly to ſhelter, while they are here, get under covert, run into the name of God for ſafety and protection; they who are moſt ſubject to oppreſſion, need moſt protection. Some are ſo poor that they have nothing to looſe, and ſo needy that they need not fear oppreſſion. They have neither bread to eat, nor cloaths to put on. Theſe are no bait for covetouſneſs; but, they alſo are to be reckoned among the poor, who have no more then will ſave them from poverty; and they are among the needy, who have only ſo much as ſerves to ſupply their own needs. Theſe poor and needy ones are game for the oppreſſors, theſe the Wolves and Lions of the earth make their prey. The oppreſſion and wickedneſs of theſe hath aſcended three ſteps, in the context now opened. They are, firſt, Land-invaders; ſecondly, Cattel-takers; thirdly, Men-troublers. Job carrieth on the deſcription of their wickedneſs yet further, in the following parts of this Chapter.

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8.

Behold, as wild Aſſes in the deſert, go they forth to their work, riſing betimes for a prey: the wilderneſs yieldeth food for them and for their Children.

They reap every one his Corn in the field: and they gather the vintage of the wicked.

They cauſe the naked to lodge without cloathing; that they have no covering in the cold.

They are wet with the ſhowers of the mountains, and embrace the rock for want of a ſhelter.

JOB proceeds to enumerate the wickedneſſes of thoſe men whom yet God ſpared, and bare with; he had ſet down many of their ſinful wayes before; they removed the land-marks, they violently took away flocks, they ſpared not the Aſs of the fatherleſs, nor the widdows Ox; they turned the needy out of the way, ſo that the poor of the earth were forced to hide themſelves together. See now the further progreſs of their wickedneſs, even to admiration, for ſo much the word, Behold, with which Job leads on his diſcovery of their vexatious practices doth import.

Verſ. 5. Behold, as wild Aſſes in the deſert, they go forth to their work.

There is a difference in opinion among Interpreters about the ſubject of this verſe, whom we are to underſtand under this deſcription, As wild Aſſes in the deſert, going forth to their work. Some of Note conceive that the poor are the ſubject of theſe words, or the perſons here intended. And then they hold forth the hardſhip and miſery to which they were reduced by thoſe mercileſs Tyrants; Behold as wild Aſſes in the deſert, they go forth to their work. Oppreſſors did ſo vex them and ſtrip them out of all, that they who heretofore had enough to live upon, were conſtrained to go forth to day-labour and work for their living, at the command, or under the cruel bondage of thoſe inhumane Task-maſters.

Exegeſis præcedentis dicti, de intoleranda improborum ſevitia in pauperes, quorum opera contra legem abutuntur. Jun.

Yet I conceive that we may more clearly expound theſe words as carrying a continued ſeries of the practices of wicked men, who are here compared to wild Aſſes; and there is a word in verſ. 5. which gives a ſpecial reaſon why this ſhould not be underſtood of the poor or oppreſſed, but of the oppreſſor, where it is ſaid, they riſe betimes for a prey; now that word which we render a prey, cometh from a root which ſignifies to tear, to rend, to pull aſunder after the manner of wild beaſts; and is of the ſame ſound as well as ſignification with our Engliſh word, tear, therefore it ſhould rather be underſtood of oppreſſors, then of the oppreſſed; for a man that goes forth to labour and work work for his living, cannot properly be ſaid to riſe betimes for a prey, for he goeth forth to get his bread honeſtly; now a prey is that which is got by violence; and the word is never applied to men, but in alluſion to ravenous and devouring beaſts. Jacob comparing his ſon Judah to a Lions whelp (Gen. 49. 9.) ſaith, From the prey, my Son, thou art gone up. So Moſes (Deut. 33. 20.) And of Gad, he ſaid, Bleſſed be he that enlargeth Gad; he dwelleth as a Lion, and teareth the Arm with the Crown of the head. And David praying to be delivered out of the hand of his enemy, gives this reaſon (Pſalm 7. 2.) Leſt he tear my ſoul like a Lion, while there is none to deliver. So that the word noting properly the act of a ravenous beaſt who lives upon ſpoil and prey; it is very improper to apply it to the work of a labouring man, who lives and earns his bread with the ſweat of his brows. Yet I find that word ſignifying food in general (Mal. 3. 10.) Bring ye all the tythes into the ſtorehouſe, that there may be meat in mine houſe. Which the interlineral renders, that there may be a prey in mine houſe; and another thus, that there may be that which ye ſnatch, in mine houſe. Surely the Lord ſtrikes at ſome miſdemeanour while he expreſſeth the food of the Prieſts and Levites, by a word ſignifying that which is torn away by violence. And (I conceive) it may either reflect upon the people who parted ſo hardly with the tythes which did belong to the Temple at that time, that they were rather torn or pulled from them by a kind of violence, then freely paid or brought in according to the Law of God: or it might reflect upon the extream greedineſs of the Prieſts that did adminiſter in the temple, as if they did look upon the tythes, and their portion in them, with as earneſt deſire as wild beaſts hang over and wait for a prey. So that where this word is uſed to ſignifie food, there is ſomewhat in the circumſtance of the Text, which leaves a touch of rapine and violence upon it. And therefore it is not applicable to the earnings of honeſt labourers, but to the cruel gettings of thieves and oppreſſors. The mountains of prey, ſpoken of (Pſal. 76. 4.) were either thoſe places where conquering Armies divide the ſpoil after a victory obtained; or where robbers preyed upon paſſengers. And therefore I ſhall take the ſubject of this verſe to be the oppreſſors of the poor, not the poor oppreſſed.

Behold, as wild Aſſes in the deſert they go forth.

הן פראים

The particle of likeneſs as, is not in the Hebrew, nor yet the word Aſſes, expreſly. And therefore Mr. Broughton reads ſtrictly to the Original, Behold the wild in the wilderneſs go forth to their work. The word ſignifies wild at large, but becauſe wild Aſſes are extreamly wild, therefore the word is ſpecially applied to them. Thus the Angel ſaid of Iſhmael (Gen. 16. 12.) And he will be a wild man.

פרא אדם Ferus homo.

Behold, as wild Aſſes in the deſert.] The deſert is the dwelling place of wild Aſſes: Tame Aſſes, or Aſſes brought to hand, are about the houſe, or in the encloſed paſtures, but wild Aſſes inhabit the deſert. The word that we render deſert, comes from a root that ſignifies to ſpeak; and the deſert is ſo called by the figure of Contrary ſpeaking, becauſe there is little or no ſpeaking in deſerts; many words are heard only in Cities or places where many people frequent. It ſignifies alſo to lay waſt, becauſe deſerts are waſt and barren places, in compariſon of dreſt and encloſed grounds; ſuch is the place whither theſe ſpoilers go forth as wild Aſſes, דבר מדבר a Locutio eſt per antiphraſin quaſi locus à ſermone remotus.

To their work.

But wild Aſſes work not, only tame Aſſes are labouring Aſſes; ſo that the ſimilitude runs not upon that point; yet we may ſay, wild Aſſes have a work, and 'tis much like that which wicked men do in the deſerts; they work there, but 'tis wild work, ſuch as wild Aſſes are buſied about, the getting of prey. They go forth to their work; and that word ſignifies not only a work, but an Art, or a Craft. Theſe ſpoilers were their Crafts-maſters, and could do miſchief cunningly, as having been brought up as apprentices to it, or ſtudied it like Schollers; they had well learned and were verſt in their work, and what their work was we may learn in the next words.

כפעלם; In, i. e. opere vel artificium ſuum vel artem unde victum quærunt. Merc.

Riſing betimes for a prey.

Like work-men, like work. To take a purſe, or ſpoil paſſengers, that's their work; and they get up and are out betimes about this work; For a prey, they riſe betimes. The Hebrew is, They morning it; that is, they riſe early in the morning; to do a thing in the morning, is in Scripture language, to do a thing diligently and with greateſt intention of ſpirit, becauſe diligent active men are up early; ſo that to riſe in the morning is not only an expreſſion of the time of their riſing, but of their ſpirit and diligence at their work when they were riſen, whenſoever they roſe. The whoriſh woman ſaith to the young man (Prov. 7. 15.) Therefore came I forth to meet thee diligently, to ſeek thy face. The Hebrew is, To ſeek thee in the morning, or, to morning thee; and yet it was in the twilight, in the evening, when ſhe came out to meet him, as is expreſt at verſ. 9. of the ſame Chapter. Here indeed in the Text, To morning it, notes that they took the firſt of the morning for their work; riſing betimes for a prey. And that not without ſucceſs, as the laſt clauſe of the verſe ſheweth.

The wilderneſs yieldeth food for them and for their Children.

Where have they their prey? The Text anſwers, they have it in the wilderneſs. In the former part of the verſe he ſpake of the deſert, and in this latter of the wilderneſs, in both he means the ſame place; both import barrenneſs, wildneſs, and waſtneſs: Mr. Broughton tranſlates, The vaſt ground giveth him bread for his young. We ſay, The wilderneſs yieldeth food for them, &c. It may ſeem ſtrange that a wild wilderneſs, a wilderneſs untilled, unplanted, uninhabited, ſhould yield them food.

I anſwer, Firſt, The Scripture ſpeaks of many wilderneſſes that were planted and inhabited. John the Baptiſt preached in the wilderneſs of Judea (Matth. 3. 1.) and the wilderneſs had many houſes if not Towns in it, ſuch wilderneſſes yield food in plenty. Secondly, The wilderneſs may be ſaid to yield them food, not becauſe they did live upon that which grew in the wilderneſs, or in theſe waſt places; but becauſe in the wilderneſs they took occaſion to ſpoil and rob thoſe that through it travailed to other places. Many get their livings there, where none live, and where nothing is to be had of the growth of the place to live upon. Outrages and robberies are uſually committed in ſuch places; and therefore in the Propheſie of that great Peace which Chriſt ſhould give to his Church (Pſal. 72. 3.) It is ſaid, The mountains ſhall bring peace to the people, and the little hills by righteouſneſs; he names the mountains and the hills above other places, becauſe in or upon them violence is often exerciſed; and to ſay, The mountains ſhall bring peace, is much more then to ſay the valleys and the Cities ſhall bring peace: when there is peace and ſafety upon hills and mountains, we may preſume that there is peace every where. Therefore as when God promiſeth (Iſa. 60. 17.) that in the latter dayes he will make the Officers among his people peace, and their exactors righteouſneſs; he means that he will make all ſorts of men peaceful and righteous, becauſe he will make them ſuch who are uſually moſt troubleſom and unrighteous, Officers and Exactors: ſo when he ſaith the mountains ſhall bring peace, the meaning is, every place ſhall, or that the peace ſhall be univerſal in all places, becauſe mountains and wilderneſſes are the places where robbers and ſpoilers take their prey, and get their ſubſiſtence. And hence it may well be anſwered, why Job ſaith, that the wilderneſs yielded them food, even becauſe that place was fitteſt for them to rob and ſpoil in, who made the ſpoil of others their daily food. Thus, The wilderneſs yields food for them,

And for their Children.] The word ſignifies any that are young, and is taken as well for ſervants as for Children (1 Sam. 21. 5.) The veſſels of the young men are holy, ſaid David to the Prieſt concerning his followers. So (1 Sam. 25. 9.) Thus here it comprehends all that are about them; even all their family and retinue. They and all theirs, all that belong to them have their food in the wilderneſs, that is, there they take opportunity by violence and oppreſſion to maintain themſelves and theirs.

Here we may conſider, Firſt, That Job calls theſe ſpoilers wild Aſſes, nor doth the Scripture ſpeak this in vain.

Hence note, Wicked men are like beaſts, or beaſtial in their diſpoſitions and actions.

David compares the beſt of that ſort, men in honour, to beaſts (Pſalm 49. 20.) Man (ſaith he) that is in honour and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh. David's man that underſtandeth not, is not a man without natural, but a man without true ſpiritual capacity and underſtanding, a man who fears not God (for to fear God that is wiſdom) and who departs not from evil, for to depart from evil that is underſtanding (Job 28. 28.) Now how great and large an underſtanding ſo ever any great and honourable man hath, yet if he hath not an underſtanding in theſe things, he is like the beaſts that periſh. It is not ſaid he is like this or that beaſt, but he is like the beaſts that periſh. Take any beaſt, or all beaſts, the worſt of beaſts, he is the picture of them all, and he daily exemplifies the vileſt of their qualities in his own. The Prophet Micah (Chap. 3. 1, 2, 3.) ſaith that of them, which ſpeaks them rather beaſts indeed then like beaſts; Hear I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye Princes of the houſe of Iſrael, is it not for you to know Judgment? (as if he had ſaid, who ſhould if not you) who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from off them, and their fleſh from off their bones; who alſo eat the fleſh of my people, and flay off their skin, and break their bones, &c. How could the beaſt be more lively acted then by theſe men? Paul fought with beaſts at Epheſus (1 Cor. 15. 32.) which, I grant, may be expounded properly, and poſſibly, beſt ſo; it being uſual in thoſe times of perſecution under Heatheniſh power, to caſt the Chriſtians to the wild beaſts; and for the common ſort to cry out, Away with the Chriſtians to the Lions; yet it is as true that Paul did fight or contend with beaſts in the ſhape of men. And he ſpeaks particularly concerning bloody Nero, a man in the higheſt honour of that age (2 Tim. 4. 17.) I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lion. The Baptiſt called the Phariſees a generation of vipers (Matth. 3. 7.) And Herod is called by Chriſt, that Fox (Luke 13. 32.) And 'tis ſaid of all ungodly men at once (Rev. 22. 15.) Without are Dogs, Wolves, Lions, Foxes, Vipers, Serpents. Dogs, the worſt of Creatures for rapine and ſpoil, do but expreſs the inhumanity and cruelty of wicked men. And becauſe they are compared to wild Aſſes in the Text, I will give you ſome parallels between them and the wild Aſs.

Libertatis ſymbolum eſt Onager.

Firſt, In their lawleſneſs and unſubjection to command; carnal men are lawleſs. The Apoſtle calls them ſo (1 Tim. 1. 9.) Knowing this that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient; not that they have no law, but they live as if they had none; they who love to diſobey the law are lawleſs, and embrace libertiniſm inſtead of liberty. Thus the wicked man is as the wild Aſs, for his licentiouſneſs and lawleſneſs; for ſo the wild Aſs is deſcribed in Chap. 39. of this Book, verſ. 5. Who hath ſent out the wild Aſs free? or looſed the bands of the wild Aſs? What's the freedom of the wild Aſs? Not like that of men who have the priviledge of freedom in an order, but to be free without order. The wicked would be where they will, and do what they liſt; this is the freedom of the wild Aſs, to be free, and to live without bands or bounds. And if we ſhould ask the Queſtion, Who hath ſent out the wild Aſs free? Who hath manumitted him? Surely no man hath done it, but God hath planted it in the nature of the wild Aſs to be free, and to live without bands or bounds. And if we ſhould ask the Queſtion, Who hath ſent out wicked men free? and who hath looſed the bands of the wicked? The anſwer muſt be, Satan hath done it, and their own evil hearts have done it: they have broke the bands, and caſt away all cords from them; they have ſet themſelves free, in ſuch a freedom as it is, which is indeed perfect thraldom to their own luſts, and the laws of the Prince of darkneſs; they are not free by being delivered from the bondage and condemnation of the law, but by caſting off all obedience and ſubmiſſion to it.

Secondly, Wild Aſſes are extreamly violent and impetuous in their deſires or luſts. Jeremy expoſtulating with the Jews about their revolting from, and rebellion againſt God, compares them (Chap. 2. 24.) to a wild Aſs uſed to the wilderneſs, that ſnuffeth up the wind at her pleaſure: in her occaſion who can turn her away? all they that ſeek her, will not weary themſelves, in her month they ſhall find her; there's no medling, no dealing with the wild Aſs while luſt is upon her, ſhe will have the deſire of her heart if ſhe can. Thus wicked men are given up to, and tranſported with their pleaſures and inordinate affections; in their occaſion, that is, when the heat of their intemperate deſires or luſts, of any kind, are upon them, there is no turning of them; only, in their month, when ſorrows and pains are upon them, they may be ſpoken with. We may alſo read both this ſin and the reproof of that people in a like alluſion, Hoſ. 8. 9.

Thirdly, The wild Aſs is an Emblem of the wicked man, eſpecially as he is an Oppreſſor or Tyrant in his unſociableneſs; for as the Aſs refuſeth ſociety, ſo theſe are unfit for ſociety, and are indeed enemies of mankind; they are unfit not only for Spiritual, but alſo for Political, or Civil ſociety. God ſpeaking of the wild Aſs (in Chap. 39. of this book, verſ. 6, 7.) ſaith, Whoſe houſe I have made the wilderneſs, and the barren land his dwellings. He ſcorneth the multitude of the City, neither regardeth he the crying of the driver; the range of the mountains is his paſture, and he ſearcheth after every green thing. Though the oppreſſor live in the City, yet he is like the wild Aſs in this, he cares not to maintain ſociety as he ought; he cares for the ſociety of others only for himſelf, he ſcorneth the multitude of the City; he is for the range of the mountains, where he may take all he can get; he ſearcheth after every green thing, whatſoever hath pleaſure or profit in it, he purſues it for himſelf.

Velocitas timiditatis ſubſidium. Timida eſt omnis Nequitia.

This parallel might be drawn out further; wild Aſſes (as Naturaliſts have obſerved) are fearful. Thoſe Creatures that are moſt ſwift, are naturally moſt fearful; and their ſwiftneſs is a relief to their fearfulneſs. Thus, wicked men are fearful. They only have true courage who fear God; and where the fear of God is not, every other fear is, or every other thing is feared; they who find not a friend in their own conſciences, are ready to ſuſpect every one for an enemy. So that though every wicked man would have all that he can get himſelf alone, yet he dares not be alone in getting it; and upon thoſe terms only he is willing that others ſhould joyn with him in the profit, becauſe he would have them joyn with him in the ſin (Prov. 1. 11, 14.) Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, &c. Caſt in thy lot with us, we will all have one purſe. Wicked men are not for ſociety, unleſs it be in wickedneſs; and yet theirs is not ſo much a ſociety as a conſpiracy. A wicked man, let his ſin be what it will, is glad when he hath partners in doing it, or that others do the ſame with him; not only becauſe he hath a ſuſpicion of the lawfulneſs of what he doth, but alſo becauſe he ſuſpects ſome ſuddain danger in doing it. And hence ſome have noted that the woman, who committed the firſt ſin, did not like to be alone in it; and therefore having eaten her ſelf ſhe gave the fruit of the tree to her husband to eat alſo; ſhe deſired an aſſociate both to countenance her in the act, and to help to bear her out in the conſequents of it. And when they had both ſinned, they ſhewed themſelves like wild Aſſes indeed, running into the thickets at the approach of God, there to hide themſelves both for ſhame and fear. Behold as wild Aſſes,

They go forth to their work.

Hence note, To wrong men, to ſin againſt God, is the work of wicked men.

That's their buſineſs. Therefore in Scripture they are often called workers of Iniqnity; implying that to do iniquity is their trade of life, or that which they live by and daily ſet themſelves about. The work of God is none of their work, nor do they count it ſo, being (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Tit. 1. 16.) abominable, diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. Good work is put into the hand of man by the hand of God, but they have their work from another hand; the luſts of your father ye will do (ſaith Chriſt to the Phariſees, Joh. 8. 44.) that is, ye will do the Devils work; that's their work, and they go forth to it. As the honeſt labouring man goeth forth unto his work and to his labour until the Evening (Pſal. 104. 23.) ſo the wicked man goeth forth to ſin as to his work; and that he doth ſo, is evident upon a four-fold account.

Firſt, Becauſe he doth not ſtumble upon it, but intends it; a godly man falls into ſin, but to ſin is not his intendment; a godly man may ſin when he goeth forth, but he doth not go forth to ſin, he doth not make it his buſineſs. That is properly a mans work, which he propoſeth to himſelf to do, and purpoſeth to do.

Secondly, He goeth forth to it as to his work, for he delights in it, he is pleaſed with it. It is his meat and drink, yea his mirth and muſick to do evil. That is properly a mans work, which though it be painful to him to do it, yet he is pleaſed in doing it.

Thirdly, He goes forth to it as to his work, for he ſpends his ſpirits, his ſtrength and time in it; we do many things which are not our work, they are but by-works, or beſide our work, we beſtow little of our time and ſtrength in ſuch things: that which a man beſtows his time and ſtrength upon, that whereat he labours to ſweat and wearineſs of body, that's his work. Now the time of wicked men runs out, and their ſtrength is conſumed in ſinning; and though they are not weary of committing iniquity, yet they weary themſelves (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Jer. 9. 5.) to commit iniquity, therefore that's their work.

Fourthly, Wicked men are skilful to ſin, they ſin with a kind of art, therefore that's their work; that which is a mans proper work, he hath knowledge about it, and is dextrous at; he doth not bungle, but makes clean work (as we ſay) of that which is his work. A Miniſter ſhould preach the Goſpel like a workman that needs not be aſhamed (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) The wicked ſin like workmen, though the more they do ſo, the more cauſe they have to be aſhamed. The Prophet (Jer. 9. 5.) bewailing the extream ſinfulneſs of thoſe times, ſaith, They have taught their tongues to ſpeak lyes. As if they had ſtudied the art and language of lying; while they told or made groſs lies, they would not make them groſly, but with a kind of fineneſs and neatneſs. As though what a godly man doth according to the mind of God, he doth by grace, yet he uſeth a kind of artificialneſs in doing it; and is therefore exhorted to walk circumſpectly or accurately; that is, to act all his duties with exactneſs; ſo, though what an ungodly man doth againſt the mind of God, he doth it by nature, or very naturally, yet he uſeth a kind of artificialneſs in doing it; and therefore he is ſaid (Pſal. 50. 19, 20.) To give his mouth to evil, and to frame deceit with his tongue, to ſit (as an Artiſt at his work) and ſpeak againſt his brother, and ſlander his own mothers ſon. Thus, they go forth to their work,

Riſing betimes for a prey.

To riſe betimes, and to do a thing diligently, are the ſame in Scripture; to riſe betimes is to riſe ſomewhat before the ordinary time of riſing: now, when a man breaks his ſleep to go about his work, this ſhews that he is induſtrious at it. As ſome wicked men quickly through off their ſleep, that they may do miſchief: ſo (which argues the ſame principle and ſpirit) Others ſleep not unleſs they have done miſchief, and their ſleep is taken away, unleſs they cauſe ſome to fall (Prov. 4. 16.) Their own ſleep is taken away, unleſs they take away ſomewhat which is not their own; they will defraud themſelves of reſt, rather then not defraud others of their right; they go not more unwillingly to priſon after they have done evil, then they go to bed before they have done it. O how are they ſet upon miſchief, whoſe ſleep departs from them unleſs they do it, and who cannot reſt unleſs they trouble others. The ſervants of God, when they are up in zeal cannot ſleep unleſs they do good; as David ſpeaks (Pſal. 132. 4, 5, 6.) Surely I will not come into the Tabernacle of my houſe, nor clime up to my bed; I will give no ſleep to mine eyes, nor ſlumber to mine eye lids, till I have found a place for God, &c. He was ſo zealous for God that if he could he would not ſleep, he would forbid his own reſt, though he had never ſo much mind to it, till he had finiſht that work for God. So ſaith the wicked man, I will give mine eyes no ſleep, nor ſlumber to mine eye-lids, till I have done this or that miſchief, and brought my device to paſs. When the wicked lye waking on their beds, what are they about then? Their waking thoughts in the night are to do miſchief in the morning (Micah 2. 1, 2.) Wo to them that deviſe iniquity, and work evil upon their beds. How do they work it upon their beds? They work it in their thoughts, in their inward ſhop, there they faſhion it, and when the morning is light they practice it, becauſe it is in the power of their hand; they hinder themſelves from ſleep, that they may forward themſelves in ſin; the night is ſpent in imagining, and plotting, and the day in accompliſhing what they have imagined and plotted. Their morning light is ſpent in the works of darkneſs, and the Text ſaith, They practice it, becauſe it is in the power of their hand. They never conſider what is juſt for them to do, but what they have power to do, if they have ability they want no will for the vileſt practices.

Again, as they cannot ſleep ſometimes for deviſing evil, ſo when they have ſlept, their firſt waking thoughts are about evil; and this alſo is a further proof of their extream induſtriouſneſs in doing evil. For as it is with a zealous godly man, his firſt waking thoughts are with God and Chriſt, or about his own ſoul, how God may be honoured, and how his ſoul may be ſaved (Pſal. 139. 18.) O how precious are thy thoughts (that is, thoughts of thee) to me, O God, how great is the ſum of them! when I awake I am ſtill with thee; that is, my thoughts and meditations are with thee as ſoon as ever I awake; here's the diligence of the ſoul after God: ſo the wicked man when he awakes he is ſtill with ſin; and if he cannot awake naturally ſoon enough to ſin, he will force himſelf to awake: and ſo he may be ſaid to awake to ſin, before he is awake; for as ſome nurſe up and feed their ſleep when they are a little awakned like the ſluggard, yet a little ſlumber, a little ſleep; ſo others offer violence to, or break their ſleep, that is, as the Text ſaith, they riſe betimes, even before the uſual time of riſing, that they may get a prey. It is no wonder, if they who ſtick not at breaking the laws of God, break alſo the laws of their own reſt.

Diligence is good about that which is good; it is good to be zealouſly affected alwayes in a good matter, but zeal and diligence miſplaced, how evil are they! it is better to creep in a good way, then to run in a wrong way. Even idleneſs is better then ſuch diligence; yet they who miſplace their zeal and diligence, are commonly more in both then they who place them right; and they who are in a falſe way, make more haſt then they who are in a true. The Scripture notes the extream intenſeneſs of the builders of Babel upon their work. And that's the ſtrain of moſt men in ſuch work as theirs was, the building of a Babel, or in doing that, which will be but a monument of their own pride and folly, or of their rebellion againſt and contempt of God (Gen. 11. 6.) This they begin to do, and now nothing will be reſtrained from them which they have imagined to do; if they have but a mind to it they will do it, let it coſt what it will, neither difficulty nor danger ſhall reſtrain them. See alſo how induſtrious the ten Tribes were in their Idolatrous worſhip which Jeroboam had ſet up (1 Kings 12. 30.) And this thing became a ſin; for the people went to worſhip before the one, even unto Dan; that is, they went a great way to worſhip; for howſoever Jeroboam pretended the eaſe and accommodation of the people in ſetting up thoſe Calves (verſ. 28.) It is too much for you to go up to Jeruſalem; Behold thy gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee up out of the Land of Egypt (as if he had ſaid, thy gods are at hand, or in thine eye, thou needeſt not toil thy ſelf in going ſo far to ſerve them) yet Jeruſalem was nearer unto moſt of the Iſraelites, then either Dan or Bethel were. For Bethel one of thoſe places of worſhip was in the utmoſt bounds of the South (Joſh. 18. 22.) and Dan the other place of worſhip was in the utmoſt bounds of the North (Joſh. 19. 47.) ſo that they were willing to take more pains to follow the Idolatrous inventions of man, then to keep to the Inſtitutions of God. Jeruſalem was nearer to moſt of the ten Tribes then either Dan or Bethel, and yet thither they would go. All the way to ſin, whether in ordinary practice or worſhip, is down-hill to nature; we have both the wind and tide of the world with us, will we ſet our faces Hell-ward; and to be ſure, Satan will never check their diligence who are doing his work, nor take them off from their pace, who are going or galloping his way. We have a clear evidence of this in the caſe of the worſhippers of thoſe two Calves in Dan and Bethel; and it is further obſerved by ſome, that the Iſraelites grew ſo zealous in a ſhort time in that abomination, that they who dwelt near Bethel did even diſdain to worſhip at Bethel; they diſdained to ſerve their God at their own doors; and therefore they that dwelt at or near Bethel would go to Dan and worſhip; and they that dwelt at or near Dan would go to Bethel to worſhip. The heart of man is ſo mad upon Idolatry, that he is willing to be at any coſt or pains for it: He ſcorns to ſerve a falſe God at an eaſie rate; nor is he pleaſed (which is the only thing which pleaſeth ſome who pretend to the true Religion) with a cheap Religion. You may lay what tax you will upon him either of pains or purſe, and he is willing, yea, even ambitious to pay or perform it. Thus the blind Votaries among the Papiſts at this day will needs go a Pilgrimage to remoteſt places; they will travel to Jeruſalem and viſit the Sepulchre, &c. theſe long Journeys they glory in, it is but a ſtep to them, hard penances, not only faſtings but whippings they glory in. The nature of man will carry him two miles at his own bidding, rather then one at Gods. How may it ſhame godly men for their ſloath in doing the will of God, when they hear how induſtrious evil men are in doing their own? How may it ſhame them, that they ſhould take leſs pains to keep a righteous Law, then many do to ſatisfie a filthy luſt? Who like wild Aſſes go forth to their work, riſing betimes for a prey. And whereas it follows, The wilderneſs yieldeth food for them and for their Children,

Note, Wicked men will have it, if it be had above ground.

They that live by rapine will live any where; every mans eſtate is theirs, if they can but get it. They find a harveſt in the wilderneſs, and riches in the deſert.

Again, Note, Wicked men lay up for theirs, as well as for themſelves, by the ſpoil of others.

The light of nature teacheth Parents to lay up for their Children; and they who get an eſtate by wronging others, yet think they are bound to provide for more then themſelves (Nahum 2. 11.) Where is the dwelling of the Lyons, and the feeding place of the young Lyons? Where the Lyon, even the old Lyon walked, and the Lyons whelp, and none made him afraid. The Lyon did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and ſtrugled for his Lyoneſſes. What did the Lyon? The Lyon did tear in pieces! And how much did he tear in pieces? Not only enough to fill his own belly, but to feed his whelps, and his Lyonneſſes; He filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravine. Thus the Prophet deſcribeth wicked men, providing not only for themſelves, but for theirs, their young Lyons and Lyonneſſes; The wilderneſs yieldeth food for them and for their Children.

Further, Some note the conſent of the whole family in wickedneſs, from theſe words; The wilderneſs yieldeth food for them and for their Children; that is, they all agree together, Maſter, and Servants, and Children, all agree together to do miſchief, to ſpoil and oppreſs all they can. Where Parents and Maſters are evil, Children and Servants are ſeldom good. It is rare to ſee hearts united about that which is good; but they are often and eaſily united in that which is evil. Thus the Lord ſpeaks to Jeremiah (Chap. 7. 18.) Seeſt thou not what they do in the Cities of Judah, and in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem? The Children gather wood, and the Fathers kindle the fire, and the Women knead their dough to make Cakes to the Queen of Heaven, &c. All were at work, buſie, very buſie they were about an Idolatrous ſervice; the Children, the Fathers, and the Women act their ſeveral parts. So here, either they robb'd for their Children; or their Children were robbers as well as themſelves. The wilderneſs yieldeth food for them and their Children. Job proceeds in his narrative of their ſin.

Verſe 6. They reap every one his Corn in the field, and they gather the vintage of the wicked.

In the former verſe Job ſpake of the oppreſſion of perſons; in this, he ſpeaks of the ſpoiling of lands and fields; They, that is, the wicked, reap every one his own Corn; that is, by their ſervants whom they ſet awork (They reap every one his own Corn) in the field.

But you will ſay, What hurt is there in that?

The meaning is, They reap the Corn which doth not belong to them. The Septuagint give that ſence of the Text expreſly; They mow or reap the ground or field which is not theirs. And ſo Mr. Broughton, They reap the field that is not their own: Or if we keep to our reading, They reap every one his Corn in the field; The ſence is, whereſoever they find a field of Corn for their purpoſe, they pretend ſome title or other to it, they muſt have it as if it were their own. This is their ſin, and the affliction of thoſe who are their Neighbours.

Note from it, That it is a great ſin to reap the Corn which we have not ſown; and a great affliction when the Corn which we have ſown is reapt by others.

Job imprecates this puniſhment upon himſelf, in caſe he had done, or were guilty, as his Friends had charged him, Then let me ſow, and let another eat (Chap. 31. 8.) And this is threatned (Iſa. 1. 7.) Your land ſtrangers devour in your preſence; that is, they devour the fruit of it, the Corn which ye have ſowed, and the Cattel which ye have bred (Mic. 6. 15.) Thou ſhalt ſow, but not reap; thou ſhalt tread the Olives, but not anoint thy ſelf with oyl, and ſweet wine, but ſhalt not drink wine; others ſhall come and take it from thee. That Idle ſervant charged his Maſter (Mat. 25. 24.) Thou reapeſt where thou haſt not ſown. It is the miſery of ſome, that what they have ſown is reapt by others; and 'tis a wickedneſs to reap where we have not ſown.

And they gather the vintage of the wicked.

That is, The grapes that grow in their vineyards. Mr. Broughton renders, The wicked ſnap off the vineyard grapes; they were in the Corn fields before, now they are got into the Vineyards.

But how is it ſaid, They gather the vintage of the wicked? It ſeems ſtrange, that they being wicked ſhould gather the vintage of the wicked? Some take it plainly thus; they oppreſs thoſe that are as bad as themſelves. And ſo we may take this Note from it.

One wicked man will oppreſs another.

Wicked men ſpare neither good nor bad, neither friend nor foe: They ſpoil thoſe that are as bad as themſelves; we ſay a Wolf doth not prey upon a Wolf, nor a Lyon upon a Lyon; but it is otherwiſe with brutiſh men, they prey upon and devour one another.

Lupus lupū non edit.

Secondly, They gather the vintage of the wicked; that is, of thoſe whom they count to be wicked, and ſo fit to have their goods taken from them; they accuſe them of wickedneſs, and put their names in their black book, as if they were diſhoneſt; that's a truth alſo.

Wicked men often oppreſs the Innocent, under a pretence that they are wicked.

We have a great Inſtance of this about the taking of a Vineyard (1 King. 21. 13, 15.) Naboth was innocent and honeſt; but Jezabel hired two men, To make Oath that he had blaſphemed God and the King; and he was preſently caſt out and ſtoned! His was the vineyard of the wicked, becauſe the wicked had a mind to it. Thus, under a pretence of ſome evil done, they really do evil: And having brought a falſe accuſation againſt a man, they proceed to condemn his perſon, and confiſcate his eſtate, as if all were true.

There is yet another reading (which we put in the margin of our Bibles) ſo plain in the letter, that it needs none of theſe Interpretations to make it out; The wicked gather the vintage; As they took away the Corn, ſo the Wine alſo. We need not wonder, that they were ſo injuriouſly buſie to take that which was not their own, for they were wicked, and they that are ſo, make no bones of doing wickedly; a wicked man is ready for any ſin; the vile perſon will ſpeak villany, and act villanouſly too.

Inter omnia ſimillimum videtur; vineam impii, ejus ſcili eſt quē illi habent pro impio, & ideo opprimendum ſibi judicant. Merc. Vineam ejus quem oppreſſerunt. Vulg.

Verſe 7. They cauſe the naked to lodge without cloathing, that they have no covering in the cold.

Their progreſs in wickedneſs is further deſcribed by their incompaſſionateneſs and cruelty; when we ſee any naked we ſhould cloath them, but they cauſed the naked to lodge without cloathing. And they might be ſaid to do this two wayes. Firſt, By not giving them cloathing: Secondly, By taking away their cloathing; for by naked, we may underſtand not only thoſe that are quite naked, but (as was ſhewed, Chap. 22. 6.) thoſe alſo that have but little cloathing; they took away even that little from them, and ſo cauſed the naked to lodge without cloathing. We ſee by what ſteps of wickedneſs they proceeded, they not only ſpoiled them of their corn and wine, but pulled their very cloaths from off their backs; 'tis bad enough not to cloath the naked; but to take away their cloathing, and make them naked, that's worſe; and (which they alſo did) to let them lodge without cloathing is worſt of all. To lodge without cloathing, notes their continuance in that diſtreſſed ſtate. The Prophet rebuking the Jews for their vain thoughts, puts them this queſtion, How long ſhall vain thoughts lodge within thee? Why do ye (as it were) make ready a room, and a bed for them? So while the naked lodge without cloathing, they continue in nakedneſs. It is a great injury to take away a mans day-cloaths from his back; but to take away his night-cloaths from his bed, is yet more afflictive and injurious. If a man have not cloathing for his body by day, yet if he have cloathing for his bed he may help himſelf; but to cauſe the naked to lodge without cloathing, what cruelty is this? And therefore the Law of God provided againſt it (Deut. 24. 12, 13.) Thou ſhalt not ſleep with his pledge: In any caſe thou ſhalt deliver him the pledge again, when the Sun goeth down, that he may ſleep in his own rayment (that is, in his night-cloaths, or bed-cloaths) and bleſs thee, and it ſhall be righteouſneſs to thee before the Lord thy God: That is, God will look upon this as a righteous act. The Lord was very tender in this point, he would not have the poor lodge without cloathing; but ſome wicked men care not what the poor ſuffer, they neither regard whether they have any lodging, nor whether they have any cloaths to lodge in. They cauſe the naked to lodge without cloathing; ſo That (as it ſolloweth in the Text)

They have no covering in the cold.

The word ſignifies to cover as with a vail, or with a garment. It is applyed to the pardon of our ſins (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe ſin is covered. Their condition is moſt ſad, who have no covering for their ſouls, yet theirs alſo is very ſad who have no covering for their bodies in the cold. To have no covering in the cold winter nights, is not only uncomfortable, but dangerous. Death is a great cold, and it endangers life to have no covering in the cold, or in the froſt, which is the extremity of cold. The word is uſed to ſignifie froſt (Gen. 31. 40.) Jacob tells Laban, Thus I was, in the day the drought conſumed me, and the froſt by night.

The Septuagint tranſlate thus, They take away the covering of their ſoul: What's that? you will ſay: in a ſpiritual ſence, Chriſt is the only covering of the ſoul: But no Tyrant can take away this. Therefore by the covering of the ſoul here, we are to underſtand that which is to a man as his life, take away that and you take away his life. The ſoul is often put for the body, and then the covering here meant is the covering of the body, or that covering that is neareſt the ſoul, or neareſt life; ſo that, there is a great elegancy and emphaſis in it to ſay, They take away the covering of their very ſoul: That is, they endanger their lives by it. Some tranſlate to that ſence, They take away the covering which is next their very skin, they would not leave them ſo much as a ſhirt, that's the covering (in this ſence) of the ſoul. And when we ſpeak of the utmoſt rigour and cruelty of man towards man, we ſay (proverbially) He hath not left him ſo much as a ſhirt to his back. Yet the Prophet expreſſeth the rigorous cruelty of man to man by taking away that which may much more be called the covering of their ſoul (Mich. 3. 3.) They eat the fleſh of my people, and flay their skin from off them. Skin and fleſh are indeed the covering of the ſoul. To ſtrip the poor to their skin, is to take away the covering of their ſoul: How much more to ſtrip off the skin from their fleſh, and the fleſh from off their bones. But to the words of the Text;

Ἀμφίασιν δὲ ψυχῆς αὐτῶν ἀφείλαντο. Sept.

They have no covering in the cold.

This hath in it a double Inhumanity: Firſt, To expoſe them to extream pain, and then to extream ſhame. Not to have a covering in the cold is to be expoſed to ſhame; not to have a covering in the cold is to be expoſed to pain. But what becomes of the poor when they are naked, and have no covering in the cold? The next Verſe informs us about that.

Verſe 8. They are wet with the ſhowers of the mountains, and embrace the rock for want of a ſhelter.

Here's the ſhift theſe poor hearts are put to, They are wet with the ſhowers of the mountains: That word which we render wet, is only found in this place in the old Teſtament; it notes not only to be daſht with rain, but to be ſoakt through with it. We uſe to ſay of thoſe who are very wet, that they are wet to the skin; but theſe being naked had nothing to wet but their skin; and their skin was (if it might be) ſoaked through with the wet; or they were through wet with the ſhowers of the mountains; that is, with thoſe ſhowers which they meet with upon the mountains; ſhowers gather about high mountains, there the clouds engender rain, and there the ſhowers are bred. Travellers obſerve by the eye, how clouds gather about the tops of mountains, and that the rain broods there. This is a further addition to the cruelty of oppreſſors, and the miſery of the oppreſſed; they took away their cloaths, and turned them out of their houſes naked into the open air, and left them to contend with cold and hunger, with all varieties of weather and danger among the mountains. It is ſome help to a man, if he have no cloaths to cover him, yet to have a houſe to cover him; but to have neither body-cloaths, nor bed-cloaths, nor houſe, nor harbour, how ſad is this! And being thus helpleſs, the next words ſhew us what a poor ſhift they made.

Eſt autem qualecunque nuditatis remedium ſi ille qui veſtimentorum operimentũ non habet, ſaltem operimento domus non careat. Aquin.

They embrace the rock for want of a ſhelter.

When he ſaith, They embrace the rock, his meaning is, they make much of it, they are glad of it, for ſo we are of thoſe things which we embrace; inſtead of ſoft warm beds, they were glad of cold hard ſtones to ſecure and ſhelter them from the rain. Again, They embrace the rock; that is, they go into the holes and clefts of the rock; they had houſes (poſſibly) Pallaces before, but now they are forced to dwell in the holes of the rock.

In as much as Job ſaith, they did not only go to the rock for ſhelter, and make a ſhift with it, but embrace and hug it, as being joyful they had it,

Note, Great afflictions make ſmall comforts very welcome to us.

He that is turned out naked, and hath no cloaths to cover him, would be glad to have a thatcht houſe, or the meaneſt cottage to hide himſelf in; he that hath no houſe is glad if he can have but the hole of a rock (Lam. 4. 5.) They who were brought up in ſcarlet embrace a dunghil; he doth not ſay, they are thrown upon dunghils, but they embrace them; they that were bred up in ſcarlet, are now glad of a dunghil to ſcrape in, there to find a mouldy cruſt to eat; there to pick up an old dirty rag to cover their nakedneſs with, or old ſhooes to put upon their feet. So it was in the great famine and deſolation of Jeruſalem. And ſo it was in the late wars in Germany, and the later in Ireland. Some have ſought and contended for a piece of Carrion, for a piece of a dead Horſe, nay for a piece of a dead Man; that which ſtunk above ground they contended for, and having won it, they embraced it, and made dainty of it, as of the moſt pleaſant meat. We that are in our fulneſs and plenty, we that have abundance, ſlight and make light of many good things; but we may ſoon be ſo ſtraitened and put to it, that we would be glad to embrace a rock, or a dunghil, that we would be glad of the crumbs that fall from our tables, and of the worſt ſcraps we leave upon our trenchers. Thus the old Saints are deſcribed (Heb. 11. 36.) glad they were of Caves and Dens, They wandred in deſerts, and in mountains, and in dens, and caves of the earth, being deſtitute, afflicted, and tormented; they were glad to live among the wild beaſts, when they could not live quietly among men. When the Wind and the Sun beat upon the head of Jonah, the Text ſaith, Jonah was glad of his Gourd; a thing of little value, very mean and fading in it ſelf; yet when the Sun ſhined hot, and the Wind beat ſtrongly upon him, then he was glad of a Gourd. In times of plenty and peace, we are ſcarce thankful for goodly houſes, for full tables, and rich cloaths; but a little, and that courſe food, will cauſe the hungry to be thankful. The naked will catch at old rags; and they who have no houſe will embrace a rock. There is a rock, a myſtical rock, whom the Saints embrace for a ſhelter, and rejoyce in above all the goodly houſes in the world, yea, above this whole world. Chriſt is a rock to be embraced in our beſt as our beſt ſhelter; and in our bad dayes he is our only ſhelter. And while we are conſtrained by outward wants to embrace natural rocks for the ſhelter of our bodies, let us remember, how our inward and ſpiritual wants, do alwayes conſtrain us to embrace that myſtical rock, for the ſhelter of our ſouls.

Laſtly, Obſerve, The cruelty of man to man knows no bounds.

We have ſeen in this Context ſeveral ſteps of cruelty, men ravening for their prey like wild beaſts; men invading the harveſt and the vintage of their neighbours; men robbing both the fatherleſs and the widow; men pulling cloaths from the backs of the poor, and expoſing them naked to the cold, and to the rain, to the mercy of rocks and mountains. Thus man, who ſhould be a God to man, kind, merciful, charitable, bountiful, courteous, proves himſelf a Devil to man, churliſh, cruel, mercileſs, yea, ſuch that even his tender mercies are cruel. How cruel are their cruelties, whoſe mercies, whoſe tender mercies are cruel!

VERS. 9, 10, 11, 12.

They pluck the fatherleſs from the breaſt, and take a pledge of the poor.
They cauſe him to go naked without cloathing; and they take away the ſheaf from the hungry.
Which make oyl within their walls, and tread their wine-preſſes, and ſuffer thirſt.
Which groan from out of the City, and the ſoul of the wounded cryeth out; Yet God layeth not folly to them.

JOB ſtill draws out the line of the oppreſſors wickedneſs, or diſcovers the ſeveral wayes of his oppreſſion: We have ſeen much of his bloody work before; here we have more, even higheſt oppreſſion; oppreſſion devoid not only of all juſtice, but of all humanity; ſuch is that which is next inſtanced in.

Verſe 9. They pluck the fatherleſs from the breaſt.

They, that is, the oppreſſors before ſpoken of, do it, either with their own hands, or 'tis done at their command by their miniſters and inſtruments.

They pluck the fatherleſs.

The word notes an act of violence, they lay violent hands upon the fatherleſs. Who are meant by the fatherleſs, hath been opened more then once already. Here the fatherleſs are taken, not largely for any that are deſtitute of help and means, as the word is often uſed in Scripture, but ſtrictly, for children whoſe fathers are lately dead, and they yet in their minority, yea, in their infancy, and in the firſt of their infancy, ſucking children, children hanging upon their mothers breaſts; which exceedingly heightens the cruelty of theſe oppreſſors. To uſe any violence to the fatherleſs, though grown up, is (as hath been ſhewed) a great wickedneſs; to uſe violence towards fatherleſs Infants is much more wicked; but to pull fatherleſs infants from their mothers or nurſes breaſt (which is all the livelihood a child hath) this is utmoſt wickedneſs. And this is not only an affliction to the children, but to the mother a diſconſolate widow, who having loſt her husband, is now bereaved of her child alſo. Thus they add affliction to the afflicted, and ſorrow to the ſorrowful.

'Tis here enquired, what ſhould move them to pluck the fatherleſs from the breaſts, or what their intent might be in this barbarous action?

Some anſwer, That it was their covetouſneſs which moved them to be cruel: They pull'd the children from their mothers breaſts, that ſo their mothers might be the fitter to do them ſervice; they would needs wean the children before they were fit, that the mother might be the more fit to labour and toil for them; or they pluckt the fatherleſs from the breaſt, to ſell them, and to make money of them; when they had murthered the father, and taken all from the widow, they made their markets of their children. So we may interpret that of the Prophet (Iſa. 10.2.) Woe to them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievouſneſs, which they have preſcribed, to turn aſide the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherleſs. So we read, implying, that they took away the eſtate of the fatherleſs, and ſo robbed them. Others give this ſence of thoſe words, that they took away the perſons of the fatherleſs; or more plainly thus, That they ſtole away fatherleſs children, and ſold them into ſlavery. There is a generation among us, called Spirits, who pull children from the breaſt, or enveigle away ſuch as know not their right hand from the left, to make merchandize of them. The ſmell of gain is ſweet to ſome from any thing, even from the ſale of poor fatherleſs children.

Secondly, Others read the Text thus; They pluck from the fatherleſs that which was left after the prey or deſtruction; for the word which we tranſlate breaſt, is derived from a root which ſignifies to deſtroy or lay waſte; ſo the ſence is given thus; They take away from the fatherleſs, even that poor pittance which was left after they had made havock of all that was their fathers.

And take a pledge of the poor.

What a pledge is hath been opened (Chap. 22.6.) The words may alſo bear this tranſlation, They take that which is upon the poor for a pledg, namely, their rayment; not only the cloaths which they have by them to ſpare (a poor man may have a little change) but the cloaths which they actually wear. How contrary this practice was to the Law, hath been ſhewed before, which forbad to take a pledge of ſuch things, as without which the poor cannot conveniently ſubſiſt.

There is a third reading which ſaith not as we, They take a pledge of the poor, but, They take the poor for a pledge. Of which cruelty we read (2 Kings 4. 1.) where the poor Widow complained to the Prophet, that her Husband being dead, the Creditors were come, and had taken her two ſons to be bond-men. Thus here, when they had gotten their cattel (as was ſhewed before) and their cloaths from their backs, then they muſt have their bodies too to be ſlaves and drudges. Here, firſt, I might note, That the ſin of oppreſſion is aggravated in reference to the perſons upon whom it is exerciſed. But becauſe it hath been obſerved from other paſſages both of this and former Chapters, how ſinful it is to oppreſs thoſe, whom we are bound to relieve; and to vex thoſe, whom we ought to comfort: I ſhall not inſiſt upon it in this place. But Secondly, Obſerve, That covetouſneſs knows no bounds.

As it hath been ſaid of envy, ſo we may ſay of covetouſneſs, Covetouſneſs whither wilt thou? Whither wilt thou lead, or rather hurry and force worldly men? Covetouſneſs carries thoſe who are under the power of it no man knows whither: Who can tell where he ſhall ſtop or ſtay when he is once under the power of the ſpirit of covetouſneſs? Such will not ſpare either the fatherleſs, or the widow, not the cloaths upon their backs, no nor their backs nor bodies. If a covetous eye can but diſcern any advantage to be made, it will have body and all. There is no ſin ſo hainous, none ſo baſe and ſordid, but covetouſneſs may be both the mother and nurſe of it. A covetous man will not forbear either for the cruelty of the ſin, or for the ſordidneſs of it: Covetouſneſs is a ſordid luſt: Covetouſneſs is earthy, and muds our ſpirits in earthly things. When the ſpirit of a man is once embaſed by covetouſneſs, he is ready to do any baſe thing. There is nothing here below lower then that ſpirit. And hence the Apoſtle concludes (1 Tim. 6. 10.) That the love of money money (which is covetouſneſs) is the root of all evil; that is, any evil of ſin may grow up from that root; and therefore the Apoſtle adds in the ſame place, That while ſome have coveted it, they have erred from the faith. Covetouſneſs is the root of Hereſie, which we may think far removed from it. But (ſaith he) ſuch have erred from the faith, which may be underſtood of erring from the faith, both in regard of practice, and of doctrine. They have both acted and believed againſt the rule of faith for filthy lucre; and ſo have pierced themſelves through with many ſorrows. Covetouſneſs runneth us into all evil, and provokes many to do ſuch things as pierce themſelves through with many ſorrows as well as others. Covetouſneſs peirceth the poor and needy, the widow and the fatherleſs with many ſorrows; nor doth it ſpare its own Maſter, or ſlave rather, but pierceth him likewiſe through with many more and much worſe ſorrows.

Verſe 10. They cauſe him to go naked without cloathing.

The ſeventh verſe ſpake the ſence of this; They cauſe the naked to lodge without cloathing, and they have no covering in the cold. Job toucheth upon their cruelty again and again: They cauſe him to go naked without cloathing. They will not allow him ſo much as thoſe things which are for neceſſity. The word him, is not expreſſively in the Hebrew, which runs only thus; They cauſe to go naked without cloathing; as implying, that they were ready to exerciſe this inhumanity upon any one that came next to hand, or ſtood in their way. Our Tranſlation ſeems to refer it to thoſe poor taken for a pledge, and ſo the difference between this tenth and the ſeventh verſe is this; in the ſeventh verſe he ſpake generally of the poor, whom they made to go naked; here at the tenth verſe he ſpeaks of thoſe whom they had taken to be their ſlaves and ſervants; They take the poor for a pledge, and cauſe him to go naked without cloathing; they take his work, but they give him no cloathing; they command his labour, but deny him relief. Which ſence is carried further, both in the next verſe, and in the next clauſe of this verſe.

And take away the ſheaf from the hungry.

Some render, They take away the ears of corn; that is, the gleanings which the poor have pickt up and gathered together: They take away the very gleaning from them, and that two wayes; Either firſt, They will not ſuffer the poor to glean after their Reapers: This is to take away the ears of corn from the hungry; ſuch is the cruelty of ſome, that they will not ſuffer the poor to glean in their fields: Or ſecondly, When the hungry have gleaned a few ears of corn, they take all away from them. Againſt which cruelty to the poor the Law of Moſes provided, Deut. 24. 19, 20, 21. When thou cutteſt down thine harveſt in thy field, and haſt forgot a ſheaf in the field, thou ſhalt not go again to fetch it, it ſhall be for the ſtranger, for the fatherleſs, and the widow, that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all the work of thine hands. Now if the forgotten ſheaf muſt be left for the poor, ſurely the ſcattered ears muſt not be raked up from them. We have an eminent inſtance of the liberty of gleaning in the ſecond Chapter of Ruth.

Again, by the ſheaf which is taken away, we may underſtand that little corn which the poor man hath of his own growing in his own field. And Job ſpeaks in the ſingular number, the ſheaf, implying that the poor man hath not many ſheaves, his corn makes but a ſheaf as it were; as the poor man in the Parable (2 Sam. 11. 11.) had but one Lamb, he had not a flock; ſo the poor man hath but a ſheaf, he hath not many ſheaves and ſhocks of corn, he hath not many barns full, as the rich man is deſcribed, Luke 12. he hath but a ſheaf, yet they take that away.

Eſt autem Gomer menſuræ genus quod quotidianum dimenſum & diurnum victum hominis capere poteſt, ergo neceſſarium victū

Thirdly, The word which we tranſlate ſheaf, ſignifies a meaſure which did contain a convenient quantity for a dayes proviſion: This meaſure the Jews call an Omer (Exod. 16. 16.) This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, gather of it every man to his eating, an Omer for every man, according to the number of your perſons, take ye every man for them which are in his tents, ye ſhall have an Omer for every man: So that an Omer contains a convenient quantity for one mans proviſion for a day, and then the ſence ariſeth thus, They take away the Omer from the hungry; that is, They take away meer neceſſary food or daily bread from the hungry. The poor man hath but an Omer, juſt enough for a day, as our Saviour teacheth us to pray, Give us this day our daily bread, or the bread of our neceſſity, ſo much bread as will ſuffice us for a day, our Omer; how much ſoever we have, we are to ask no more, and uſually poor men have no more. The rich have food aforehand, or food for many dayes or years, as he ſaid to his ſoul (Luke 12. 19.) Soul thou haſt goods laid up for many years; he was beforehand with the world; but the poor man hath only enough for a day, if he hath that, and that theſe oppreſſors took away; They take away the ſheaf, or the Omer from the hungry.

abſtulerunt famelicis quem forte & ſpicis minutatim collectis ſibi ſumo labore collegerunt. Pined.

The hungry is put for the poore; and to aggravate the ſin, 'tis ſaid, They take away the ſheaf from the hungry: That is, before the poor man hath eaten his belly full, yea, before he hath broken his faſt, they find the poor man hungry, and ſo they leave him; for they leave him nothing to appeaſe his hunger with; They take away the ſheaf (the Omer) from the hungry.

There is yet a fourth reading, And thoſe that carry their ſheaves they make to go away a hungry. The meaning is, Their labourers in harveſt, or their harveſt men have no proviſion made for them, they work all day, and are ſent home hungry at night. Which ſin is more expreſly noted in the next verſe, where Job taxeth the wickedneſs of thoſe Maſters who are forward enough to imploy poor labourers, but are backward to give them a reward, or rather keep back their reward altogether.

Verſe 11. Which make Oyl within their walls, and tread their wine-preſſes, and ſuffer thirſt.

The laſt reading of the tenth verſe joyns fitly with this verſe; Thoſe that carry their ſheaves they make to go away hungry; and thoſe that make Oyl within their walls, and tread their wine-preſſes ſuffer thirſt; they are both hungry and thirſty who do their work.

Which make Oyl within their walls.

Meridiati ſunt inter acervos. Vulg.

The word which we tranſlate, to make Oyl, ſignifies light or noon-day in the Noun, and in the Verb to be abroad in the light or Sun about noon-day. And hence the words are thus tranſlated by the vulgar Latine; They noon it among the heaps, or, they are abroad among the heaps at noon. And there is a double expoſition given of the words in this tranſlation: Firſt, They are expounded of the wicked themſelves who oppreſs the poor: As if he had ſaid, They come forth to pleaſe themſelves, and take the air, or to ſun themſelves among the heaps of thoſe things which they have taken from others by oppreſſion. But I conceive this very unſutable to that which is joyned with it in this verſe, their treading of their wine-preſſes and ſuffering thirſt; And therefore I lay it by.

Secondly, The words in this tranſlation are expounded of the poor, They abide till noon-day, or till the heat of the day among the heaps; that is, among the ſheaves, or among the oyl-fats, or among the wine-preſſes; poor men labour there unto the very heat of the day, and then are turned home hungry and thirſty, without meat, or drink, or any thing to procure either.

יצהירו Meridiati ſunt, vel oleum fecerunt tam meridies quam oleum à ſplendore & puritate dicitur Hebraice. Eſt enim צהר ſplendere. Vel quia oleum accenſum lucem facit ut meridies. Aben-Ezra.

We tranſlate, which make oyl, and the ſame word ſignifies, noon-day, light, and oyl, becauſe of the light and ſplendidneſs of oyl. The eye informs us, that oyl is a clear body which hath much light and purity in it; and therefore the word is applicable unto either, Which make oyl

Within their walls.] There is a twofold expoſition of theſe words, within their walls; that is, ſay ſome, within their own walls; the poor make oyl within their walls, and tread their own wine-preſſes, yet they ſuffer thirſt; that is, the poor are ſo oppreſt by the rich, that all the wine and oyl they can make for themſelves, will not ſatisfie their ordinary thirſt or neceſſity; or when the poor have made wine and oyl within their own walls they ſuffer thirſt; that is, the rich come and take all from them. Thus we may interpret it of the poor making wine and oyl for themſelves: For in thoſe Countries where Vines and Olive-trees abound, the poor have their quantity and portion of wine and oyl, as here they have of corn or any other commodity, which is of the growth of this Country.

But I rather expound the whole verſe of the poor making oyl for, and treading the wine-preſſes of the rich. The poor labour for the rich, making oyl within their walls, or within their ranks; that is, among their Olive-trees that grow in ranks, and tread their wine-preſſes; yet they ſuffer thirſt; that is, though they labour hard for them, yet they have nothing for their labour; they make oyl, but they have no oyl to anoint themſelves; they make wine, but they have no wine to quench their thirſt; thoſe cruel men neither gave them wine nor oyl (in ſpecie, or) in kind, but uſed them as Poets feign of Tantalus, who was ſet in a river of water up to his chin, but could not reach it; ſo the rich tantaliz'd the poor, calling them to work all day in their oyl-fats, and wine-preſſes, and yet ſent them home hungry and thirſty; or they ſent them home without that which is virtually or amounts to wine and oyl, that is, their wages, or reward; they gave them not that which their ſervice deſerved. This is that ſpecial oppreſſion, which, I conceive, Job intended in this place, both to diſcover and reprove, the unconſiderableneſs and cruelty of the rich towards the poor labouring man.

When men carry ſheaves, and yet are hungry; when they make oyl, and tread the wine-preſs, and yet ſuffer thirſt, this is a crying ſin. The Lord forbad this expreſly (Deut. 24. 14, 15.) Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant, that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of the ſtrangers which are in thy land, within thy gates: at his day thou ſhalt give him his hire, neither ſhall the Sun go down upon it, for he is poor, and ſetteth his heart upon it, leſt he cry againſt thee to the Lord, and it be a ſin unto thee. The Law alſo ſaith (Deut. 25. 4.) Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the corn. Which though the Apoſtle applyeth in two places (1 Cor. 9. 9. 1 Tim. 5. 18.) to ſhew the equity of it, that they who labour in the word and doctrine, or preach the Goſpel (which is ſpiritual food, the food of ſouls) ſhould be comfortably ſupplyed with temporal food, the food of their bodies (though, I ſay) the Apoſtle doth peculiarly apply it to this ſort of labourers, yet it is extendible to all honeſt labourers, in what kind or way ſoever. For if the mouth of the labouring Ox ſhould not be muzzled, that reaps the corn, and treadeth the wine-preſs; that is, ſuch ſhould not be ſent away hungry and thirſty. The Prophet (Jer. 22. 13.) thunders out a threatning againſt thoſe who deal thus with the labourer, Woe to him that builds his houſe by unrighteouſneſs, and his chambers by wrong; that uſeth his neighbours ſervice without wages, and giveth him not for his work. As ſome unrighteous men build chambers and houſes with the gold and ſilver which they have wrongfully gotten from the rich; ſo ſome build their houſes by getting the labour and pains of the poor wrongfully from them; that is, by denying them the wages which is due for their work; Wo to ſuch, ſaith the Lord. And again (James 5. 4.) The Apoſtle chargeth this upon the rich, Behold (ſaith he) the hire of the labourers, that have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, cryeth; and the cry of them which have reaped are entred into the ears of the Lord of Sabbath, or of the Lord of hoſts: As if he had ſaid, The Lord who hath all the Armies of Heaven and Earth in his power, even he hath taken notice how ye wrong the labourer, and he will put forth his power to avenge their quarrel: The Lord of hoſts is the poor labourers friend, and he will be his Avenger. It is a ſin crying for vengeance, that when a poor man hath ſweat out his ſtrength to do ſervice to the rich, he ſhould not have his wages given him to renew his ſtrength, and revive his ſpirits for further labour. The Apoſtle (2 Theſ. 3.) gives a charge, That they that will not labour ſhould not eat; we hear (ſaith he) that there are ſome who walk among you diſorderly, working not at all: now then, they that are ſuch we command and exhort by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work and eat their own bread; and (ver. 10.) If any will not work, neither ſhould he eat. But as they that will not work have no right to eat; what they eat they ſteal: ſo they who work ſhould eat, elſe they are deprived of their right. Wo be to thoſe who eat and work not in ſome kind or other, and wo be to thoſe who do not give them to eat who work, who compel or but call the poor to tread their wine-preſſes, and then let them ſuffer hunger and thirſt.

This ſin is committed not only by the total denying of reward and wages; that's the groſſeſt way of it. But,

Firſt, This ſin is committed when the poor man receives not a reward proportionable to his labour, when he hath not what anſwers his work, but his wages is ſo ſcanty and ſhort, that he is not able to make a living of it for the comfortable (according to his degree) maintaining of his charge; many are apt in this caſe to oppreſs the labourer while they pay him. They will give him ſomewhat, but it ſhall be ſo ſhort, and poor, that he is not able to ſubſiſt upon it. Hence that common ſpeech among us, That there is nothing cheap but poor mens labour; men care not ſo their work be done, though the workman be undone. They care not though the ſweat of his brows will ſcarce (as 'tis uſually phras'd) find him water to waſh his hands.

Secondly, This ſin is committed when the labourer is defrauded of that which hath been agreed for, when cavils are raiſed, and ſo the hire detained. This the Apoſtle James reproves (Chap. 5. 4.) ſpeaking of the labourers hire, which (ſaith he) is of you kept back by fraud; they did not tell them plainly they ſhould have no wages, but they quarrelled with them about their work; ye have not done your work well, or not ſo ſoon as ye ſhould; and therefore they will not pay them, or they pay them to halves. Thus ſome by fraud and cavils detain the labourers hire, as others do it by open violence, or flat denial.

Thirdly, This ſin is committed by delaying to pay the labourer. We find in Moſes's Law (the equity whereof remains to this day) that not only the denying, or defrauding of the labourer concerning his hire, is charged as ſinful, but the very delaying of it. Suppoſe you pay all, at laſt, yet if you cauſe the poor to wait long for what is their due, this will be reckoned an oppreſſion: Therefore ſaith the Law (Deut. 24. 14, 15.) Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor, and needy: at his day thou ſhalt give him his hire (Thou ſhalt not oppreſs him ſo much as by deferring it for a day) neither ſhall the Sun go down upon it. Conſider how ſtrict the righteous Lord, and our great Maſter is in this point, That Maſters ſhould deal well with their ſervants and day-labourers. The Sun muſt not go down upon it, Why, For he is poor and ſets his heart upon it. Which is not to be underſtood like that (Pſal. 62. 10.) If riches increaſe ſet not thy heart upon them; that is, do not fix your affections upon your riches; think not your ſelves happy becauſe ye are rich: But when Moſes ſaith, The poor labourer ſets his heart upon it, the meaning is this, the poor labourer having wrought hard all day, thinks of his wife, and family, for whom he is to provide, and then remembers that at the evening he ſhall have his wages. I (ſaith he) ſhall have ſomewhat at night, though I work hard all day; therefore ſaith the Lord, Give it him at his day, let not the Sun go down upon it; he reckons to have it when he goeth home, therefore diſappoint him not. It may be a dangerous thing to be a labourers purſe-bearer for a night, if he deſire to have his hire, and you able to pay it; to detain his wages upon thoſe terms is ſinful, for he hath ſet his heart upon it, and fully expects it; therefore diſappoint him not, do not make him aſhamed of his hopes. This is the ſin which Job deſcribes here; the wicked take, yea, exact work of the poor, and then take or detain their wages alſo: They muſt make oyl for them, and tread their wine-preſſes, and ſuffer thirſt. This ſin cryeth, and this oppreſſion makes the poor groan, as it follows in the next verſe.

Minus ſolvit, qui minus tempore ſolvit.

Verſe 12. Men groan out of the City, and the ſoul of the wounded cryeth out, yet God layeth not folly to them.

This verſe ſhews two things: Firſt, The ſad effects of oppreſſion, it makes men groan and cry: Secondly, The frequent and long impunity of oppreſſors; Yet God layeth not folly to them.

Men groan out of the City.

They vex not only the Countrey, but the City too; for as before he deſcribed Countrey oppreſſors, ſo now

City-oppreſſors; oppreſſion is a ſin that filleth both City and Country; and here we have, as it were, the concluſion, or a kind of acclamation upon the whole matter. Would you know what work theſe men make; they are ſo high in their cruelty, That men groan under it. The word which we tranſlate to groan, doth not ſignifie any kind of groan (for ſome cry before they are hurt) but that which is cauſed by the greateſt hurt, and comes from the very bottom of the heart, even ſuch a groan as they give forth who are about to dye. Men groan from

Out of the City.] This ſhews the impudence of thoſe men in ſin as well as their impunity. We might reaſonably ſuppoſe, they would not dare to do thus in the open City, though they had done it in a corner of the Country, where there were but few to take notice of them. To do thus in the City, in the eyes of all men, is an argument that they had loſt their modeſty, as well as their honeſty, and were reſolved not only to do evil, but to ſtand to it, or make it good.

And the ſoul of the wounded cryeth out.

That is, The wounded cry out; the ſoul is put for the perſon, or the man; or the ſoul of the wounded is ſaid to cry out, to ſhew the greatneſs and dolefulneſs of the cry. As when Mary ſaid, My ſoul doth magnifie the Lord, it argues that ſhe magnified the Lord with ſtrong affections, as if ſhe had been all ſoul. Such alſo is the force of that paſſage in Deborah's Song (Judg. 5. 21.) O my ſoul, thou haſt trodden down ſtrength: She trod down the ſtrength of the enemy with all her ſtrength. And her ſoul (which was her ſtrength in God) was in it more then her body. So here, The ſoul of the wounded cryeth out; that is, the wounded cry out moſt lamentably, they pour out their own ſouls, while others were pouring out their Blood. But what are theſe wounded? Or how were they wounded? We may take it either of an outward or inward wounding. There is a wounded ſpirit as well as a wounded body; many are wounded whoſe fleſh is whole, who have not ſo much as a ſcar made in their skin; yet here the wounded were ſuch whoſe fleſh or outward ſtate was wounded firſt, and then their hearts or ſpirits were wounded, becauſe of that, with grief and ſorrow.

The ſoul of the wounded.] The word which we tranſlate wounded, ſignifies two things. Firſt, That which is prophane and polluted, and in the verb, to pollute and prophane a thing. Idol-worſhippers are ſo called, becauſe they are polluted as wounded men with blood. And hence alſo it is uſed as a word of abomination, The Lord forbid, ſaid David (1 Sam. 24. 6.) And again (2 Sam. 20. 20.) Far be it from me, far be it from me, ſaid Joab: In both which places, the actions abominated, had the defilement or pollution of blood in them. And the Jews ſpeaking this word, uſually rent their garments, ſhewing the abhorrence and indignation of their minds at blaſphemy, or ſuch like abominations. Now becauſe wounded men are defiled in their blood, therefore this word ſignifieth the wounded. The ſoul of the wounded cryeth out; not only cryeth, but cryeth out: Which implyeth the greatneſs of their wound, and the extream painfulneſs of it.

The blood of Abel, who was the firſt man that ever was outwardly wounded, cryed when he was dead; How much more do they cry whoſe blood is pouring out, and themſelves under preſent fear of death. The ſouls under the Altar cryed how long, Lord? How long? (Rev. 6. 9.) Thoſe ſouls had ſuffered, and were paſt ſuffering, yet they cryed out for vengeance upon their adverſarie: How much more will their ſouls cry who are under ſufferings? The wounds of the wounded are as ſo many wide mouths crying out to God, though their own ſouls ſhould be ſilent and ſay nothing. I have upon other paſſages in this Book met with the ſin of oppreſſion, and the cry of the poor upon it, therefore I ſhall not further ſtay here, but a while inſiſt upon the laſt clauſe of this Context, which holds out the chief and moſt conſiderable matter of it. The oppreſſor doth all theſe wickedneſſes; but what doth God? Surely we might expect to hear of God in the next words, healing and helping the wounded who make this cry, and wounding the hairy ſcalp of thoſe who made them cry; Had not God a fit occaſion put in his hand to ſhew himſelf? Firſt, For the relief of the oppreſſed: And, ſecondly, for the puniſhment of the oppreſſor. He that beholds ſuch actings as theſe, the fatherleſs plucked from the breaſts, the poor made ſlaves, the labourer denyed his wages, the wounded crying, groaning (he, I ſay, that beholds all this) might ſay in his heart, ſurely now God will preſently appear; and indeed God hath often appeared, when the wicked have been in the heat of ſuch actings, and the poor in the heat of ſuch ſufferings (Pſal. 12. 5.) For the oppreſſion of the poor, for the ſighing of the needy, now I will ariſe, ſaith the Lord, I will ſet him in ſafety from him that puffeth at him. Yet here we find no ſuch thing, nothing like the Lords ariſing for the ſaving of the poor from oppreſſion, or for the breaking of oppreſſors. Job ſaw or had ſeen the poor oppreſſed, and the needy ſighing, but did not ſee God coming either with deliverance or revenge? For he adds, though all this be done,

Yet God layeth not folly to them.

Maſter Broughton reads, And the puiſſant marketh not the unſavory dealing. His meaning is not, that God did not know that their dealings were unſavory, or that he did not take notice of their dealings; but that he did not obſerve them, ſo as to appear preſently againſt them. God layeth not, or, God putteth not; the meaning is, God imputeth not, or God chargeth not folly, or (ſtrictly to the letter of the Hebrew) that which is unſavory to them, or upon them. That word which ſignifies a thing unſavory, or without ſalt, in a natural and proper ſence, may elegantly be rendred folly in a moral or metaphorical ſence; for fooliſhneſs or folly is that, which hath no ſalt of reaſon, righteouſneſs, juſtice, or equity in it. Hence the word is often uſed to ſignifie that which is done beſides, without, or againſt all theſe. So it is ſaid (Chap. 1. 22.) In all this Job ſinned not, neither did he charge God fooliſhly; or, neither did he charge folly upon God; it is this word. Job did not think that God dealt unjuſtly or unreaſonably with him, though he had taken all worldly comforts from him, and heaped all thoſe afflictions upon him. And here Job ſaith, God layeth not folly to wicked men, notwithſtanding all the unjuſt and unreaſonable things which they have done, in heaping troubles cauſeleſly upon the poor. Though abundance of folly and madneſs was committed and acted by them, with a high and heavy hand, yet God did not lay folly to them.

הפלה Quod ſit præter omnē rationem & æquitatem. Bez.

Some read the Text thus, Notwithſtanding all this, God doth nothing that is unſavory; we ſupply thoſe words, to them: The Hebrew Text is only this, God putteth not folly; ſo the laſt mentioned tranſlation may well ſtand; for when Job had reported all thoſe things, it might well be queſtioned, How is it that God permits, and ſuffers ſuch wickedneſs in the world? O, ſaith Job, God puts no folly, or he doth nothing which is unjuſt, or unreaſonable, in all theſe things: As if he had ſaid, How unreaſonable and unrighteous ſoever men are in theſe actings, yet God is not unrighteous, God doth nothing unbecoming himſelf, nothing unſeemly or unſavory in it ſelf: Several of the Jewiſh Doctors fall in with this tranſlation; God doth not this (gratis or) without cauſe (ſaith one) He hath abundant reaſon to let that be done, which men do without either rule or reaſon. A ſecond renders thus, God doth not that which is defective or wanting in any circumſtance of Juſtice and equity. The ſence of both which rendrings or paraphraſes of the Text, are given in fully in the Annotations of a modern Writer upon it. God (ſaith he) doth nothing uncomely or blame worthy, while he ſuffers all theſe things to be done, which are not only uncomely and worthy of blame, but abominable, and worthy of the ſevereſt puniſhment.

Hence Obſerve, Whatſoever God doth, he doth it wiſely and juſtly.

God who is wiſdom and juſtice it ſelf, and is to himſelf and all others the rule of Wiſdom and juſtice, can no more do any thing unwiſely, or unjuſtly, then he can ceaſe to be wiſe or juſt; and he can no more ceaſe to be wiſe or juſt, then ceaſe to be; for his Wiſdom is himſelf, and his Juſtice is himſelf, There needs no more to be ſaid, to acquit any action of weakneſs or unrighteouſneſs, then to ſay, God hath done it. For (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 1. 25.) The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then men, and the weakneſs of God ſtronger then men: We may ſay alſo (and in ſaying ſo, we ſay no more then the Apoſtle ſaid before) that, The injuſtice of God is juſter then men; that is, thoſe things which God ſeems to do unjuſtly and unrighteouſly: As when he ſuffers wicked men to devour the man that is more righteous then they, this ſeems to be an act of unrighteouſneſs, yet this is juſter and more righteous then the juſtice and righteouſneſs of men. And if the very unrighteouſneſs of God (that is, what appears to man as unrighteouſneſs) be righteous, then how righteous is the righteouſneſs of God? That, I mean, which appears righteouſneſs in the eyes of all men. This reading and ſence of the words is ſafe, and holds out an excellent point of truth.

That God doth nothing which is unſavory or unjuſt.

Yet our tranſlation is both profitable and clearly ſutable to the Context, and therefore I ſhall a little inſiſt upon that.

Yet God layeth not folly to them.

As if he had ſaid, Theſe men do moſt unſavory and fooliſh things, yet God doth not charge folly upon them. The ſence of this tranſlation riſeth by four ſteps.

Firſt, God doth not preſently call evil men to an account, or charge their ſin upon them.

Secondly, God doth not preſently puniſh evil men for their ſin. To lay folly to a man is not only to call him to anſwer for what he hath done, but to puniſh him as having done fooliſhly. He looks for a ſentence next who hath already received his charge, and is not able to acquit himſelf, and wipe it off.

Thirdly, God doth not preſently ſtop evil men in their work, or make their work like the work of a fool, which ſeldom proſpers, or proves ſucceſſful. The Prophet Jeremy complained of this to God (Chap. 12. 1.) Why doth the way of the wicked proſper? Wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherouſly? As if he had ſaid, Lord, why doſt thou not ſend out a prohibition from thy Court above, and ſtop the proceedings of wicked and treacherous men? They go on ſmoothly, they meet no rubs in their way, but carry all before them; they meet with nothing that doth diſguſt or diſtaſt them. A ſtop in our way is to our ſpirits like hard and unſavory meat to our ſtomachs, that which we cannot digeſt. Thus (ſaith Job) God doth not lay folly to them; he doth not make them like fooliſh builders, that begin, but are not able to carry on their work. God laid folly (in this ſence) to the builders of Babel, he checkt and confounded them in their work, ſo that they left off to build the City (Gen. 11. 7, 8.) But many begin a Babel, a work of confuſion to others, but are not confounded themſelves; they not only begin to build, but finiſh: They ſet up the top ſtone of their work, while many cry, wo, wo to it, and yet God doth not lay folly to them.

Non poſuit Deus probibitionem. Vatab. In Hebræo eſt inſulſum i. e. nihil adverſi & ingrati illis accidere patitur. Vatab. Quaſi inſulſum ſignificet mala naturæ palato malè gratas tribulationes quas Deus impiorum conatibus opponere poſſit. Bold.

Fourthly, we may reſolve this Negative, God layeth not folly to them, into an Affirmative, God lets them go on as if they had done wiſely, diſcreetly, juſtly. And whereas it is ſaid to Chriſt in that Prophecy (Pſal. 45. 4.) Ride proſperouſly, becauſe of truth, and meekneſs, and righteouſneſs. God ſeems to ſay to them, Ride proſperouſly, even in deceit, and wrath, and unrighteouſneſs: They hate righteouſneſs, and love wickedneſs, yet God ſeems to anoint them with the oyl of gladneſs and ſucceſs above their fellows. God layeth not folly to them.

Whatſoever hath ſin in it, wanteth ſalt in it; Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples (Mark 9. 50.) Have ſalt in your ſelves, and have peace one with another; that is, let there be a ſavour of Chriſt, a ſavour of grace, and holineſs, and equity in your own ſpirits, and be ye ſweetly, mildly, amiably, brotherly diſpoſed one to another. They have no ſalt of wiſdom in themſelves, whoſe converſation is unſavory and troubleſome unto others. Sin and folly are more then like one another, for they are the ſame. They have no ſeaſoning in them, who have no goodneſs in them. Righteouſneſs is the wiſeſt and the moſt ſavory thing in the world, in the account both of God and good men. The wiſdom which is from above (ſaith the Apoſtle James, Chap. 3. 17.) is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſie to be entreated, full of mercy, and good fruits, without partiality (towards men) without hypocriſie (towards God.) But the wiſdom that is troubleſome and vexatious, rough and harſh to others, is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh indeed, down-right madneſs, abſurdneſs, folly. Solomon ſaith, Oppreſſion makes a wiſe man mad; but it will appear at laſt, that the wiſeſt oppreſſors have been mad, fooliſh, ſaltleſs and brainleſs men. Such uſe to flatter themſelves, and are often much flattered by others in their projects and policies, for the only wiſe men in the world; but in the end they dye like fools.

Secondly, Obſerve, God ſuffers oppreſſors to go on long before he puniſheth them; and he ſuffers the oppreſſed to cry long before he relieves them.

God is often pleaſed to wink, while the wicked ſin, and he as often ſeems to be aſleep while the righteous ſuffer. Hence that ſad complaint of the Church (Pſal. 44. 23, 24.) Awake, why ſleepeſt thou? O Lord, ariſe, caſt us not off for ever; Wherefore hideſt thou thy face, and forgetteſt our affliction and our oppreſſion? This alſo cauſed David to cry out (Pſal. 13. 1.) How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord, for ever? How long wilt thou hide thy face from me? How long ſhall mine enemies be exalted over me? What, under the oppreſſion of an enemy for ever! While God aſſures his people (in that Parable of the importunate Widow, and the unjuſt Judge, Luke 18.) that he will deliver them, yet he more then intimates that it may be very long before he doth it, (ver. 6, 7.) And the Lord ſaid, hear what the unjuſt Judge ſaith: And ſhall not God avenge his own elect who cry to him night and day, though he bear long with them? That is, though he exerciſe much patience towards thoſe tyrants who oppreſs his Elect; yea, and much patience alſo towards his Elect, in regard of their doubts and deſpondencies, of their fear and unbelief, about his coming to avenge and help them againſt thoſe Tyrants.

Further, Folly imports not only ſin, but the greatneſs of ſin; ſo that when it is ſaid, God layeth not folly to them, the ſence (according to this notion of the word folly) is, that though they ſin greatly, yet God makes no great matter of it; or he doth not charge their ſin upon them, nor puniſh them for their ſin anſwerably, or in proportion to the greatneſs of it, but paſſeth it by, as if it were only ſome infirmity or ſmall offence; He doth not lay folly to them; nor doth he let them feel what egregious fools they have been. The word folly is uſed often in Scripture in this ſence, to note a notorious ſin (Gen. 34. 7.) when the Sons of Jacob came out of the field and heard how their Siſter had been dealt with, They were exceedingly grieved, and they were very wrath, becauſe he had wrought folly in Iſrael, in lying with Jacob's daughter; that is, becauſe he had committed a great wickedneſs in Iſrael. We have the ſame ſin ſo expreſt again by folly (2 Sam. 13. 12.) And ſhe anſwered him, nay my Brother, do not force me, for no ſuch thing ought to be done in Iſrael, do not thou this folly: As if ſhe had ſaid, This is a grievous ſin, therefore do it not. And when the Lord would ſhew Job's three Friends the greatneſs of their error and miſtake in their diſpute with Job, he calls it folly (Job 42. 9.) My Servant Job ſhall pray for you, for him I will accept; leſt I deal with you according to your folly, in that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, like my Servant Job. Thus we ſee that great ſins, whether in practice or opinion, come under this cenſure in Scripture; only we may note that the three Texts mentioned expreſs folly in another original word then the preſent Text doth. There is folly enough, great folly in every the leaſt ſin; but great ſins deſerve more to bear the name of folly in their foreheads.

Taking folly under this peculiar conſideration;

We may obſerve, That, As the Lord in this life doth not puniſh any, no not the worſt of ſinners, according to the juſt demerit and dimenſion of their ſins; ſo he puniſheth ſome, whoſe ſins are very great, but very little.

Though he layeth their ſin to them, yet he doth not lay it to them in the folly of it, or as it is their folly. He doth only touch them with his little finger, while it might be thought he would break them with his iron rod. He doth but chaſtiſe them with Whips, while their ſin calls for Scorpions. The time will come, when God will lay folly to every wicked man, and make their ſin appear, in the puniſhment of it, what now it is in the nature of it, out of meaſure ſinful. Every impenitent ſinner ſhall then find that his ſin is folly, that is, that his ſin is very great.

Non ponit ſtultitiam. i.e. non dico ſcelera, ſed τὴν μωρίαν, quidem aut facta illepida & inſulſa illis imputat. Coc.

Yet a late learned Expoſitor upon this Book conceives, that the ſence is abated and diminiſhed in the word folly, as if it were a term of extenuation, God doth not lay folly, that is, the leaſt ſin to them; he doth not ſo much as charge them to have done irrationally, vainly, childiſhly, or unhandſomely; he doth not only not deal with them as if they had ſinned hainouſly, but he doth not deal with them as if they had done fooliſhly. But whether we take the word Folly, as implying the greatneſs or the littleneſs of their ſin; whether we expound it as a term of diminution, or of aggravation, the ſence of the Text is not altered: In which Job intends only to ſhew, that though men have done very wickedly, yet God doth not preſently render to them according to what they have done. This is true in the firſt ſence of the word, if God do not lay folly to them, as it ſignifies a great ſin; and this is much more true, if God do not lay folly to them in the ſecond ſence, as it ſignifies a little ſin. And this ſence of this latter clauſe of the verſe correſponds fully with the general ſcope of the Chapter, and of the whole Book. For Job argues with his Friends thus; Ye charge me with folly and wickedneſs, becauſe I ſuffer; yet God ſuffers the wicked and doth not charge them with folly.

Et tamen inſulſitatem non deſignat Deus. Jun. i.e. pergere & confirmari non ſinit tam pravam adminiſtrationē; quæ ideo inſulſitatis nomine perſtringitur, quia nec Deo nec hominibus bonis humanū aliquid ſapientibus probatur. Id.

Laſtly, I ſhall only repreſent another tranſlation of theſe words, which keeps ſtrictly to the Hebrew; in which thoſe words, to them (as we render it) are not found, but ſupplyed. And then the Text runs only thus; And yet God doth not lay folly; that is, ſuch things as are uncomely, vain, and fooliſh: As if Job had ſaid, Though I have made report to you of all thoſe oppreſſive wayes of wicked men, yet I aſſure you, God will not ſuffer theſe evil adminiſtrations to continue and be eſtabliſhed; but will at laſt bear his witneſs againſt them, and eminently ſhew his utter diſlike of them, as of that which is moſt fooliſh and unſavory, not only to himſelf, but to all men, who have any taſt or ſence of that which becometh man. Let men do as fooliſhly and unrighteouſly as they will, the purpoſe of God is to rule the World in righteouſneſs, and in wiſdom. The Kings ſtrength (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, Pſal. 99.4.) that is, the ſtrength of Chriſt (who is called, The King of Kings (Rev. 19.16.) both becauſe he excelleth all other Kings, and ruleth all other Kings, he, I ſay) loveth judgment (or righteous dealings with all his ſtrength) and (as it followeth in the ſame verſe) he eſtabliſheth equity; he eſtabliſheth the rule by which others may do equity, and he eſtabliſheth the acts of equity which others do: For ſeeing Chriſt loveth judgment, and alſo (as we have it in the cloſe of the ſame verſe) Executeth judgment and righteouſneſs in Jacob, he cannot but eſtabliſh acts of equity, which are nothing elſe but the execution of judgment and righteouſneſs. And therefore though he bear with unjuſt and unrighteous men a while in their vain projectings and vainer actings, yet he will not eſtabliſh them in it; He will not lay folly, he will not lay it as a foundation for them to build and proceed upon. Weak and ſmall things have often been eſtabliſhed by God, but he will not long eſtabliſh wicked and ſinful things.

VERS. 13, 14.

They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light, they know not the wayes thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof.

The Murtherer riſing with the light killeth the poor and néedy, and in the night is as a Thief.

JOB having given many particular Inſtances of the wicked practices of evil men, ſeems in this thirteenth verſe to give us a general Character of them; They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light: As if he had ſaid, Would you know what theſe men are who commit ſuch horrid wickedneſſes, who oppreſs the poor, the fatherleſs, the widow, who detain the hire of the labourer, and ſend them away hungry and thirſty when they have done their work? Would you know what ſort or kind of men theſe are? I will tell you, They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light; that's their genius, or their ſtrain. This general ſence of the words doth very well agree with and carry on the diſcourſe which Job was upon.

Yet others conceive, that in this thirteenth verſe, and ſo forward, Job is deſcribing another ſort of wicked perſons then thoſe formerly mentioned. As if he had ſaid, I have before ſpoken of thoſe open ſinners and ſons of violence, ſuch as ſinn'd and cared not who ſaw them, impudent ſinners; but now I will ſpeak of a ſort of cloſe ſinners, or ſons of deceit, who do their work no whit more honeſtly, yet more modeſtly then the former, They are of thoſe who rebel againſt the light, they know not the wayes thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof. The murtherer riſing with the light killeth the poor and needy, &c. In which ſence ſoever we take the Context, the difference is not much, though I rather adhere unto the former.

They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light.

He doth not ſay, they are of thoſe who have not the light, or they are of thoſe to whom the light hath not ſhined; he ſaith not, they are of thoſe who ſit in darkneſs, and in the valley of the ſhadow of death; but They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light; as implying the preſence of the light with them, and their contempt of it.

They rebel.] This word is often uſed in Scripture for rebellion againſt any lawful Authority or Power ſet over others to rule and govern them, and that's the importance of it here, They rebel: And from this word Nimrod had his name, who was the firſt noted Rebel that ever was in the World: Nimrod was a great Prince among men; but he became ſo by rebellion againſt God. Here Job diſcovers Nimrods, or Rebels againſt the light. But what was the light againſt which they rebelled?

Light may be conſidered two wayes: Either properly, or figuratively; we may underſtand the Text of light in a proper ſence; and ſome inſiſt chiefly upon that. They rebel againſt the light; that is, againſt the very light of the Sun, or the ordinary day-light: As if he had ſaid, If it were in the power of theſe men they would even pull the Sun out of the Firmament of Heaven, that they might ſin unſeen. I will not, as ſome Interpreters do, fix the Expoſition here, though I grant, this ſence may be taken in: wicked men love natural darkneſs, and hate even natural light, the light of the Sun, becauſe it ſeldom ſerves, but often hinders their occaſions.

Secondly, Take light figuratively for the light of knowledge; ſo it is more true, that wicked men rebel againſt it: And, that light in this notion ſhould be here meant, the words plainly imply: For though ſome wicked men would be willing to be ſhut of the day-light, yet it is hard to ſay they rebel againſt it: And thoſe other paſſages, not to know the wayes of it, and not to abide in the paths of it, are not ſo proper and ſignificant to ſet forth their deſire and endeavour of avoiding natural light. So that the light rebelled againſt is rather an internal light, that light which ſhines into the ſoul, then that which ſhines to the eye; and there is a twofold internal light, againſt which wicked men may be ſaid to rebel.

Firſt, The light of nature, or natural internal light: There is a light of nature, or as ſome call it, a light of the natural Conſcience, which every man carrieth about him, concerning good and evil, or what is to be done, and what is to be left undone. The Apoſtle is direct for this (Rom. 2. 14.) The Gentiles having not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law; theſe having not the Law (that is, the Law of God formally publiſhed to and preſſed upon them) are a Law unto themſelves (that is, they have the Law of nature in common principles and notions of righteouſneſs in themſelves) and (therefore) ſhew the work of the Law written in their hearts. Againſt this internal light the wicked rebel.

Secondly, There is a light of divine Revelation, which ſhines into the ſoul from the Scriptures, or written Word of God. The Word of God is ſo often called light in Scripture, that I need not give particular Inſtances. Divine truths inſpired and dictated by the Spirit of God are there written as with the beams of the Sun. Yet the wicked man rebels, as againſt the light of nature, ſo againſt the light of Scripture, againſt the cleareſt and fulleſt diſcoveries of the mind of God.

Further, Some by the light againſt which they rebelled, underſtand God himſelf, who is light (as the Apoſtle John calls him, 1 Epiſt. 1. 5.) and in him is no darkneſs at all. All that rebel againſt God, muſt needs rebel againſt light, ſeeing God is light. And the very reaſon why the light of Nature, and the light of Scripture are rebelled againſt, is, becauſe the former hath ſomewhat of God in it, and the latter much of God in it: For as God is light, ſo all light is of God. And that light which is of God muſt needs be rebelled againſt by wicked men, ſeeing they moſt of all rebel againſt God, who is light and the fountain of it; for as the Apoſtle John argues about love (1 *Epiſt.*5.1.) Every one (ſaith he) that loveth him that begat, loveth him alſo that is begotten of him. So we may argue about hatred, and the effect of it, rebellion: He that hateth and rebelleth againſt him that begetteth light (ſo God doth, whence alſo he is called the Father of lights (James 1. 17.) he, I ſay, that rebelleth againſt him that begetteth light) hateth and rebelleth againſt that light which is begotten of him. They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Divine truth is as life.

As the Sun gives light to the eye, or outward man; ſo the Spirit of truth gives light by the word to the inner man. When God ſends his word to a people, he ſends light to a people: Chriſt is light, and the word is light; Chriſt in perſon is the light of the world; the Word in doctrine is the light of the world: The truth of Divine Revelation is many wayes anſwerable to the light.

Firſt, Light is pure and beautiful; and the light is ſo pure, that you cannot impure or defile it; ſo is truth: Though many have attempted to corrupt the truth and word of God, and ſhall at laſt be dealt with and judged, as they who have corrupted it; yet the truth remains incorruptible, and ever ſhall. The beauty of it fades not, nor is the purity of it ſtained, by all the filth of falſe doctrine which hath been caſt into the face of it, from the beginning of the world unto this day.

Secondly, Light is pleaſant and delightful; Light is ſweet (ſaith Solomon, (Eccleſ. 11. 7.) and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun: So truth is ſweet, and it is a pleaſant thing to behold and receive the Sun-light of Divine Revelations; where truth is taken in, it doth even raviſh the ſoul and fill it with unſpeakable delights. Truth is as ſutable and pleaſant to the underſtanding, as good is or can be to the will and affections. David found not only delight, this or that ſingle delight, but all ſorts and degrees of delight in the Law of God: And therefore he ſpeaks plurally (Pſal. 119. 92.) Unleſs my delights had been in thy Law, I had periſhed in my trouble. And again (ver. 143.) Trouble and anguiſh have taken hold of me; yet thy Commandments are my delights. All his troubles were over-ballanced and conquered by his delights in the Law; and all his delights and contentments were center'd in the Law. That light was ſo much his delight, that it overcame all worldly darkneſs, and did even extinguiſh all his worldly lights.

Thirdly, Light hath heat in it, and light is accompanied with influences, or conveighs them with it. All living creatures here below are cheriſhed and refreſhed; yea, and things without life, as Gems and Minerals, are concocted and refined with the warmth and vertue of it. And ſo hath truth: The light of the word carrieth heat and Influences with it, to warm the heart and comfort it, to concoct the groſsneſs of mans mind and ſublimate it into an heavenly purity. Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures? ſaid the Diſciples of Chriſts diſcourſe with them, Luke 24. 31.

Fourthly, Light diſcovers and makes manifeſt; ſo doth truth (John 3. 20, 21.) Every one that doth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved, or (as we put in the Margin) diſcovered. Light makes manifeſt the word of God (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 4.12.) is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart; it diſcovers that to us, not only in others, but in our ſelves, which we ſaw not before; we are much, if not altogether unknown to our ſelves, till we ſee our ſelves in the Glaſs of the Word.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly, The light of truth is cloathed with Authority, the truths of God have a Soveraignty over man.

We cannot be ſaid to rebel againſt any thing but that which hath power and authority over us; a man may oppoſe and contend with his equal, but he cannot be ſaid to rebel againſt his equal; we rebel only againſt thoſe that are above us. If a Child oppoſeth his Father, it is rebellion; if a Servant oppoſeth his Maſter, it is rebellion; becauſe Fathers and Maſters have authority over their Children and Servants. All rebellion is the breaking of the bands of ſubjection. And all the bands of ſubjection are broken when the light is rebelled againſt, becauſe the light of heavenly truth is inveſted with all power and authority over us; it hath a power to lift up, and a power to humble or caſt down; it hath a power to convince, and a power to comfort; it hath a power to kill, and it hath a power to make alive; all theſe powers the light of the Word hath. But it hath two powers more eſpecially and eminently.

Firſt, It hath the power of a rule, or power to rule and govern both the hearts and lives of men; the light of the Word doth not only offer advice, and give counſel, but it gives out a command; what the Word ſpeaketh we are not upon point of indifferencies whether we will receive it or no, but upon point of duty. Therefore not to receive it, eſpecially to reſiſt it is rebellion; the light of the Word is as a King; and where the light of that Word comes, there is power, and no man may ſay, What doth it?

Secondly, It hath the power of a Judge; It gives both Law and Judgment. He that rejecteth me (ſaith Chriſt, John 12. 48.) and receiveth not my words (The not receiving of the word of Chriſt, is the rejecting of Chriſt himſelf; and he that rejecteth Chriſt) hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have ſpoken, the ſame ſhall judge him in the laſt day. The Word is now the rule of living, and it ſhall be hereafter the rule of judging. Now it is the rule by which we muſt live to Chriſt, and then it ſhall be the rule by which Chriſt will judge us.

Thirdly, Where it is ſaid, They are of thoſe who rebel againſt the light;

Obſerve, Wicked men cannot abide to be ſeen in what they do; nor do they live to ſee what they do.

They would neither ſee their wicked practices, nor be ſeen in them. They are darkneſs, and they walk in darkneſs. As they walk in the darkneſs of ſin, ſo they would walk in the darkneſs of ſecrecy, that others ſhould not ſee what evil they do; and in the darkneſs of ignorance, that they might not ſee that what they do is evil. They are like thoſe uncouth Creatures, Bats and Owls, that come abroad only in the night, knowing that if they do but ſtir out in the day, all the Birds in the air will gather about them, and hoot at them, becauſe of their ſtrangeneſs and deformity. And doubtleſs if wicked men did but ſee the miſhapen and ugly viſage of their own wayes in the light of the Word, they would abhor and run from themſelves as the moſt abhorred Monſters in the world; and ſo would all men (who ſee the uglineſs of ſin in the glaſs of the Word) abhor them, and point at them as Monſters, did they but ſee them in their ſinful works. And hence the Apoſtle (hinting the general diſpoſition of ſinners) ſaith (1 Theſ. 5. 7.) They that are drunken are drunken in the night. And again (Eph. 5. 12.) For it is a ſhame even to ſpeak of thoſe things which are done of them in ſecret; that is, when they are out of the ſight of men; and, poſſibly had it not been that they were out of ſight, or in ſecret, themſelves would not have done thoſe things for ſhame: For though ſome wicked men, as they have caſt off their honeſty, ſo their modeſty too, and act not only wickedly, but impudently, The ſhew of their faces teſtifying againſt them, they declaring their ſin as Sodom; yet as the moſt of ſinners preſume God doth not ſee them when they do evil; ſo they are unwilling that men ſhould; for though their Conſcience puts no bar to their ſinning openly, yet their credit doth. So that as every wicked man would be glad he did not know that what he doth is evil, and doth what he can to hinder or extinguiſh the light of that knowledge in him; ſo moſt wicked men would be glad that no man knew of the evil which they do; and they do what they can to hinder others from knowing it. As Hypocrites love to be ſeen in all the good they do, and would do no good, were it not (as Chriſt aſſures us, Matth. 6. 5.) to be ſeen of men; They faſt, pray, and give Alms, and all to be ſeen of men; that is, that men may applaud them, and point at them with a Behold (of admiration) There go the men, The charitable men, The humble men, The devout men; and if men ſee them not, or applaud them not, they are as in the ſhadow of death, they are dead hearted to every good word and work. Now (I ſay) as all groſs Hypocrites love the light, or to be ſeen while they are doing good; ſo the moſt prophane and wicked uſually avoid the light, and love not to be ſeen when they are doing evil. For though they are not troubled at the diſhonour they do to God by ſinning; yet to be diſhonoured among men is a trouble to them. They can eaſily venture their ſouls as to the life to come; but they are affraid to do wickedly in the ſight of men, leſt they endanger their eaſe and ſafety in this preſent life. That God ſeeth them not is their hope; that men may not ſee them is their care; and that they may not ſee themſelves is their deſire. They are unwilling to know their duty, leſt their Conſciences ſhould check them for not doing, or for doing that which is not their duty. Thus in every ſence, They are of thoſe who rebel againſt the light.

Fourthly, As rebelling againſt the light, is an argument (as hath been ſhewed) that wicked men deſire not to know what they ought to do, ſo it teacheth us further,

That wicked men will do againſt that which they know.

Men will have fellowſhip with the works of darkneſs, while their eyes are dazled with light, if their hearts have not been changed by it. They would be glad if they might never be troubled with the light; but ſuppoſe the light do come (as many times it doth come whether they will or no) ſuppoſe the light darted upon them ſo clearly and convincingly, that they cannot but ſee and know what they ought, and what they ought not to do, yet they rebel againſt it; either they will not do what they know, or they will do contrary to their knowledge. When ſome of the Phariſees were offended at thoſe words (John 9. 39.) For judgment am I come into this world, that they which ſee not might ſee; and that they which ſee might be made blind: What, ſay they, are we alſo blind? Jeſus ſaid unto them, if ye were blind ye ſhould have no ſin; but now ye ſay, we ſee, therefore your ſin remaineth; that is, it remaineth in the guilt and aggravations of it. For as they confeſſed that they ſaw; ſo Chriſt would convince them that they acted againſt what they ſaw; or that though they had the light, and ſo knew their duty, yet they had done contrary to duty. Man breaks through all the light that ſtands in his way; he breaks through the light both of Nature and Conſcience, both of the Spirit and Scripture, till himſelf be made light. The Apoſtle demonſtrates the former in the example of the old Gentiles, who though they were under a conviction of the power and preſence of God by the works of Creation, and ſo were ſaid to know God, yet They did not like to retain God in their knowledge, nor did they glorifie him as God (ver. 21. 28.) but rebelled againſt that light which ſhone into their underſtandings from the creature. And in the ſecond Chapter of the ſame Epiſtle to the Romans the Apoſtle demonſtrates the latter in the example of the old Jews, who though they were under a conviction not only of the power and preſence of God, but of the mind and will of God alſo, by a divine Revelation, or by the light of the Word, yet they rebelled againſt that Word which they boaſted of; and while they judged themſelves only in the light, and all the reſt of the world in darkneſs, they walked in darkneſs. Behold (ſaith he, ver. 17, 18.) thou art called a Jew, and reſteſt in the Law, and makeſt thy boaſt of God, and knoweſt his will, &c. But how did the Jew anſwer this knowledge and this boaſt? Read that (ver. 21, 22, 23, 24.) Thou therefore which teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thy ſelf? Thou that preacheſt a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal: Thou who makeſt thy boaſt of the Law, through breaking the Law diſhonoureſt thou God? For the Name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles through you. So that wicked men do not only rebel againſt the light to hinder the coming of it, or to keep it off as long as they can, that ſo they may not know what to do, but they rebel againſt it when it is come, and will do againſt what they know.

Fifthly, When 'tis ſaid, They rebel againſt the light,

Obſerve, Wicked men are not only no friends, but profeſſed reſolved enemies of the light, they hate and oppoſe holy truths, or the diſcoveries of the mind and will of Chriſt.

They are in open actual hoſtility, they take up Arms and maintain a war againſt it; not that all wicked men do expreſly ſend forth their defiance againſt God and his Word; but all wicked men carry this defiance in their hearts; and it is to God as an openly profeſt defiance, though it be not ſo to man; God hears the language of their hearts, and he knows that the wiſdom (or beſt) of the fleſh is enmity againſt himſelf, that it is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be (Rom. 8. 7.) That is, while a man continues (as to his ſpiritual ſtate) under the power and teachings of the wiſdom of the fleſh, and is unregenerate, as he is not, ſo it is impoſſible he ſhould (continuing in that ſtate) be ſubject to the Law of God. The Law of God will ever continue as holy as it is; and if the heart of man continue as unholy as it is, how ſhall they agree? A wicked man ſtands not upon terms of neutrality with the Law and light of God, but he is a direct oppoſite or enemy, he rebels againſt the light.

Sixthly, Seeing Job when he had deſcribed all thoſe wickedneſſes which he ſaw done, adds this deſcription of the wicked who did them, They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light! This may be conſidered two wayes (as I intimated before) Firſt, as the diſcovery of a new and a greater ſin then any of thoſe particular ſins already inſtanced in; or as a reaſon why they did break out into thoſe enormous ſins. The former conſideration yields this Note,

To reſiſt or rebel againſt the light of truth, the word of God, is wickedneſs in perfection, or wickedneſs wrought and boyl'd up to the very height.

As God ſometimes brings Judgments upon men in perfection; ſo men ſin againſt God ſometimes in perfection. And if any do ſo, ſurely they do ſo who rebel againſt the light. That ſpecial ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, of which Chriſt ſaith, It ſhall never be forgiven, what is it but rebellion againſt the light, the higheſt and cleareſt light? And the more clear and high the light is, the more danger there is of falling into that ſin. And hence ſome conceive, that before Chriſt came in the fleſh, though there were very high and preſumptuous ſins committed, that yet none of them did amount to that which the Goſpels calls, The ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt. There was Goſpel-light in thoſe times, but it was under types and ſhadows; there was not that clear light, that cleareſt light which was ſhed abroad at the coming of Chriſt; and therefore there was not light enough to ſin againſt, for the production of that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is not only the greateſt rebellion againſt light, but is alſo a rebellion againſt the greateſt light. And here conſider by what degrees ſinning againſt light riſeth unto its full height of rebellion.

Firſt, It is very ſinful and extreamly dangerous not to love the light. See how Chriſt thunders againſt ſuch as do not (John 3. 19.) This is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men love darkneſs rather then light: He doth not ſay, men rebelled againſt the light, he only charges them with this crime, that they did not love it, but loved darkneſs rather. This, ſaith he, is the Condemnation; that is, this will certainly be matter of condemnation againſt ſinners, that when light came to them, their hearts did not cloſe with it, and embrace it. Now if it be ſo ſinful not to love the light, what is it to rebel againſt it? It is very poſſible for a man not to love that thing or perſon againſt which yet he doth not rebel.

Secondly, Not to obey, not to ſubmit to the light, is exceeding ſinful. Jeſus Chriſt ſhall at laſt be revealed from Heaven (perſonally) in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them, that obey him not as revealed (doctrinally) that is, who obey not the Goſpel (2 Theſ. 1. 7, 8.) yet it is poſſible not to obey the Goſpel, that is, to forbear an active obedience to that which is commanded in it, and not to rebel againſt it actively; theſe are diſtinct in themſelves, though ſeldom, if at all, diſtinct in thoſe that do them. Now then if there be abundance of wickedneſs in not obeying the light, in not doing every thing that the light directs us to; then it muſt needs be a more abounding wickedneſs, when the heart riſes up and rebels againſt it. For though (as was even now intimated) we can hardly divide theſe in their exiſtences, yet we may diſtinguiſh them in their natures, or at leaſt in their degrees; for barely not to obey the light in doing the will of God, is a ſin of a lower ſtature, then a profeſt rebelling againſt it. Though in every not doing according to light, there is ſomewhat of rebelling; yet in that which is properly rebelling, there is more then not doing.

Thirdly, It is a great ſin not to ſet a great price upon the light, or not to value it according to its worth; that is, not to value it highly; not to have a high eſteem of it; not to have a higher eſteem of it then of all the Enjoyments and Comforts of this world, is a high provocation. What is it then to rebel againſt it? It is ſinful not to let all go; not to ſuffer the loſs of all for the light, not to ſuffer even the loſs of life it ſelf for the light, this is extreamly ſinful. Therefore ſaith Chriſt (Luke 14. 26.) He that will be my Diſciple muſt forſake father and mother, &c. yea, and his life too; that is, he muſt be ready to let all theſe go if called to it, rather then let go the light or truth of the Goſpel! Now if it be ſo great a ſin not to be willing to ſuffer any loſs, or to endure any torment in ſtanding up for the light; what is it for any ſoul to riſe up againſt the light, or knowingly to withſtand it?

Fourthly, The Apoſtle ſaith, that our neglect of the light of the Goſpel ſubjects us to utter darkneſs (Heb. 2. 3.) How ſhall we eſcape if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, &c. As if he had ſaid, The wiſeſt man in the whole world cannot tell how a man ſhould eſcape eternal darkneſs or damnation (there is no poſſible way, no door of hope to eſcape by) if he neglect that great ſalvation. But what's neglect? It is a light paſſing by of a thing when offer'd; non-acceptance is a neglect. Suppoſe you do no more, when light is offered to you, but only paſs it by, becauſe you have no mind to it, you are not taken with the beauty and worth of it: If you do nothing againſt it, only you do not embrace it, you cannot eſcape. And when the Apoſtle ſaith, You cannot eſcape, without ſaying from what; you may ſay the worſt you can, or can imagine; and that's it which he means you cannot eſcape, even the wrath of God, and death eternal. Now if but to neglect ſalvation or the light, which is indeed, only not to elect it, or not to make it our choice, be ſo damnable a ſin, what is it to rebel againſt the light? To do which is the worſt that we can do, even the perfection of wickedneſs. Surely they who thus rebel againſt the light, ſhall (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, *Pſal.*49.19.) go to the generation of their fathers, where they ſhall never ſee light. They who rebel againſt the light of knowledge, ſhall not enjoy the light of comfort. As they have deſired the abſence of the former light, ſo they ſhall be puniſhed with the abſence of the latter.

Laſtly, As in theſe words Job ſhews who they were that acted thoſe groſs wickedneſſes, even they who rebelled againſt the light,

> We may obſerve, They who rebel againſt the light, will cloſe with, and embrace any ſin whatſoever; or, They who are all for darkneſs, are for any wickedneſs.

They who rebel againſt this beautiful thing light, are forward to embrace the fouleſt monſter; thoſe things which 'tis a ſhame to ſpeak of, or ſo much as to name, theſe Rebels againſt light are ready to do. The Pſalmiſt moves God in prayer to look to his Covenant by this Argument (*Pſal.*74.20.) For the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty; that is, of cruel men, or of men ſo full of cruelty, that they deſerve rather to be called cruelty, then cruel; this ſort of men inhabit and fill up all thoſe places where the light of holy truth doth not ſhine. Now if they who want the light, or have no true knowledge of God among them, are hereby (as it were) prepared for and put on to the acting of all manner of wickedneſs; how much more are they prepared for the acting of any wickedneſs, who have thruſt the light from them, and are in dark places of their own making? The Prophet Hoſea ſhews (*Chap.*4. 1.) that where there is no knowledge of God in a Land (for want of means) there is no truth nor mercy (that is, there is none exerciſed) in that Land, but oppreſſion, deceit, and falſhhood, bear down all: How much more muſt it be ſo where there is no knowledge of God in a Land, becauſe of the contempt of means, and rebellion againſt the light? What wickedneſs will not they do in the dark, who put out the Candle that they may not ſee what they do? Theſe are they who rebel againſt the light; and as it followeth,

They know not the way thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof.

Theſe latter words are an illuſtration of the former.

They know not the wayes thereof.

This not knowing may be taken either for a ſimple ignorance, when we know not, either becauſe we have not an ability to know, or becauſe we have wanted all opportunities and helps to get knowledge: Or, ſecondly, Not knowing may be expounded of a wilful affected ignorance; They know not; that is, they deſire not to know: And ſo I conceive the meaning of they know not, is not that they were ſimply ignorant, or invincibly ignorant, as they are who ſit in a land of darkneſs, and in the valley of the ſhadow of death, but that theſe rejected the land of light, and ſo were under an affected ignorance: They knew not the truth, becauſe they would not.

Again, We may be ſaid not to know that which we do not delight in, approve and practiſe. We know no more to purpoſe, then we preſently do, or have a purpoſe to do when the ſeaſon or opportunity calls us to it. How much light ſoever a wicked man hath, yet he knows not the wayes of light, becauſe he doth not rejoyce or delight in the wayes of light, as alſo becauſe he doth not ſo much as approve the wayes of light; and if he neither delight in nor approve of thoſe wayes, no marvel if he walk not in thoſe wayes, nor (as 'tis in the laſt clauſe of the verſe) abide in the paths thereof.

Non noſſe viam lucis eſt non agere ea quæ in luce agi ſolent. Illud neſcire dicimur quod non probamus.

As if he had ſaid, Suppoſe they come ſometimes into the wayes of light and truth, ſuppoſe they ſometimes do that which the light directs them to, yet they abide not in it. This is a further character of the diſpoſition and temper of wicked men, who though poſſibly for a fit, or for a turn or two they walk in the wayes of light, yet they abide not in the paths thereof. And this latter piece of their ſinfulneſs ariſeth from the former; Why do they not abide in the paths of light? Even becauſe they know not the wayes thereof; that is, becauſe they do not approve or delight in the wayes thereof.

> Whence Note, We cannot be conſtant in that which we do not affect.

If a man doth not know, that is, love and affect the wayes of light, he will never abide in the paths of light; What we love, with that we cloſe; what we affect, in that we ſtick. The reaſon why the wicked abide in the paths of ſin, is, becauſe they love and delight in them. All the paths of wickedneſs are paths of pleaſantneſs to the wicked, and therefore they abide in them. No man would be at all, much leſs would he be long in a way that he doth not like. And that's the reaſon why wicked men, if ever they do this or that particular act of righteouſneſs and holineſs, yet they cannot perſevere in ſuch actings. A wicked man doth good as a godly man doth evil, upon a temptation, not upon approbation; ſome carnal aim or intereſt of profit or credit tempts him to do good; but he doth not approve the good which he doth. And hence it is, that as a good man abides not in the paths of darkneſs; ſo a wicked man abides not in the paths of light. True holineſs doth not begin at action, but at affection. They begin at the wrong end with Religion, who begin with doing rather then with liking. Many do this, and they do that, whereas they ſhould ſtrive to approve, and pray for a love to the truths and wayes of God which they practiſe; for want of this they often apoſtatize and fall back, even from the practiſe of them. No bonds can hold us alwayes to the duties of obedience, but thoſe of love to God, and to the things wherein duty calls us to obey. And as want of this love is the reaſon why man is ſo apt to backſlide, and is (ſo far as a Negative may be) the very ſeed and principle of backſliding; ſo it is the reaſon why God gives ſuch up to the power and ſpirit of backſliding (2 Theſ. 2. 10, 11.) Becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved, for this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe a lye. What is not begun in our affections, will not abide long in our actions.

Secondly, Obſerve, Not to abide in the paths of truth and holineſs, is the mark of an ungodly man.

They who are not what they appear in goodneſs, will not alwayes ſo much as appear good. They that are (as Jacob ſpake of his eldeſt Son Reuben (Gen. 49. 4.) unſtable as water, ſhall not excel, nor are they to be numbred among the excellent ones. The Apoſtle exhorts Saints (1 Cor. 15. 58.) To be ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, alwayes abounding in the work of the Lord. Saints move in the work of the Lord; but they muſt not move out of the work of the Lord, Be ye ſtedfaſt and unmoveable: But in what? In the work of the Lord: That is the ſphere in which Saints move, the ſphere of their activity and uſe; and out of that they dare not move. The Sun in the Firmament is moving continually, but it is in his proper line, called by Aſtronomers, The Ecliptick line: So a godly man is alwayes moving in the way of godlineſs, that's his proper line, and he never moves out of it wholly: He may have (through the power of corruption and temptation) his wandrings and goings aſtray; but then he hath his repentings and returnings into the way again; he cannot abide long, much leſs alwayes in the paths of darkneſs. He comes to himſelf with the Prodigal, and then he comes to his Father; he bethinks himſelf where he is, and comes back into the path where he ought to be; if at any time he walk in the counſel of the ungodly (the gradation is made in the firſt Pſalm) which thing he ought not to do, yet ſurely he will not (as it follows) ſtand in the way of ſinners; or if he ſtand a while in that way, yet he will not ſit down in the ſeat of the ſcornful; he will not reſt nor ſtay there. Now as it is an argument and a mark of godlineſs, when a man finds, that though he hath many failings and wandrings, yet he abideth not in the paths of darkneſs; ſo it is an argument of the naughtineſs of a mans heart and ſtate, when though he now and then hits upon the doing of a good thing, yet he abides not in the paths of light. Vain thoughts (as the Prophet reproves the Jews) lodge in the wicked ſo long, that the Lord complains, How long ſhall vain thoughts lodge in you? But as good thoughts ſeldom come to an ungodly man; ſo they lodge not at all with him; they are great ſtrangers to him, and he uſeth them as the worſt of ſtrangers, yea, as enemies, he quickly turns them off, yea, he thruſts them away from him, he abideth not in the paths of light.

Job having thus ſet forth the ſpirit of a wicked man, by his rebellion againſt the light, by his unaffectedneſs with and unſtayedneſs in the wayes and paths of it; proceeds to give us a further account of his wicked courſes and works of darkneſs.

Verſe 14. The murtherer riſing with the light, killeth the poor and needy, and in the night is as a Thief.

The Murtherer is he that killeth a man without a warrant and authority; every ſlaying of a man is not murther; but to ſlay a man, or to take away the life of a man without warrant, that's murther: And that's the groſs ſin forbidden in the ſixth Commandment, Thou ſhalt not kill, or thou ſhalt do no murther. And this is uſually committed, either in malice to the perſon, or in covetouſneſs after the ſpoil. Some take away the life of a man in malice to his perſon, they hate him deliberately, as Cain did Abel, and therefore they kill him. Others have no quarrel to the man, poſſibly they never ſaw him before, but they covet his goods; and that they may rob him of his goods, they rob him of his life. They are ſuch as live upon the ſpoil, and they will ſpoil, though they cauſe the innocent to dye for it, and themſelves too in the end. In either of theſe wayes, we may underſtand the Murtherer here. The former, becauſe 'tis ſaid in the next words, He ſlays the poor and needy, and there is little gain in their blood when they go down into the pit. The latter, becauſe 'tis ſaid in the latter part of the verſe, That in the night he is as a Thief. But Job firſt ſhews us that this Murtherer is a diligent man.

Riſing with the light.

That is, riſing as early, or as ſoon as the light riſeth. The Murtherer is no ſluggard, the light doth not find him in bed; he takes the prime of the morning, he will looſe no time. Men who love hunting riſe early: So do theſe hunters of men; When the morning is light they practice it, ſaith the Prophet (Mich. 2. 1.) Honeſt men riſe early to go about the works of their Calling, and wicked men riſe early to fulfil the luſts of their hearts. David ſaith (Pſal. 101. 7.) I will early deſtroy all the wicked of the earth: As if David had ſaid, I will riſe with the light to deſtroy the wicked; and here you ſee how the wicked are deſcribed riſing early to deſtroy the righteous, to murther the innocent. So the next words expreſs the deſign of his early riſing; He riſeth with the light: What to do? No good I warrant you; 'tis

To kill the poor ond needy, That's his buſineſs: He begins his mornings work with a work of cruelty; you hear of killing preſently. The Murtherers heart is full of blood, and it will not be long ere his hand be full too; for Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood (Rom. 3. 15.) and they are skilful to deſtroy. But it may ſeem that they are not very wiſe for themſelves, though they are very bloody againſt others: For Job doth not ſay, they ſlay the fat and full ones, but,

The poor and needy.

There are ſome who diſtinguiſh between theſe two, and tell us, that in theſe two words, two, yea, all ſorts of poor are included.

The firſt word, they ſay, intends thoſe poor who heretofore were rich, but now impoveriſhed or fallen into poverty; and that by the ſecond word are meant thoſe who have been born and alwayes bred up in a low condition; But we need not ſtand upon ſuch nicities in diſtinguiſhing between the poor and needy. But it may be enquired, why doth the Murtherer kill the poor? What doth he get by that? Where are the ſpoils which he brings home? There's nothing to be had from them who have nothing, The poor and needy. And it hath been anciently ſaid, The empty Traveller will ſing before the Thief: Why then ſhould the Thief or the Murtherer meddle with, eſpecially why ſhould he kill the poor and needy? What have they? Or what have they done?

Two things may be ſaid in anſwer to theſe Queries: Firſt, It is thus expreſt to ſhew the extream wickedneſs of the Murtherer, who doth not care ſo much for booty as for blood. 'Tis for that he thirſts, his delight is in cruelty, therefore he kills the very poor and needy, the next man he meets with, let him be what he will. 'Tis the ſin it ſelf, or to do wickedly, which ſome men delight in, they care not whether any advantage or profit come in by it; when they have their will, when they have done what they would, that's reward enough for them.

All the true Servants of God love the work which he ſets them, better then the reward which he gives them; and ſo do ſome ſervants of the Devil. Even the Devil hath ſervants who ſcorn to be mercenary. The act of ſin is ſweeter to them then any profit that ſin can bring in; They are exact and perfect ſinners, who ſin out of love to the very act of ſinning: As the higheſt acting in holineſs, is to be pleaſed with pure acts of holineſs; to do them, though we ſhould get nothing by doing them, though we make no earnings, though we ſee no preſent fruit in doing them. Thus (I ſay) to go on in wayes of holineſs when the wayes of holineſs appear barren and unprofitable to us, yea, when they are unſafe and dangerous to us, here's the perfection of holineſs. So the perfection of wickedneſs is to be wicked when nothing is got by it; it ſhews a ſincere love to ſin (as I may ſay) to love ſin for ſins ſake; as it ſhews a ſincere love to grace and goodneſs, to love them for their own or Gods ſake. Hypocrites love the wayes of God for the ſpoil which they find there, for the carnal advantages which they meet with there; were thoſe wayes poor and needy, lean and empty, they ſhould not at all be filled with their company. The prophane will riſe up in Judgment againſt theſe profeſſors, for they kill the poor and needy; They do evil, where they cannot have any hopes of receiving good by it.

Secondly, For anſwer, By The poor and needy, we may here underſtand the innocent and honeſt, not as if all who are poor and needy, were alſo innocent (for there are many wicked poor) nor as if all who are innocent, were alſo poor and needy (for there are many godly rich) but becauſe uſually they are ſo: men that are rich and great may be innocent and holy, but theſe are rare conjunctions; uſually the innocent are poor and needy. Again, we are not to take the poor and needy for them who (as we ſay) have not a penny to buy them bread, but by the poor we underſtand thoſe of the middle or rather inferiour rank, ſuch poor and needy they kill.

But what's their quarrel at them?

Firſt, Becauſe ſuch poor honeſt men ſtand in the light of wicked men, that is, the wicked cannot be ſo wicked as they would becauſe ſome good men are near them, and therefore they muſt be removed out of the world, that they may be out of their way. Or, Secondly, Becauſe ſuch poor honeſt men either have given, or are ready to give evidence, or be witneſſes againſt them before the Magiſtrate: now either to prevent or revenge this, they riſe with the light and kill the poor and needy.

Hence Obſerve, That a wicked man will do his utmoſt to remove thoſe who ſtand in his way, or oppoſe him in his wickedneſs.

He will kill ſome that he may vex others, that's his aim here: The poor and needy are not his utmoſt aim; but the poor and needy ſtand in his way, they hinder him in his other projects. And whatſoever interpoſeth between him and the enjoyment of his luſt, he will remove it if he can. And as he will kill ſome that he may vex others, ſo he will much rather kill thoſe who vex him. Holy David being left under the power of a ſtrong Temptation, ſlew Uriah an innocent man, only becauſe he could not perſwade him to do that which might have been ſome covering of his ſin from the eyes of men. How much more will the prophane do ſo when honeſt men do either profeſſedly oppoſe them in their ſinful works, or diſcover the ſinfulneſs of them.

Further, In that Job upon the freſh account which he gives of the wickedneſſes of men, brings in the murtherer in the firſt place, riſing with the light, and killing the poor and needy; we may here take notice a little, of the greatneſs of this ſin of murther, and demonſtrate how great a ſinner the murtherer is. The murtherer is a ſinner of the higheſt form, and there are two Scripture Conſiderations in general, upon which we may make this out.

Firſt, How ſinful is it for a man to murther a man, when as the Scripture tells us that if a beaſt kill a man he muſt ſuffer for it: (*Exod.*21.28.) If an ox gore a man or a woman that they die, the ox ſhall be ſurely ſtoned, and his fleſh ſhall not be eaten. A beaſt is not capable of ſubjection to a moral rule or law, as not being capable of reaſon, yet a beaſt who is not properly under any Law muſt die for tranſgreſſing this Law, Thou ſhalt not kill; And this ſurely, Firſt, to convince man of the greatneſs of this ſin; Secondly, To admoniſh him leſt he commit this ſin; Thirdly, To aſſure him, that if he do he muſt die; For if a beaſt muſt die for killing a man, then much more muſt man, ſeeing that Law, againſt the killing of a man, was given to men, not to beaſts.

Secondly, The Lord gave a rule to the Jewes, what to do for the removing of the guilt of blood, in caſe a man were found ſlain, and no man could tell who was the Author of that murther, read this at large (*Deut.*21.) from the beginning of the Chapter to the end of verſ. 9. If one be found ſlain in the Land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and it be not known (after diligent enquiry, or hue and cry) who hath ſlain him; Then the Elders of thy Judges ſhall come forth, and they ſhall meaſure (in caſe there be a doubt which City was neareſt to the place where the ſlain was found) unto the Cities which are round about him that is ſlain. And it ſhall come to paſs, that the City which is next unto the ſlain man (for from thence it was moſt probable that the murtherer came, or that thither he was fled to hide and conceal himſelf, therefore) even the Elders of that City ſhall take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke (therein fitly ſhadowing the murtherer, in whoſe ſtead the heifer was to be ſlain; for ſuch are ſons of Belial, men who will not bear the yoke of obedience) And the Elders of the City ſhall bring down the heifer into a rough valley (the very place was to carry a reſemblance of a murtherous ſpirit, and of the act of murther, both being rough and uncouth) and ſhall ſtrike off the heifers neck there in the valley (implying that if they could have got the murtherer into their hands, he muſt have died under their hand) Then the Prieſt muſt come to decide the controverſie (verſ. 5.) and (at verſ. 6.) The Elders of the City that are next unto the ſlain man ſhall waſh their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley (waſhing of the hands, was, Firſt, an argument that blood defileth; Secondly, It was a ceremony which implyed innocence and clearneſs from blood, as appears by a like action of Pilate (Matth. 27.24.) But theſe Elders muſt not only uſe this ſpeaking ceremony, to ſhew their innocency, but they muſt explicitly profeſs it (verſ. 7.) And they ſhall anſwer and ſay, our hands have not ſhed this blood, neither have our eyes ſeen it. And then the Prieſt muſt pray (verſ. 8, 9.) Be merciful O Lord, unto thy people Iſrael, whom thou haſt redeemed, and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Iſraels charge, and the blood ſhall be forgiven; ſo ſhalt thou put away the guilt of innocent blood from among you, when thou ſhalt do that which is right in the ſight of the Lord. This ſolemn Law, and the manner of proceeding upon it, ſhewes three things, as to the point in hand. Firſt, that the Lord is very tender of ſhedding mans blood. Secondly, that the ſhedding of mans blood in any murtherous way is extreamly diſpleaſing to him. Thirdly, That God will certainly bring vengeance one time or other, firſt or laſt, upon the murtherer, ſeeing a whole City ſhould be charged, in ſome degree, with the blood of a man ſlain near them, if they did not publickly and ſolemnly declare and teſtifie their clearneſs from it.

But beſides theſe two general Conſiderations taken from Scripture, and now inſtanced in; There are many other grounded both upon Scripture authority and common reaſon, which ſet forth the vileneſs of this ſin of murther.

Firſt, Murther offereth violence to nature in common, there being but one common nature in all men. And hence,

Secondly, He that murthers another offers violence to himſelf; for though there be a ſpecial ſin of ſelf-murther, yet the murther of another is ſelf murther too, and that not only as it is an offering of violence to common nature, but alſo as it layes the murtherers own perſon open and obnoxious unto violence, and that, both to the violence of a private revenge, and to the violence of publick Juſtice.

Thirdly, Murther deſtroyes ſociety, men will never live together where they find themſelves continually in danger of their lives: Man is a ſociable creature by nature; how ſinful then is murther, which breaks the very firſt fundamental lawes of Nature?

Fourthly, Murther doth not only defile the perſon that commits it, but the land alſo in which it is committed. (*Numb.*35.31,33.) Ye ſhall take no ſatisfaction for the life of a murtherer, which is guilty of death, and he ſhall ſurely be put to death; ſo ye ſhall not pollute the land wherein ye are; for blood it defileth the land: and the land cannot be cleanſed of the blood that is ſhed therein, but by the blood of him that ſhed it. Murther as acted defileth the perſon only that acts it, but murther (when known) defileth a whole land, if it go unpuniſhed. In which caſe there may be defilement upon a land by many other ſins, but this is eſpecially expreſt of murther, as if that among and above all ſins were the land-defiling ſin.

Fifthly, Murther is not only an injury to man, but an impiety againſt God; and that's the reaſon given in the firſt Law which God made againſt it, (*Gen.*9.6.) Whoſo ſheddeth mans blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed, for in the Image of God made he man. For though the body of a man ſlain be not in the Image of God, yet the perſon ſlain is, even the perſon of a wicked man hath ſomewhat of the Image of God remaining in him. And therefore that law is to be expounded univerſally; whoſoever the man is, whether good or bad, righteous or wicked, whoſe blood is unrighteouſly ſhed by man (that is, by man who hath a call to it as being a Magiſtrate) ſhall his blood be ſhed, that is, he by his authority ſhall (upon proof) condemn him to die, and ſhall give him up to execution. A contempt of the Image of God in man is a contempt of God. And he takes it as a high affront to his Majeſty, that any ſhould preſume to deface or ſpoil this image. And this doth more aggravate their ſin, who oppoſe, vex, and deſtroy godly men, becauſe they oppoſe that more excellent Image of God, the new Creature, or the Image of God renewed in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. As there is an image or likeneſs of God in every man, ſo much more in a godly man, for godlineſs is true God-likeneſs. Therefore to ſhed the blood of a godly man is a higher affront to the Majeſty of God. As the new wine is in the cluſter, and one ſaith, deſtroy it not for a bleſſing is in it (*Iſa.*65.8.) So we may ſay, deſtroy not a godly man, for a bleſſing is in him, (Firſt, from God; and, Secondly, for men) but we may ſay much more, Deſtroy him not, for the Image of God is in him.

Sixthly, Murther deprives us of that which is moſt precious in the whole compaſs of nature; And according to the value of that wherein the dammage is received, is the greatneſs of the ſin committed. Satan repreſented life better then all other things (Job 2.4.) Skin for skin, and all that a man hath will he give for his life; Gold and Silver, houſes and lands are but toyes and trifles to life. There is nothing of man except his ſoul (which cannot die) better then his life: And this the murtherer takes away. A murtherer is the greateſt thief, and the vaineſt one, he ſteals away that from another which is to him of higheſt value, yet that which himſelf cannot carry away, nor make any uſe of.

Seventhly, The ſinfulneſs of murther appears in this; That it is not only a wrong to that particular perſon who is murthered, but a wrong to all that have dependance upon him. The life of one man may have an Influence upon many, wife and children, the whole family, and kindred: all relations, and employments, whether more private, or publick, are wronged and ſuffer in his death. Though that which cuts off a mans life cannot cut off his own hope (if he have a well-grounded one) for things to come, yet it cuts off the hopes of all others depending upon him (as an inſtrument in the hand of God) for good things preſent.

Eighthly, The murtherer takes away that from a man which no man can reſtore to him, or repair him in; he takes away that which is impoſſible for him to give again. He that took away a mans goods was bound by the law of God to reſtore it fourfold, or fivefold, or ſevenfold, (according to the caſe) and poſſibly he might reſtore it an hundred-fold; but he that takes away a mans life, hath taken that (which though he would) he cannot reſtore ſo much as ſingle. The law of nature will not ſuffer the murtherer to reſtore life, for 'tis like water which being ſpilt cannot (by any humane power) be gathered up again: and the Law of God ſaith concerning the ſin of murther, that no ſatisfaction ſhall be taken for it, and indeed none can. For though ſome would commute and have (by the ſinful indulgence and cruel pity of unjuſt Magiſtrates) commuted for it, yet none could ever ſatisfie for it. And when Magiſtrates either through foul corruption, or fooliſh compaſſion, have not taken vengeance upon the murtherer in kind, but have ſuffered him to commute, or compound for that ſin, either by paying a pecuniary penalty, or by undergoing ſome puniſhment leſs then death, God hath taken vengeance upon them for it, and hath ſaid to them in his providences as he ſaid to Ahab by his Prophet for the ſparing of Benhadad (1 *King.*20.42.) Becauſe ye have let go out of your hand a man whom I had appointed to utter deſtruction, therefore your life ſhall go for his life, and your people ſhall be cut off by the ſword, becauſe your ſword did not cut off the murtherer. Whole Nations have been filled with blood by this kind of keeping back the hand from blood.

Si magiſtratus ceſſet ab officio deus ipſe injuſtas cædes fame peſte & bellis externis aut inteſtinis ulciſcitur. Merl.

Laſtly, The murtherer hurts others, but he chiefly hurts himſelf. Some expound Lamech confeſſing this with ſorrow (Gen. 4.23.) while he ſaid unto his wives, Hearken unto my ſpeech, for I have ſlain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt. There are divers other Interpretations and readings of thoſe words, and we put in the Margin, I would ſlay a man in my wound, and a young man in my hurt. As if he had boaſted of his ſtrength to his wives, that though he were weak with wounds and hurts, yet he would venture to fight with any man, and doubted not to get victory over him and kill him: and ſo the words carry a ſence like that ſpeech of the Prophet (Jer. 37.10.) telling the Jews that theirs were vain confidences while they hoped to be delivered from the Chaldeans who beſieged them, for, ſaith he, Though there remained but wounded men among them, yet they ſhould riſe up every man in his tent, and burn this City with fire. But as to our reading, I have ſlain a man to my wounding. Some expound it only of a bodily wounding; I have got a wound my ſelf, or I have hurt my ſelf while I ſlew a man: much more is this true of a ſpiritual wounding and hurt to the ſoul and Conſcience; for though a murtherer ſlay a man, and come off with a whole skin, yet he ſlayeth a man to his wounding, and killeth him to his hurt. The Rabbins have a tradition upon that place; that Lamech having been a great hunter in his younger dayes, being then grown old was led forth by his young man to take his pleaſure in hunting, and ſhooting at Deer, and that while he was in this diſport or exerciſe in the field, Cain paſſed by, and the young man pointed him to Cain, Lamech (being dim ſighted) ſhot at Cain, and killed him in ſtead of a wild beaſt; but ſoon after diſcovering that he had killed Cain, turned to the young man his guide in a paſſionate anger, and killed him alſo. This relation they give as the reaſon why Lamech ſaid, I have ſlain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt: but I ſhall not ſtay upon that tradition of the Jewes; and ſhall only make ſo much uſe of Lamechs confeſſion, as at leaſt to illuſtrate, if not to prove, the point in hand, that he who ſlayeth a man doth it to his own hurt and wounding, often to the wounding of his body, eſtate, and honour, alwayes to the wounding of his own ſoul and conſcience. Every ſin in ſome degree or other wounds the ſoul; But the wounding of others to death is the chief ſin (of all ſins againſt the body and outward concernments of man) which woundeth a mans ſoul. The murtherer at one blow ſtrikes through the body of his neighbour and his own ſoul.

Further, we might obſerve from thoſe words in the text, riſing with the light,

> That murtherers, and indeed any ſort of wicked doers, are diligent and laborious to do the commands of their vileſt luſts.

But I noted this at verſ. 5. upon thoſe words, Riſing betimes for a prey, I ſhall not ſtay upon it here, I only add this; Let us not be ſloathful in doing good, ſeeing the murtherer is ſo diligent and early up for the doing of miſchief.

And in the night is as a Thief.

Theſe words may be taken two wayes; For

Firſt, The Particle, as, is by ſome conceived not to be a note of ſimilitude, but to carry on a direct predication, He is as a thief, that is, He is a very thief. We find elſewhere in Scripture, that a particle of likeneſs doth not only note the likeneſs of one thing to another, but the ſameneſs of one thing with another. Taking it thus here, The meaning of the words is as if Job had ſaid, He riſeth betimes in the morning to play the murtherer, and in the night he playes the thief. I have noted the ſame ſence of the particle heretofore, Firſt, from thoſe words of the Evangeliſt concerning Chriſt (John 1.14.) We ſaw his glory glory as the glory of the only begotten Son of God; for Chriſt was not only like the only begotten Son of God, but he was really ſo: as alſo from that of the Prophet (Hoſea 5.10.) The Princes of Judah were as or like them that remove the bound, that is, they did remove the bound.

Secondly, Others keep to the ſimilitude, and ſay the meaning of Job is not, that the murtherer doth turn thief, or that he proceeds from killing in the day to ſtealing in the night; But ſay they, this verſe is quite through a deſcription of the murtherer, as the next is of the Adulterer. So that to ſay, In the night he is as a Thief, imports only this; That in the night he doth carry himſelf very cloſely and very ſecretly, or that as a thief in the night is cloſe and ſudden in ſtealing, ſo is he the murtherer in killing. We have this ſimilitude often uſed (1 Theſ. 5.2.) The Coming of Chriſt ſhall be as a Thief in the night. Read alſo (2 *Pet.*3.10. Revel. 16.15.) in which the ſame ſimilitude of a Thief in the night is applied to Chriſts coming, not as if we could hence conclude, that Chriſt will come in the night-time, but that, whenſoever he comes it ſhall be as in the night, that is, ſuddenly, and (as to any antecedent appearances) ſecretly upon the world, it ſhall be unexpected to them, they ſhall not know the time of it, nor ſhall they be aware of it, though when he is once come, his coming ſhall be accompanied with ſo much light and luſter, with ſo much ſplendour and power as ſhall not only awaken, but aſtoniſh all the world. Thus it may be ſaid of the murtherer, In the night he is as a Thief. And Facere aliquid tanquā fur eſt proverbialis locutio, quæ importat ſecretam diligentemq; abſconſionē.

Hence, it may be noted, First, That wicked men give themſelves wholly to watch opportunities of doing miſchief.

The murtherer riſeth early in the morning, and in the night is as a Thief: he takes his advantages in the day, and he will not forbear them in the night. As it ſhewes the great aſſiduity of Saints in prayer when it is ſaid, They ory to God day and night (Luke 18.7.) day and night reach the whole compaſs of time. So while Job tells us that the wicked are doing miſchief betimes in the morning, and that they are at it again in the night, if not all the night; What can be ſaid more for their watchfulneſs and aſſiduity in doing miſchief? The Apoſtle (Epheſ. 5.16.) exhorteth Saints to redeem the time becauſe the dayes are evil; but we ſee in the preſent example, alledged by Job, that wicked men will redeem the time, that they may do evil. We cannot poſſibly redeem the time, by recalling or bringing back the time which is paſt, but we may redeem the time by our more diligent actings in the time preſent; Now, who can act more diligently in improving the time preſent, then they who are at work both day and night, which two diſtinctions of time include and carry all time. Let not the godly be found idling away the day, while the wicked are found labouring (at their work, ſuch as it is) in the very night.

Again, We may Note, That the murtherer doth his bloody buſineſs not only diligently, but cloſely.

He doth it as a thief in the night. The murtherer, who is at at all times fierce and cruel, will ſometimes be ſubtle and cunning; and this is the guiſe of other ſinners too, eſpecially of the Adulterer, whoſe ſecret conveyances and cloſe contrivances for the attaining of his filthy delights, are elegantly deſcribed in the words which follow.

VERS. 15, 16, 17.

The eye alſo of the adulterer waiteth for the twi-light, ſaying, no eye ſhall ſee me: and diſguiſeth his face.

In the dark they dig through houſes which they have marked for themſelves in the day time: they know not the light.

For the morning is to them even as the ſhadow of death; if one know them, they are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death.

WE have heard many wickedneſſes deſcribed in the former part of this Chapter, and in the foregoing verſe, The murtherer riſing with the light killeth the poor and needy, and in the night is as a Thief. Job proceeds to diſcover the practices of two other ſorts of groſs ſinners, the Adulterer and the Thief.

Verſ. 15. The eye of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight.

Before I come to open the particular terms of this clauſe, or to raiſe any obſervations from it, I ſhall give in ſomewhat about Adultery in general, which is the ſpecial ſubject of the whole verſe. Adultery is the breach of the ſeventh Commandment. And in that Commandment a twofold Adultery is forbidden, Firſt, Mental, or the adultery of the mind; Secondly, Corporal, or the adultery of the body. It was the former which Chriſt intended, when he corrected the falſe gloſs or expoſition of the Phariſees about the ſeventh Commandment, (Matth. 5.27,28.) Ye have heard that it was ſaid by them of old time, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery; but I ſay unto you, whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. By which it appears, that the Phariſees, who were the chief interpreters of the Law in thoſe times, limited the commandment againſt Adultery to the outward act; but Chriſt the Law-giver, who beſt knew the mind of the Law, enlarged it to the prohibition of the internal act, and told them that there is a heart adultery, an adultery in thought, occaſion'd by a vain or wanton glance and caſt of the eye, as there's an Adultery of the body or in the outward act.

The text in hand ſpeaks only of corporal Adultery, though the other be not excluded as being the root of it. And this corporal adultery is taken in Scripture ſometimes ſtrictly, when either man or woman to ſatisfie their luſt with others break their conjugal Bond; and is either that act of uncleanneſs which is committed by perſons who are both engaged by marriage covenant to mutual faithfulneſs, or when at leaſt one of them is under that engagement. This latter is properly called ſingle adultery; the former is double Adultery, or corporal Adultery in the higheſt and ſtricteſt ſence of it. Secondly, Corporal Adultery is taken more largely, or in a lower ſence, for fornication or bodily uncleanneſs of any kind between man and woman. And ſo it is intended in the Commandment given againſt it; Thou ſhalt not commit Adultery.

Latinæ voces adulteri & adulteræ hanc vim habent ut adulter ad alteram, adultera ad alterum ſe conferat. Feſt.

The foulneſs and greatneſs of this ſin of adultery (take it in either ſence) appears many wayes. The Apoſtle put it in the front of the works of the fleſh (*Gal.*5.19.) Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe, adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs; there is adultery with all it's retinue; and (*Col.*3.5.) it is ſet as the firſt of our earthly members, which are to be mortified; mortifie therefore your members which are upon earth, fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affection. Whereas in other Scriptures fornication is included under adultery, in this adultery is included under fornication.

Adultery ſtrictly taken, hath a ſpecial ſinfulneſs in it. Firſt, as it is the breach of a Covenant; every ſin hath in it a breach of Covenant in general, but there is a ſuperadded breach of a ſpecial Covenant in this ſin. Hence Solomon ſaith of the Adultereſs (*Prov.*2.17.) that ſhe forſaketh the guide of her youth. One of the Rabbins expounds this woman myſtically for the ſenſitive appetite, and that ſhe is ſaid to forſake the guide of her youth, becauſe in youth appetite commonly forſakes reaſon, which is appointed to be the guide of it. But we may expound this guide either for her father, who had the government of her in her younger years, or elſe for her husband whom ſhe married in her youth, and whom by marriage ſhe received as the guide of her youth, under God, who is indeed the guide both of our youth and old age; and what guide ſoever the wife forſaketh, ſhe chiefly forſaketh God who is her chief guide, and forgetteth the covenant of her God, that is, the covenant which God gave her in reference to that particular eſtate of marriage. Every believer is in covenant with God, in reference to his ſpiritual eſtate; but a married perſon hath a covenant with God in reference to that civil ſtate; And Adultery is the breach of this covenant.

Secondly, This ſhews the ſinfulneſs of Adultery, that it is a ſin which cannot be committed alone; there is alwayes a double ſin, in this ſin of adultery, two are defiled with it at once. In which ſence it is worſe then murther, and theſt; For theſe may be committed, and but one defiled with the ſinfulneſs of them. He that robs is guilty of ſtealing, not he that is robbed; He that murthers is guilty of blood, not he that is murthered; But in Adultery, the Agent and Patient are both alike guilty of uncleanneſs; the defilement reacheth both.

Thirdly, The evil of this ſin appears, by the many and manifold evils which it brings with it. Solomon hath ſet them forth very particularly and fully (*Prov.*6.26, 27,28, 29,30.) Luſt not after her (that is, after the ſtrange woman) in thine heart, neither let her take thee with her eyelids, (why not? Firſt, thou mayeſt be undone in thy outward ſtate) by means of a whoriſh woman a man is brought to a piece of bread, (that is, he is ruin'd in all he hath by it, and brought to ſo low an ebbe of poverty, that he hath ſcarce the worth of a piece of bread left) And (which is both a ſecond and a worſe evil) the adultereſs will hunt for the precious life, which may either be underſtood of the natural life, (ſometimes the adulterer is murther'd by the adultereſs) or of that which is a more precious life then the natural, even the life of the ſoul, or the eternal good and happineſs of the ſoul, ſhe cares not to deſtroy body and ſoul for ever (ſo her luſt may be ſatisfied) that's the gain which the adultereſs purſues; ſhe hunts for the precious life, the life of the ſoul. Thirdly, Solomon deſcribes the evil of this ſin in verſ. 27,28. by the guilt which it inevitably brings with it; Can a man take fire in his boſom, and his cloaths not be burnt? can a man go upon hot coals and his feet not be burnt? So he that goeth into his neighbours wife, whoſoever toucheth her ſhall not be innocent, that is, he ſhall ſurely be very guilty. As if he had ſaid, You can no more retain your innocency, while you commit this folly, then you can avoid being burnt when you carry fire in your boſom, or tread upon burning coals. Fourthly, the ſinfulneſs of this ſin appears, by the compariſon which the Scripture makes between it and theft, (*Prov.*6.30,31.) Men do not deſpiſe a thief, if he ſteal to ſatisfie his ſoul when he is hungry; it is a ſin to ſteal, though it be to ſatisfie hunger; no neceſſity can excuſe iniquity; and we ſhould rather chuſe to ſtarve then ſteal, if at leſt that may be called ſtealing, which is done meerly to avoid ſtarving. Therefore (ſaith Solomon) if he be found, he ſhall reſtore ſevenfold, he ſhall give all the ſubſtance of his houſe; yet this ſin of ſtealing which is to ſatisfie hunger is but a ſmall ſin compared with Adultery, which is only to ſatisfie a mans luſt and beaſtial ſenſualneſs. This Solomon affirms to us in the next words; But whoſo committeth adultery with a woman lacketh underſtanding, he that doth it deſtroyeth his own ſoul. He that ſtealeth upon thoſe terms, doth it for want, but he that commits adultery upon any terms doth it for wantonneſs. He that ſtealeth doth it for lack of bread, but he that committeth adultery doth it for lack of underſtanding. He that ſtealeth when he is hungry doth it to ſatisfie his ſoul, but he that committeth adultery (though he doth it not with an intent to deſtroy his ſoul, yet in the iſſue he) deſtroyeth his own ſoul. But is not ſtealing a ſoul deſtroying ſin too? I anſwer, it is; and ſo is every ſin in its own nature, but there are ſome ſins (and among theſe adultery is a chief one) which in the event prove uſually more deſtructive to the ſoul, and have oftner deſtroyed it. And as this ſin doth very often deſtroy the ſoul as to its happineſs hereafter; ſo it deſtroyeth it as to its abiding here. Thus the ſoul may be ſaid to be deſtroyed when the life is deſtroyed; and this deſtruction of the ſoul Solomon ſeems directly to aim at, as the next words lead us to Judge (verſ. 33.) A wound and diſhonour ſhall he get, and his reproach ſhall not be wiped away; for jealouſie is the rage of a man, therefore he will not ſpare in the day of vengeance.

Ferenda eſt magis omnis neceſſitas quam perpetranda aliqua iniquitas.

Another Scripture to be much minded in this point is that of S. Paul (1 *Cor.*6. 13,14.) where writing to the Church of Corinth (among which people that ſin was very common before they were called to the knowledge of Chriſt by the preaching of the Goſpel) he urgeth many arguments upon their conſciences, to prevent their relapſe into it. And we may diſcover ſix arguments which the Apoſtle uſeth in that place; I ſhall only touch them, and ſo return to the Text in hand. The firſt appears at the cloſe of verſ. 13. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body; As if he had ſaid, you put the body to a uſe for which it was never intended, the body is not for fornication, but, for the Lord, that is, for the Lords uſe and ſervice; and the Lord is for the body, that is, for the good and ſalvation of the body. Such is the wonderful goodneſs of God, that look in whatſoever we are for him, he is for us; As our bodies are for the Lords ſervice as well as our ſouls, ſo the Lord is for the good of our bodies, as well as for the good of our ſouls. And therefore our bodies ought to be imployed for his glory in every thing. The ſecond argument is taken from the reſurrection; God hath both raiſed up the Lord, and will alſo raiſe up us by his own power (verſ. 14.) As if he had ſaid, your bodies ſhall be raiſed again; if they were to be loſt in the duſt, then it were no great matter how you did defile, and abuſe them, but as God hath raiſed up the Lord, ſo he will raiſe you up. Seeing then God hath promiſed, and you are ſuch as profeſs faith in that promiſe, that your bodies ſhall be raiſed up out of the duſt, to put on glory as a Garment in the laſt day; therefore in the mean time (while your bodies are in your keeping) do ye keep your bodies pure. Thirdly, He argues thus with the believing Corinthians, (verſ. 15.) Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt; not only is the ſoul of a believer the member of Chriſt, but his body too; yet it is not properly either the body or the ſoul that is a member of Chriſt, but the perſon; for the union is made between Chriſt and the perſon of a believer, conſiſting of ſoul and body. But thus the Apoſtle argues, Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt: ſhall I then take the members of Chriſt, and make them members of an harlot? God forbid. What! will ye diſpoſe the members of Chriſt to ſo baſe a uſe? will ye who profeſs your ſelves joyned to Chriſt, condeſcend to ſuch a baſe conjunction? And hence he expoſtulates at verſ. 16,17. What? know ye not that he which is joyned to an harlot is one body for two, ſaith he, ſhall be one fleſh; (They who abuſe marriage, are as the married. The Adulterer and the harlot are one fleſh as well as the husband and the wife) but he that is joyned to the Lord (by faith and love) is one ſpirit: He hath a nearer and a more noble union then that of fleſh, and therefore he ought to maintain the hight of honour and purity, both in mind and body; and as he is one Spirit with the Lord, ſo to make it good that he is guided and governed by one Spirit, and that The holy One, We have a fourth argument at verſ. 18. Flee fornication, why ſo? The reaſon is added, every ſin that a man doth is without the body, but he that committeth fornication, ſinneth againſt his own body. But are all other ſins without the body? I anſwer, Firſt, other ſins have the body as an inſtrument for the committing of them; if a man ſteal, the body is an inſtrument; if a man commit murther, the body is an inſtrument: but in this ſin the body is more inſtrumental then in other ſins, the body is chiefly inſtrumental, in this ſin: ſo that comparatively to this, every ſin that a man doth is without the body. And therefore this ſin is more againſt the body then other ſins are. Again, Secondly, when the Apoſtle ſaith, every ſin is without the body, he is to be underſtood of thoſe ſins which are external, otherwiſe every ſin that a man commits is not without the body; there are a thouſand acts of ſin that are done within the body, or in the ſoul, envy, wrath, malice, are ſins within the body, being bred and acted in the Spirit. But we may ſay of every ſin which is external, (about which the diſcourſe there is) that comparatively to this ſin of adultery, and fornication, it is without the body. I anſwer, Thirdly, The body is not only the inſtrument of this ſin, but the object of it alſo; for the unclean perſon doth not only ſin with his body, but he ſins againſt his body. Adultery leaves that blot and brand of ignominy and baſeneſs upon the body, which no other ſin doth, making it the member of a harlot, as was toucht before, and degrading it from that excellent honour whereunto God advanced it, even in a natural conſideration, much more degrading it from that honour, whereunto God hath advanced it in a ſpiritual conſideration. And as that was the Apoſtles third argument, ſo, upon another relation of the bodies of believers, he makes his fifth argument, which is laid down at verſ. 19. What? know you not that your body is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own; As if he had ſaid, A Temple is a holy and ſacred thing, and will ye defile the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt? The Jews, how angry were they? what an uproar did they make, when they thought Paul had brought Greeks into the Temple, who by the law were looked upon as prophane perſons, and ſo not to be admitted to come there; they cry out, This is the man that hath polluted this holy place (Act. 21. 28.) Much more may it be urged upon Goſpel-profeſſors, what I commit ſuch a ſin as this? what! pollute the Temple of God? Know ye not (which every believer is bound to know) that your body is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt as well as the ſoul. The laſt argument concludes verſ. 19. and is proſecuted in verſ. 20. Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God in your body, and in your ſpirit which are Gods. Redemption is a ſtrong engagement, ye are bought, and dearly paid for, ye are bought with a price, ye are not your own. Some (who take liberty in this ſin) would excuſe themſelves by the contrary argument. Our bodies (ſay they) are our own, and we may do what we will with our own. No, ſaith the Apoſtle, ye are bought with a price, ye are not your own; ye have your bodies of God, in their natural conſtitution, It is he who hath made us (in that capacity) and not we our ſelves (Pſal. 100. 3.) and ye are not your own; for ye are redeemed or bought with a price, both body and ſoul. Ye are bought out of your own hands, as well as out of the hand of divine juſtice and diſpleaſure. The Apoſtle ſpeaks eſpecially to believers. For though it be a truth concerning all, whether believers, or unbelievers, that they are not their own, none of the ſons of men are their own; God hath a right to them by creation, as alſo by his continual providence, proviſion, and preſervation; yet believers or the redeemed in a ſpecial manner, are not their own, and therefore they ought above others to glorifie God in their body and in their ſpirit which are Gods. Having thus opened ſeveral Scripture grounds and arguments to demonſtrate the foulneſs and filthineſs of this ſin of Adultery, which is the general ſubject of this verſe; I ſhall now proceed in the expoſition of particulars in it.

The eye alſo of the Adulterer waiteth, &c.

The word, alſo, refers to the murderer ſpoken of in the former verſe; implying, that the Adulterer and he, though their ſins are very different, yet agree much in taking their opportunities of ſinning. How contrary ſoever ſinners are in their particular practice, yet they have all one common principle and Spirit. The Murtherer and the Adulterer are alike deſirous of privacy. They both love darkneſs rather then light, or that which is neither, Twilight. Job ſeems to ſpeak of a man, that is no novice, but of one long verſt and practiced in this way of wickedneſs. The eye alſo of the adulterer waiteth, that is, the adulterer himſelf waiteth. Job doth not ſay, the Adulterer waiteth, but the eye of the Adulterer waiteth, becauſe the eye is much in adultery; The eye hath ſo great a ſhare in that ſin, that the whole ſin is here charged upon the eye. The Apoſtle Peter (2 Pet. 2. 14.) ſpeaks of a generation of evil men, having their eyes full of adultery, or (as the Greek Original hath it with much Emphaſis) full of an Adultereſs. As if he had ſaid, they are perſons ſo given up to uncleanneſs, that they have no deſire to ſee any body with their eyes but an Adultereſs, nor is any thing elſe to be ſeen in their eyes but Adultery. They are as impudent as they are unclean, letting out the Adultery which is in their hearts at their eyes, not caring who ſees it. Adultery is ſeated in the heart, there's the fountain of it (Matth. 15. 19.) Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murthers, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falſe witneſs, blaſphemy; Adultery comes out of the heart, but 'tis firſt ſeen in the eye, yea the eye often gives the firſt occaſion of it to the heart, (Matth. 5. 28.) Whoſoever looketh upon a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. Wanton love uſually aſcends by theſe five ſteps: Firſt, the eye ſees; Secondly, the heart deſires; Thirdly, the thoughts are plotting and contriving how to attain what is deſired; Fourthly, there is hope to attain what is plotted; and, fifthly, there is joy and delight in the attainment of what was hoped. Thus uſually the eye gives the occaſion and leads the dance in all the meetings of vanity.

Nihil in oculis eſt quod non ſit laſcivum & petulans, nihil in oculorum pupilla in eſſe dicas, quam amicam, eum potiri non poſſunt, ſaltem conſpectu ſe ſatiunt.

The ancient Moraliſt (in his book of the long coming revenges of God) makes report that one Apollidorus being in a dream ſaw his own skin pull'd off by a barbarous Scythian, who then preſently threw him into a chaldron of boiling water, where being tormented his heart whiſpered to him, I am the cauſe of all this. The heart is the cauſe of puniſhment and miſery, remotely, becauſe nextly it is the cauſe of ſin, eſpecially of this ſin of adultery; yet as the heart doth ſometimes ſet the eye on work to find out objects, ſo the eye meeting with objects ſets the heart a work, yea it ſets the heart a fire, or all in a flame with vain deſires and adulterous luſtings. The eyes of ſome look out continually for the fuel of thoſe ſecret fires, and the eyes of others meet with it unlooked for. A good mans eye may meet with a vain object, but his eye doth not go out to ſeek or wait for it. Againſt ſuch active wickedneſs Job profeſſed while he ſaid (Chap. 31. 1.) I have made a Covenant with mine eyes, &c. A godly mans eye hath ſomewhat elſe to wait upon, then ſuch enſnaring objects. And the Pſalmiſt tells us upon what the godly mans eye waits (Pſal. 123. 2.) Behold as the eyes of ſervants look unto the hand of their Maſters, &c. ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our God until he have mercy upon us. The eye of a godly man waiteth to receive good, and the eye of a wicked man waiteth to do evil. The Adulterer hath a waiting eye, and this waiting notes three things.

Plutarchus de ſera numinis vindicta.

Firſt, That the Adulterer is very diligent, and intentive to attain his purpoſe; he that waits is more then awake; He is not only awake but watchful; both theſe are put together (Prov. 8. 34.) where the diligence of the Saints is ſpoken of in their waiting upon Chriſt in his appointments; Bleſſed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the poſts of my doors; they who wait at the poſts of wiſdom, that is, of Chriſt, watch alſo at his gates, they watch there, and they wait there. It is poſſible for a man to watch, as watching is only oppoſed to ſleeping, and yet not to wait, that is, not to be diligent or attentive upon any buſineſs; but he that watcheth, as watching is oppoſed to idling, he is alwayes waiting as long as watching, and he cannot but be watching, who is indeed waiting. Thus the Adulterer takes much pains to obtain his forbidden pleaſures, his eye waiteth and watcheth, he is a diligent ſervant or ſlave rather to his luſt; every man that commits ſin, is a ſervant to ſin, and every ſervant muſt wait, it is the duty of a ſervant to wait for his Lord, the adulterer waits upon his luſt as as upon his Lord, every luſt would be waited upon as a Lord. Saints watch at wiſdoms gates, and wait like ſervants at her poſts to know her pleaſure. Adulterers watch at whoredoms gates, and at her poſts they wait for ſinful pleaſures.

Secondly, To wait, implieth the exerciſe of much patience: he that waiteth, expects long, he muſt expect and ſtay till the opportunity comes, Even the wicked have patience upon hopes of injoyment; And ſhall not the godly? It may ſhame the godly out of their impatience and loathneſs to wait for an anſwer of prayer from God, when they hear that The husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain (Jam. 5. 7.) But it may ſhame them much more out of all their impatience in waiting for good things from God, when they hear that the Adulterer waiteth for the whoriſh woman, and hath long patience, till he receive his longing.

Thirdly, Waiting implyeth the Adulterers fixedneſs in and reſolvedneſs to ſin, his eye waiteth; he doth not ſin by a ſudden glance of his eye, or upon a vehement guſt of temptation, or upon an unthought of hurry of wanton paſſions, but he ſins deliberately, and (as it were) in cool blood. He waiteth for and watcheth his ſeaſon, he is ſerious and ſtudious about his wickedneſs.

Hence Note, A wicked man ſins with reſolution.

He that waiteth to do any thing, hath a reſolution to do it. A godly man ſins, but he doth not wait to ſin; or if at any time he do ſo, he at that time acts the wicked mans part in the godly mans ſtate, and ſo upon a ſtrong temptation godly men have done. But uſually he is a wicked man (as to his ſtate) that waits for a temptation.

Afflictions wait every where for a godly man (as Paul ſpake of himſelf, Acts 20. 23.) and ſo alſo do Temptations. But the ungodly are every where waiting for temptations. They are not ſurpriſed, or taken unawares, by a ſin, but they are reſolved to take their firſt opportunity of ſinning. What a godly man ſaith (when he is in a right frame) in reference to the wayes of holineſs (Pſal. 108. 1.) O God, my heart is prepared or fixed; A godly man doth not good upon a ſudden, or by chance (as we ſay) but he ſets himſelf to it, his heart is fixed or prepared, and his face is ſet heaven-ward, or for heavenly duties. So Daniel ſpake of himſelf (Dan. 9. 3.) I ſet my face unto the Lord God to ſeek by prayer and ſupplications; and as a godly man is in the wayes of God, ſo the wayes of God are in him. Thus David deſcribes him (Pſal. 84. 5.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe ſtrength is in thee, in whoſe heart are the wayes of them, that is, the wayes which godly men walk in, and they are the wayes of God. Now as this is the true ſtate of godlineſs when the heart is in it and prepared for it, ſo the true ſtate of wickedneſs is, when a mans heart is in it and prepared for it. This is the proper character of a wicked man. The eye of the Adulterer waiteth

For the twilight.

Every word hath weight in it, the twilight is the Adulterers ſeaſon; It is not ſaid, he waits for the night, or for the day, but he waiteth for the twilight, which is neither day nor night, but between both. We have ſuch a deſcription of time in reference to the mixt and uncertain ſtate of things (Zach. 14. 6, 7.) And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the light ſhall not be clear nor dark; But it ſhall be one day which ſhall be known to the Lord, not day nor night. Such a thing is Twilight, it is neither clear nor dark, neither day nor night, but between both. There is a twofold twilight; Firſt, The morning twilight; and, Secondly, The evening twilight; the morning twilight begins when the night ends, the evening twilight begins when the day ends. The Latines have two diſtinct words to expreſs theſe diſtinct twilights by, but our language is not ſo well ſtored; and therefore we muſt diſtinguiſh them by the matter ſpoken of, or the ſcope of the ſpeaker. Thus here, when 'tis ſaid in the Text, he waiteth for the twilight, we are to underſtand it of the evening twilight, not for the morning twilight, and the reaſon is, becauſe the morning twilight is not for the adulterers turn or purpoſe, for then the light prevails upon the darkneſs, but it is the evening twilight, for then darkneſs prevails upon the light. And that this is the Adulterers twilight is clear (Prov. 7. verſ. 6, 7, 8, 9.) At the window of my houſe (ſaith Solomon) I looked through the caſement, and behold among the ſimple ones, I diſcerned among the youths a man void of underſtanding paſſing by the way to her houſe, and he went neer her corner, in the twilight in the evening (or) in the evening of the day, in the black and dark night. And behold there met him a woman with the attire of an harlot, &c. His eye waited for the twilight, and in the twilight he was taken.

Nox & tenebræ adminiſtræ ſunt impiis ſuarum libidinum. Ipſa nox alioquin cæca inſandarum tamen oculatus teſtis eſt.

Hence Note, The doing of evil hath its proper ſeaſons, as well as the doing of good.

Though ſin be never in ſeaſon, yet it hath ſome times which are more ſeaſonable for it; to ſin is never in ſeaſon, as to the lawfulneſs of committing it, but ſin hath its ſeaſons as to the conveniency of committing it. The Adulterer takes his ſeaſon, he waiteth for the twilight. Whence Note, Secondly,

Evil men are very careful to hit their ſeaſons for the doing of evil.

It were deſireable that the godly were as careful to hit their ſeaſons and take their times, as the ungodly are. To every thing (ſaith the Preacher, Eccl. 3. 1.) there is a ſeaſon and a time for every purpoſe under the Sun. And becauſe it is ſo (ſaith the ſame Preacher, Eccl. 8. 6.) The miſery of man is great upon him. But why doth this make the miſery of man great upon him? I anſwer, The reaſon of this miſery upon man, is not becauſe there is a ſeaſon, but becauſe either of his ignorance or negligence to find it. There are a thouſand wayes to miſs a ſeaſon, and but one to hit it; and were there as many wayes to hit as to miſs, it were a thouſand to one but man would miſs rather then hit, and therefore the miſery of man is great upon him, becauſe if once he miſs his ſeaſon, it cannot be recovered, and then he muſt needs be miſerable. Good men are miſerable (as to ſome caſes) becauſe they are often ſo careleſs to hit their ſeaſon of doing good, and do ſo often miſs it, notwithſtanding all their care. Wicked men are for ever miſerable, becauſe they are ſo careful not to miſs their ſeaſon of doing evil, and do ſo often hit it. The eye of the Adulterer waiteth for the twilight, and he ſeldom (as to his own end) waits in vain. But why is he ſo greedy for the twilight? The next words ſay why, where he is brought in Saying, no eye ſhall ſee me.

Where ſaith he this? he ſaith it in his heart, this is his diſcourſe in his own breaſt; and to whom ſaith he this? he ſaith it to himſelf, there is a dialogue between the Adulterer and his own heart, and thus he concludes, I will wait for the twilight, and then no eye ſhall ſee me. And when he ſaith, no eye ſhall ſee me, his meaning is, There is not any eye that ſhall ſee me. Thus he playes the fool at All's hid.

Yet further, this no eye may have a threefold reference,

Firſt, No eye of common men ſhall ſee me, I will do this in ſecret, I will have ſuch a cover of darkneſs over me, that my neighbours and friends ſhall not be able to take any notice of me.

Secondly, No eye, may refer to men in chief, that is, no eye of the Magiſtrate, nor of any Miniſter of Juſtice ſhall ſee me. Magiſtrates are the eyes of a Nation, they ſhould overlook all places, either by themſelves or their Officers, to obſerve what is done. As the Adulterers eye watcheth, ſo there ſhould be an eye of Juſtice watching to catch Adulterers. Some interpret this Text, eſpecially of the Adulterers hope, or ſelf-perſwaſion that he ſhall eſcape the eye or knowledge of the Magiſtrate, who is appointed to overſee the manners of that people over whom he is placed, and to be a terrour, yea a Miniſter of vengeance to them that do evil; for he beareth not the Sword in vain (Rom. 13. 3, 4.) Magiſtrates ſhould ſo much mark and eye the ſtate of a people, that they are called eyes in Scripture (Iſa. 29. 10.) For the Lord hath poured out upon you the Spirit of deep ſleep, and hath cloſed your eyes (what or who are thoſe eyes? the next words enform us) the Prophets and Rulers, the ſeers hath he covered. The Hebrew word which we render rulers is heads; Rulers are the heads of a people; and what is a head without eyes, or having its eyes covered? God did not cover the eyes which were in the peoples perſonal heads, but he covered the eyes which were in their publick heads. He hath cloſed your eyes, that is, thoſe that ſhould be as heads and eyes to you, your Prophets and your rulers. Thus alſo ſay ſome, Government is expreſſed by an eye (Deut. 33. 28.) Iſrael then ſhall dwell in ſafety alone, the fountain of Jacob ſhall be upon a land of corn and wine, alſo his heaven ſhall drop dew. That which we tranſlate the fountain of Jacob, others render as well, and as truly from the Original, the eye of Jacob, that is (ſay they) the Magiſtracy, the ruling power; as if he had ſaid, as the people of Iſrael in general ſhall dwell in ſafety, ſo their eye, their government or their Governours in ſpecial ſhall be bleſſed with plenty, they ſhall be upon a land of corn and wine. It hath been obſerved alſo in antiquity, that great Princes had certain men in Office whom they called their eyes. Princes have their eyes and ears in every place, that is, their Officers. Thus we may expound this Text, the Adulterer ſaith, No eye ſhall ſee me. The ruling or Magiſtratical eye ſhall not ſee me; and if what I do be not ſeen by that eye (let others ſee what they will, and ſay what they pleaſe) I ſhall not ſuffer at all for what I do; and then all's well, that's as much as I care for. And here we may note. That, As ſome Adulterers have their eyes abroad, that is, agents to eſpy out beauties for them; So moſt of them (if not all) are afraid of the eyes of others.

Verba quæ ſequuntur exigunt ut iſta de Magiſtratus juſtitiaque miniſtris intelligantur. Bold. Quiſquis aut officio aut quovis alio modo ſuper alios inſpicit, actuſq; eorum obſervat vocatur oculus.

Fons vel oculus Jacob ſuū imperiū habebit in terra Canaan. Bold. Apud Perſatum reges quidā fuerunt qui dicebantur oculi & aures. Zenoph.

Thirdly, No eye ſhall ſee me, that is, not the eye of God; God himſelf ſhall not ſee me. Thus the Adulterer hopes to hide his ſin from his eye who is indeed all eye, and whoſe eye is over all. Thus the Adulterer ſuppoſeth himſelf under ſuch a vail of darkneſs, that he is free not only from the eye of men on earth, and from the eye eye of thoſe who are gods upon earth, but even from the eye of the God of heaven.

Homines latere cupiens Dei oculum non timens.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, A ſinner is full of vain preſumption.

He preſumes that the ſin which he commits againſt the light of his own conſcience, ſhall never come to light; he preſumes that the ſin which he commits in his own eye, ſhall not come to the eye of others. I have elſewhere noted this ignorant confidence of carnal men, and only name it here.

Secondly, Note, It is not the act of ſin, but the diſcovery of it which a wicked man feareth.

He cares not what wickedneſs he doth, ſo he may go unſeen; a godly man is afraid of doing evil, though he could do it with greateſt ſecrecy, or under the darkeſt cover: he is afraid to do evil, becauſe of the evil and unrighteouſneſs of it, becauſe of the pollution, and unanſwerableneſs of it, both to his own duty, and the goodneſs of God to him; but it is the diſcovery, not the iniquity of his work, which the hypocrite feareth.

Thirdly, As the eye is taken for the eye of the Magiſtrate, Obſerve, That it is the puniſhment of ſin at which a wicked man is troubled, he is not troubled at the ſin it ſelf.

'Tis the conſequence of ſin, not the nature of it, the ſmart of ſin, and not the filth of it, which the wicked would avoid.

Laſtly, As no eye is excluſive alſo to the eye of God,

Note, Wicked men preſume that their ſins are ſecret even to God himſelf.

They think, ſure, God can ſee no further, nor no better then man; And ſo they have hopes to hide themſelves, not only from the eyes of men, but from the eyes of God, as we may ſee plainly (Jer. 23.23.) Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him, ſaith the Lord; This queſtion, can any? ſhews that ſome had flattered themſelves into ſuch a concluſion, that they could ſo hide themſelves in ſecret places, that God could not ſee them. The holy Pſalmiſt ſaid (Pſal. 139. 12.) The darkneſs hideth not from thee, but the night ſhineth as the day, the darkneſs and the light to thee are both alike. But a wicked man ſaith, the darkneſs hideth from thee, the night is night to thee. O what beggerly apprehenſions have men of God! As if he whoſe eyes are ten thouſand times brighter then the Sun, could not ſee without Sun-light; or as if he could not ſee but in the light, who made the light. Naturaliſts ſay of thoſe living creatures which have fiery eyes, that they can ſee as well in the dark as in the light; the reaſon is, becauſe they ſee not by taking in the ſpecies of the object into the eye, but by ſending out a light from their own eye upon the object. God hath fiery eyes indeed, he needs no outward light to ſee by who is nothing elſe but light. Vain ſinner, what can be darkneſs to him, who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all? There is nothing doth more argue the blindneſs of a ſinner, then this ſimple ſaying of his, No eye ſeeth me, unleſs it be that ſimple practice of his which he uſeth to the ſame purpoſe, and which is diſcovered (as his laſt ſhift) in the laſt words of this verſe, Vanus eſt qui putat ſe in tenebris eſſe tutum, cum lucem vitare non poſſit, quæ lucet in tenebris, & tenebræ eam non comprehenderunt. Ambroſ.

And he diſguiſeth his face.] The Hebrew is, He ſetteth his face into a ſecret; he muffles himſelf, he changeth his habit, he puts on a vizard. Harlots were wont to diſguiſe themſelves (Gen. 39.14.) When Tamar took upon her the habit of an harlot, the Text ſaith, She put on a diſguiſe; ſo here the Adulterer puts on a diſguiſe, he puts a cozening face upon his face, and then thinks, that though he be ſeen, yet he cannot be diſcerned, and that though ſome may ſee where he is, yet none ſhall ſee who he is, He diſguiſeth his face. One would have thought that being in the twilight, and the darkneſs of the night ready to compaſs him about, that no eye could ſee him, he ſhould not need to have put on a vizard or a muffler, yet he doth ſo, he puts a diſguiſe upon his face.

Which may teach us, That when a man doth ill, he never thinks he is ſafe, or ſecret enough.

When a mans conſcience tells him he ſins, he would not have any other tell him ſo too. The Adulterer fears twilight is too light for him, and therefore while the natural darkneſs is ſo imperfect, he puts his face into perfect artificial darkneſs. Job yet proceeds to ſhew this cowardly temper of ſinners in their fear to be ſeen, either by a further diſcovery of the ſame ſort of ſinners, or of another ſort, in the ſame frame.

Verſ. 36. In the dark they dig through houſes which they have marked for themſelves in the day time: they know not the light.

We have all along the words and the works of darkneſs; In the dark they dig through houſes. The queſtion is, who are here meant by theſe diggers; ſome underſtand the verſe of the adulterer; And whereas he ſpeaks here in the plural number, and before in the ſingular; 'tis frequent in Scripture (ſay they) to vary the number while the ſame ſubject is continued. And that while he ſaith, They, the meaning is One and all of them are bent and apt enough to do thus. But is digging through houſes the work of an Adulterer? In anſwer to this, it hath been ſtoried and remembred, that Adulterers have uſed ſuch boiſterous practices to come at their unlawful pleaſures; they have digged through houſes to make private paſſages that they might not be diſcovered when they came to, or when they departed from their lovers. It hath been commonly ſaid that hunger will break through ſtone walls, and 'tis a truth that wantonneſs will do ſo too. Some have been ſo mad upon their luſts, that if they could not find a way, they would make one to meet with their paramours. Upon this conſideration we may fairly interpret this verſe (as the former) concerning the Adulterer.

Hæc domorum profeſſio, non ad latrocinia nocturna, ſed ad turpes artes penetrandi in alienos domos manifeſtè pertinet. Pined.

But I rather conceive that this verſ. 16. contains a deſcription of another ſort of ſinners, Thieves or Robbers. Becauſe though it be true, that Adulterers do ſometimes dig through houſes, yet this is both more frequently and more properly the buſineſs of Thieves. Another reaſon to perſwade this underſtanding of the preſent Text may be, becauſe ſo we have a fuller and more particular enumeration of ſeveral ſorts of ſin and ſinners.

Ego libentius hæc de latronibus quam de Adulteris caperē; Quia hoc latrones ſæpe faciūt, Adulteri nō niſi per quā raro. Sanct.

In the dark they dig through houſes.

To dig through houſes, is the work of a thief. And thus Chriſt ſpeaks of the thief (Luk. 12.39.) And this know, that if the good man of the houſe had known what hour the thief would have come, he would have watched, and not have ſuffered his houſe to have been broken through. Jacob ſaith of Simeon and Levi (Gen. 49. 6.) In their anger they digged through a wall. Some break through walls for want, or in covetouſneſs to rob and ſteal, others for anger and in wrath to kill and deſtroy. They dig through houſes,

Which they had marked for themſelves in the day time.

See the method and cunning of theſe robbers; here are three points of their ſinful skill. Firſt, they mark houſes; the word ſignifies, to mark with a ſeal; as if they did put their ſeal upon other mens houſes for their own uſe. Thieves go abroad in the day time to eſpy where they may commit a robbery with beſt advantage, and they ſet their mark upon ſuch houſes as they reſolve to rob; or, which I rather take to be the meaning, they diligently obſerve the ſtrength of the houſe, the wayes to the houſe, what company is in the houſe, where they may with moſt eaſe and advantage break into the houſe. All this they do in the day by way of preparation, and in the dark they put their purpoſes into execution; In the dark they dig through houſes which they had marked in the day.

Hence Note, Sinners would make ſure work, they would not miſs.

And therefore they either ſet their mark upon a houſe, or exactly mark it. O how witty, and how cunning men are to do miſchief!

Secondly, Whereas they went from Town to Town, and any houſe they ſaw and liked they marked it for themſelves; Learn,

An unjuſt perſon makes every thing his own, if he can come by it, if he can but get it.

He ſaith of another mans houſe, this is mine, I will fill my own houſe with the ſpoil and plunder of this.

Thirdly, The thief marked houſes.

In the day time.] He digged through them in the night, but he made uſe of the day; he would not break open a houſe in the day, but had ſomewhat to do towards the breaking open of a houſe in the day, he marked it in the day.

Hence Note, That time which ſuits not one wicked purpoſe, may ſuit another.

The thief makes uſe of all times, he makes uſe of the day to mark houſes, and of the night to dig them through. He is careful to take his time, to do the work of the day upon the day, and the work of the night, in the night.

They know not the light.] But why doth Job add this? ſaid he not before, that they marked houſes for themſelves in the day? How then doth he ſay,

They know not the light.] Knowing is not meant of a bare act of knowledge, as if they knew not when it was light, and when it was dark, or as if they knew not the nature of light, what kind of creature it is. But, not to know, is not to effect; They know not the light, that is, they care not, they love not the light. In which ſence words of knowledge are often uſed in Scripture (Nah. 1.7.) The Lord knoweth the ſoul that truſteth in him. The Lord knows thoſe that do not truſt in him, he knows thoſe that are unbelieving as well as thoſe that believe in a way of diſcerning who they are; but he knows the ſoul that truſteth in him, in a way of loving and approving him; ſo here, They know not the light, that is, they have no love to the light, no delight in the light, they care not for the light. But it may be objected; It ſhould ſeem theſe men cared for the light, & liked it well, for they made much uſe of it; In the day they marked houſes. I anſwer, When Job ſaith, They know not the light, we may reſtrain it to one part of their buſineſs, and that the main, Their digging through houſes; for this purpoſe (which was their principal purpoſe) they know not the light, that is, they neither loved nor liked the light, darkneſs was more wellcome to them. I ſhall not give any notes from theſe words here, having before (eſpecially at *verſ.*12. where it is ſaid, They are ſuch as rebel againſt the light, they know not the wayes of it, &c.) been ſomewhat large upon the ſame ſubject; As alſo becauſe the next verſe is but a further illuſtration and enforcement of theſe words.

Non neſce lucem eſt i. δ amare.

Verſ. 17. For the morning is to them even as the ſhadow of death, if one know them they are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death.

This verſe gives a reaſon, why theſe thieves took the night for their work; or it is an expoſition of what was laſt ſaid, They know not the light.

The Text may be read thus out of the Original, As ſoon as it is morning the ſhadow of death comes upon them. This Hebraiſm the ſhadow of death, hath been opened at *verſ.*5. of the third Chapter, whether I refer the Reader. In this place, it only imports thus much in General, That theſe wicked men did equally fear the morning as death it ſelf; they were ſurpriſed with fear, as ſoon as ſurpriſed with light. What is the reaſon of it, why doth the adulterer fear the morning, and why doth the thief fear the morning? they do ſo upon theſe three conſiderations.

Umbra mortis i.e. tam terribilis ut aliquem enecare poteſt. Genitivus effecti. Piſc. Cum venit mane venit umbra, dictum acutè propter ſpeciem contradictionis.

Firſt, Leſt they ſhould be hindred in their wicked works; Secondly, Leſt their wicked works ſhould be diſcerned; Thirdly, Leſt their wicked works ſhould be puniſhed; for theſe reaſons they hate the light, and the morning is to them as the ſhadow of death.

Hence Obſerve, That good things even the beſt things are a trouble to wicked men.

Sin makes good things evil to us, and pleaſant things troubleſome to us. What a pleaſant thing is the light? How beautiful are the eye-lids of the morning? yet light is a trouble, and the morning a burden to wicked men. And if natural light be a trouble to them, much more is moral and ſpiritual light. How do they hate the morning of truth, the dawnings of divine knowledge? Theſe lights to life, theſe enlivening lights are to them as the ſhadow of death. In how deplorable a condition are they to whom good becomes evil, and that which good men rejoyce in, is to them an occaſion of ſorrow. The whole courſe of nature is out of frame to us, till we are ſet into a right frame by grace. We put light for darkneſs and darkneſs for light, till we our ſelves are brought out of darkneſs into light. Nothing is good to us till we are made good, nor doth any thing pleaſe us, except ſin or that which we uſe ſinfully, till we pleaſe God. The very morning (which gives a new life to all) is to ſome as the ſhadow of death.

If one know them, they are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death.

Theſe words are but a further explication of the ſame thing, if one, that is, if any one, man, woman, or child, as we ſay, know them, that is, take notice of them, in their wickedneſs, or take notice of their wickedneſs, they are (as we ſay) dead in the neſt.

Others render the words thus, if they know one another, that is, if only ſo much of the light of the morning breaks forth, as ſerves them to ſee one anothers faces, they are afraid. So this phraſe is uſed (Ruth 3.14.) And ſhe lay at his feet until the morning, and ſhe roſe up before one could know another, that is, before there was light enough to diſcern each other. So theſe two readings, if one know them or if they know one another, meet in the ſame general ſence, their unwillingneſs to be diſcovered at their work; if once there be light enough for theſe evil-workers to ſee themſelves by, they then know they may alſo be ſeen by others; And if one (any one) know them,

Cum agnoſcit alius aliũ. Piſc.

They are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death.

That is, they are troubled like them, who being ready to die, are yet unwilling to die; when death ſtands at a mans bed-ſide, when death ſtands at his back ready to attach and apprehend him, ready to carry him away, while yet he is altogether unwilling and unready to die, O in what a terrour is he? Juſt thus it is (ſaith Job) with thoſe wicked men, they are not only afraid to die, but the terrours of the ſhadows of death are upon them, their terrour is ſuch as men have when death over-ſhadows them; That's the meaning of, They are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death.

A ſhadow in Scripture is taken two wayes. Firſt, Properly, for that darkneſs which is cauſed by the interpoſition of a thick body, between us and the Sun. Secondly, Improperly or metaphorically, and ſo that is a ſhadow which keeps off the heat of the Sun, or the violence of the rain and wind; and ſo by a trope any thing of defence is called a ſhadow. (Judg. 9.15.) Come truſt under my ſhadow (ſaid the bramble) that is, put your ſelves under my protection. And again (Iſa. 30.2,3.) Therefore ſhall the ſtrength of Pharaoh be your ſhame, and the truſt in the ſhadow (or protection) of Egypt your confuſion. So (*Iſa.*49.2.) In the ſhadow of his hand hath he hid me. And (Iſa. 51.16.) I have covered thee in the ſhadow of my hand; as birds cover or ſhelter their young ones with their wings and feathers. Thus the Scripture ſpeaks of a ſhadow. But what is the ſhadow of death? It is Firſt, The appearance of death; Secondly, The power of death. So the meaning is (as was touched before) they are as much terrified, as if death appeared to them, as if the image of death paſſed before them in viſion, or as if the power of it had taken hold of them to bring them priſoners to the grave.

If one know them, they are in the terrour of the ſhadow of death.

I have from the former words of this context, as alſo at *verſ.*12. taken occaſion to obſerve, how troubleſome both the light of the Sun and the light of the mind are to evil men, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon any Inſtructions of that kind here.

Yet foraſmuch as not only the murtherer and adulterer, ſpoken of before, but the thief ſpoken of here, are all for darkneſs and concealment.

Obſerve, Firſt, That ſinners have a ſecret conviction upon themſelves, that what they do is not good.

They draw up their own inditement, and condemn themſelves before God doth. They would rock conſcience aſleep, but they cannot, they would blind it but they cannot. This their delight in darkneſs, both outward and inward, is a plain demonſtration that they know their deeds are evil. Chriſt ſaith as much (Joh. 3.20,21.) Every one that doth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved. No man fears his deeds will be reproved, but he that ſuſpects at leaſt, that his deeds are his faults, and his actings his tranſgreſſings; for as it follows, He that doth truth (that is, who acts according to the truth) cometh to the light. He that doth good, or truth indeed, yea he who is but perſwaded that he doth ſo, cares not who ſees him; ſome are ambitious to be ſeen while they do ſo, and though any ſhould be ſo modeſt that they do not deſire to be ſeen while they do ſo, yet no man that doth ſo is afraid to be ſeen; and uſually ſuch come to the light, to the light of other mens knowledge, and they would come further into the light of their own knowledge; ſuch are free to come to light of all ſorts, that their deeds may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought in God; when a man comes to the light he gives a fair evidence that his works are wrought in God, how ever it argues both that he deſires they ſhould be ſuch as are wrought in God, as alſo that he is willing they ſhou'd come to the tryal, whether they are wrought in God or no, that is, whether they be ſo wrought as if God did work in him, or whether there be any appearance in them that he hath wrought them in the light and love, in the ſtrength and help of God. Now as when a man comes willingly to the light, it ſhews that he hath an honeſt perſwaſion in his breaſt, that his works are good. So when we ſee any ſeeking corners and ſhunning the light by which others may ſee them, or that light by which they may ſee themſelves, this ſhews that they have a troubleſome conviction upon their conſciences, that their works are ſo far from being wrought in God, that they are wrought againſt God, that is, againſt his mind and will. This the Apoſtle teacheth in the example of the Old Gentiles (Rom. 2.15.) They ſhew the work of the Law written in their hearts, their conſcience bearing them witneſs, and their thoughts in the mean while accuſing or excuſing one another. Were there not an undiſtinguiſhable light in nature, by which even a natural man may have ſome glimmerings of and diſcernings between good and evil, he would no more avoid the ſight of others when he doth evil, then when he doth good. And ſeeing he thus naturally avoids the view and ſight of all men when he doth evil; This doth more then intimate that there is a Judge above nature, who, without reſpect of perſons, will reward every man according to his works. Conſcience is Gods Deputy in man, and what that (being rightly informed) doth in man, God will do too. We are ſo aſſured by the Apoſtle John (1 John 3.21.) If our heart condemn us, God is greater then our heart, and knows all things; As if he had ſaid, this is an argument that there is a God to condemn, becauſe the heart condemns; For God is greater then the heart. God is the ſupream Judge, the infallible Judge, the heart is but an under Officer unto him. Why ſhould the heart of man ſmite him? why ſhould he be troubled when he hath done evil? why ſhould he be ſo troubled to be ſeen in doing evil? were it not that there is a God, who judgeth both the hearts and wayes of men. While the fool ſaith in his heart there is no God, (Pſal. 14.1.) the heart of a fool ſaith there is a God: while he ſaith in his heart there is no God to ſee my ſin, his heart ſaith to him, cover thy ſin, that it may not be ſeen: and what Engliſh can we make of this ſaying of his heart, but this, there is a God. For though Job ſpake here of ſuch groſs ſinners as have reaſon enough to hide themſelves and their doings from the eyes of men, leſt they ſhould bring them both to ſhame and puniſhment, yet even thoſe ſinners are fearful to have their ſins diſcovered, who need not fear any puniſhment but from the hand of God.

Secondly, Obſerve, Sin befools the ſinner, or ſinners are very fooliſh.

They are glad if they can eſcape the eye of man, whenas their ſins are alwayes under the eye of God. What is the eye from which darkneſs can hide us, to that eye which ſeeth through darkneſs? If one ſee them (ſaith the Text) they are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death, and yet they are not terrified that One ſeeth them. That one ſeeth them alwayes who is more then all men, and yet they are ſatisfied if they are not ſeen of men. That which they would not do if a little child did ſee them, they dare do though the great God of heaven and earth ſee them. What the Prophet ſpeaks of fear in reference to ſuffering, we may ſay much more of fear in reference to ſinning, (Iſa. 51.12,13.) Who art thou, that thou ſhouldſt be afraid of a man that ſhall die, and forgetteſt the Lord thy Creator? Who art thou? ſurely thou art ſo far from being a godly man, that thou art leſs then a man, in this thing, even a fool, and a beaſt. What? doeſt thou fear to ſin in the preſence of a man, or when a man, who ſhall die, ſeeth thee, and forgetteſt that the Lord thy maker ſeeth thee? that he ſeeth thee who hath ſtretched forth the Heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth. Well might the Apoſtle (2 Theſ. 3.2.) joyn theſe two together, unreaſonable and wicked men, and give the reaſon of both in the words which follow, for all men have not faith. Where there is no faith, there is much wickedneſs, and he who is much in wickedneſs, is nothing in reaſon. Faith is above reaſon but not againſt it; wickedneſs is not only below reaſon, but quite againſt it. They who act againſt that rule which is given by God to man, act alſo againſt that reaſon which is given by God to man. No man acts ſo much againſt faith, as he who doth not believe that God ſeeth him in all his actings; nor doth any man act more againſt reaſon, then he who believeth that God ſeeth him, and yet is more afraid to be ſeen of men, then he is to be ſeen of God.

VERS. 18.

He is ſwift as the waters, his portion is curſed in the earth: he beholdeth not the way of the Vineyards.

THere are four apprehenſions concerning the general ſcope of theſe words.

Firſt, Job is conceived here deſcribing a fourth ſort of wicked men, or the ſame men acting a fourth ſort of wickedneſs; for having (as hath been ſhewed from the former words) firſt drawn out the doings of the murtherer; and Secondly, of the Adulterer; and Thirdly, of the thief at land digging through houſes; he in the Fourth place (as ſome interpret the Text) proceeds to diſcover the Pyrate, who is a thief upon the water, a Sea-thief; He is ſwift as the waters, or, he is ſwift upon the waters: The letter of the Hebrew, is, He is ſwift upon the faces of the waters, he moves in, and upon all waters. It is uſual in Scripture to call the outward part of any thing, the face of it; as the face of the heavens, is that part of the heavens which doth outwardly appear to us, or is next to our eye. O ye hypocrites (ſaith Chriſt, Mat. 16.3.) ye can diſcern the face of the skie. So the face of the earth is the ſuperficies, or upper part of the earth; and the face of the waters, is the upper part of the waters. The word in the Text is plural, faces, he is ſwift upon the faces of the water; that is, when he hath murther'd, committed Adultery, and robbed at land, when the earth is weary of him, then he betakes himſelf to the Sea, and turns Pyrate. There is a truth in this, ſome men make ſuch a progreſs in wickedneſs; they try all trades of ſin upon the earth, and then trade ſinfully upon the water, defiling both earth and water, both ſea and ſhoar, polluting all the elements with their abominations. And in purſuance of this expoſition the two other clauſes of the verſe are thus expounded, Their portion is curſed in the earth, that is, they who live at land curſe them when they are gone to ſea, fearing leſt they ſhould take their ſhips, and ſpoil them of their goods by Pyracy. And then, he beholdeth not the way of the vineyards, that is, he will come no more on ſhoar, he will not live at land: vineyards by a ſynecdoche of the part for the whole being put for any kind of home or land poſſeſſion, of which vineyards (in many places) are the chief; he who lived by dreſſing and planting the earth, now takes another courſe of life, he beholdeth not the way of the vineyards; he will labour no more in a Country-life, he will not get his living by the ſweat of his face, but by the face of the waters. What cares he to get wine by dreſſing of vineyards, when he can get whole ſhip-loads of wine upon the waters. And having got a ſnatch of the ſweetneſs of robbing at Sea, he will work no more aland. We have too much experience of it, that when a man hath once given himſelf up to ſteal-

Velociter mine ſe ad mare recipiunt. Vatab.
Levis eſt ad notandum ſive remigandum ſuper faciem aquæ. Targ.

ing, he cannot abide labouring. He is better pleaſed with an eaſie life that is ſinful, then with an honeſt life that is painful; and becauſe eaſe pleaſeth him more then honeſty, therefore he will not behold the way of the Vineyards, nor the way of the Corn-fields, nor of the paſture grounds, for all theſe are wayes of labour. But I ſhall not inſiſt upon this interpretation, it may ſuffice only to name it. And though, as to the thing it ſelf, as alſo to the practice of many, this be a truth, yet it is ſcarcely probable, that Job had that practice in his eye.

Ad piratas referre divinare eſt ex proprio cerebro, cum hic tantum de infeſtatoribus agrorū mentio fiat, non navium aut maris. Pined.

Secondly, We may here conceive, that Job is deſcribing the miſerable and unſetled condition of the murtherer, of the Adulterer, and of the Thief; he is ſwift upon the waters, or, ſwift as the waters (ſay we) Mr. Broughton renders, He is lighter then the face of the waters. The Hebrew particle ſerves either reading, as, or upon; He is ſwift, or light upon the face of the waters, that is, he is as a light thing, that ſwimmeth upon the face of the waters; light things ſwim there, things which are of no worth, of no price, as ſtraws, or chips, or feathers, or the foam (which is light and hoven) ſwim upon the face of the water. Maſter Broughton tranſlates thus, He is lighter then the face of the waters. The ſence is the ſame, for as thoſe things which ſwim upon the face of the waters are light, ſo alſo is the face of the waters. Every blaſt or puff of wind moves and toſſeth up the face of the waters.

He is ſwift, or, light upon the face of the waters.

The Hebrew word which we render, ſwift, in our tranſlation ſignifieth alſo light; becauſe thoſe things that are ſwift in motion, are light; we ſay of one that is ſlow paced, he is heavy-heel'd, and that he is a heavy man, or that a heavy beaſt which is ſlow of foot; all ſwift things are light. The meaning of this Interpretation is, that a wicked man is a contemptible Creature; what is he when he hath done all thoſe miſchiefs before ſpecified, and walketh to wearineſs in all thoſe ſinful wayes? The beſt account which we can give of him is this; He is light, or as a light thing, upon the face of the water; which is a Proverbial ſpeech to expreſs that which is nothing worth. Thus the deſtruction of the King of Samaria is expreſſed (Hoſ. 10. 7.) As for Samaria, her King is cut off as the foam upon the water, or (as the margine hath it) upon the face of the water, that is, though he be a great King, yet he ſhall periſh as a very light, and contemptible thing, even as a little foam and froth, or as a bubble upon the water.

Levitas pro velocitate ſumitur, leve enim facile movetur & quod facile movetur velox eſt.

Hence Obſerve, Wickedneſs makes men contemptible and vile, they are but as light things upon the water.

In the 21 of this book (verſ. 18.) the wicked are ſaid to be as ſtubble before the fire, and as chaff before the whirl-wind. So (David, Pſ. 1. 4.) ſpeaking of the wicked in general, ſaith, They are like chaff which the wind driveth away. Stubble and chaff are light things, and they are alſo worthleſs things; what's the ſtubble worth, or what the chaff? What is the chaff to the wheat? ſuch are wicked men in compariſon of the godly. The Scripture doth even ſtrive for Expreſſions (as I may ſay) to ſet forth the lightneſs, the vanity, indeed, the nullity, the nonentity, the nothingneſs of men given up to their luſts. David (Pſal. 62. 9.) ſpeaking of them who truſt in oppreſſion, and become vain in robbery, ſaith, they are vanity and a lie, and that to be laid in the ballance, they are altogether lighter then vanity. And Solomon putting the tongue of a godly man, and the heart of a wicked man together into the ballance, gives this determination between them (Prov. 10. 20.) The tongue of the juſt is as choice ſilver, but the heart of the wicked is little worth. The heart is there taken in the higheſt ſence, for the beſt thing that the wicked man hath; for though where the heart is nought, it is the worſt thing that a man hath, yet the ſence of the proverb is to ſhew that the beſt thing that a wicked man hath is of little worth, and therefore the inſtance is made in that which he accounts his chieſeſt treaſure, his heart; for by the heart, all that man hath within him, all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, with their beſt and richeſt furniture, are underſtood; all theſe ſaith Solomon in a wicked man are little worth; ſo that take him at his beſt, and in his beſt, he is but traſh or as a trifle. Sin is a reproach both to perſons and nations. As honour is a mans weight in the eſteem of others, ſo reproach abates his weight, and mak him light upon the ballance. Since thou waſt precious in mine eyes, thou waſt honourable, ſaith God (Iſa. 43. 4.) holineſs adds honour and weight to our perſons; ſin makes us light, and then we are lighteſt, when we make light of ſin; ſin is a weight that preſſeth us down, yet they who ſin moſt, weigh leaſt in the eſteem of God and of all good men. Sin will quickly ſink the ſoul like lead under water, even to the bottom of the water, yet the ſinner is as a light thing that ſwims upon the top or face of the water. This is a profitable ſence of the words.

Thirdly, Others expound theſe words, as a deſcription of the wicked mans ſhifting and running from place to place for fear of purſuers; or that being conſcious to himſelf, or ſelf-condemned in his own conſcience, he is as the Lord threatned Cain (Gen. 4. 14.) A fugitive and a vagabond upon the earth: ſwift as the waters of a ſtream, which glide along and never ſtay in one place; or he is upon the earth as a light thing upon the waters, continually moved and toſſed up and down. But I paſs from this. And conclude.

Fourthly, That we may rather underſtand theſe words as a deſcription of the ſpirit and temper of a wicked man in reference to his ſinful actings, or the fulfilling of his luſts; He is ſwift or light as the water, or, as the light things upon the water, that is, he is a man very unſetled, he is hurried to and fro, there is no ſtability either in his wayes, or in his ſpirit; He abides not in one place, nor doth he abide in one mind. He is full of Inconſtancy, he is conſtant in nothing but in his inconſtancy: and it muſt needs be ſo if we Conſider, Firſt, his luſt within. How can he but be ſwift as the water, who hath ſuch winds blowing and ſtriving in him. A carnal man is hurried with ſtorms and tempeſts riſing in his own mind: as the wind toſſeth and rolleth the waters of the Sea or light things upon the water, ſo the luſts of evil men toſs and tumble them up and down. Pride toſſeth ſome, and Covetouſneſs toſſeth others, Luxury and Wantonneſs toſs thouſands into a thouſand vanities, and ſinful wayes, as the winds toſs the waves of the Sea; Luſts are ſtrong and boiſterous, luſts are many and numerous, he that ſerveth any one of them is a ſlave to them all, and muſt go upon their errand whitherſoever they will ſend or rather hurry him.

Secondly, Carnal men muſt needs be ſwift as the water, or light upon the water, very unconſtant and unſetled, if we conſider the temptations that blow upon them from without. For though our own luſts are temptations, and every man (as the Apoſtle James ſaith, Chapter 1. 14.) Is tempted when he is drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed: yet our luſts alſo are tempted, or our luſts are drawn away and enticed by temptation. Man is apt enough to ſin of himſelf alone, if once God leave him; but he is ſeldom left to himſelf alone to ſin by the Devil; and moſt uſually he is tempted with a kind of violence unto ſin; his luſts (which are a fire) are blown and kindled by Satans breath, and he is driven to do evil by vehement blaſts of temptation. Temptations blow upon Saints, they blow ſtrongly upon them; Satan breaths out a mighty wind to make them ſwift as the water unto ſin; but they have received a power to reſiſt and ſtand faſt. They are founded upon the rock Jeſus Chriſt: Though the wind moves the water, yet it cannot move the rock: they that are founded upon Chriſt, are (in their proportion) firm as Chriſt himſelf is firm. 'Tis true, Saints are many times grievouſly ſhaken with temptations, but the wicked are toſſed and overwhelmed by them. They are ſwift as the water, or as the lighteſt thing upon the face of the waters, when ſtrongly moved by temptation. Dying Jacob called Reuben, his firſt-born, unſtable as water (Gen. 49. 4.) though we will not number him among the wicked, yet he did a very wicked act, and in reference to that, though he was a great man, and a Patriarch, the head of the Tribe, yet (in reference to that act) he received this Character, unſtable as water. And if he was ſo unſtable when hurried by paſſion and temptation, how much more are meer wicked men ſo, when they meet with ſuch temptations. For as they are not fixed in any thing that is good, as was touched at verſ. 13. They know not the wayes of light, nor do they abide in the paths of it (if at any time they ſtumble upon the doing of that which is right, yet they abide not in the doing of it; they are light as the water, unſtabled and unſetled in all good wayes) So though they are fixed (as to the ſubject) in doing that which is evil, yet they are extreamly toſſed and ſwiftly moved, both to and in and after the doing of it.

Again, As this ſimilitude implies the eaſineſs of evil men to be moved by temptation unto ſin, even as eaſily as water, or the lighteſt things upon the face of the water are moved by the wind: So it implieth alſo their ſpeedineſs and activity in ſinning. The water moves ſwiftly, ſinners are like ſwift ſhips upon the water, they make ſpeed to do evil, or to trade upon any forbidden coaſt; but they are very ſlugs to any thing that is good, or to trade upon any coaſt where they are bidden. A learned Interpreter inſiſts much upon the emphaſis of this Expreſſion, to ſhew not only the ſwiftneſs, but the fierceneſs of a wicked mans ſpirit in ſinning, he is ſwift upon the face of thoſe waters, and is carried on with full ſails in ſinning, he runs ſo ſwiftly and treads ſo lightly, that he might run even upon the ſurface of the water, and not ſink. Thoſe creatures which are very ſwift, leave little impreſſion behind them; they that go ſlowly tread heavy, and unleſs they be upon firm land, fall in. It is ſaid in the eighth of Daniel (verſ. 5.) concerning the he-goat (who repreſented Alexander the Great) That he touched not the ground. Alexander was extream ſwift in his Conqueſts, he Conquered the world in as little time as another could have travell'd over it. His motto was, Without delay; or, I do all by making no delay; He was ſwift upon the face of the earth. Thus wicked men are light upon the face of the water, that is, they are ſwift and fierce for the attaining of their ſinful ends; they run as nimbly at it, as if they could run upon the top of a corn field, and never preſs a ſtraw; or as if they could run upon the water, and never wet their feet. By which hyperbolies the ancient Poets uſed to expreſs the greateſt celerity of motion. We have a proverbial ſaying among us, which reacheth this ſwiftneſs of a wicked man in ſin; He (ſay we) muſt needs run whom the Devil drives. There is no doubt but evil men are Devil-driven, yea Devil-ridden, he rides them with whip and ſpur to the doing of his black-work, and therefore no wonder if they are ſo ſwift and make ſuch haſt about it. That they make haſt to do it is too viſible, and that they make more haſt then good ſpeed is as viſible. For while they make haſt to ſin, they make haſt alſo to the curſe. As it follows in the next words.

De facilitate peccandi atq; velocitate ad caſtrandū, quācumq; ſceleris occaſionē intelligi poſſe videtur. Tam leviter in terra figunt pedē, ut etiam ſuper aquas incedere poſſe videantur. Sanct.

Their portion is curſed in the earth.

Job ſpake in the ſingular number before, but here in the plural, He is ſwift, &c. Their portion, &c. His meaning (I conceive) may be this; That look how many ſoever they be of them that are thus ſwift to ſin, there's not one of them ſhall be able to out-run the curſe. They are ſwift as the water to do evil, but the curſe will be as the wind to make them miſerable.

Their portion is curſed.

The word ſignifieth any thing which falls to a man of right, or is beſtowed upon him for his lot or ſhare.

Firſt, That part or portion which comes by way of Inheritance, is ſo expreſſed (Gen. 31. 14. Deut. 12. 12.) The Inheritance that a father gives his ſon is his portion.

Secondly, It ſignifies that part, ſhare, or lot of food, which is given out to any man for his daily proviſion, (Deut. 18. 8.)

Thirdly, It notes that which is given to the poor by way of alms (Eccl. 11. 2.) Give a portion to ſeven, and alſo to eight; (that is, give to many) for thou knoweſt not what evil ſhall be upon the earth. It is uſed alſo for a ſhare, or diſtribution of the ſpoil to each Souldier after a victory (Gen. 14. 24.) Aner, Eſhcol, and Mamre, let them take their portion, ſaid Abraham to the King of Sodom, after he had reſcued his brother Lot and the captivated Kings. In this place the word is taken in the largeſt ſence, as comprehending whatſoever they could call theirs, or was any way belonging to them. So that when Job ſaith, their portion is Curſed, his meaning is, all that they have is curſed. As they have ſinned in all they did, ſo they are curſed in all they have. The grace of God in the Goſpel is compared to leven (Math. 13. 33.) which a woman took and hid in three pecks of meal, till the whole was levened. As the grace of God both in regenerating and comforting runs through the whole man, ſo the curſe of God like leven ſowres the whole lump of man, it runs through all that a man is or hath.

Their portion is curſed.

There is an elegant paranomaſia in the Hebrew between theſe two words in the text, ſwift or light, and Curſed; They being both repreſented by one radical word, and the reaſon of it is, becauſe thoſe things that are light, or contemptible, are curſed, or in a curſed condition. They that honour me (ſaith the Lord, 1 Sam. 2. 10.) I will honour; but they that deſpiſe me ſhall be lightly eſteemed; or, they ſhall be curſed. There the ſame word is uſed in the Original, which in the preſent text, we tranſlate curſed. To curſe a man is to ſlight him to the utmoſt; and we never eſteem ſo lightly or baſely of any thing or perſon, as when we curſe either the one or the other.

Pulchra eſt in Hebræo paranomaſia vocum conjugatorum nā levis & maledictus ab eadem radice קלל oriuntur. Levificatio eſt maledictio. Pined.

Their portion is Curſed in the earth.

But by whom are they curſed? or who curſeth them? I may anſwer, They are curſed both by God and man. As if Job had ſaid, their doings have been ſuch upon the earth, that, Firſt, all men curſe them; and Secondly, God curſeth them. Some are curſed by men, and yet God bleſſeth them; others are bleſſed or highly eſteemed by men, yet God curſeth them. But theſe men are ſuch who as they pleaſe not God, ſo they are contrary to all men (as the Apoſtle ſpake of ſome, 1 Theſ. 2. 15.) and therefore God and man joyn in their curſe. Their portion is curſed

Maledicere eſt leviter de aliquo ſentire, levibus acerbiſq; ſcommatibus aliorū proſcindere.

In the earth.

That is, in all their earthly concernments, or they are curſed even here while they are upon the earth, where they think themſelves, and where, poſſibly, ſome others think them alſo, moſt bleſſed. For though they have gotten much in the earth, or of earthly things, yet all they have gotten is curſed, and therefore all that they have is curſed, for they have got nothing beyond the earth.

Again, Theſe words may be read by way of Imprecation (we read them by way of aſſertion) let their portion be curſed in the earth; Like that (Pſal. 109. 8, 9. 10, 11.) Let his dayes be few, and let another take his office, let his children be fatherleſs, &c. Some of the ancients make the Paraphraſe thus, Let the roots of what they ſow or plant appear bare in the earth. When the root of a tree, or the roots of corn appear above ground, both tree and corn muſt needs wither, for want of moiſture. For as the earth feeds the root, ſo the root feeds the ſtock and the ſtock the branches. That is a curſed tree which bears no fruit according to its kind, and that tree whoſe root is not ſuckled by the earth can bear no fruit. Every wicked man is either curſed in not bringing forth fruit, or elſe the fruit which he brings forth is curſed. And therefore Their portion is (every way) curſed in the earth.

Appareant plantæ eorū ſuper terra aridæ, i.e. cum conſueverint agros ſuos non gerimnet terra.

There is yet another Interpretation of theſe words, which I ſhall but briefly touch, and paſs on. Their portion is Curſed in the Earth, that is, the Region, or place where they dwell is Curſed; They dwell in deſolate places, or they ſkulk up and down in deſerts and wilderneſſes, having done ſo much miſchief among men that they dare not ſhew their faces where they are known. Now, deſerts and deſolate places may juſtly be called curſed places, becauſe of their barrenneſs, for barrenneſs is the curſe which God laid upon the earth for the ſin of man (Gen. 4. 17.) As a fruitful land may be called a bleſſed Land, becauſe the bleſſing of God maketh a Land fruitful (Iſaac ſaid to his Son Jacob (Gen. 27. 27.) The ſmell of my Son is as the ſmell of a field which the Lord hath bleſſed, that is, as the ſmell of a fruitful field) So it may be ſaid that the earth or land where a man lives, and his portion in it is curſed, while he lives in a barren deſolate land, which looks as if it were under the perpetual curſe of God. And according to this interpretation, the latter part of the verſe (and he beholdeth not the way of the vineyards) may be thus underſtood; He comes not into any fruitful fields;

Deſcribit quomodo ſeſe gerere ſoleant: ut ſuo maleficia commodius regant eligunt ſibi ſedes in vaſtis locis; unde dicit, nec ſe convertit ad vias vinearum quia vineæ in locis cultis ſuæ ſunt non procul ab urbibus. Merc.

Vineyards are planted in a fruitful ſoil, and fruitful vines are full of the bleſſing of God. Thus as the portion of the wicked in the earth is alwayes curſed, by a decree from God, ſo it may be ſaid that their portion is ſometimes curſed by their own Election, becauſe for the better ſecreting and hiding of themſelves from the eye of Juſtice, they ſpend their dayes in ſuch places as by reaſon of their waſtneſs and barrenneſs ſeem to confeſs themſelves under a curſe. Their portion is curſed in the earth.

Hence Note, Firſt, Sin brings a curſe with it.

When Job had deſcribed the wickedneſs of theſe men, their murthers, their adulteries, and their thefts, he concludes, Their portion is curſed. Sin calleth for a curſe from men, and it calleth for a curſe from God. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 11. 26.) He that withholdeth Corn (that is, who hoards it up and will not ſell it at a reaſonable rate, reſolving to make a dearth when God hath made none, he who thus withholdeth Corn) the people will curſe him. Now if the people curſe him that will not let them have corn for mony, then much more him that ſtealeth or taketh away their corn without mony. He that deſtroyeth other mens goods, gets a curſe inſtead of good. Eliphaz ſaith (Chap. 5. 3.) I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root, but ſuddenly I curſed his habitation, that is, I ſaw his habitation was curſed, or under a curſe, I knew what would become of him ſhortly. In ſome caſes it may be lawful for man to wiſh a curſe upon man, and the curſe of man may be the curſe of God too; and uſually it is ſo, when any man is generally curſed by men. The voice of the people is the voice of God. When a man is followed with a curſe from the moſt of men good and bad, it is an argument that there is a Curſe gone out from God againſt him, and that his portion is Curſed in the earth. Sin is the deſerving or procuring cauſe, and the wrath of God is the inflicting or productive cauſe of the Curſe. Balaak hired Balaam to curſe the people of God, but the curſe could not take; the train was laid, but he could not make the powder take fire, the curſe came not, why? the reaſon is given, yea Balaam himſelf gives it (Numb. 23. 21.) He (that is, God) hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he ſeen perverſeneſs in Iſrael. If there had been iniquity, that is any national iniquity or publick iniquity, perſiſted in and not repented of among them, that had brought the curſe inevitably; but though Balaam laboured to curſe them, though he went from hill to hill, and tried all means to get an opportunity to curſe them, yet he could not, for (ſaith he) God hath bleſſed them, and I cannot reverſe it. There is no iniquity in Jacob, nor perverſneſs in Iſrael, therefore their portion was bleſſed in the earth. Sin in whomſoever it is hath a curſe in the belly or bowels of it. Even Chriſt himſelf taking our ſin upon him, was neceſſitated to take the curſe upon him which was due to our ſin; Chriſt taking our ſin upon him, was (as the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 Cor. 5. 21.) made ſin for us, that is an offeriug or a ſacrifice for our ſin, yea as the ſame Apoſtle ſaith (Gal. 3. 13.) He was therefore made a curſe for us. And if Chriſt who (having no ſin in him) did only take our ſin upon him, could not avoid the curſe, how ſhall they avoid it, who (having no part in Chriſt) have all manner of ſin in them?

Vox populi vox dei.

But it may be objected, All men ſin, and yet many have no appearance of a curſe upon them, nor is their portion curſed in the earth?

I anſwer, Firſt, This aſſertion is to be limited to unbelievers or ungodly men. Secondly, unbelievers and ungodly men are under a curſe, though the curſe do not break out and appear viſibly upon them. As the portion of a godly man may be bleſſed, though there be no appearance of the bleſſing; when nothing appears upon him but affliction and the croſs, yet the godly man is bleſſed. The Croſs of a godly man is like the proſperity of a wicked man. The former hath an outward Croſs, but a Bleſſing at the bottome; the latter hath outward proſperity, but a curſe at the bottome and bitterneſs in the end. Again, the peace of the prophane, is like the grace of hypocrites, only a ſhew; hypocrites have a ſhew of grace, an appearance of holineſs, yet they are but painted Sepulchres, full of rottenneſs within; So the wicked have a ſhew of peace and proſperity, of benefits and bleſſings, but a curſe is within them, and a curſe hangs over them, ready every moment to drop down upon their heads. For

Secondly, His portion is curſed, that is, 'tis under a curſe, though the curſe be not actually inflicted. As the mercies of God are ſure to his people, yet many times very ſlow, they come not preſently, but they will come: So alſo the wrath and curſe of God will ſurely come upon the wicked, though, as to outward effects and impreſſions, they are ſlow and long in coming. Actings of mercy are for an appointed time, Every viſion is for an appointed time (as the Lord told his Prophet, Hab. 2. 3.) The viſion of Judgment and wrath is for an appointed time, as well as the viſion of love and mercy; That is, all the love, and all the wrath, the bleſſing, and the curſe, which are revealed (in any way of viſion, are for an appointed time) but at the end the viſion will ſpeak and not lie; if it tarry, wait for it, for it will ſurely come and not tarry. As it is (I ſay) in the viſions of mercy and bleſſing, ſo in thoſe of wrath, and of the curſe; They are for an appointed time, in the end they will ſpeak. Sometimes the curſe is quick, it apprehendeth the ſinner in the very act, it takes him in the manner, as Phineas did Zimri and Cozbi. And as (Pſal. 78. 30.) While their meat was yet in their mouthes, the wrath of God came upon them. The ſound of the curſe is ſometimes at the heels of ſin, at other times the ſound of the curſe is a great way behind the ſin, no ſight nor ſound of the curſe for a long time. As, light is ſown for the righteous (Pſal. 97. 11.) That is, They ſhall have a crop of good things, though it lie, as ſeed doth, a great while under the clods, and as dead in the furrows; So darkneſs is ſown for the wicked, they perceive it not yet, but they ſhall be wrapt up in it for ever; yea while they perceive it not, they are in it, and they are by ſo much the more in it, by how much the leſs they perceive it. For, this is ever true, The portion of the wicked is curſed in the earth, though they ſeem compaſſed about with bleſſings. I will curſe your bleſſings, ſaith the Lord, (Mal. 2. 2.) yea I have curſed them already. The wicked may be rich, and yet curſed; honourable, and yet curſed; ſucceſsful in buſineſs, and yet curſed; bleſſed, and yet curſed, God doth curſe their bleſſings. That which is a bleſſing in the kind and matter of it, is to ſome a curſe in the uſe and iſſue of it. So then, as Godlineſs is profitable for all things, and hath the promiſe of this life as well as of that which is to come (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Godlineſs is compaſſed about and cloathed with promiſes of all ſorts and ſeaſons: So ungodlineſs is unprofitable for all things, and makes him that is ſo, miſerable in all things; For it hath the curſe of this life, and of that which is to come. If the promiſe do not meet a godly man in this life, or in the things of this life, yet it will in the life to come, and in the things of the life to come, yea in all things ſo far as concerns the life to come, the bleſſing alwayes meets him. And if the curſe do not meet a wicked man in this life, yet it will in the life to come, and in the things of the life to come, yea in all things ſo far as concerns the life to come; The curſe alwayes meets him.

Then ſee the folly of thoſe, who fear the curſe, and are not afraid of ſin; as if a man ſhould fear drowning, and yet caſt himſelf into the water, or fear burning, and yet throw himſelf into the fire; thus do they who love ſin, and fear the curſe. If the beauty of holineſs doth not take upon the heart, yet the curſe that attends ſin may deter from medling with it. And did men know the terrour of the Lord, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Cor. 5. 11.) they would eaſily be perſwaded to take heed of ſin, even of every ſin; for though uſually great ſins brings the curſe, yet the leaſt ſins may. They who know what the curſe of the Lord is, cannot but know what the terrour of the Lord is, that is, that the Lord is (to ſinners) very terrible. For the curſe of the Lord abiding upon a ſinner, makes him every way and alwayes miſerable. There needs no more to be ſaid to prove a man miſerable then this, that his portion is curſed, or that he is under the curſe. For as the bleſſing of God makes us happy with any portion, that's enough, the bleſſing being it ſelf the beſt and moſt abundant portion (Every good thing is vertually in the bleſſing) ſo the curſe is vertually every evil thing; therefore that muſt needs make a man miſerable. When the Lord bleſſeth, it is not an empty word, but a power goes with it to make a man bleſſed; and when the Lord curſeth, it is not an empty word, but a power goes with it, to make a mans portion curſed on the Earth. Job having laid down this poſition gives a proof of it in the laſt words of the verſe.

He beholdeth not the way of the vineyards.

Cohærebit cum ſuperioribus ſi hæc ſit quaſi præcedentis expoſitio imprecationis. Nullam habeat impius partem in agris locisque frugiferis, ex quibus ullū fructum percipere poſſit. Pined.

Some read theſe (as the former) words, by way of imprecation; let his portion be curſed in the Earth, and let him not behold the way of the vineyards. We tranſlate aſſirtively, he beholdeth not, &c.

But what is meant here by not beholding? is it only this, he cometh not within the view or ſight of them? I conceive there is more in it then ſo, and that when Job ſaith, he beholdeth not, his meaning is, he enjoyeth vineyards no more, or he dwelleth no more in a fruitful and pleaſant land, ſuch as that land is which aboundeth in vineyards, and ſo conſequently with wine, but he ſhall live miſerably in a barren ſoyle. So that we may now interrogate wicked men, whether Murtherers, Adulterers, or Thieves (as Paul doth every ſinner, Rom. 1. 24.) what fruit have ye of thoſe things, whereof ye are (or ought to be) aſhamed? have ye any fruit of the vine? ſurely no, for ſuch behold not the way of the vineyards. To behold is to enjoy the pleaſantneſs, to taſte the ſweetneſs of the fruit of the vineyards. Wine which is the fruit of the vineyard is pleaſant and delightful, it makes glad the heart of man (Pſal. 104. 15.) and vineyards are here named to ſignifie all ſorts of outward good things, they being the chief of outward good things; for as ſometimes bread ſignifieth all outward good things, becauſe that ſtrengthens man; heart; ſo Wine, becauſe that cheareth and comforteth the heart of man. So that when Job ſaith, he ſhall not behold the way of the vineyards; It is as if he had ſaid, he ſhall not taſt of or enjoy any good thing. For

Again, thoſe words, he beholdeth not &c. are not to be underſtood as if he did voluntarily refuſe to behold, or cared not to behold the way of the vineyards, but as implying a force or conſtraint upon him, by which he was kept or hindred from looking that way.

Hence take this brief note;

The loſs of good is a great miſery as well as the enduring of evil.

It hath been queſtioned which is greater, the puniſhment of loſs, or the puniſhment of pain; but without all queſtion, loſs is a very great puniſhment; not to behold the way of the vineyards, not to return to houſe and land, to wife and children, is a ſore affliction. What will it then be never to behold the face of God, but to be under a ſentence of eternal baniſhment from his preſence? His portion is curſed in the Earth, here in this world, who beholdeth not the way of the vineyards; how then is his portion curſed in the next world, who ſhall never behold the path or way of life?

There are yet ſeveral other readings and expoſitions of theſe words.

Abſtinebit a via regia et ſrequentia hominum ne cognoſcatur. Vatabl. Ita feſtinat fugere, ut ne proprias quidem vineas olim tam gratas aſpiciat. Iſidor.

Firſt, As if the meaning were to ſhew the wicked mans fear of being ſeen, becauſe of his guilt, and that therefore he would not behold or come near the way of the vineyards, that is, thoſe places which many people have occaſion to frequent.

Secondly, As if Job would here ſhew what haſt men make to eſcape who are under guilt; as if he had ſaid, the wicked man will be ſo ſet upon the run, that he will not ſtay ſo much as to view or behold his own vineyards, formerly ſo delightful and pleaſant to him.

Thirdly, It is conceived to be a proverbial ſpeech, according to which it was ironically ſaid of malefactors who were led forth to ſuffer death, they behold not the way of the vineyards; no, they behold only the way to the Gibbet or place of execution.

Non refluet, ſecundum conſuetudinem altarū. Ruet.

Fourthly, Others divide the word Cheramim, which we tranſlate, vineyards, into two; that is into Chi, a particle of ſimilitude or likeneſs, and Ramim which ſignifies, either perſons, or things that are high. Hence Junius tranſlates, he ſhall not return or flow back again, he ſhall fall after the manner of things that are high. And he expounds the ſenſe of our tranſlation; he ſhall not return to his former ſtate, as waters do which ebb and flow; but as waters which fall from a high place cannot go back; ſo ſhall he remain caſt down for ever. Water being a heavy body muſt have a deſcent, it cannot aſcend naturally, therefore the water that falls from a high place is gone, and cometh not again. The wicked man periſheth, as waters that flow from a high place and return no more.

Non proſpicit inceſſum ſicut excelſorum, i. e. non curabit incedere eo modo, quo ſolent incedere illi qui dignitate vel potentia alijs præſunt. Bold.

Another following that diviſion of the word, renders the clauſe thus; he doth not look to (or provide for) his way or his going, as of the high ones; that is, he ſhall never go into that pomp or equipage, in which they go who are above others in power and dignity. As if he had ſaid, he ſhall never live in a low, mean and miſerable condition; he ſhall no more behold the way of the high while he lives; nor (which the ſame Author cleaves to as the moſt genuine interpretation) ſhall he take care to provide to be buried according to the way, cuſtome, or manner of the high ones when he dyeth.

But I ſhall not inſiſt upon either of theſe rendrings, though they all fall into one common channel with the former, which is to ſet forth that the wicked man is under a curſe, or that his portion is curſed in the Earth, yea, that a curſe is his portion. Nor ſhall I (having often obſerved from other texts of this Book the woful end of wicked men, for this reaſon, I ſay, I ſhall not) ſtay to give any further obſervations from this clauſe, according to any of the rendrings of it: of all which I moſt embrace that of our own tranſlators, He ſhall not behold the way of the vineyards; not only becauſe moſt of the learned Hebricians render it ſo, but firſt, becauſe it makes no diviſion of, nor puts any ſtrain at all upon any of the Original words in the text; and ſecondly, becauſe it carries (to my thoughts) ſo fair a correſpondence with the words which follow in the two next verſes.

VERS. 19, 20.

Drought and heat conſume the ſnow waters, ſo doth the the grave thoſe which have ſinned.

The womb ſhall forget him, and the worme ſhall feed ſweetly on him; he ſhall be no more remembered, and wickedneſs ſhall be broken as a Tree.

These are two different tranſlations of verſ. 19. I ſhall propoſe them, and then explicate our own.

Firſt, Thus; In the drought and heat they rob, and in the ſnow water, they ſin to the grave.

Secondly, (to the ſame ſence by way of ſimilitude) like as the dry Earth and heat drink up the ſnow water, ſo they ſin even to the grave.

Both theſe renderings carry in them two things generally remarkable.

Firſt, The obſtinacy and perſeverance of wicked men in ſin while they live.

Secondly, Their impunity in ſin until death.

In the drought and heat they rob, and in the ſnow water.

גזל rapuit vi & apertè res aut perſonas.

That is, they rob and ſpoyle at all times, or in all the ſeaſons of the year, in hard times, in the hardeſt times, in the extreamity of drought, and in the extreamity of cold, they never give over, they ſin to the grave. This reading is much inſiſted upon by ſome; and as the ſenſe is uſeful, ſo the text may bear it. For the verb ſignifies to ſnatch a thing openly, and forceably, as well as to conſume ſecretly, and ſo may be rendered by Robbing, as well as by conſuming.

In drought and heat they rob, and in the ſnow waters.

Firſt, We may conſider this drought and heat with the ſnow water as expreſſing thoſe ſeaſons which are very troubleſome to the wicked man, to do his work in, to rob, to ſpoyle: extream heat, and extream cold, are great impediments to action, yet in heat and ſnow they rob.

Whence Obſerve, A wicked man will break through all difficulties, to find a way to his beloved ſin.

Though he be in danger of melting with heat, or of freezing with cold, yet he will rob, or do any other miſchief that his heart is ſet upon: neither heat, nor cold, neither wet, or dry, ſhall keep him in, yea though an Angel with a drawn Sword in his hand ſtand in his way (as in the way of Balaam)yet, when he hath a mind, he will go on. We may ſay of every bold and preſumptuous ſinner, that he ſins in heat and cold, he ſins in the ſight of wrath and death. The threatnings (which are the portion of ſuch) have the extreamity of heat and cold in them ; the threatnings have ſword and fire in them, wrath and death in them, yet the wicked ſin in the face of them, and (upon the matter) dare them to do their worſt. A godly man, whoſe heart is bent and ſet heaven-ward, will walk on his way, though he muſt paſs through heat, and cold, though he meets with dangers, and difficulties, though he meet many Lions in his way, yet he will not turn out of his way. Paul ſaith of himſelf and fellow labourers (2 Cor. 6. 4.) In all things approving our ſelves as the miniſters of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes, in ſtripes, in impriſonments, &c. and a little after (v. 8.) by honour, and diſhonour, by evil report, and good report, &c. Here was working in heat and cold, in fire and froſt, in all ſorts of providences from God, in all ſorts of aſpects from men. Paul and his colleagues, never minded what men did to them, but what the mind of God was they ſhould do. And thus every godly man works, or doth the work of God. For though every godly man attains not to ſuch a degree of zeal and holy courage as Paul had, yet he hath a truth of zeal and holy courage which will (according to his meaſure) carry him through a world of evils and incombrances, to the doing of that good, which duty and conſcience, or the conſcience of his duty calls him to. Now as godly men labour to approve themſelves the Miniſters or ſervants of God, ſo ungodly men will approve themſelves the ſervants of ſin in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, and in diſtreſſes ; they will run all hazzards, and venture through all extreamities, rather then leave the law of a luſt unfulfiled. The Lord put the Jews to much ſuffering for their ſins, yet ſin they would ; why ſhould ye be ſtricken any more, (ſaith he, Iſa. 1. 5.) ye will revolt more and more ; while I have been ſtriking, ye have been revolting. The ſame pertinacy is complained of (Iſa. 57. 37.) I ſmote him, and was wrath, yet he went on frowardly in the way of his heart ; that is, in a ſinful way. The heart of man knows no other way, till himſelf is formed after the heart of God, and in that ſinful way he will go, though God make his heart ach as he goes, I ſmote him, and was wroth, yet he went on, &c.

In drought and heat they rob, and in the ſnow water.

Again, we may take drought, heat, and ſnow water, not only as importing their ſufferings while they were doing in ſuch times, but alſo as importing the ſeveral ſeaſons of time, as if he had ſaid, they will ſin both winter and ſummer, that is, continually ; we ſay of ſome, they are never well neither full nor faſting ; as full and faſting imply all the conditions of man, ſo hot and cold, ſummer and winter, imply all diviſions of time.

Hence Note, Evil men will do evil alwayes.

Sinning time is never out with them, they do not ſin by fits or ſtarts, in an ill mood only, or through a ſtreſs of temptation ; but they ſin from a principle within, they have a ſpring of wickedneſs within, and that will ever be ſending and flowing out. A good man may be overtaken with ſin at any time, but he doth not ſin at all times, in winter, and ſummer, in heat, and cold. Corruption will be working where Grace is, but where grace is not, nothing works but corruption. If wicked be not doing evil in every moment of time, it is not becauſe they at any time would not do evil, but becauſe at all times they cannot ; and therefore the tranſlation under hand ſpeaks of their whole life as one continued act of ſin.

They ſin to the grave.] That is, till they dye, and ſo are carryed out to the grave. So that this manner of ſpeaking, They ſin to the grave, ſignifies the utmoſt perſeverance of wicked men in ſinning ; as if it had not been enough to ſay, they ſin in heat, and cold, winter, and ſummer, but they ſin out the laſt inch of time, even till they come to the graves mouth.

Hence Note, Wicked men will not ceaſe to ſin, while they continue to live.

The Apoſtle Peter (2 Pet. 2. 14.) ſaith of that generation, who have eyes full of adultery, and that cannot ceaſe from ſin ; ſin is their nature, it is not what they have acquired, but what is implanted in them, and born with them. And becauſe ſin is natural to them, therefore they cannot get it off until their nature is changed. And hence it is, that converſion or regeneration is the change of our nature as well as of our actions. A man unregenerate ſins as naturally as he lives ; he ſins as naturally as he ſees or hears, or exerciſeth any of thoſe natural faculties, ſo naturally doth he ſin, and therefore he ſins to the grave. And this is a rational demonſtration of the Juſtice of God in awarding eternal puniſhment for ſin committed in time, or in a ſhort time (the whole time of mans life, in which ſin is committed, is but a ſhort time, a nothing to eternity wherein ſin ſhall be puniſhed. This, I ſay, is a demonſtration of the Juſtice of God in puniſhing wicked men) becauſe if they could have lived to eternity, they would have done evil to eternity, they do evil as they can, and as long as they can. Seeing then, there is a principle in man to ſin eternally, it is but juſt with God if he puniſh ſinners eternally ; did not the grave ſtop him, his heart would never ſtop him from ſin. In heat and cold, they rob, they ſin to the grave.

Further as theſe words are put into a ſimilitude, they intimate the eaſineſs, and naturalneſs of their ſinning, as well as the continuance of it ; like as the hot Earth drinketh up the ſnow water, ſo wicked men ſin to the grave ; they ſin to death, and they ſin with as much eaſe and naturalneſs as the Earth, when dry and thirſty, drinks up the ſnow water. Sinners are ſaid to drink iniquity as water, (Job 15. 16.) they are ſaid to draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with cart ropes (Iſa. 5. 18.) The laſt of theſe compariſons notes their ſtrength and groſſeneſs in ſinning ; the ſecond notes their wit and cunning in ſinning ; the third (which ſuits with the preſent Text) notes their readineſs and eaſineſs to ſin ; they can do it as eaſily as drink, as eaſily as the hot Earth drinketh up the ſnow water.

So much of that tranſlation ; I come now to conſider our own.

Drought and heat conſume the ſnow waters.

Drought or drineſs ; the word notes the drineſs of the Earth, and is often put for dry Earth, as alſo for Earth undreſt, or for a deſert place, becauſe in ſuch places the Earth is uſually parcht with heat and over dry. And hence the word (Tiſiim) in the plural number ſignifies a people that dwell in a wilderneſs, or in a deſert. So the people of Iſrael were called while they marched ſlowly through it to Canaan (Pſal. 74. 14.) thou breakeſt the head of the Leviathan, and gaveſt him to be meat for the people, who dwelt in the wilderneſs. And as men, ſo thoſe wild beaſts that dwelt in deſerts, or ſolitary places are called Tiſiim (Iſa. 34. 14.) the wild beaſts of the deſert ſhall alſo meet with the wild beaſts of the land, and the Satyr ſhall cry to his fellow, the Shrich-Owle ſhall alſo reſt there, and find for himſelf a place of reſt. Tiſiim are ſuch uncouth creatures as inhabit Tſijiah, dry and deſert places. Drought

And heat.] Cham the Original word ſignifies both to be hot, and to be black ; the ſecond Son of Noah, (who mocked his father) was named Cham, and it is ſuppoſed that the poſterity of Cham inhabited Africa, which is alſo called Ammonia, being a hot Country , and the people of it black. And from this Hebrew word (it is conceived) the Heathens alſo called the Sun Jupiter Hammon ; and they had Sun-Images called Chammamin (Levit. 26. 30.) which they worſhiped.

Drought and heat conſume the ſnow water.

The word (as many other in the Hebrew) hath a nearneſs of ſound as well as in ſenſe with our Engliſh word guſſel, and we ſay of great drinkers, They are Guzzlers. The dry Earth and heat guſſel or drink in the ſnow water, as the intemperate perſon guſſels and drinks down his liquor. Thus, drought and heat conſume the ſnow water , that is, the ſnow when melted into water.

So doth the grave thoſe that have ſinned.

There is a wonderful conciſeneſs in the Hebrew, we find there no particle of likeneſs, nor is there any expreſſion of thoſe mira brevitas quæ obſcuritatem parit, non dubiũ eſt ſimilitudinem eſſe. Merc.

thoſe that, as appears by the different letter in our tranſlation; yet there is no doubt but the words carry in them the force of a ſimilitude, therefore we may ſafely ſupply them, according to our reading;

So doth the grave thoſe that have ſinned.

The ſame word is uſed indifferently in the Original both for the Grave and Hell; both ſignifications are made uſe of by Interpreters in this place. Firſt, the grave or death; Secondly, Hell, which is the ſecond death, an everlaſting death, conſumeth thoſe that have ſinned.

But why doth he ſay, the grave conſumeth thoſe that have ſinned? Can he mean any ſpecial ſort of men by this, forasmuch as all men have ſinned and ſin dayly?

I anſwer, It is a truth, the grave conſumeth, and death reigneth over all, for that all have ſinned; whereſoever ſin hath to do, the territories of death are as large as the territories of ſin; and had it not been for ſin, death had never had any dominion in the world, nor can the grave conſume any but thoſe that have ſinned. The body of man had never come into the graves mouth, and it had been too hard a morſel for the ſtomack of the grave to digeſt, had it not been for ſin; for though the body of man in its materials and conſtitution was mortal, that is, was under a poſſibility of dying before he ſinned, yet if ſin had not brought him under the threat of death, God had never ſubjected him under that decree of dying, in purſuance of both which the grave now conſumeth (all) thoſe that have ſinned. The grave conſumeth Godly men becauſe they have ſinned, and the grave conſumes wicked men becauſe they have ſinned; yet there is a great difference among theſe ſinners who dye, and a greater difference among theſe ſinners when they are dead.

And therefore Job ſpeaks here diſtinctively; for though it be a truth that all whether Godly or wicked have ſinned, and that the grave conſumeth all who have ſinned, yet Job doth not here intend all men by thoſe who have ſinned, for by them Job means groſs preſumptuous and impenitent ſinners; he means it not of thoſe who ſin according to common frailty, but of thoſe who ſin with a high hand obſtinately. Such he means, even oppreſſours, adulterers, murtherers, of whom he ſpake by name before, theſe and ſuch as theſe are the ſinners whom he intends, while he ſaith, ſo doth the grave thoſe that have ſinned.

And if it be ſaid, ſo doth the grave thoſe that (in this ſence) have not ſinned.

I anſwer, The Grave is ſaid in a ſpecial manner to conſume thoſe who have thus ſinned.

Firſt, Becauſe ſuch ſinners do more ſubject and lay themſelves open to death, by their wicked courſes and intemperate living. Such ſinners ſpoile their bodies and corrupt their blood, they fill themſelves with diſeaſes, which bring them early to the Grave.

Secondly, Becauſe God doth often cut the thread of ſuch mens lives when they are ſtrong and healthy, and tumbles them into the graves mouth to be conſumed, before they have lived out half their dayes.

The words being thus opened, fall under a twofold interpretation.

Moriuntur facillimè & ſuaviſſime, ita ut nihil doloris aut cruciatus ſentiant, non lenta morte contabeſcunt ut magna ex parte probi. Merc.

Ex hebræis aliqui putant indicari leniſſimã mortem impiorum, qua lenitur et inſenſibilitèr liquifiunt, &c. Pined.

Firſt, As implying the felicity (ſuch as it is) of wicked men in dying, or the eaſineſs of their death; as they live in pleaſure, ſo they dye without pain. That's a point inſiſted upon at Chapter 21. Verſ. 13. They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and in a moment (or with eaſe) they go down to the grave. And again (verſ. 32, 33.) He ſhall be brought to the grave, the clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet unto him. Where Job ſhews that wicked men have as much eaſe in death as others, and many times a great deal more. They dye in a moment, not tyred out with the torture of chronical diſeaſes, but having a quick and ſpeedy paſſage out of the world, are diſſolved even as the ſnow is by the heat and warmth of the Sun. This ſence ſome of note inſiſt chiefly upon, as moſt ſuitable to Jobs ſcope in deſcribing the corporal and temporal felicity of wicked men, even in death, which carries the greateſt appearance of terror and trouble in it.

But I rather take theſe words as a deſcription of the miſerable and ſad concluſion of a wicked man. For the word which we render, to conſume, ſignifies a forceable ſwallowing down, a kind of devouring, which doth not conſiſt with that other explication, Drought and heat conſume the ſnow waters, ſo doth the grave thoſe that have ſinned.

Hence Obſerve, Some ſin ſo as if they were the only ſinners, or as if they only had ſinned.

All men ſin, but ſome go away with the name, as if they only were worthy to be called ſinners. In which ſence the Evangeliſt ſaith (Luk. 7. 37.) And behold a woman in the City which was a ſinner, when ſhe knew that Jeſus ſat in the Phariſees houſe, brought an alablaſter box of ointments, &c. But were not all the women in the City ſinners? They were ſo; but this woman had a common fame for a ſinner, that is, for an unclean, wanton woman; ſhe was a ſinner of ſinners, the chief of ſinners in that City. So (Luk. 19. 7.) when Chriſt went to the houſe of Zacheus, the Phariſees were vexed, and murmured, ſaying, that he was gone to be gueſt with a man which was a ſinner; as if he had ſaid, he is gone to the houſe of a notorious ſinner, a man ſo ſinful and guilty, that all men ſeem innocent and ſinleſs in compariſon of him. So they accounted that Zacheus the Publican; and doubtleſs he was as noted a man for ſin before his converſion, as he was for grace after it. As they who are born of God do not commit ſin, yea, cannot ſin becauſe they are born of God (1 Joh. 3. 9.) that is, their ſinning is no ſinning in Gods account, and comparatively to the ſinning of others. So they who are born of the Devil (as Chriſt ſaith thoſe contradicting Jews were, Joh. 8. 44.) do nothing but commit ſin, and ſin ſo as if they (and their like) alone did ſin; for as no Godly man ſins as a wicked man doth, ſo ſome wicked men ſin at ſuch a rate, that it may be ſaid they only ſin, even in reſpect of the generality of wicked men. Thus alſo ſome Godly men do ſo far exceed and out-ſtrip other Godly men in holineſs and the acting of their graces, as if they only were Godly, as if they only had the acting of thoſe graces. Abraham believed as if he only had been a believer; and Job was patient, as if none had patience but he; David was a man ſo upright, as if only he had been upright, or a man after Gods own heart. There are Saints like Abraham and David, none like them; and there are ſinners, like Jeroboam and Ahab, none like them.

So doth the grave thoſe that have ſinned.

Obſerve, They who are extreamly ſinful, make them ſelves ſevenfold more ſubject to death then other men.

They who ſin as if none did ſin but they, are ſo ſubject to death, as if none were ſubject to death but they. For if every ſin, the leſt ſin doth put us into the hand or under the power of death, then great ſins multiplyed and continued in, put us into the hand and under the power of death much more. The Pſalmiſt ſaith of wicked worldly men (Pſal. 49. 14.) Like ſheep they are laid in the grave, death ſhall feed on them, and their beauty ſhall conſume in the grave, from their dwelling; or (as we put in the margin) the grave being an habitation to every one of them ſhall conſume their beauty.

But ſome may object, Is not this true of Godly men too, are not they thus handled by death, and the grave? doth not death feed on them? and doth not the grave conſume their beauty?

I anſwer, though it doth, yet it doth not feed upon, nor conſume them, as it feeds upon and conſumes wicked men. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks here of death as it were triumphing over the wicked, whereas the Godly triumph over death. For, firſt he ſaith, the wicked are laid in the grave like ſheep; they lived like Wolves or Lions, but they are laid in the grave like ſheep. If it be asked, why like ſheep? I anſwer, not for the innocency of their lives, but for their impotency in death; as if it had been ſaid, when once death took them in hand to lay them in the grave, they could make no more reſiſtance then a Sheep can againſt a Lion or a Wolfe; and when death hath thus laid them in the grave, then ſecondly (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) death ſhall feed on them, as a Lion doth upon a ſheep, or any wild beaſt upon his prey, which is a further degree of deaths triumph over the wicked; and thirdly, their beauty ſhall conſume in the grave, that is, all their bodily and natural beauty (that is all the beauty which they have) ſhall conſume in the Grave, whereas the Godly, have a beauty (and they count it their only beauty) which the grave cannot conſume, and that is the beauty of their graces, the beauty of holineſs, the ſpiritual beauty of the inner man; yea and the ſpiritual beauty of their outward holy actings ſhall not conſume in the Grave; for bleſſed are the dead that dye in the Lord, for from henceforth, ſaith the Spirit, they reſt from their labours, and their works follow them (Rev. 14. 13.) that is, their good works follow them (not to death, but into life) and will be both beauty and bleſſedneſs to them from the Lord for ever. Whereas curſed are the dead that dye in their ſins, for from henceforth, they ſhall be denyed reſt for ever, and none of their works, wherein they took pleaſure in this world, ſhall follow them into the next to give them any pleaſure. All their beauty and outward bleſſedneſs ends in the grave. If in this life only we have hope in Chriſt, (ſaith the Apoſtle of believers, 1 Cor. 15. 19.) we are of all men moſt miſerable; then how miſerable are they, who have no hope beyond this life, or if they have, both that and their preſent beauty conſume together in the grave. Thus it is plain, that though Godly men dye, yet death hath not ſuch a hand over them, as over the wicked. And as wicked men are more under the hand of death then the Godly when they dye, ſo they are continually more lyable unto death. Sin, which unfits men to dye comfortably, fits them (as it were) to dye naturally: The more ſinful any man is, the ſooner may death ſurpriſe him. Holineſs hath not only a promiſe of eternal life hereafter, but of a long life here (Pſal. 34. 12, 13.) And ſin is not only under a threat of eternal death hereafter, but of a ſpeedy death here, (Pſal. 55. 23.) But thou O Lord ſhalt bring them (that is, wicked men) down into the pit of deſtruction, (but when? it may be long firſt, the next words make anſwer) Bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out half their dayes; that is, not half the dayes which as others do, ſo they naturally might live; either the Juſtice of God or of man ſhall cut ſuch men off in the midſt of their dayes. The grave gapes for thoſe who have thus ſinned. So then, though there are many ſpiritual reaſons referring to eternal life, which may move the Sons of men to take heed of ſin, yet there is a ſtrong motive from the concernments of this preſent temporal life, and that not only as to the comforts of it, but alſo as to the very continuance of it. They haſten themſelves to the grave who make haſt to ſin, and ſo at once endanger the hopes of the next life, and the enjoyment of this.

Pro ſepulchrum eſt cur malim infernus aut inferi; nam ſepulchrum rapit etiam bonos, inferi ſolos eos rapiunt, qui peccaverunt, i. e. improbos. Druſ.

Laſtly, Some, becauſe the Grave (in a general ſence) conſumes the Godly as well as the ſinner (in the ſence laſt expreſſed) do therefore reſtrain the word Sheol in this place to Hell: as it ſignifies the place or ſtate of the damned, which is proper only to thoſe who have ſinned, and dye in their ſins. So the whole verſe is thus rendered. As dry Earth and heat conſume the ſnow waters, ſo Hell conſumeth thoſe that have ſinned. All that ſin and turn not, ſhall be turned to Hell; but ſhall Hell conſume them? they ſhall ever be conſuming, but never conſumed. Hell ſhall conſume them as to a comfortable being, but it ſhall not conſume them as to a being; they ſhall be alwayes dying, but never dead. Hell is the portion, and all the portion, of all wicked men hereafter, whatever portion of worldly profit or pleaſure they have had here; Hell ſhall conſume them, and they ſhall be conſuming for ever.

Ut terra torrida & calor abſumunt aquas inuales, ita infernus eos qui peccaverunt. Tig.

The Twentieth Verſe may carry the ſence of this interpretation; but it complyeth more clearly with the former, deſcribing the calamitous condition of a wicked man at his departure out of this world.

Verſ. 20. The womb ſhall forget him, the worm ſhall feed ſweetly on him, he ſhall be no more remembred, and wickedneſs ſhall be broken as a Tree.

The number varies here again. Job ſpake in the plural number immediately before, yet here keeping to the ſame ſubject, he ſpeaks in the ſingular.

The womb ſhall forget him.] That is, they who loved him moſt tenderly and dearly ſhall forget him. The word which we render The womb, is of a verb which ſignifies to love with greateſt intenſeneſs and tenderneſs: It is applyed to the love of man to God (Pſ. 18. 1.) I love the Lord, I love the Lord dearly with bowels of affection; and it is often applyed to the love of God unto man. Some tranſlate it here by the Abſtract; Love, mercy or pity ſhall forget him. Which may be taken two wayes; firſt, that thoſe friends who before were pitiful to him, ſhould forget him; his lovers, and acquaintance, who were dear to him even as his bowels, they ſhall forget him; or ſecondly, mercy ſhall forget him, that is, the mercy of God, or the God of mercy ſhall forget him, God who is altogether mercy ſhall forget him; Hell ſhall conſume him, and mercy, or the merciful God ſhall forget him for ever. The vulgar reads it by way of imprecation, let mercy forget him; others as a direct denunciation, mercy ſhall forget him; but I rather apprehend that this phraſe, or manner of ſpeaking, the womb ſhall forget him, doth only import thus much; that when the wicked man dyeth, he ſhall be as much forgotten among men, as if ſuch a man had never come out of his mothers womb, nor been born into the world. But are not wicked men remembered to have been in the world when once they go out of the world? uſually they do ſuch in things in the world as cannot eaſily be forgotten; and are not many wicked men, who dyed ſome Thouſands of years agoe, remembered unto this day, as if they had dyed but yeſterday? I anſwer, as to forget, alwayes implyeth former knowledge, and acquaintance, ſo ſometimes it implyeth only preſent neglect: When we paſs by, or ſlight a man, then we are ſaid to forget him, though we not only remember who he is, but ſee him before our eyes: much more then may we be ſaid to forget thoſe men being dead, whom we ſlighted while they lived, and never ſpake of but with contempt and abhorrence both of their perſons and actions ſince they dyed. The womb ſhall forget him.

Vim majorē habet per abſtractum. Oblivifcetur ejus miſeratio, ſive amor ſive dilectio, i. e. illi qui eum ſuaviter amabunt. Bold.

Yet as the former verſe is expounded by ſome, (as was there touched) to ſhew how quiet and eaſie a paſſage wicked men uſually have out of this world by death, ſo this clauſe alſo of the verſe in hand, yea the whole verſe is expounded to the ſame ſence; I will only hint it, and paſs on.

The womb ſhall forget him.] That is, his mother ſhall not be troubled or grieved at his death, becauſe he dyed without grief or trouble.

The worms ſhall feed ſweetly on him.

That is, the grave ſhall be no ſeverer to him then to others. There the worms feed upon all men, and they ſhall feed ſweetly on him; or it ſhall be a kind of ſweetneſs and pleaſure to him, to have the worms feeding on him; which is no more then what Job ſaid upon the ſame argument (Ch. 21. 23.) The clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet to him.

Ita ſuaviter obdormit, ut in ſepulchro ei vermis dulceſcere videatur, Druſ.

He ſhall be no more remembered.

That is, there ſhall no hard fate or evil accident befall him when he dyes to adminiſter matter of diſcourſe concerning him; for when a man is cut off by ſome remarkable ſtroak of Judgment either from the hand of God or man, his death becomes the diſcourſe and Table talk of all ſorts of men, for that generation at leaſt, if not for many more. What hath cauſed Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, to be remembered to this day, was it not the ſtrangeneſs of their death? (Numb. 14. 29, 30.) And Moſes ſaid, if theſe men dye the common death of all men, or if they be viſited after the viſitation of all men, then the Lord hath not ſent me; but if the Lord make a new thing, and the Earth open her mouth, and ſwallow them up, &c. This dreadful hand of God upon them in ſwallowing them up alive, hath made them to be remembered more then many Thouſands of honeſt and good men in Iſrael, who dyed in their Beds. Upon this account Ananias and Saphira are remembered, and ſo is that Herod (Acts 12. 23.) who was eaten of worms and gave up the Ghoſt, becauſe he gave not glory unto God. But ſaith Job (according to this expoſition) the wicked mans death is commonly ſo fair, and ſo much after the common death of all men, that no man remembers him any more.

And wickedneſs ſhall be broken as a Tree.

That is, the wicked man ſhall dye like an old rotten tree, he ſhall moulder away and decay by piecemeal, or gradually, as a tree doth which is never hewen down, but is ſuffered to waſte and dye alone. Thus the interpretation is carried through the whole verſe, as a proof, that bad men may (in this kind) have a good death.

But though this be a truth, and ſuits well with Jobs ſcope in ſome paſſages of this Chapter, as alſo in other paſſages of this Book, that wicked men dye as to outward appearance as fairly, and ſweetly, as the Godly; ſo that as no man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before him, but all things (in this life) come alike to all; there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked (Eccl. 9.1,2.) So all things come alike to all in death, ſo far as it meerly concerns the ſeparation of Soul and Body ; yet I rather conceive that this verſe declares wrath and judgment to wicked men dying, or their miſery and wretchedneſs in death. And therefore firſt, the womb, that is, his neareſt relations, and friends, even his mother, and wife, ſhall forget him. They expected no good from him while he lived, and ſo it was little ſorrow to them when he dyed. Some men live till their friends are weary of them, and every one thinks the world is well rid of them when they dye. Secondly, the worm ſhall feed ſweetly on him, that is, as he fed ſweetly upon ſin before, ſo now the worm ſhall have a ſweet morſel of him ; which ſome interpret alſo as a circumlocution of an ignominious ,or at leaſt a vulgar burial ; as if he had ſaid, he ſhall not have the burial of the Noble and Honourable, who uſually are ſecured from worms, by ſpices and imbalmings (ſpice and perfume fence the dead body againſt the worm) but though he lived honourably, death ſhall overtake him, and he ſhall be buried ignominiouſly, or he ſhall be buried among common men, he ſhall not have that priviledge which appertains to his ſtate, preſervation from the worms. And (which is a greater miſery then both the former) Thirdly, he ſhall be no more remembered, that is, he ſhall be no more ſpoken of with honour, but his name ſhall rot, as a man that is not worth the remembering. His name ſhall not be regiſtred with honour, nor kept upon the file, with men of credit and renown. So that as the firſt part of the verſe ſhews how his neareſt relations and lovers ſhall forget him, ſo this latter part ſhews that he ſhall be remembered no more of any others.

Mater, quia à vivo nihil expectabat ſolatii, neque pro mortuo amplius angitur.

The Original word which we tranſlate to Remember, taken in other forms, ſignifies a Hiſtory, or a monument of Record, as alſo a Recorder or Regiſter, who writes and ſets down things for memory. And hence alſo a man-child in the Hebrew is called Zachar, becauſe the family is reckoned by the males, they only being named in genealogies, and regiſtred in the monuments of antiquity ; ſo that theſe words, he ſhall be no more remembered, ſound thus much, he ſhall be a man whoſe name is quite blotted or raſed out of all memorials ; and this curſe of being no more remembered, may be taken, as was intimated before, either firſt abſolutely, he ſhall not be thought of, named, or remembered at all ; or ſecondly, relatively, he ſhall no more be remembered with honour, his name will ſmell worſe then his rotten carkaſs when he is dead, and whenſoever he is mentioned, it will be like rakeing in a dunghil which raiſeth up a filthy ſtench and vapour. Poſſibly while he lived he was ſpoken of with honour, he had many flatterers, who crept to him, bowed to him, adored him, and called him a gracious Lord, but when he dyeth his reputation dyeth too, he ſhall be no more remembered with honour ; when any man ceaſeth to be remembered as he once was, he may be ſaid not to be remembered at all. The worſt and wickedeſt men that ever were in the world may be ſtill remembered, but when they are remembered, it is with ſome mark of infamie, or with a black brand upon their name.

Meſheiim ſecretarii zichronoth, memoriæ hiſtoriæ, monumenta, zachar, Muſ.

Hence Note, Not to be remembered at all when we are dead, or to be remembered with diſhonour, is the portion of the wicked.

Many precious Saints have both lived in obſcurity, and being dead 'tis ſcarce remembered that they ever lived ; but none of the known Saints did ever live in diſgrace (unleſs in their opinion who had no grace) and being dead they are remembered by all (who have grace) with honour. But they who have been moſt famous for wickedneſs while they lived in this world, the moſt famous Oppreſſours, Adulterers, and Robbers, have dyed undeſired, and their name hath rotted being dead (Prov. 10.7.) David (Pſal. 69.28.) powreth out his curſe upon his enemies, let them be blotted out of the Book of the living, and not remembered among the righteous. The Jews were wont to number their families, and to take their names ; ſo they did when they came out of Egypt. In which ſence the book of Numbers may be called, the Book of the living ; and we may take the book of the living in a double notion, either firſt, for the book of thoſe who lived naturally ; or ſecondly, of thoſe who lived ſpiritually, and ſo were ſuch as ſhould live eternally (Phil. 4. 3. Rev. 3. 5.) David ſeems to intend this book of the living, becauſe he addeth, let them not be remembered among the righteous. As if he had ſaid, theſe men made an outward profeſſion, and ſeemed once to be in the liſt and catalogue of the righteous, they had once an eſteem and a name among the people of God (as all hypocrites have till they are unmasked) but they have diſcovered themſelves to be of another alliance, therefore let them be no more named nor remembered as having any relation to that ſociety. Thus we may interpret that imprecation of Moſes (Exod. 32. 32.) When the Lords wrath waxed hot againſt the people of Iſrael, and would have deſtroyed them, Moſes prayed, yet now, if thou wilt, forgive their ſin ; and if not, blot me I pray thee out of the book which thou haſt written, that is, out of the book which thou haſt commanded to be written as a Record of the people of Iſrael; as if he had ſaid, let me be reckoned no more for an Iſraelite, eſpecially let me not have a glorious, honourable name in Iſrael (ſuch a one Moſes had being the leader of that people) blot me out of the book which thou haſt written, let not my name ſtand upon that Record. The Lord had ſaid (verſ. 20.) Let me alone that my wrath may wax hot againſt them, that I may conſume them : And I will make of thee a great Nation. And Moſes beſought the Lord, &c. As if he had ſaid, I ſtand not upon my own name, I am ſo far from being ambitiouſly deſirous to be the head of a greater Nation then theſe, that rather then thy name ſhould ſuffer, I care not to be taken notice of as the head of this Nation, no nor as the meaneſt member of them, no nor to be accounted ſo much as a common Iſraelite. Blot me out of the book which thou haſt written. This alſo is a fair interpretation of Pauls meaning (Rom. 9.3.) when he wiſheth himſelf accurſed from Chriſt for his Brethren, his kinſmen according to the fleſh. We may ſuppoſe that Moſes and Paul were moved with the ſame Spirit of zeal for the glory of God in both their wiſhes ; and that when Moſes wiſhed (upon that account) to be blotted out of the Book which God had written, he wiſhed the ſame thing which Paul did, when he wiſhed to be accurſed or an Anathema from Chriſt ; that is, to be as a perſon ſeparated or excommunicated from the ſociety or communion of the faithful, and ſo no more to be remembered among the Saints, or to have his name blotted out of the Church Records, though he had been ſo great a planter and propagator of the Churches. There are two Scriptures that ſpeak of ſuch writings and holy Records (Iſa. 4. 3.) It ſhall then come to paſs, that he that is left in Sion, and he that remains in Jeruſalem ſhall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living (or to life) in Jeruſalem. Many might live in Jeruſalem, who were not written among the living, or to life in Jeruſalem. Thus to be written to life, or among the living, is to be written in the Catalogue of thoſe who are reckoned to have a life of Grace, Holineſs, and Sanctification here, as alſo to be heirs and expectants of a life of Glory hereaſter. Again, we have a like evidence of this (Ezek. 13.9.) My hand ſhall be upon the Prophets that ſee vanity and that divine lies, they ſhall not be in the aſſembly of my people, neither ſhall they be written in the writing of the houſe of Iſrael. As when the Lord brought the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, he commanded them to be muſtered or numbered (Num. 1.2,3.) thus alſo when they returned from the Babylonian Captivity, they were numbered again (Ezra 2. Neh. 7.) now thoſe Records in which their names were written, are conceived to be the writings of the houſe of Iſrael, mentioned in this 13. of Ezekiel, as alſo, the Book of the living, or to life, in the fourth of Iſaiah, at leaſt that both theſe Scriptures allude to thoſe Records. And it was the cuſtome of the Jews, that when any of them acted wickedly, his name was raſed out of thoſe Records as unworthy to be remembered among the people of God, and was looked upon as a dead man. yea as a damned man, who hath no name in the book of life, ſo often mentioned in Scripture, or whoſe name might be ſaid to be blotted out of it.

From all which it appears how great a curſe it is to be no more remembered, with reſpect and honour, which

Job affirms ſhall be the condition of wicked men. Which he further confirms in the laſt clauſe of the verſe,

And wickedneſs ſhall be broken as a Tree.

Here the abſtract (as elſewhere frequently in Scripture) is put for the concrete. That man who obſtinately perſeveres in ſin, is not only wicked, but wickedneſs it ſelf. (Pſal. 107.42.) All iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth, that is, ſuch men as are full of iniquity ſhall have nothing to ſay or object againſt the righteous dealings of God, but ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs. So (Job 35. 13.) men extreamly vain are called vanity, and we uſually call crafty men craft, covetous men covetouſneſs, and proud men are called pride; ſo a man much given to peace, is in Scripture language called peace, (Pſal. 120. 7.) I am peace, or I peace, but they make themſelves ready for war. They who are much carried to or in any thing, are ſometimes called by the name of that thing, or they take the name of it upon themſelves. Thus David ſpake (Pſal. 109. 4.) For my love they are my adverſaries, but I give my ſelf to prayer; the Hebrew is, I prayer. David was ſo much ſet upon prayer, that he was prayer it ſelf; and a wicked man is ſo ſet upon wickedneſs, that he is wickedneſs it ſelf.

Wickedneſs ſhall be broken as a Tree.

What tree? the Text determines not, but ſpeaks indefinitely, as a tree. We may underſtand it firſt of a barren tree; barren trees are broken, and cut down. The word broken, imports violence, and ſo a violent breaking; wicked men ſhall be broken violently. Chriſt ſaith of the barren tree (Luk. 13. 8.) Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? Fruitful trees adorn and beautifie the ground, but barren trees do only burden and cumber it. As good not to be, as to be good for nothing. The wicked ſhall be cut down and broken as a barren tree. Secondly, (which provokes more to breaking) they ſhall be broken as a tree that bringeth forth diſtaſtful, bitter, poyſonous fruit; it is not good to let a tree live, which brings forth evil and deadly fruit. If they deſerve to be broken who bring forth no fruit, then much more they who bring forth none but noughty fruit. Now as the wicked are alwayes barren of good fruit, ſo they are alwayes bearing evil fruit, nor can they bear any other: do men gather grapes of thorns? Thirdly, they ſhall be broken as a tree that is rent and ſhivered both body and boughes with a tempeſt, or ſtorm of thunder and lightening; thus many tall and goodly trees are broken, and thus the wicked ſhall be broken; a ſtorm,, a tempeſt from Heaven ſhall break them. The downfall and deſtruction of wicked men hath been inſiſted upon from other paſſages of this book, and therefore I forbear to add any thing further here.

VERS. 21, 22, 23.

He evil intreateth the barren that beareth not, and doth not good to the widdow.

He draweth alſo the mighty with his power; he riſeth up, and no man is ſure of his life.

Though it be given him to be in ſafety, whereon he reſteth, yet his eyes are upon their wayes.

JOB having ſhewed the miſerable concluſion of wicked men, begins afreſh to deſcribe their further progreſs in wickedneſs in verſ. 21, 22.

Verſ. 21. He evil intreate[illegible]he barren.

Here's another part of his wickedneſs; having robbed and murthered the innocent, having committed Adultery, where he could have opportunity and admittance, he proceeds, to afflict the barren, and vex the widdow. The word which we render to evil entreat, hath ſeveral ſignifications, and I find Interpreters accordingly varying about the ſence of the whole verſe.

First, The word ſignifies to aſſociate, or joyn together. Thus Mr. Broughton (to whom others joyn) renders it, he adjoyneth the barren which hath not born child: whereas our tranſlation holds out the further actings of wicked men in ſin, this ſhews the further progreſs of God in puniſhing them for ſin; for the Relative he, in the Text, is not referr'd to the wicked man, but to God himſelf; he, that is, God joyneth the barren that hath not born child (or that ſhall not bear) and he doth no good to his widdow; that is, God ſendeth him a barren wife, and when he dyes his widdow ſhall live in miſery. This gloſs Maſter Broughton gives upon his own tranſlation; God ſendeth after him a barren wife, that he ſhould have no help by Children, and ſheweth no pity to his widdow. The next verſe is alſo tranſlated in this ſence; He draweth the mighty after him, that is, God draws his children though they are mighty into the ſame condition with him, and if any of them hold out a while, yet they ſhall be ſure to fall at laſt. The Original may bear this ſence, and the Context or Antecedents ſuit well with it; but yet I ſhall rather keep to our own tranſlation then fall into this channel of interpretation, which changes both the perſons and the ſtate of the Text; we rendring it of the actings of the wicked man in reference unto others, and theſe rendering it as the actings of God in reference to the wicked. The reaſon of this difference is, as the Grammarians ſpeak, becauſe the nominative caſe is not here ſet down (and according to the conciſeneſs of the Hebrew tongue it is uſual to leave it out) the verb only being expreſſed, whence ſome refer it to man, others to God.

Nos putamus explicari non quid improbus faciat, ſed quibus ſupplicijs deus ipſorū poſteros, etſi ad tempus ſtare videantur dejiciat Merl. Conſociat (ſc. deus) ei ſterile non parituram & viduam non afficit bono. Jun. Neque vivo ei neque mortuo uxori benedicit, Jun. Tollit (deus ſc.) è medio liberos ejus, vel opibus poteſtate & honore florentiſſimos. Jun.

Secondly, As the word ſignifies to aſſociate, or joyn together; ſo, to feed, nouriſh, and take care of, as a Shepheard feedeth his flock, or a Father his Children and houſhold: this ſuits well with the former ſignification, becauſe they that are joyned together and aſſociated, do uſually feed together. (Prov. 28. 7.) Whoſoever keepeth the Law is a wiſe Son, but he that is a Companion of riotous men (we put in the margin, he that feedeth gluttons) ſhameth his father. According to this ſence of the word the Interpretation is given thus; he feedeth the barren that beareth not, and doth not good to the widdow; that is, he runs after Harlots, and feedeth them; ſuch lewd women are expreſſed by the barren, becauſe ſuch ſeldome bring forth Children, nor do they deſire it, being ſo intent upon the fulfilling of their wanton or covetous luſts, that they quite forget the ends of marriage. Thus the Prodigal Son lived after he was gone from his Father, as his elder Brother gave the character of his ſinful courſe of life, which his Father (upon his return and humiliation) had covered and forgiven (Luk. 15. 30.) As ſoon as this thy Son was come, which had devoured thy living with Harlots, &c. They who feed and keep ſuch barren ones, ſhall be kept bare and feed barely enough themſelves, if they be not quite devoured.

Thirdly, The word ſignifies as the care of the Shepheard in feeding his flock, or the care of a Father in feeding his houſhold, ſo it ſignifies to feed upon, to eat up and devour: and then the ſence is; he eateth up, or he devoureth the barren; which rendering falls in with ours, he evil entreateth the barren; he that devours and eats them up, evil entreats them. To which ſence alſo the word is tranſlated to break or to ſpoyle, (Jer. 11. 16. Pſal. 2. 9.) He ſhall break them with a rod of Iron. Thus he eateth up, or he evil entreateth, that is, he vexeth or oppreſſeth

The barren that beareth not.] The barren, in ſtrictneſs of ſignification, are they that have not received the bleſſing of fruitfulneſs in Child-bearing; and this phraſe, the barren that beareth not, implyes a woman that never bare children. Such a one was Hannah in a proper ſence (1 Sam. 1. 5, 6.) and in a ſpiritual or myſtical ſence, ſuch were the Gentiles for a long time, whom the Prophet thus encourageth (Iſa. 54. 1.) Sing O Barren, thou that didſt not bear; that is, rejoyce O ye Gentiles, who as yet have brought forth no fruit to God. The Church of the Jews was fruitful, ſhe brought forth, but the Gentiles were barren; yet at laſt the Gentiles were brought forth into a Church, and then they brought forth abundantly, both in reference to holy actions, and holy perſons; for as the Apoſtle applyeth that prophecy (Gal. 4. 27.) The deſolate hath many more children then ſhe that hath a Husband. Barrenneſs is an affliction, yea it was a reproach; and therefore that good woman Hannah when God heard her prayer, and gave her a Child, ſaid, God hath taken away my reproach.

Some render the Text as if it were the deſign of the wicked man to afflict the barren, though his own wife, leaſt ſhe ſhould bear him children; others, as if this were his wickedneſs, he afflicted and vexed his wife becauſe ſhe was barren, whereas ſuch women ought rather to be comforted by their Husbands. As good Elkanah did his wife Hannah when grieved grieved becauſe of her own barrenneſs (1 Sam. 8.) Why weepeſt thou? and why eateſt thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? am not I better to thee then ten Sons? It is inhumanity in any, eſpecially in a Husband, to afflict the barren, much more to afflict them becauſe barren.

Afflixit ſterilem ne pareret. Bez. Confregit uxorem ſterilem ne pareret. Pag.

Hic eſt improbus ille, qui uxorem propriam quia ſterilis eſt malis afficit. Merl.

Hence Note, To upbraid any with their afflictions, eſpecially with their natural infirmities, ſuch as barrenneſs or any bodily defect, is very ſinful.

God giveth liberally and upbraideth not (Jam. 1. 5.) and ſhall we upbraid any becauſe God denyes them his gifts? this was Peninahs ſin in the preſent caſe (1 Sam. 1.6.) and it will be a ſin to any to do ſo in any other caſe.

Again, I conceive we may take the word Barren here, not only ſtrictly for one that beareth not, but largely for any one that is in a ſad or afflicted condition; as the words widdow and fatherleſs, are often uſed in Scripture, not only for ſuch as have no Father, or have loſt their Husband, but for any that are in a troubled or low eſtate. So becauſe barrenneſs was then a ſtate of affliction and of reproach, therefore by the barren any affliction may be meant; and ſo Evilly to intreat the Barren, is to vex or oppreſs any that are afflicted.

Sterilis per ſe ſatis afflicta eſt, ergo dum conterit eam, afflictæ afflictionem addit. Druſ.

Hence Note, To afflict the afflicted, is the work of the wicked.

Not to ſupport the afflicted is ſinful, how ſinful then is it to add to their affliction, and encreaſe their burden? I only mention this, having diſcovered this ſtrain of wickedneſs heretofore: and what this former part of the verſe ſaith affirmatively, is ſaid negatively in the latter.

And he doth not good to the widdow.

Eliphaz (Chap. 22. 9.) charged Job with this wickedneſs that he had ſent widdows away empty, that is, that he had not done good to the widdow; and Job at the third verſe of this Chapter numbers it among the evil deeds of the wicked man, that he had taken the widdows Oxe for a pledge. In this verſe he again reckons up the ſame piece of the wicked mans uncharitableneſs, he doth not good to the widdow; that is, he adminiſters no help to the widdow in her wants, no counſel to her in her ſtraits, nor any comfort to her in her ſorrows. And this negative, he doth not good to the widdow, hath an affirmative in it, he doth her wrong, he grieveth and vexeth the widdow. For as negative commandments alwayes contain the affirmative (while we are forbidden to do any evil, we are enjoyned to do the contrary good) ſo negative practices uſually imply the affirmative, and while we neglect to do good, we are active in doing evil. Or as the negative threatnings of God contain affirmatives (Exod. 20. 7.) Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltleſs that takes his name in vain: that is, he will hold him very guilty, or look upon him as very ſinful, and puniſh him accordingly, that takes his name in vain; and as Negative promiſes contain affirmative promiſes (Pſal. 51. 17.) The ſacrifices of God are a broken Spirit: a broken and a contrite heart O God thou wilt not deſpiſe, that is, thou O God wilt highly eſteem, accept of, and delight in a broken heart; and and as negative concluſions imply the affirmative (Prov. 17. 21.) The father of a fool hath no joy; that is, he hath much ſorrow and grief (Prov. 28. 21.) To accept perſons in Judgment is not good; that is, to accept perſons in Judgment is very bad: ſo negative practices of ſin contain the affirmative, as elſewhere, ſo here in the Text, he doth not good to the widdow, that is, he wrongeth and troubleth the widdow, the widdow who is helpleſs, is hurt by him.

Quod ſignificat colligare & obmuteſcere.

The word which we render Widdow, ſignifies in the verb both to bind, and to be ſilent; both which ſignifications are complicated in the widdows condition. For firſt the widdow is bound, though ſhe be looſe from her Husband, ſhe is bound, and that two wayes; firſt with troubles, that's her affliction; ſecondly, ſhe is bound to be or ſtay much at home, that's her duty. Secondly, as the widdow is home-bound, ſo ſhe is tongue-bound too; the widdows eloquence is ſilence, ſhe ſpeaks moſt to her own commendation when ſhe ſpeaks little. The Apoſtle Paul reproves widdows about two things, which diſcover two failings in them, oppoſite to both theſe latter bindings (1 Tim. 5. 13.) And withal they learn to be idle, wandring from houſe to houſe; as if he had ſaid, it is not comely for the widdow to wander abroad, ſhe ſhould ſtay at home; the widdow ſhould be a fixed Star, not a Plannet: not that the widdow is to be a priſoner in her houſe, but ſhe ſhould be ſo much there, that ſhe may deſerve the name of a houſe-keeper, not of a wanderer from houſe to houſe. The Apoſtle proceeds in his charge againſt the faulty widdow, And not only idle, but (which is the ſecond vice) Tatlers alſo and buſie Bodyes, ſpeaking things which they ought not. Tatlers are ſuch as uſe their tongues overmuch, and uſually much more then their hands; whereas the widdow ſhould be much in buſineſs, little in diſcourſe, alwayes doing, ſeldome ſpeaking. We ſee the wiſdome of God in teaching proper duties in common names; in which thing the Hebrew language is moſt exact and fruitful. But I ſhall return from this digreſſion (if it may be ſo called) about the word, when I have only added, that the ſence given from this Etymologie of the word, doth not only ſhew the widdow much of her duty, but aggravates the ſin of the wicked man in the neglect or omiſſion of his duty unto her, He doth not good to the widdow, no not to the widdow, who is bound down with many ſorrows; he ſpeaks not a good word for the widdow, who is as David ſpeaks in another caſe (Pſal. 39. 2.) even dumb with ſilence. I have already both in this Chapter, as alſo in Chap. 22. ſhewed how ſinful it is either to neglect or afflict widdows, yea that to neglect them is to afflict them; therefore I ſhall not proſecute thoſe poynts here. Only from the form of ſpeaking,

Note, Not to do good is ſinful as well as to do evil, yea as ſinful as to do evil.

Not to do what we are enjoyned, is as bad as to do what we are forbidden. We are not only forbidden to wrong the widdow (Jer. 22. 3.) but we are often enjoyned to relieve and help her, to viſit her and do her good; therefore the widdow hath wrong done her, when good is not done to her.

The Spirit of wickedneſs is not yet drawn to the full length, ſee the wicked man ſtill at work in the next verſe.

Verſ. 22. He draweth the mighty by his power; he riſeth up, and no man is ſure of his life.

Traxit, protraxit, occulto impetu aliquem impellere quo velis, verbis atque rationibus aliquem trahere. Druſ.

In the former verſe the wicked man had to do with the weak, with the barren, with the widdow, but now he grapples with the ſtrong and mighty; He draweth alſo the mighty. The word may denote a twofold drawing, Firſt, drawing by a ſecret hidden and imperceptible power, a moral power; the power of perſwaſion working upon the heart and influencing the affections. There is an internal attractive vertue, which draweth the mind, as the loadſtone doth Iron, when nothing is ſeen, nor ſo much as a word heard. The word is uſed in that ſence (Judg. 4. 6, 8.) where (the people of Iſrael being ſore oppreſſed by Jabins Army under the conduct of Siſera) Deborah the Propheteſs, who at that time judged Iſrael, ſent and called Baruch, and ſaid unto him, Hath not the Lord God of Iſrael commanded, ſaying, goe and draw toward mount Tabor, and take with thee ten Thouſand men of the Children of Napthali, and of the Children of Zebulon. Thus God bid them draw to that place. But what hath God promiſed? Deborah tells him what in the next verſe; And I will draw unto thee to the River Kiſhon, Siſera the Captain of Jabins Army with his Chariots and his multitude; and will deliver him into thine hand. But it may be queſtioned how God would draw Siſera with his Army thither? It was not by any outward force, only God put a purpoſe into his heart to draw up his Army to that place, that ſo he might fall into the ſnare; Siſera had a ſecret motion or impulſe upon his Spirit, which he could not withſtand, though he fell by obeying it. Thus alſo God draweth Souls to himſelf, by the inviſible power of his Spirit, in their effectual vocation and converſion (Joh. 6. 44.) No man can come to me except the Father which ſent me draw him: How doth God draw? he draws by perſwaſion, not by compulſion; this perſwaſion carries a mighty commanding power with it: This drawing is not a bare moral perſwaſion, by the propoſal of an object before them, and ſo leaving the ſinner purely to his own election, but it is a perſwaſion which hath an overcoming power going along with it. God doth not draw us againſt our wills to Chriſt, but he draws the will to Chriſt, or makes us willing to come to Chriſt. And the Lord draws believers thus alſo after converſion to nearer converſe with Chriſt. The Church begged the putting forth of this powerful drawing (Cant. 1. 3.) Draw me, and I will run after thee. As the Soul muſt have a drawing before we can come to Chriſt at all, ſo after we are come to Chriſt, we need drawing ſtill, and that we may follow hard after him. This ſence of the word may have place in the preſent Text. Wicked men have a power of drawing others after them, though they do not act any outward power. He draweth the mighty by his power; that is, he allureth them to his ſide, or to a compliance with him; and he doth this ſometimes, as without any formal threatnings to exerciſe his power againſt them, ſo without any formal promiſes of uſing his power for them; as they uſually draw the mighty by the power of perſwaſion, ſo their power and example draw much without perſwaſion.

Secondly, There is a drawing by an outward violence, or a drawing by force. And this I take to be moſt proper here; he cauſeth the mighty to come in and ſtoop to his power, though they have no mind at all to it.

He draweth the mighty.] That is, firſt, thoſe that are mighty in courage; ſecondly, thoſe that are mighty in ſtrength, whether of body or eſtate (Pſal. 76. 5.) The ſtout hearted or mighty are ſpoiled, they have ſlept their ſleep; he draws the mighty, the ſtout-hearted by his power.

There is a twofold power, firſt, of natural ſtrength or activity; ſecondly, there is a power of civil ſtrength or authority (Rom. 13. 1.) The powers that be, are ordained of God, that is, the Authoritative or Magiſtratical powers are ordained of God. We may ſuppoſe the wicked man here ſpoken of cloathed with both theſe ſorts of power; and ſo as he tramples upon the poor, the widow, the barren, and the weak, ſo he keeps down the mighty, the rich, the Great, and in concluſion he ſo tyranizeth and domineereth over all, that all are overawed, to connive at him, and ſtand as Neuters, if not to joyn with him, and be of his party. He draweth the mighty by his power.

Hence Obſerve, Oppreſſors and Tyrants will reach men of all degrees and qualities.

When wicked men have undone the poor, they will engage the mighty; when they have done with the barren, and with the widow, they will have to do with the moſt numerous and potent families. Their oppreſſion of the poor doth not ſatisfie, but whet their appetites; it doth not extinguiſh, but only encreaſe their deſires of attempting greater perſons and things. As godly men proceed from leſſer acts of holineſs to greater, from lower acts of faith to higher, they go from faith to faith, and from ſtrength to ſtrength; their path is like the morning light ſhining more and more unto the perfect day; ſo the wicked go on from leſſer acts of wickedneſs to greater, from luſt to luſt, from ſin to ſin; their path is like the evening darkneſs, which darkneth more and more unto the perfect night. As God addeth iniquity to their iniquity (Pſal. 69. 27.) by way of puniſhment, ſo they add iniquity to their own iniquity in a way of pleaſure; and care not to come into his righteouſneſs. Secondly Obſerve,

The rule by which wicked men act is their power.

They act according to their ſtrength, rather then according to righteouſneſs or reaſon, they will do what they can, not what they ought; might ſerves their turn inſtead of right, and they think any thing is done well enough, which they have power enough to do. Thus the Prophet Micah deſcribes the oppreſſors of that age, (Chap. 2. 1.) They work evil (in their thoughts) upon their beds; when the morning is light, they practiſe it, becauſe it is in the power of their hands. So ſaith the preſent Text, They draw the mighty by their power.

Fourthly, See here the powerful man working upon the mighty man (he draws the mighty by his power.)

Hence Note, Mighty men may not only meet with their matches, but be overmatched.

Mighty men think themſelves ſafe, or out of danger, and while the poor are under oppreſſion (poſſibly) they ſmile at their own indemnity, and applaud their own happineſs; yet it may ſoon come to the turn of the mighty to be overturned by might, their power may quickly be overpowered: As the might of God doth alwayes overmatch the might of man (Luke 1. 56.) He hath put down the mighty from their ſeat; ſo he often armes men, ſometimes the worſt of men, to pull down the mighty from their ſeats. The power of God is above all power, he is higher then the higheſt. And ſome get ſo high, that they are higher then all others who (beſides themſelves) are higheſt among the children of men. The mighty may meet with their match, and be overmatched. He draweth the mighty by his power.

He riſeth up, and no man is ſure of his life.

Theſe words are a clear deſcription of the oppreſſor, He riſeth up; the word ſignifieth, firſt, only to ſtand, or ſo to riſe as to ſtand, which is common to all men in nature. Secondly, To riſe up, is to get higher, to advance a mans ſelf to further degrees of honour and power. Thirdly, it ſignifies to riſe in a hoſtile manner, to riſe as one enemy againſt another (Pſal. 18. 39.) Thou haſt girded me with ſtrength unto the battel; thou haſt ſubdued under me, thoſe that riſe up againſt me. And again (Pſal. 34. 5.) Through thee will we puſh down our enemies, through thy name will we tread them under that riſe up againſt us. The wicked oppreſſor, in the Text, riſeth up in all theſe ſences: He riſeth up to ſtand, or to ſettle and eſtabliſh himſelf, to take good footing, and lay a good foundation for the perpetuating of his greatneſs. Secondly, he riſeth up to higher honour. Thirdly, having thus ſettled and advanced himſelf, he riſeth up as an enemy to vex all thoſe who oppoſe him or ſtand in his way. Fourthly, ſome give another ſence of this action; He

Riſeth up or ſtandeth.] What to do? even to make fair promiſes, and to enter engagements what good he will do, and how good he will be, whenas he intends all theſe things to be but ſnares to catch others, not at all to be as bonds to tye himſelf, which ſuits and falls in fully with the laſt words of the verſe; and

No man is ſure of his life.] The Hebrew is plural, no man is ſure of his lives; as if he had ſaid, if a man had an hundred lives he could be ſure of none of them, or he could not be ſure of one of them, when this man riſeth up. The form of ſpeaking here uſed, no man is ſure of his life, or, ſtrictly to the letter of the Hebrew, no man can truſt or believe for his life, imports a man brought into ſuch a dangerous and uncertain condition, that he hath no hold (as it were) of his own life, nor doth he ſee any reaſon to believe, that he can hold it long, every thing about him carrying the face, and denouncing threats of death. So that it may be ſaid of a man in that eſtate, as Paul ſaid of himſelf (2 Cor. 1. 9.) I received the ſentence of death in my ſelf; he that is not ſure of his life, hath upon the matter a ſentence of death in him. Moſes deſcribeth ſuch a ſtate, (Deut. 28. 66.) Thy life ſhall hang in doubt before thee, and thou ſhalt fear day and night, and thou ſhalt have no aſſurance of thy life; as if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt not be able to call thy life thine own, nor to ſay in whoſe keeping it will be an hour hence; it ſhall hang before thee as a thing which two are contending and ſtriving for, and no man can determine who is like to be maſter of it. The life of man doth or ought alwayes to hang in doubt before him, and he can have no aſſurance of it, whether we reſpect the common frailty of nature, which concerns every man, or the ſpecial purpoſe or appointment of God which concerns him. But there are ſome men whoſe lives hang in doubt before them, and they have no aſſurance of their lives, becauſe of outward real dangers, or at leaſt becauſe of their jealouſie and ſuſpition of thoſe dangers which they fancy to themſelves. He riſeth up, and no man is ſure of his life. Theſe two parts of the verſe being thus laid together, the whole may be expounded,

Non fidere vitæ eſt ambigere de vita, ſpe abjecta omnibus circumſtantijs mortem denunciantibus.

Firſt, Of another man riſing up, and the wicked man fearing his life, if any man riſeth up, he is not ſure of his life; that is, if a man oppoſe and ſet himſelf againſt this tyrannous oppreſſor, he (namely, the Tyrant, or the oppreſſor) will not be in any ſurety of his life. For, as Tyrants are very cruel, ſo they are very fearful; and when they ſee themſelves oppos'd, their fears are encreaſed. They fear all men, of whom all men are afraid.

Tam timidus et vecors eſt tyrannus quam ſævus & crudelis; ſi enim quiſpiam audeat reſiſtere, ſtatim de vita ſua & incolumitate deſperat.

Secondly, Others expound it as an expreſſion of the wicked mans ſecret fear, even when no man oppoſeth or purſueth him. And thus he is afraid in the ſtrength of his ſtate, or when 'tis beſt with him. When he riſeth up in greateſt power and glory, he is not ſure of his life; that is, he is

is afraid of his life; his evil Conſcience troubles him, and darts in continual fears upon his Soul: He feareth falling as ſoon as riſen up, and death when he is (as to humane proviſion and appearance) ſafeſt and furtheſt from danger. The marginal reading of our Engliſh Bibles gives this ſence of the Text; he truſteth not his own life; that is, he doth not truſt that his own life is ſafe; he doubts his neareſt friends will be his enemies, and that they who are of his blood ſeek his blood, and are ready to ruine him; he hath evil thoughts of others, and he thinks the thoughts of others are evil concerning him. It can never be well with him whoſe Conſcience is evil; how troubleſome is that mans life to him, who either is alwayes in danger, or ſuſpects alwayes what he is? How unſure is that mans life to him, when he ſeeth himſelf ready ro fall, who riſeth or ſtandeth up, and yet is not ſure of his life?

Qui reſtitit tyranno ſtatim de vita ſua actum putet.

Thirdly, Theſe words are expounded to ſet forth the danger of that particular man, or of thoſe men, how many ſoever they are, who oppoſe the wicked oppreſſor, He that riſeth up is not ſure of his life; as if he had ſaid, if any man riſe up to ſtop this Tyrant in the wayes of his oppreſſion, he ſhall but ruine and undoe himſelf by it. Many an honeſt and juſt man hath ſacrificed his life to the wrath of powerful oppreſſors, only by ſpeaking a word againſt them, how much more by acting againſt them; and ſome have not thought their lives dear, that they might do it.

Etſi porregant manus et fædera percutiant, tamen quærunt occaſiones necendi. Stare accipit pro percutere fædus ſtando. Iſid.

Fourthly, (which was toucht before) as this poſture of riſing up, implyeth Covenant-making, the ſence is this; though the oppreſſor give you aſſurance by the ſtrongeſt Covenants, yet no man is ſure of his life; that is, there is no truſting to him, though you have his word, though you have his Oath, yet you have not him; though he give you all the Engagements under Heaven, yet he gives you no ſecurity; for he is unfaithful, unſteady, a Covenant-breaker; he that makes a Covenant or takes an Oath meerly for his own advantage, will quickly break both Oathes and Covenants for his own advantage; and if no occaſion be offered for the making of a breach, he will make one, or at leaſt pretend one.

Si inſurrexerit in aliquem & adoriatur, is quem adortus fuerit, non ſperabit ſe ultra victurum, Vatab.

Fiſthly, According to our tranſlation, the ſence may be given two wayes; Firſt, he riſeth up, that is, he groweth very powerfull; and then no man is ſure of his life, that is, no good man is ſure of his life. For he is a terror not only to evil doers (as all Magiſtrates ought to be, Rom. 13. 3.) but he is a terror to thoſe that do well; Secondly, he riſeth up, that is, he groweth angry and enraged, his choller boils in him, and then no man (of them eſpecially againſt whom he is enraged) is ſure of his life. And when he ſaith (in reference to any of theſe caſes) no man is ſure of his life, the meaning is, every man hath great reaſon to fear, if not utterly to deſpair of his life; no man is abſolutely ſure of his life at any time; for (as the Apoſtle James ſaith, Chap..4. 14.) What is our life, it is even a vapour, that appeareth a little time, and then vaniſheth away; and how ſhort the time of its appearance will be no man knoweth; therefore (I ſay) no man can at any time be abſolutely ſure of his life, no not for the leaſt moment of time, but as ſome times our lives are leſs ſure to us then at others, yea at ſome times we have no aſſurance at all of our lives, and we never have leſs hope to live, or leſs hold of life, then when the wicked man riſeth up.

> Hence Obſerve, The power of the wicked man is the danger of all; good men, yea all men are in danger when wicked men are in power.

He riſeth up, and no man is ſure of his life; when the ungodly are in the height of proſperity, no man is in ſafety, (Prov. 11. 10, 11.) When it goeth well with the righteous the City rejoyceth, and when the wicked periſh there is ſafety; by the bleſſing of the upright the City is exalted, but it is overthrown by the mouth of the wicked. that is, by the mouth of thoſe wicked men who are in power; their riſing is the fall of the righteous, and with their fall, the righteous riſe. When the wicked periſh there is ſafety. And again (Prsv. 28. 12.) When righteous men do rejoyce, there is great glory. That is, when righteous men proſper (the effect is put for the cauſe, or the conſequent for the antecedent, joy follows proſperity, when (I ſay) it is thus with righteous men) there is great glory, that is, men appear in their beſt both by words and actions. The joy of the righteous is not alone, many others rejoyce with him, yea, are made joyful by him. So that when the righteous riſe up in honour and authority, all men ſet themſelves out to the utmoſt, and do as it were cloath the dignity of righteous men with glory. Then they are willing to ſhew what they have, becauſe they know, they ſhall keep what they have ſafely. And the freeneſs of their glorying when the righteous rejoyce, ſheweth the freedome which they enjoy under the power of the righteous. But (ſaith Solomon in the ſame place) when the wicked riſe (which is the word of the Text) a man is hidden. Which may be expounded firſt thus. The wicked when they riſe do ſcarce ſhew themſelves to be men, they are ſo inhumane and cruel; which ſuits well with the 15. verſe of the ſame Chapter, as a roaring Lion and a ranging Beare, ſo is a wicked Ruler over the poor people. So that nothing of a man appears in them when they are in power. Secondly, we may take the meaning (more near the preſent point) thus; when the wicked riſe, that is; to greatneſs and authority, a man is hidden, that is, men keep as cloſe and private as they can, as if they were afraid to be ſeen, and doubted they ſhould be ruined by their riſing. When the wicked appear moſt, the Godly run into holes; for they inſtead of being a ſhield of protection and defence of the Godly, are a ſnare, a ſword, and vexation to all that are about them; they uſe their power for deſtruction, and not for Edification. The Apoſtle (2 Cor. 13. 7.) ſpeaking of the power given him by Chriſt in the Goſpel, ſaith, It is for Edification and deſtruction; the deſign of that power is to build up, and not to throw down; ſo the great deſign of all power in the hand of the Magiſtrate as well as of the Miniſtry is for Edification, not for deſtruction; deſtruction is that which comes but by accident, by reaſon of the ſin and wickedneſs that men do; the great buſineſs of the Magiſtrate is to ſave, to build up, and to defend; yet ſuch is the wickedneſs of mans heart, that many times when he hath power in his hand, no man is ſure of his life. He is ſo far from giving aſſurance, protection, and defence to all by his power, that his power is every mans danger. And hence Solomon concludes (Prov. 29. 2.) When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoyce; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn. It cannot but be ſad with them who have nothing ſure to them; they muſt needs mourn who have neither eſtate, nor liberty, nor life ſure to them; they muſt needs mourn who ſee nothing ſo ſure to them as ſorrow. As to have our ſpiritual calling and eternal election made ſure to us, is the top of all joy to us in this world; ſo to have nothing in this world ſure to us, no not ſo much as our life (in the ſence explained) ſure to us, is the bottome and loweſt of all that ſorrow which concerns this preſent world. And this ſorrow the wicked mans exaltation brings upon all men; he riſeth up, and no man is ſure of his life. But as it followeth, Verſ. 23. Though it be given him to be in ſafety, wherein he truſteth, yet his eyes are upon their wayes.

Si quis ei daret ut tutus agere poſſit ac nitatur illi, oculi ejus ſpeculantur vias ad nocendum. Tygur. Solent boni dare impijs munera ut confidentèr habitent inter illos: at poſtea inſidiantur illis à quibus munera acceperunt; Vatab.

In this verſ. 23. Job further deſcribeth the ſtate of wicked men in their proſperity: We may read the Text thus; If any one giveth to be in ſafety, &c. and ſo the ſence of this verſe falls in with the interpretation of the words laſt opened; if any one giveth to be in ſafety, that is, this man is ſo wicked, that though any poor man, or any who are in fear of him would beſtow large gifts upon him to bribe him for his favour, or ſtay his hand from oppreſſion, that they might live quietly by him, and ſo ſhould truſt upon him, that having received their money, ſurely he would let them alone, and they ſhould be quiet, yet his eyes are upon their wayes; that is, he is looking about him, to pick holes in their Coat, and find ſome advantage againſt them to bring them into trouble. For as his own Covenants cannot hold him, ſo neither can their courteſies, but his eyes are (ſeverely and critically) upon their wayes, to diſcover ſome fault, if any be, or if none be, yet to ſuggeſt ſomewhat as matter of accuſation, and ſo of proceeding againſt him. This is a truth, though a man buy his peace at a very dear rate of wicked men, yet there is no aſſurance to be had; bribing and ſubmiſſion, and flattery will not hold long; many examples have proved that theſe things have not ſecured good men from the oppreſſion of Tyrants, but they have quickly found out a way to ruine them thave been moſt liberal in rewards to gain their favour, and purchaſe their own peace. If any one give to be in ſafety, and truſteth he ſhall be ſafe, his truſt will fail him; The more we truſt God, the ſafer we are, but there is no ſafety to be had by truſting ungodly men. This is a good ſence, yet, rather according to our tranſlation, the words ſhew the condition of the wicked man himſelf in his proſperity.

Though it be given him to be in ſafety, wherein he reſteth, yet his eyes are upon his wayes.

That is, though it be given him of God, or though God give him this priviledge to be in ſafety, that is, though he riſe up, and put down all that oppoſe him; though God give him this ſafety, yet &c. The word which we tranſlate, to be in ſafety, ſignifies the moſt ſecure ſafety, or ſafety accompanied with the higheſt Confidence, that is, when there is not ſo much as the leaſt mixture of any fear, not ſo much as the leaſt Jealouſie or ſuſpicion of a change. Babylon is deſcribed preſuming upon ſuch a ſafety (Iſa. 47. 8.) I ſit a Queen and am no widdow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow; and the wicked are ſpoken of as poſſeſſing and enjoying ſuch a ſafety (Joh. 21. 9.) Their houſes are free from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them; they are free not only from the rod of God, but from the fear of the rod; though the wicked man live thus confidently, and all things are with him according to his wiſh; though God ſeems to crown him with loving kindneſs and tender mercies, which are the proper portion of the Saints (Pſal. 103. 4.) though he give him his hearts deſire (which is a promiſe peculiar to the godly man (Pſal 37. 4.) though it be given him to be thus in ſafety, wherein, or whereon he reſteth, that is, though as he ſeeth no danger, though he ſuſpecteth none, but reſts in his ſtate, and ſaith, all's ſure, all's well; though the Condition of a wicked man be thus ſafe and proſperous and all this by the gift, of God, yet, &c.

Before I explicate Jobs exception upon this great gift, take two or three notes from the conſideration of the Author and nature of this gift, as alſo from this reſt upon it.

First, To be in ſafety is a great outward mercy.

We find it promiſed among many other ſpecial mercies to the Church in her beſt eſtate (Ezek. 34. 27.) The Tree of the field ſhall yeild her fruit, and the Earth ſhall yield her encreaſe, and they ſhall be ſafe in their land. And ſuch was their old promiſe (Lev. 21. 5.) ye ſhall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land ſafely. (Deut. 33. 23.) Iſrael ſhall dwell in ſafety alone. Though Iſrael be alone he ſhall dwell in ſafety, or Iſrael alone ſhall dwell in ſafety. He ſhall have ſafety when others are in danger. Thou (ſaith David, Pſal. 4. 3.) makeſt me dwell in ſafety; and ſaith the Lord concerning the poor man (Pſal. 12. 5.) I will ſet him in ſafety from him that puffeth at him (Prov. 21. 31.) Safety is of the Lord. Yea.

Secondly, The ſafety even of a wicked man is of the Lord.

It is given to him (by way of common providence) to be in ſafety; as God takes care of his own ſervants in mercy, ſo he takes care of a wicked man in wiſdome; he is the preſerver both of man and beaſt; he is the preſerver not only of good men, but of evil men, who are as beaſts. How bad ſoever any man is, his good, whatſoever he hath, is from the Lord. They may have ſafety, who ſhall never have ſalvation. And they who are near to eternal damnation, may be far from danger.

Thirdly, Whereas it is ſaid, Though he be in ſafety, wherein he reſteth,

Note, Outward proſperity is the foundation of a wicked mans peace.

God giveth him ſafety, and he makes his ſafety his God. He reſteth in the ſafety which God giveth him, not in God who giveth him ſafety. Carnal men looſe God in the creature; and whereas they ſhould truſt in God, becauſe he ſendeth them good things, they truſt upon the good things which God ſendeth. In whatſoever (beſides God) we place our truſt, that we put in the place of God. David was much overſhot in this point (Pſal. 30. 6.) In my proſperity I ſaid I ſhall never be moved. God made David proſper, and David reſted in his proſperity. When David was right, he ſaid in his adverſity (and every godly man may ſay in his deepeſt adverſity) I ſhall never be moved. God is as ſtrong to us in our greateſt weakneſs as when he makes our mountain ſtrongeſt; and they who think themſelves more immoveable when their mountain is ſtrong, then when it is weak, reſt in their mountain, not in God. Now if David (a man after Gods own heart) ſet or reſted his heart ſo much upon his mountain (that is, his worldly proſperity) becauſe it was ſtrong, how much more may carnal men grow into an admiration of their Earthly mountains, and reſt under their ſhadow and ſhelter, as if they could never be moved? worldly men do this ſo much that this is made the deſcription of worldly men (Pſal. 49. 6.) They that reſt in their wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches. Who theſe are is not expreſſed, as if every one muſt needs know what ſort of men they are who truſt in their wealth; that is, who ſee all well with them, and who ſay all ſhall be well with them, becauſe of the multitude of their riches. For that is properly to truſt in riches, when a man ſaith to himſelf (as the rich man ſaid, Luk. 12. 19.) Soul, take thine eaſe; thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, Eat and Drink, and be merry. Job had another ſpirit in the midſt of his proſperity (Ch. 3. 26.) I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, &c. He ſpake there of his Condition before he was in trouble, when he had ſome thouſands of ſheep, ſome hundreds of Oxen, with a multitude of Camels and Aſſes, when he had many Sons and Daughters, with Servants in great number; when it was thus with him, when no Cloud had in the leaſt darkned his day, nor ſo much as a grain of gall or wormwood embittered his cup, when he was thus ſafe, yet he ſaid, I was not in ſafety. When the Devil ſaid he was ſo ſafe that he could not touch him, Thou haſt made an hedg about him, yet he ſaid, I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, that is, he looked upon his hedg as upon that which might quickly be broken thorough, and upon his mountain, as that which might not only be quickly moved, but quite removed; he ſaw all he had ſhaking and tottering, and ſo could not have any reſt in any thing which he had; he had reſt in oppoſition to murmuring and diſcontent about the things of this world, but he was reſtleſs in oppoſition to confiding in and ſatisfaction with the things of the world. In this reſpect his very ſafety was unſafe, and his reſt, reſtleſs to him. Only the carnal man, when God giveth him to be in ſafety, reſteth in it; he ſits down and concludeth that he hath enough at preſent, and that his Enough will laſt for ever; he reſteth in his ſafety, not only as being out of danger, but above it. Job having thus ſet forth the outward ſtate of the wicked man, he is in ſafety, as alſo the ſtate of his inward man, he reſteth in it; ſheweth us in the laſt place and cloſe of the verſe, what God is doing towards him, while he is doing thus, or notwithſtanding he doth thus,

Yet his eyes are upon their wayes.

Some read, though his eyes are upon their wayes, and give the ſence thus, though God ſeeth all their wickedneſs, yet he lets them proceed and proſper; that's a truth; God doth not let wicked men proſper, becauſe he doth not know how wicked they are, or what wickedneſs they do; he knows well enough, how ill they are, and what evil they do, his eyes are upon their wayes, while they abuſe his mercies, and (in ſtead of reſting in him who gives them ſafety) reſt in the ſafety which he hath given them.

Secondly, Others read thus, and his eyes are upon their wayes; as if the words were a further deſcription of the wicked mans outward proſperity, and a deſcription of it to ſuch a height, as if the eyes of God were fixed and faſtned upon his wayes, to take care of him, and to cauſe him to proſper in them, as if the eyes of God did drop bleſſings upon him, and guide him every day ſucceſsfully in all his undertakings. The eye of God upon a place or perſon implyeth (in Scripture language) his preſence with them for good. (Deut. 11. 12.) The land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, is not like Egypt, &c. but it is a land which the Lord thy God careth for, the eyes of the Lord thy God are alwayes upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year; as if he had ſaid, the Lord is unceſſantly watchful over it, both to prevent evil, and to beſtow good upon it. Read the ſame ſence of the phraſe (Ezra 5. 5. Pſal. 33. 18. Pſal. 34. 15.) And uſually in Scripture when the eye of God is ſaid to be upon any, it is not taken taken in an evil ſenſe unleſs ſo expreſt; as (Amos 9.4.) mine eyes ſhall be upon them for evil, and not for good. So that while Job ſaith, and his eyes are upon their wayes, the words, according to this reading, continue, if not heighten the former ſence, ſhewing further the outward proſperity of evil men by the ſeeming favour of God to them.

But I rather cloſe with our reading, yet his eyes are upon their wayes; as if he had ſaid; do not think that God taketh no notice of their ſinful courſes, becauſe he gives them to be in ſafety, and in ſuch ſafety, that they reſt and truſt upon it, for I tell you the eyes of God are upon their wayes.

Hence Obſerve, God alwayes ſeeth the wayes of wicked men, or he ſeeth wicked men in all their wayes.

It is no argument that God neglecteth the government of the world, becauſe wicked men are in ſafety; he fully conſidereth their wayes, who either through ignorance are wandring from, or, through wilfulneſs, turning out of his wayes.

Hic apponitur conniventiæ & diſſimulationi. Coc.

And the eyes of God are upon the wayes of ſuch men, not only to ſee which way, or whither they are going (Job 34.21.) but to puniſh them for their going wrong. God will not connive at, nor diſſemble what he ſeeth, when he ſeeth what is unfit. (Hab. 3:6.) He ſtood and meaſured the Earth, he beheld and drove aſunder the Nations; that is, he divided and brake thoſe Nations in whom he beheld iniquity. (Zach. 9.8.) And no oppreſſour ſhall paſs through them any more, for now I have ſeen with my eyes, that is, I have exactly ſeen, I have taken perfect notice of them and their oppreſſours, and I will in juſtice ſo oppreſs their unjuſt oppreſſors, that they ſhall be rid of them for ever, no oppreſſour ſhall paſs through them any more. We may make a threefold difference about the eye of God upon the perſons or wayes of men.

Firſt, The eye of God is upon the wayes of men, to obſerve what they do, his eye diſtinguiſheth between good and evil, and diſcerneth, as much as beholdeth what is done; his ſeeing the wayes of men is a clear underſtanding of them.

Secondly, The eye of God is upon the wayes of men to proſper and bleſs them in what they do well. The eye of God upon the righteous implyeth, yea and conveigheth mercy to the righteous.

Thirdly, The eye of God is upon the wayes of men, to puniſh and chaſten them for what they do amiſs. God hath a vindictive or a revenging eye, as well as an intuitive or a beholding eye. This eye of God is upon all the wayes of wicked men, though for a time he giveth them to be in ſafety, wherein they reſt. And becauſe God ſeeth the wayes both of the righteous and the wicked, therefore God commanded us to ſay to the righteous it ſhall be well with them, for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings. Wo to the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands ſhall be given him. Every man ſhall receive from the hand of God, according to what God hath ſeen with his eye.

Laſtly, We may take theſe words as an admiring Concluſion, like that (verſ. 12.) yet God layeth not folly to them. They do fooliſhly, yet God doth not deal with them according to their folly: ſo here, they do wickedly, yet his eyes are upon their wayes. As if he had ſaid, it is a wonderful thing, even matter of aſtoniſhment, that God who ſo exactly ſeeth and knoweth the wayes of wicked men, ſhould ſuffer them to be an hour in ſafety. Is it not a wonder that God ſhould ſuffer them to live long and ſafely, ſinning, who deſerve to dye for every ſin? As all wicked men who dye impenitently dye in their ſins, ſo God ſuffers many wicked men to ſin till they dye; he ſeeth their wayes and will not ſtop them till they have run their full courſe. Here is the patience and long ſuffering of God. Men ſin to a wonder, when they go on in ſin after many ſmitings; as the Lord complains by this Prophet (Amos. 4.) I ſmote them with the peſtilence, and with the ſword, &c. yet have they not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord. Now as it aggravates mans ſin, to ſin under wrath and ſmitings, ſo it hightens the goodneſs and patience of God to admiration, that he doth not ſmite men in their ſin, ſeeing he beholds them in their ſin. His eyes are upon their wayes to behold every ſin, and every ſin is not only diſpleaſing but burdenſome and grievous to him. What a miracle of patience doth this diſcover in God? The Prophet Habakkuk moves the Lord to revenge, and wonders how he could hold his hand from puniſhing, while his eye beheld that done which was ſo diſpleaſing. (Hab. 1.12,13.) Art not thou from everlaſting O Lord my God, mine holy One? we ſhall not dye: thou haſt ordained them for Judgment, and O God thou haſt ſtabliſhed them for Correction. Thou art of purer eyes then to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquity. Wherefore lookeſt thou on them that deal treacherouſly; and holdeſt thy tongue, when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then he? As if he had ſaid, Lord, I know thou beholdeſt all the evil in the world, and art of purer eyes then to behold it with any delight or approbation. Now ſeeing it is ſo, why then doeſt thou look on them that deal treacherouſly? In the former part of the verſe he ſaid, thou canſt not look on iniquity; and in the latter he ſaith, why doeſt thou look on them that deal treacherouſly? There is a twofold look of God; firſt, (as was toucht before) a look of approbation; ſecondly, a look of patience. And ſo the meaning of the Prophet is, ſeeing, O Lord, thou canſt not look upon ſin approvingly, why doeſt thou look upon it patiently? And holdeſt thy tongue when the wicked devour the righteous? As if he had ſaid, how is it (Lord) that thou doeſt not break forth into the ſevereſt rebukes againſt them? How is it that they have not ſo much (to appearance) as a frown or an ill word from thee, who have deſerved blows and utter breakings? Indeed if God had but the patience of all Creatures, had he but the patience of men and Angels, the ſin of man would ſpend it out in one day: God could not hold his tongue nor his hand an hour, conſidering that he clearly diſcerneth all the wickedneſs that is in the wayes of men, and that every the leaſt unevenneſs as well as wickedneſs is extreamly diſpleaſing to him, were not his patience Infinite; God could not hold, but deſtroy all the wicked of the world, or all that world which lyeth in wickedneſs, were it not that he is reſolved to magnifie his patience. And though for reaſons known to himſelf, he bears with thoſe that are burdenſome to him very long, not only many dayes but years, yet the time is at hand when he will bring them to Judgment, and Judge them according to thoſe wayes upon which his eyes have been. Then the wicked ſhall find that as the eyes of God have been upon all their wayes, ſo that he hath not at all, or not in the leaſt, been pleaſed with any of them.

VERS. 24, 25.

They are exalted for a little while, but are gone, and brought low, they are taken out of the way as all other, and cut off as the tops of the eares of corne.

And if it be not ſo now, who will make me a lyer, and make my ſpeech nothing worth.

JOB ſtill proceedeth to deſcribe, and here concludeth his deſcription, of the ſtate of wicked men; he hath (as hath been ſhewed in the expoſition of the former part of the Chapter) drawn the blackeſt character of their wickedneſs, as alſo given the faireſt proſpect of their outward happineſs; they ſin and proſper, they ſin and are ſafe, they have much good while they do much evil.

This Text ſpeaks again of their proſperity, yet with a diminution, they are exalted (but it is only) for a little while, for they are gone and brought low, they are taken out of the way, as all others, and cut off as the tops of the eares of Corn.

There are two opinions concerning the general ſcope of theſe words.

Firſt, Some conceive that Job's aim is to ſhew, that both in life, and death, wicked men fare like other men; They are exalted for a little while, as all others are; they are gone, brought low, and taken out of the way as all others are.

Yet, Secondly, I rather incline that he here intends to ſet forth the miſerable concluſion of wicked men, not only as they are cut off from worldly enjoyments, as all men ſooner or later are, but as they are cut off from worldly enjoyments in a way which is not common to other men, or which is not the common way of man. And the reaſon why I rather incline to this as Job's ſcope, is, becauſe the various expreſſions of the ſame thing, they are gone, they are brought low, they are taken out of the way, they are cut off (theſe various expreſſions, I ſay) ſeem to carry ſomewhat more then the remove of men out of the world, by the ordinary way of dying, or then by a natural death.

Verſ. 24. They are exalted for a little while, but are gone.

They, that is, the wicked, the Adulterer, the Thief, the Oppreſſour (ſuch he had before deſcribed) are exalted; they grow great, and ſpread far, they grow high, or are advanced to high places. The original word which we render, to be exalted, ſignifies to be lifted up, or any thing that is lifted up in height, or greatneſs; and hereupon ſome Criticks tells us that the Great City Rome had her name from this Hebrew root; Rome, as all (who know any thing of antiquity) know, is a City that hath been exalted over the Nations, a City great in ſtrength, and mighty in power; Rome is as much as, height, or exaltation; as Abraham is a high father, an exalted father.

They are exalted.] The word may be applyed to a twofold exaltation, firſt, an inward exaltation by pride; ſome riſe within, faſter then they riſe without, yea there are ſome that riſe very high within, when they are caſt very low without; they exalt and lift up themſelves in pride of ſpirit, though they are caſt down in ſtate. The word is often applyed to note pride or haughtineſs (Micah 2. 3.) Thus ſaith the Lord, behold againſt this family do I deviſe an evil, from which ye ſhall not remove your necks, neither ſhall ye go haughtily. The word is, ye ſhall not go in your height, in your altitudes, as ye have done, the caſe ſhall be altered with you, and the Tables turned; for this is an evil time, that is, an evil time to you, a time of calling you to an account about, and of puniſhing you for all your wickedneſs, and eſpecially for your pride. As ye have made it an evil time by your ſin, ſo ye ſhall find it to be an evil time to and by your ſmart. And this height of ſpirit often breaks forth, and is ſignified in height of action, or in haughty poſtures, the liſting up of the head, the ſtretching out of the neck: thus (Iſa. 7. 11.) the lofty looks of man ſhall be humbled. The heart looks out at the eye, the lofty heart makes a lofty look; according to the frame of the heart, is the caſt of the eye; the eye is not proud; but as it is inſtructed, and tutoured by the heart, ſo it acts proudly, and looks haughtily. And thus they alwayes act, who though they are not exalted, yet have a mind to exalt themſelves, who when others caſt no honour upon them, yet they will take it, and reach after it. Thus the word is applicable to internal ſelf-exaltation, as well as to external exaltation, or exaltation by others. For as many are outwardly humbled, who are not at all humble; and as ſome are inwardly humbled, who are not at all outwardly humbled, (they have an humble lowly frame of heart, and are active in humbling of themſelves) ſo many are inwardly exalted, who never had nor deſerved, in the leaſt, any outward exaltation. They are active to exalt themſelves, whom no man beſides themſelves, thinks worthy to be exalted. The men of whom Job ſpeaks were doubtleſs forward enough to exalt themſelves, yet

I underſtand him rather ſpeaking of their outward exaltation, for Job is here deſcribing the proſperity of wicked men, not their pride. Though we know, proſperity is the occaſion of pride, and men uſually grow high minded, when they grow high in the world. As by pride cometh contention, ſo by exaltation cometh pride.

They are exalted.] That is, they are great, and rich, they are promoted to honour, and ſet uppermoſt among men.

For a little while.] The Orignal in ſtrictneſs is only thus; they are exalted a little. But the word is taken two wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, For little in degree, or for a little deale (as we ſay) that is, for a thing that is little (Pſal. 39. 16.) a little that a righteous man hath, is better then the riches of many wicked. His morſel is better then the others feaſt, his penny is better then the wicked mans pound. Thus Jonathan ſpake (1 Sam. 14. 29.) when Saul had given that ſevere charge that no man ſhall eat till the Sun went down, my father hath troubled the land; ſee I pray you how my eyes are inlightened, becauſe I taſted a little of this honey; as if he had ſaid, I did not eat much, not ſo much as to delight my ſelf, much leſs ſo much as to glut my ſelf, I did eat but a drop or two, and mine eyes are wonderfully inlightened, that is, my ſpirits are much refreſhed and cheared; for naturally when a man is faint, his eye ſight fails.

Secondly, For a little in time, or for a ſhort ſpace of time (Pſal. 37. 10.) For yet a little while and the wicked ſhall not be, yea, thou ſhalt diligently conſider his place, and he ſhall not be, that is, he ſhall not be in power, he ſhall not flouriſh in worldly pomp many dayes. The birth of his proſperity ſhall not be far in time from the death of it, nor the grave of all his glory from the cradle of it. So (Pſal. 8. 5.) Thou haſt made him a little lower then the Angels; which propheſie of Chriſt is cited (Heb. 2. 7.) Now Chriſt was not made a little lower then the Angels in degree, for he was the Lord of the Angels, and when God brought him his firſt begotten into the world, he ſaid, and let all the Angels of God worſhip him. But Chriſt was made lower then the Angels for a little time; and ſo we put in the Margin, thou madeſt him a little while inferiour to the Angels. Namely, for the while or time when he was abaſed by Death and lay in the grave; yet we may ſay alſo that Chriſt was made a little lower then the Angels in his taking upon him our nature; the Angelical nature being higher then the humane, as conſidered in it ſelf. We may expound the word here in either ſence, they are exalted a little, that is, firſt, they have a little exaltation; ſecondly, how great ſoever we may conceive their exaltation to be, yet they are exalted but for a little while or time. We reſtrain the word to this laſt ſence, as referring to the ſpace of time, wherein the wicked are aloft, they are exalted for a little while.

Hence Obſerve, The exaltation of wicked men ſhall not continue.

They may be high built, but they have not a ſure foundation; they may float aloft, but they have no conſiſtence below, they are as vapours riſing from the Earth, or as Meteors hanging in the Aire, both which are lifted up only for a little while, and are gone. Athanaſius ſaid concerning the wrathful Reign of Julian the Apoſtate, let us be quiet, it is a little Cloud which will ſoon paſs away. The wicked mans civil honour is but a vapour (as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks of the natural life of every man) that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away. The exaltation of wicked men, is but for a little while, for, firſt, their exaltation is uſually but for a part of their lives, and that the leſſer part; and that cannot (upon any reckoning) be more then a little while. Secondly, their longeſt and utmoſt exaltation can be but for their lives, and the whole life of man is but a little while. David taking the exacteſt meaſure of his life, ſaith, behold, thou haſt made my dayes as an hand breadth, and mine age is nothing before thee (Pſal. 39. 5.) The whole life of man is very ſhort, and the preferment or exaltation of wicked men is either much ſhorter then their lives, or their lives are much ſhortned by their exaltation. They act their power beyond the bounds of Juſtice, and ſo forfeit their lives, before they come near the bounds of nature. Now if life laſt but a little, and they are exalted but a little while of their lives, or if their lives be cut off within a while after they are exalted, then they have but little exaltation. Many ſpend a great part of their life before they arrive at exaltation or preferment in this world, and there are many who out-live their own exaltation, and there are not a few who looſe their lives by the abuſe of their exaltation. The worldly enjoyments of all men are ſhort, and evil mens injoyments are ſhorteſt. Saints ſhall have enjoyments hereafter commenſurate with eternity; but the beſt of Saints here, have neither any leaſe of their lives, nor of their enjoyments. And if it be ſo with the beſt of men, then much more with the worſt of men, who as they are wrapt up in the common condition of humane frailty, with all other men, ſo they lye under ſome peculiar curſes or threatnings which other men do not. And how ſoon may a curſe caſt thoſe down who are moſt highly exalted, and blaſt and wither all their beauty and bravery, whoſe branches are greeneſt, and whoſe faces ſhine brighteſt with Earthly ſplendour.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as the word ſignifieth a little thing, as well as a little time; a little deale, as well as a little while; a thing which in regard of the ſmalneſs of it, is inconſiderable, ſiderable as well as that which in regard of the weakneſs of it, is not durable.

Obſerve, The greateſt exaltation that any man can have in the things of this world is but a little exaltation.

That man is but little exalted, how much ſoever he is exalted, who is only exalted in the things of this world: That which is but little in it ſelf cannot make us very great, though we ſhould have it all as ours, or in our poſſeſſion. How little a thing is all this world, and how little part hath any one of this little? The whole world is but little, what then is a little part of it? Which yet is all that falls to the ſhare of the greateſt men in the world. Philoſophers ſay, that the whole body of the Earth and Sea together, is but as a point or prick with a pen compared to the Heavens; and yet there are very few of the great men of the earth, who poſſeſs ſo much as a mathematical point or prick with a pen in the body of the earth. We may ſay, that the day of the greateſt man in the world, is but a day of ſmall things. The Prophet to encourage the mean beginnings of Sions deliverance (Zech. 4. 10.) ſaid, Who hath deſpiſed the day of ſmall things? As if he had ſaid, I know many do it, ſome hoping and others fearing that theſe ſmall beginnings will have ſmaller endings, or end in nothing, but in the joy of the enemies, and in the ſorrow and diſappointment of the friends of Sion: But I ſay unto you, take heed of deſpiſing the day of ſmall things, that is, the leaſt appearances of deliverance and ſalvation to Sion. Now as we are not to deſpiſe the works of God, becauſe they are ſmall; ſo we have no reaſon to be proud of, but even to deſpiſe the things of the world, for they are ſmall. Men have great thoughts and make much ado about ſmall things, when they have to do with the greateſt things on this ſide Heaven. The greateſt things that continue only for a little while, are but little worth; then how little worth are thoſe things, which beſides that they continue but a little while, are themſelves but little? Though wicked men are exalted, yet no man hath cauſe to be troubled at it, or envy them: They are not bleſſed becauſe exalted, for they are exalted but a little, and that only for a little while. It ſhould not be much to us what any man is as to worldly enjoyments, no nor what our ſelves are as to thoſe enjoyments, ſeeing whatſoever others are, or whatſoever we are in that capacity, is but for a little while. The Apoſtle ſaith (2 Cor. 4. 18.) We look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen; that is, we make not the things of the world our ſcope, but the things which lye beyond this world, which are ſeen by faith only: And the reaſon why he looked not at theſe things which are ſeen, was, becauſe the things that are ſeen are temporal; Thoſe things which are ſeen, will not be long ſeen; they are but for a while, and therefore not to be much looked after. The things which are not ſeen ſhall be ſeen for ever; they are eternal, and therefore moſt worthy to be looked after. The world hath beauty and glory in it, but this ſtains the beauty of all earthly glory, that it may be ſo quickly ſtained. The evils and troubles of this world ſhould not much trouble us, nor the afflictions of this preſent world much afflict us, becauſe they are but for a while; ſuppoſe a godly man be caſt down and laid low in reference to the world, he is laid low but for a while, therefore no great matter to him, he hath no great reaſon to be troubled at it; as the Apoſtle argueth in the ſame Chapter (ver. 16.) For this cauſe we faint not, for our light afflictions which are but for a moment, &c. Therefore he calls them light, how great and how heavy ſoever in their own nature, though they were as heavy as a mountain, he calls them light, becauſe as to their duration they were but for a moment. We ſay, A light thing carried a great way or a great while becometh heavy: He that puts only a pound-ſtone in his pocket, will be very ſenſible of and much burdened with the weight of it, before he comes to the end of a long journey; whereas a great weight is not much burdenſome, if it be not much born. Now as worldly evils and troubles are light, becauſe but ſhort; ſo are worldly comforts and honours, eſpecially the worldly comforts and honours of wicked men; of whom it is expreſly ſaid, not only by way of aſſertion (in which ſence it may be ſaid of all men) but alſo by way of commination, They are exalted for a little while. Again, as the profeſſion of hypocrites hath a kind of appearing godlineſs and beauty, but it is little worth, or it is of no worth, becauſe they endure but for a little while, they are but Tempories, as the word is in the Parable of the Sower. Or as the Lord complaineth by his Prophet (Hoſ. 6. 4.) O Ephraim, what ſhall I do unto thee? O Judah, what ſhall I do unto thee? for your goodneſs is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. Goodneſs it ſelf is ſcarce good, goodneſs is little worth, if it be but as a morning cloud, if it be but as the dew that goeth away when the heat of the Sun cometh. The worth and glory of true grace ſtands in this, that it ſtands and endures for ever; let the world turn which way it will, true grace ſtands its ground and turns not away. Now if all the goodneſs and pretended holineſs of Hypocrites and Formaliſts be nothing worth, becauſe it is (like a cloud, or a dew) only for a little while; how little worth is the exaltation of wicked men, which goeth away, and is as quickly gone, as a cloud is ſcattered and blown away by the wind, or a dew exhaled by the riſing Sun. We may ſay of all the glory of the wicked, as the ſame Prophet Hoſea ſaith of Ephraim (Chap. 9. 11.) As for Ephraim, their glory ſhall flee away like a bird from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception; that is, it ſhall quickly depart: By their glory, ſome underſtand their Children: As if he had ſaid, Their Children ſhall flee from the birth; that is, if born alive they ſhall dye as ſoon as born; Their Children ſhall flee from the womb; that is, they ſhall not be born alive, they ſhall be abortive; Their Children ſhall flee from the conception; that is, they ſhall not be ſo much as conceived. We may read the Prophet backward, and beginning with the laſt firſt, ſay, Their glory, that is, their Children, or whatſoever elſe they glory in and make their glory, ſhall flee from conception; that is, it ſhall not be conceived, or have any being at all; and if conceived, and ſo have a being, yet it ſhall flee from the womb; that is, it ſhall never come to a compleat being, but ſhall be marr'd in the making; or if it be born, and ſo have a perfect being, yet it ſhall flee from the birth; that is, it ſhall dye as ſoon as born; and come to its grave inſtead of, or as ſoon as to a cradle. Thus he deſcribes the evil that ſhall come upon all their glory, it ſhall ſuddenly fly away; and this ſpoils the beauty of all that earthly glory, with which the wicked ſhine, They are exalted for a little while. This ſudden vaniſhing of the wicked mans glory is further deſcribed in four expreſſions: Firſt, They are gone: Secondly, Brought low: Thirdly, They are taken out of the way: Fourthly, They are cut off as the tops of the ears of Corn.

Firſt, They are gone: The Hebrew is, They are not: This kind of ſpeaking is uſed to ſignifie a total or utter periſhing. They are ſo gone, as if they had loſt not only their exiſtence but their eſſence. The Original Text is ſingular, They are exalted, and he is not, or, he is not; he doth not ſay, they not, but he not: Job changeth the number from They to He, to ſignifie that every one of them is not, or that, not any one of them is. God will deal thus with every ſingle man of them, he is not; we ſay, They are gone; they that go out of one condition into another, are not as they were; and as to their former ſtate, they are not at all. They who go from place to place, from ſtate to ſtate, though from a ſtate of life to a ſtate of death, have a being, and therefore we tranſlate well, not to be, by, to be gone. Some read the words thus, They are exalted, and within a little while they are not; we ſay, They are exalted a little while, and are gone, or, are not. The meaning of both readings is the ſame. To ſay, They are exalted for a little while, and are gone, is as much as, and no more then to ſay, They are exalted, and within a little while are gone. Thus David ſpake from his own experience concerning the proſperity of wicked men (Pſal. 37. 35.) I have ſeen the wicked in great power, and ſpreading himſelf like a green bay-tree, yet he paſſed away; and loe he was not; yea, I ſought him, but he could not be found. David's experience falls in fully with Job's aſſertion, They are exalted for a little while, and are gone, or are not.

Et non ipſe. Heb. i. e. non ullus ipſorũ hac dicendi formula ſolent Hebræi ſignificare, quod omnino deletur ut perit. Pined. Mutat pluralem in ſingularem ut ſignificet quemlibet eorum interire. Druſ. Pronomen ſingulare cum verbo plurali notat diſtributionem in ſingulo, vel collectionem ſingulorum: Piſc.

Hence Note, The worldly felicity or exaltation of a wicked man, or a wicked man in his worldly felicity and exaltation, ſhall be as if he had never been.

Worldly men and worldly things are ſcarce any thing while they are ſeen, and therefore when once they diſappear and are not ſeen it all, it may well be ſaid, They are not at all. God who is altogether inviſible, is an eternal being, from everlaſting to everlaſting he is God (Pſal. 90. 2.) But all thoſe things which are altogether viſible, are altogether vaniſhing; they are going from us, while they are with us; and when they are gone, they are as if they had never been with us. And as it is with worldly things, ſo with worldly perſons, when they are gone, they are not, as to any enjoyment, though they ſhall ever be as to puniſhment. They are exalted for a little while, but are gone,

And brought low.

That is the ſecond ſtep: Some might ſay, poſſibly they are gone to a better eſtate then before; they were high before, now higher; ſome remove from greatneſs to greatneſs; from dignity to dignity; therefore Job explaineth his meaning, They are gone,

And brought low.

Or degraded from their high places; they are brought low by diſgrace, or into diſgrace; they are brought low by poverty, or into the loweſt depth of poverty. In whatſoever they were exalted, they are now made low. Some expound it of death; They are brought low; that is, down to the grave, and that is low indeed. The grave is called the lower part of the earth; and yet the wicked ſhall be brought lower then the grave, even as low as hell, or as the loweſt hell, as Moſes ſpeaks (Deut. 32.22.) The Apoſtle James ſaith (Chap. 1. 9, 10.) Let the Brother of low degree rejoyce, in that he is exalted; but the rich, in that he is made low: A poor Brother, or a Brother of low degree ſeems to be far from exaltation; yet he hath cauſe to rejoyce in that he is exalted, and he is doubly exalted: Firſt, As he is a Brother to the Saints, and a Member of Chriſt: Secondly, As he is a ſufferer, or afflicted for Chriſt. Every godly man of the loweſt degree is exalted in one of theſe wayes, and many of them in both; and any man hath cauſe to rejoyce in theſe ſpiritual honours and exaltations, how low ſoever he is in temporals. But how is the rich, or the Brother of high degree made low? And why ſhould he rejoyce in that he is made low? For though there are readings of the Text by a ſupply of other words, yet I judge that to be the beſt: But why ſhould he rejoyce in that he is made low? As the poor mans exaltation before ſpoken of is ſpiritual; ſo alſo is the rich mans humiliation. The rich man hath great cauſe to rejoyce when he is ſpiritually humbled, and made low in his own eyes, when he is higheſt in the eye of the world. To be made low in our own eyes, or in the ſence of our own ſinfulneſs while we are rich and outwardly exalted, is a great work of Grace; but to be brought low by the hand of God, while we are high and exalted in the eyes of men, and in our own eyes, is the puniſhment of ſin. Godly great men are made low in their own thoughts by Grace; wicked men, though never ſo great, ſhall be brought low in the ſight of others for their ſin. They are exalted for a little while, but are gone, and brought low.

Hence Note, Firſt, As the worldly eſtates of all men, ſo moſt of all the eſtates of worldly men are ſubject to changes.

Now they are exalted and lifted up, within a while they are depreſſed and caſt down. The providences of God ring the changes of mens eſtates all the world over. As the eſtates and conditions of ſeveral men differ at the ſame time; ſome men are honourable, others are baſe; ſome men are rich, others are poor; ſome are exalted, others are caſt down; ſo the eſtates and conditions of the ſame men differ as much at ſeveral times; they who were honourable are abaſed; the rich become poor, and the men of exaltation are brought low. Thus the hills are turned into valleys, and the higheſt mountains, that is, men as high and ſtrong as mountains (as we read in the Prophecy of Zechary (Chap 4. 7.) become plains. Our ſpiritual eſtate is like Mount Sion, which ſhall never be moved, 'tis founded upon a rock that can never be ſhaken: But Temporal things are like a wheel which moves continually, and that ſpoke which is now aloft (as that captive King ſaid to his Conqueror) is quickly turned to the ground, and brought low. The Apoſtle gives an excellent caution in reference to our ſpiritual eſtate (1 Cor. 10. 12.) Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth take heed leſt he fall. And I may ſay in reference to any mans temporal eſtate, he that is ſureſt of his ſtanding, may fail notwithſtanding all his heed. And if any one (as the Prophet once queſtioned, By whom ſhall Jacob ariſe, for he is ſmall?) ſhould queſtion, By whom ſhall wicked men be brought low, ſeeing they are ſo highly exalted? It muſt be anſwered, That as Jacob riſeth when he is fallen, ſo the wicked fall when they are riſen, by the hand or power of God. He bringeth them low by his appointment, and he bringeth them low by his power (Pſal. 75. 7.) God is the Judge, he putteth down one and ſetteth up another: And he it is that ſetteth up and putteth down the ſame man. They are gone, and brought low.

They are taken out of the way as all others.

The original word ſignifies to narrow, contract, or ſhut up; as alſo to haſten, extend, and ſhoot forth; and the reaſon is, becauſe by contracting, or drawing any thing back, we ſhoot it forward with more force and ſpeed. We ſee how Snakes and other creeping things contract, and gather themſelves up, and then caſt themſelves forward with much advantage. Both ſignifications of the word are made uſe of in this place by Interpreters. Some rendring, They ſhall be ſhut up, they are brought low, and ſhut up; they (like priſoners) are under reſtraint, or they are reſtrained in priſon. They are apt to abuſe their liberty and their power, to the wrong of others, and therefore they are cut ſhort and kept in; not only are their horns broken, their claws cut, and their nails pared, but themſelves are ſhut up like beaſts, which hurt him that is next whoſoever it is. It is reaſon they ſhould be in ſafe cuſtody, who being at liberty no man is in ſafety.

קפץ Contraxit continuit, othuravit, in piet, feſtinavit ire & è contrario extendere ſe, tranſilire. Claudentur ſicut omnes. Pagn. Reg.

Mr. Broughton gives a ſence of the word, which imports not their reſtraint, but their flight, Every one are made to skip away: They ſhall skip or leap out of their places, or if they were forced or frighted, as one of the Rabbins tranſlates it. The meaning of both rendrings meets in the ſame thing; for whether a man be ſhut up in priſon, or forced to run and hide himſelf to avoid reſtraint and impriſonment, his condition is much alike. By the former he is a priſoner, and by the latter he hath loſt his liberty. The difference is not great, whether a man be where he would not, or dares not be where he would. They are ſhut up, or, they are made to run away. Both which readings comply fairly enough with ours, They are taken out of the way. For whether a man be carried away by force, or flyeth for fear, He is taken out of the way.

Hence Note, God doth remove, and take wicked men out of their place when they are in their higheſt exaltation.

High eſtates have no ſecurity in them, yea, they are leſs ſecure then the loweſt eſtate; and that not only becauſe they are more ſubject to the envy of men, but becauſe they who are in high places make themſelves more lyable to the wrath of God. They uſe their power to the caſting down and taking away of the innocent; and therefore God is engaged to take them away. For, as God often takes his own people out of harms way: ſo he takes the wicked quite away, that they may do no more harm. The righteous periſh (that is, dye, ſaith the Prophet) and no man layeth it to heart, and merciful men are taken away; they are taken away upon that account which few conſider, even from the evil to come (Iſa. 57. 1, 2.) God takes away the righteous, leſt they ſhould ſuffer evil; and he takes away the wicked, leſt they ſhould continue to do more evil. The wicked would know no bounds if left to themſelves, and let alone; therefore God bounds them and ſaith (as the Apoſtle propheſied of ſuch evil doers, 2 Tim. 3. 9.) They ſhall proceed no further, for their folly ſhall be made manifeſt to all men; they ſhall be taken out of the way. God will give them a ſtop; 'tis a form of ſpeech like that which the Apoſtle uſeth (2 Theſ. 2. 7.) The myſtery of iniquity doth already work, only he who now letteth, will let, till he be taken out of the way; there was a rub, a Remora in the way of the man of ſin, that he could not do what he would: The power of the Roman Empire ſtood in his way, and till that was taken out of the way, he could do no great feats, he could not appear in his colours. Now as God took away the power of the Roman Empire, as to that height wherein it had formerly been exerciſed, that the man of ſin might have a liberty to do evil and fill up the meaſure of his iniquity; ſo God takes away many wicked men, leſt they ſhould do more evil, and even exceed the meaſure of their iniquity. They are taken out of the way.

As all others.] This may be expounded; Firſt, Of perſons: Secondly, Of things: They ſhall be taken away, and be ſent out of the World as the meaneſt perſons, or according to the common lot of all men. This is underſtood two wayes: Firſt, To ſhew that in death all men fare alike, ſo that we cannot diſtinguiſh a good man from a wicked man by the manner of his death: Secondly, To ſhew that they who are higheſt in the World, are as ſoon overthrown by death as the loweſt.

Transferuntur ut cæteri nec pejus illis accidit quam cæteris. Etſi ad tempus evecti tandem amplius non extant: tamen non aliter quam alii. Bez.

Hence Note, God can as eaſily remove mountains as molehills; and as quickly triumph in his anger over the greateſt, as over the leaſt.

They who are higheſt in this world, are no more in his hand, who is higher then the higheſt, then the loweſt of this world are. No creature-ſtrength can ſtand againſt God. When we ſee enemies high we are ready to ſay, Who ſhall pull them down? But God can pull them down, As all others, the high Cedars, the ſtrong Oaks ſhall be like the pooreſt Shrub: By whom ſhall Jacob ariſe, for he is ſmall? (ſaith the Prophet, Amos 7. 2.) O how ſhall the weakneſs of Jacob be ſtrengthened, and the lowneſs of Jacob be exalted? By whom ſhall Jacob ariſe, for he is ſmall? As we are apt to queſtion the riſing of the people of God, becauſe they are ſmall; ſo the fall of the enemies of God and of his people, becauſe they are ſtrong and great. By whom ſhall the bloody enemies be brought down, for they are high? By whom ſhall our oppreſſors be deſtroyed, for they are ſtrong? Such are the reaſonings and queſtionings of our fear and unbelief. The Text and Point make anſwer; They ſhall be taken away as all others, even as the weakeſt and the meaneſt in the world; it puts God to no more trouble, to pull the ſtrongeſt Princes out of their Pallaces, Forts, or Caſtles, when they ſtand in his way, and hinder his deſigns, then to turn a Beggar out of his Cottage, or houſe of Hurdles. Such a ſcorn is put upon the King of Babylon (Iſa. 14.10.) All they ſhall ſpeak, and ſay unto thee, Art thou alſo become weak as we? Art thou become like unto us? Thou thoughteſt thy ſelf impregnable in power, and thou didſt look upon us as contemptible weaklings, but now thou art become weak as we. While God himſelf ſpeaks great things of Magiſtrates, and lifts them up, as it were, beyond the ſtate of man, he yet with the ſame breath makes them in one thing but parallel with all other men; ye rule or have power over others like God, but in your ſelves ye are as weak and mortal as any other ſort of men (Pſal. 82. 6.) I have ſaid ye are Gods, and all of you are Children of the moſt High, but ye ſhall dye like men, like the common ſott of men, and ye ſhall fall like one of the Princes: Or rather, by much, as ſome render the Hebrew, And the Princes ſhall dye as one, or, as any one; that is, as any ordinary man: For indeed there appears no Argument in the words reaching the ſcope of the place, according to our tranſlation, to ſay, That Magiſtrates ſhall fall like one of the Princes, is no abatement to them; but to ſay, Princes ſhall fall like any one, is a great abatement and fall to them, and fully reacheth the ſence of the preſent Obſervation.

Secondly, Theſe words, As all others, are expounded of other things; that is, as all wordly things.

Hence Note, Man in his greateſt enjoyment is in as periſhing a condition as any thing he enjoyeth.

Worldly men are as vain and tranſitory as worldly things are; they are as ſoon gone as their riches, or their honours, or whatſoever they moſt deſired or truſted to here below. That which they have is periſhing, and ſo are they too. Chriſt calleth all the things of the world, Meat that periſheth (John 6. 27.) The wicked man ſhall periſh, and be taken away, as all periſhing things are, upon which he ſets his heart, or which he hath in his hand. We are alwayes dying, and ſo is all that we have; ours are dying comforts, dying riches, dying honours; ours is dying ſtrength, dying beauty (Iſa. 40. 6.) All fleſh is graſs, and the godlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field: If all things we have be but a flower, and we our ſelves but graſs, then we are taken away as all other things; for flowers and graſs are alike eaſily taken away.

Accepimus peritura perituri.

And are cut off as the tops of the ears of Corn.

The original word is often uſed to expreſs that act which was the ſign of the Covenant between God and his people from the time of Abraham until Chriſt, namely, Circumciſion, or the cutting off of the fore-skin of the fleſh; and it is applied not only to the corporal but ſpiritual Circumciſion, to the Circumciſion of the heart in the Spirit. Here it is applyed either to the common way of cutting off by death, or to a cutting off by judgment, both which may be comprehended under the following ſimilitude; They are cut off.

As the tops of the ears of Corn.] The Hebrew is, As the heads of the ears of Corn; that is, As the ears of Corn which grow upon the top of the ſtraw. Where (by the way) the Reader may take notice, that the word which we render, Ears of Corn, is that hard word which coſt the lives of ſo many Ephraimites (Judg. 12. 6.) Every man that eſcaped was bid ſay Shibboleth, and he ſaid Sibboleth, for he could not frame to pronounce it right; then they took him and ſlew him. The Gileadites cut off all thoſe Ephraimites who could not rightly pronounce this word, that ſignifies Ears of Corn: And here Job ſaith, that all wicked men are cut off as the tops of the ears of Corn.

Summitas vel caput, ſpicatum pro ipſis ſpicis natis in ſummitate & capite calami.

The ſimilitude (as ſome expound it) ſets forth nothing elſe but the fairneſs and eaſineſs of the death of wicked men, as hath been ſhewed before; They are cut off as the tops of the ears of Corn; that is, they dye as Corn when it is fully ripe, at a full age. Thus Eliphaz ſpake to Job by way of promiſe in caſe of his return to God (Chap. 5. 26.) Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of Corn cometh in his ſeaſon. But to be cut off like the tops of the ears of Corn, ſeems rather to imply a violent death, and ſounds much more like a threatning then a promiſe. Therefore,

Firſt, To be cut off like the tops of the ears of Corn, ſhews how eaſily wicked men may be cut off by death or judgment, rather then the eaſineſs of their death, when they are cut off. How quickly may an ear of Corn be cut off? Wicked men, who ſeem as ſtrong as Oaks, ſhall be cut off like Strawes.

Secondly, It ſhews that wicked men are uſually cut off by a violent death; ears of Corn are cut off by the Reapers ſickle, they do not fall off alone; and though a wicked man dye a natural death, yet there is a violence in it; he is cut off when he dyeth in his bed, as well as when he dyeth upon the block; a natural death is a kind of violent death to every man who is unwilling to dye. Such a man doth not reſign up his ſoul into the hand of God, but his ſoul is rent and raviſhed from him. Chriſt ſaith of the rich man, though dying in his bed (for ſo the Parable is to be underſtood, Luke 12. 20.) Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee; or this night do they require thy ſoul from thee. It may be queſtioned, who ſhall require it? He doth not mean, that Murtherers ſhould kill him; but that when he dyed his ſoul ſhould rather be taken by force, then quietly ſurrendred.

Thirdly, He ſhall be cut off as the heads or tops of the ears of Corn, may note his deſtruction when fulleſt and higeſt. For as the ears of Corn are better then the ſtraw (what is the ſtraw to the ear?) ſo there be ſome ears of Corn that be head or chief ears; ſo that to ſay wicked men ſhall be cut off as the heads of the ears of Corn, is to ſay, they ſhall be cut off in their fulneſs, in their height and glory. When the wicked are not only ears, but heads of the ears of Corn, when they are at the higheſt, they ſhall dye; and this reſemblance holds not only becauſe ſome ears are head-ears, fuller and higher then others; but becauſe all Corn is cut when once it comes to a head; that is, to a perfect fulneſs.

Fourthly, To be cut off as the tops of the ears of Corn, may alſo ſignifie that there is a ſpecial time or ſeaſon, when wicked men are to be cut off. For as Corn is not alwayes ripe for the ſickle; ſo wicked men (though they alwayes deſerve, yet) are not alwayes ripe for judgment: Corn is not cut down when green, or when grown high; but when it is ripe and fit for the flail, it is cut in its ſeaſon; wicked men ſhall be cut off in their ſeaſon. And as there is a general ſeaſon for the harveſt of the whole world, ſo for every man in particular (Rev. 14. 15.) Thruſt in thy ſickle and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap, for the harveſt of the earth is ripe. God will not command the Angel to put in his ſickle till the world be ripe for Judgment, as he ſpake alſo by the Prophet Joel (Chap. 3. 13, 14.) Put in thy ſickle for the harveſt is ripe; come get you down for the preſs is full, the fats overflow, for their wickedneſs is great: multitudes, multitudes in the valley of deciſion, for the day of the Lord is near, in the valley of deciſion; that is, in the valley of cutting down, or of cutting off; or as we put in the Margin, In the valley of conciſion or threſhing: When the wicked ſhall be cut off as the tops of the ears of corn, by the ſickle of divine wrath, and be under dreadful breakings and threſhings for evermore.

Laſtly, This cutting off as the tops of the ears of corn, ſhews that God doth not cut off wicked men when he hath them at an advantage, when they are weak, when they are low, but when they are as the tops of the ears of corn, when they are at their beſt, then he doth it; the chief of the people are called the heads of the people (Numb. 25. 4.) Hang up the heads of the people before me, ſaith God, by Moſes, he cut them off who were as the heads of the ears of corn. As ſome Tyrants for fear, ſo God in juſtice cuts off the heads of the people, the chief of families, Princes, and great men. This was elegantly, though cruelly, expreſſed by Tarquin the proud, the laſt King of the Romans, who when a City was taken, or ſurrendered, and application was made to him how he would have the Citizens dealt with, he anſwered, only by a ſign, calling the Meſſengers into a Garden, and having a ſtick in his hand, he ſtruck off the heads of the Poppies, intimating to them, that now the Citizens were in their power, they ſhould cut off all the chief and leading men among them: Thus the Lord cuts off the heads of the ears of corn, the chief of men, or men of greateſt power, in the greatneſs of their power; he cuts them off in love to juſtice and righteouſneſs, as Tyrants do in fear and jealouſie of their power and greatneſs. They are cut off as the tops of the ears of corn.

Summa papaverum capita decuſſit, ut ſignificaret principes civitatis paulatim eſſe tollendos. Flor. de Geſt. Rom. cap. 7.

Job having at large deſcribed the ſtate of wicked men, and exemplified many of their wickedneſſes, concludes by way of challenge.

Verſe 25. And if it be not ſo, who will make me a lyar, and make my ſpeech nothing worth?

In this verſe we have Job triumphing, and yet not ſo much Job triumphing, as Truth triumphing; for how much ſoever we ſpeak for and defend the Truth, it is not comely that our ſelves ſhould triumph, but the truth only. Job indeed ſhews his confidence in the equity of his cauſe, which he affirms ſo juſt and ſo fully proved to be the mind of God, that he dares venture upon the judgment of any man alive.

Non timet veritas falſitatis inſidias, ſed vel preſſa tandē triumphat. Aug. Ser. de Sanct.

If it be not ſo now, who will make me a lyar?

Some make other men lyars, by teaching them or encouraging them to tell lyes; others make men lyars by proving that they have taught or told lyes: This is Job's meaning when he ſaith, who will make me a lyar? We may ſuppoſe Job at the cloſe of his ſpeech riſing up and looking about him, while he ſpake thus, Who will make me a lyar? Let me ſee the man ſtand forth that hath any thing to object againſt what I have ſaid. The words are elegant in the Original, And if not; that is, if it be not ſo as I have aſſerted concerning the dealings of God with wicked men, that they many times flouriſh and continue flouriſhing a long time, if it be not ſo, let any man diſprove me, and make me a lyar, if he can; let him convince me that I am in an error if he can. As if he had ſaid, I do not impoſe my opinion upon you, but ſubmit it to the conſideration and diſcuſſion of all men.

Breviſſime in Hebræo. Etſi non.

Hence Note, Firſt, We ſhould freely offer our opinions and aſſertions to the tryal.

'Tis too much for a man to look that what he hath ſaid ſhould be conſented unto and believed, becauſe he hath ſaid it. Only God himſelf is worthy, and may demand to be thus believed by man. That God ſaith this or that is enough to perſwade, yea, to require our faith in it, and obedience to it. When God ſpeaks, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear (Matth. 13. 9.) That is, let him believe and obey, at his peril be it. He that is truth cannot but ſpeak truth, and therefore is to be believed in whatſoever he ſpeaketh. Man ought not to ſay any thing as queſtioning the verity of what God hath ſaid; but we ought to conſider what men ſay, and not to believe beyond what we have tryed. And as no man ought to believe before he hath tryed; ſo every man ought to preſent what he hath ſaid to the tryal. Man hath no dominion over the faith of another: Paul profeſſed he had not (2 Cor. 1. 24.) and if Paul had not, who hath? Dares any man pretend to a higher priviledge then Paul himſelf did? We may not bind up the Conſciences of men to our dictates, any further then what we ſay is grounded upon and anſwerable to the ſayings of God. To the Law and to the Teſtimony; if we ſpeak not according to this word, ye have leave, or may take leave to ſay (as to that ſaying) there is no light in us (Iſa. 8. 20.) We muſt not teach magiſterially, but miniſterially; we muſt not affect to be called Maſters, for one is our Maſter, even Chriſt (Matth. 23. 10.) The Bereans received the Word with all readineſs of mind, yet they did not ſwallow down all whole that was ſaid to them, but ſearched the Scriptures daily whether thoſe things were ſo (Acts 17. 11.) The Apoſtles rule is ſuitable to their practice (1 Theſ. 5. 21.) Prove all things, hold faſt that which is good. Now as it is the duty of hearers and learners to hold nothing till they have proved it; ſo it is the duty of Teachers to offer every doctrine to the ballance or tryal which they deſire others ſhould hold.

Secondly, while Job doth thus confidently offer his Aſſertion to tryal, we learn,

That, Truth is not affraid to be tryed.

Truth often lyeth in a corner; but truth doth not ſeek corners; truth never hides her head, as aſhamed to be ſeen or diſcuſſed by men. Truth (as ſome have ſaid) lyeth in a deep pit, it is hard to find it out, it lyeth out of ſight, yet truth it doth not hide it ſelf, but dares ſtand forth in the face of all the world; truth no more fears the tryal, then pure gold fears the touchſtone, or then a Scholar, who hath made good progreſs in his learning, fears to be examined; He that hath truth with him needs not care who appears againſt him.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, If it be not ſo now, who will make me a lyar?

Note, Falſe doctrine is a lye.

(Iſa. 9. 15.) The antient and the honourable he is the head; the Prophet that teacheth lyes (that is, the Prophet that teacheth falſe doctrine) he is the tail. (Jer. 9. 3.) They bend their tongues like their bows for lyes, but they are not valiant for the truth on the earth. The Prophet (as I conceive) intends not ſo much falſhood in diſcourſe, which we call telling a lye, as falſhood of doctrine, which we call teaching of lyes. They bend their tongues (as bows) for lyes; that is, they ſet themſelves to the maintaining of falſe doctrine to the utmoſt ſtretch of their wit and words. Again, ſaith the Lord (Jer. 14. 14.) The Prophets that propheſie lyes in my Name, I ſent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither ſpake unto them; they propheſie unto you a falſe divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart. The whole doctrine of the man of ſin is called a lye: Becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved, therefore God gave them up to ſtrong deluſion that they ſhould believe a lye (2 Theſ. 2. 11.) All the faith devouring and conſcience waſting errors that ever the man of ſin vented to the world, are wrapt up in this one ſyllable, or word, a lye. He that receiveth a lye that is told, wrongeth others by it; but he that received a lye that is taught wrongeth himſelf moſt by it. To tell a lye is very ſinful; but to teach a lye is much more ſinful. The evil of that ſin is greateſt which ſpreadeth furtheſt, and continueth longeſt. A lye that is told and received ſticketh not long in the memory, but paſſeth away for the moſt part like a tale that is told; and it is enough to many a man that telleth a lye, if he be believed but a little while: But a lye that is taught and received ſticketh long in the underſtanding, and abideth there like a nail faſtened by the Maſters of the aſſemblies; and it is not enough to him that he teacheth a lye, unleſs it be believed for ever.

Thirdly, When Job ſaith, Who will make me a lyar?

Note, The worſt thing that can be proved againſt any man, is, that he is a lyar.

To be a lyar is to be as bad as may be: For it is to be as bad as the Devil; he deceived the Woman both by telling and teaching a lye (Gen. 3.) He abode not in the truth, becauſe there is no truth in him, when he ſpeaketh a lye he ſpeaketh of his own, for he is a lyar, and the father of it (John 8. 44.) Every ſin is of the Devil, both by temptation and approbation; but only ſome ſins are of the Devil by way of practice; and the ſin which is chiefly of him by practice is lying. Now every ſin the more congenial it is to the Devil, the more ſinful and abominable it is. And therefore among thoſe who ſhall be without, lye-makers are chief (Rev. 22.15.) Without are dogs, and ſorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whoſoever loveth and maketh a lye. The univerſality of this excluſion is only expreſſed upon lyars: As if he had ſaid, To be ſure all lyars ſhall be without. He that maketh a lye hath nothing worſe to make; and he that maketh (that is, proveth) a man to be a lyar, hath nothing worſe to make of him.

And make my ſpeech nothing worth.

The Hebrew is, And bring my ſpeech to nothing: As if he had ſaid, I challenge all men to diſprove my reaſons, or to prove that my reaſons are not a proof of that for which I brought them. In brief, let any man refute or confute what I have ſaid, if he can, and then let all that I have ſaid go for nothing, or be counted nothing worth.

Hence Note, Unſound doctrine is worthleſs doctrine.

The ſpeech of a lyar is nothing worth; ſound doctrine is of great value, it is worth thouſands. David preferr'd the Word of God before thouſands of gold and ſilver; every holy truth is the Word of God either formally or virtually, either in terms or by conſequence. The Apoſtle compares ſound doctrine to things of greateſt worth, even to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; and in the ſame place (1 Cor. 3. 12.) he compares unſound doctrine, or doctrine unſutable to the foundation (which is Jeſus Chriſt alone) to wood, hay, ſtubble, which as they are things in their own nature unconſiderable and worthleſs in compariſon of gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; ſo as to the buſineſs upon which he there treats (a ſutable building upon Chriſt) they are altogether worthleſs. And if thoſe doctrines, which (becauſe of ſome error in them) are unſutable to the foundation, are to be accounted but wood, hay, and ſtubble, how worthleſs are thoſe doctrines, which (being altogether erroneous) are inconſiſtent with and quite overthrow the foundation. Such doctrines are worthy of nothing but a dunghil, being themſelves nothing but droſs and dung. What is that worth to us, which is uſeleſs to us? How worthleſs then is that which is deſtructive to us? Every error is a bable, a thing of no uſe; ſome errors are as poyſon, deadly in their uſe. The Apoſtle Peter doth not ſpare to ſay as much of them (2 Epiſt. 2. 1, 2.) while he calleth them damnable hereſies, which bring ſwift deſtruction on the bringers of them in, or the broachers of them abroad: And if they bring deſtruction upon thoſe who bring them, they that receive them cannot be ſafe.

To conclude this Point and Chapter, if erroneous doctrine be nothing worth, what are thoſe Books worth, which are full of erroneous doctrines? To print ſuch Books is but waſt of pains and paper; and when ſuch Books are printed, the beſt improvement that can be made of them, is to make them waſt paper. To buy them is waſt of money; and to read them, is (to moſt) but waſt of time. That ſpeech is not worth the hearing, nor is that book worth the reading, which (as all erroneous books and ſpeeches are) is nothing worth. Job granted, that if any could make him a lyar, they, with the ſame pains, muſt needs make his ſpeech nothing worth. Upon this iſſue he ſhuts up his diſcourſe in anſwer to Eliphaz; nor durſt Eliphaz undertake him any more upon that iſſue, and therefore layeth down the Bucklers and quits the field; yet Bildad takes them up and makes a ſhort skirmiſh with Job; but upon another point, as will appear in the following Chapter.

CHAP. XXV. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

Then anſwered Bildad the Shuhite, and ſaid,

Dominion and fear are with him; he maketh peace in high-places.

Is there any number of his Armies? And upon whom doth not his light ariſe?

THis ſhort Chapter contains Bildad's third conteſt with Job, in which quite waving the point in queſtion concerning the preſent troubles of the righteous, and the felicity of the wicked, he falls, firſt, into a deſcription of the Glory, Power, and Majeſty of God: Secondly, by way of oppoſition and compariſon he ſets forth the miſery and impurity of man. For whereas in the twenty-third Chapter, verſe the third, Job appealed unto Heaven, wiſhing that he might have admittance to God himſelf, and plead his cauſe in his preſence; O that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his ſeat! I would order my cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with Arguments. Bildad perceiving him thus confident, labours to take him off by ſetting before him the greatneſs and dreadfulneſs of the Lord. He takes up the ſame Argument upon which he had formerly inſiſted; wonderfully exalting the Majeſty of God, and debaſing man in the ſight of his own frailty. This is the ſum and ſcope of the whole Chapter.

Bildad iterum Dei potentiam & altitudinem expendit ut Jobum cōprimat, ne divinā Majeſtatem appellet, ſuāq; corā judice tanto innocentiam jactet.

Verſe 1, 2. Then Bildad the Shuhite anſwered and ſaid, Dominion and fear are with him.

With whom is not expreſt, though it be the beginning of a ſpeech. God is often ſpoken of in Scripture without naming. The glorious things which are attributed unto him will fit and ſuit none but himſelf. Barely to ſay ſome things are done, is as much as to ſay, they are done by God, becauſe none but God can do ſuch things. And as ſuch things may be named as can be done only by God; ſo ſuch things may be named as can belong to none but God: As here, Dominion and fear are with him; that is, with God. For theſe can belong to none but God, And becauſe theſe are proper and peculiar unto God, therefore Bildad ſeems to ſay thus to Job; Surely thou haſt not yet conſidered (as thou oughteſt) the ſoveraign Authority and Power of God, which muſt needs ſtrike thee with an awful reverence of him, and cauſe thee to know thy own diſtance better. Surely thou doſt not mind, that, Dominion and fear are with God, and that thou thy ſelf art but duſt and aſhes, yea, impure and polluted duſt and aſhes.

Thus Bildad ſeems to chide and rebuke the forwardneſs of Job in appealing and putting his cauſe to God; as if he had been overbold with God, while he deſired right of him againſt the unrighteous accuſations of men. Or as if he had forgotten the Soveraignty of God, while he was earneſtly begging that he would do him juſtice.

Unum hoc agit ut demonſtret Jobi deſiderium conveniendi Deum eſſe temerarium. Coc.

Dominion and fear are with him.

Notat efficax exercitium poteſtatis.

Dominion is that ſupreme power that God exerciſeth over all things and perſons. The Hebrew is ſtrictly rendred thus, To rule is his; we ſay, Dominion is with him. There are three things which we may comprehend under the dominion of God.

Firſt, His Strength and mighty power, whereby he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Phil. 1. 21.)

Secondly, his Authority, whereby he hath a right to do whatſoever he doth (Dan. 4. 35.)

Thirdly, His Efficiency, or the efficacy of his power, whereby he is able to carry every thing through to the deſired iſſue (Iſa. 43. 13.) Many have great power and great authority, who yet want this efficacy and efficiency; they may undertake much, but they cannot carry it through; whereas in God there is a concurrence of theſe three, Strength, Authority, and Efficacy, to bring to paſs whatever himſelf intendeth, or is pleaſed to do. The Dominion which Bildad here aſcribes unto God, is a dominion cloathed with theſe three excellencies. From the ſcope of Bildad, repreſenting God in his Dominion and Greatneſs, > Obſerve, The beſt way to humble man is to ſet the Power and Soveraignty of God, as alſo his Holineſs and infinite purity before him.

Any of the perfections of God taken in by faith and well meditated upon, may lay the heart of man low. How doth all our bravery, and the high conceits which we have of our ſelves, vaniſh like ſmoak, and become a meer nothing at the appearances of God? Though (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Cor. 10. 12.) We meaſuring our ſelves by our ſelves, and comparing our ſelves amongſt our ſelves, are not wiſe: Yet while we only do ſo we ſeem very wiſe: But when once we compare our ſelves with God, O what ideots and poor ſimple things are we. What is our power when once we contemplate the power of God? What is the dominion which any Prince of the earth hath when once he conſiders the Dominion and Soveraignty of God? What is the wiſdom of man, what the holineſs of man, to the Wiſdom and Holineſs of God?

Dominion and fear are with him.

More particularly in that Dominion is here appropriated to God.

> Obſerve, Supream power is proper unto God.

There is a dominion put into the hands of men: Many have dominion and power, but originally all Dominion is Gods: In him is the ſeat and root of power. David ſaith (Pſal. 62. 11.) God hath ſpoken once, twice have I heard it, that power belongeth unto God. As my ear hath heard, ſo my heart hath heard and conſented to this truth. And this power or dominion of God may be conſidered four wayes.

Firſt, In the univerſality of it (1 Chron. 29. 12.) where David makes this confeſſion, Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all, and in thine hand is power and might, and in thine hand is to make great and to give ſtrength unto all. He that giveth ſtrength unto all, hath ſtrength over all, and his dominion is over all Nations and perſons, not limited to this or that particular Nation or perſon; yea, he hath dominion not only over all here below, but in Heaven above; as Bildad ſpeaks a little after; He maketh peace in his high places. Chriſt is Prince of the Kings of the earth (Rev. 1. 5.) He is Lord of Lords, and King of Kings (Rev. 19. 16.) That is, not only a King or a Lord, excelling all other Kings and Lords, but alſo ruling them, or reigning over them: Kings are his Subjects.

Secondly, His is an abſolute dominion; that is, he governs by no law, but by his own will: This kind of dominion is proper unto God alone. He doth, and he only may govern by his own will. He doth in Heaven and Earth whatever pleaſeth him. This was ſpoken of (Job 23. 13.) He is in one mind, and who can turn him? And what his ſoul deſireth, that he doth. He doth not go out of himſelf for his rule, his own deſire is his rule; all the deſires of God are holy, juſt and righteous, and therefore his deſire and will may well be his rule. It is good that he ſhould have an abſolute dominion and rule according to his own will, who cannot will any thing but what is good. And 'tis but juſt that he ſhould rule as he pleaſeth, who cannot be pleaſed with any thing but what is juſt.

Thirdly, His is an everlaſting dominion (Pſal. 145. 13. Pſal. 66. 7.) As men are mortal, ſo are States, Kingdoms, and Empires. The ſtrongeſt and greateſt of them have had their fates and funerals. We ſee what changes there have been of dominion and power out of one hand into another; but the dominion of God is ſubject to no change, nor knoweth it any fate. The Babylonian, the Perſian, the Grecian, and the Roman Monarchies have ſeen their day; but the dominion of Jeſus Chriſt is an everlaſting dominion (Dan. 4. 34.) 'tis ſo acknowledged even by Nebuchadnezzar, And at the end of the dayes I Nebuchadnezzar lift up mine eyes unto Heaven, and mine underſtanding returned unto me, and I bleſſed the moſt High, and I praiſed and honoured him that liveth for ever, whoſe dominion is an everlaſting dominion, and his Kingdom is from generation to generation.

Fourthly, His is an Effectual Dominion. As he hath a right to do what he will, ſo he hath ſtrength to effect what he willeth. Such is the dominion of God; and becauſe it is ſuch, even an univerſal, abſolute, everlaſting and effectual Dominion, Therefore, let man remember his duty.

That's the Apoſtle rule (Rom. 13. 1.) Let every ſoul be ſubject unto the higher powers: And if every ſoul ought to be ſubject unto the higher powers among men; then every ſoul ought to be ſubject, much more to the power of God, for his is the higheſt power. And thus we ought to ſubmit, Firſt, Unto his Laws; Legiſlative power is his, what God ſaith muſt be our rule. We may not diſpute, much leſs quarrel at any of his Commands, but obey them: Naturally the heart of man rebels againſt the Law of God (Rom. 8. 7.) The carnal mind is enmity againſt God; for it is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be; that is, it cannot be ſubject while it remaineth carnal; only a renewed or a ſpiritual mind ſubmits to a ſpiritual law.

Secondly, Submit to his works, to what he doth, as well as to what he ſaith; and that, firſt, in the proviſion and allowances that he makes for you; that is a part of Gods dominion to cut out a portion for every man. Therefore in every eſtate be content: Secondly, Submit to the works of God in his afflictions and chaſtiſements (1 Pet. 5. 6.) Humble your ſelves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. When old Eli heard that terrible meſſage concerning the deſtruction of his whole family (for Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him) he ſaid, It is the Lord, let him do what ſeemeth him good (1 Sam. 3. 18.) Thus the Church ſate down in ſilence, not ſpeaking a word becauſe it was the act of God (Lam. 3. 28.) Thirdly, Submit to God in the whole compaſs of his Government, in ordering the affairs of the whole world, when he breaks, and when he builds; when he ſets up, and when he pulls down; when he makes peace, and when he makes war; in all theſe acts of dominion ſubmit to God. When the Prophet calls us to behold what deſolations the Lord maketh in the earth, he adds this word as from the Lord, Be ſtill, and know that I am God (Pſal. 46. 10.) As if the Lord had ſaid, Let none queſtion me for what I have done, I am God, and if ye know indeed, that I am, ye will not have a word to ſay againſt what I do. So (Zech. 2. 13.) Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord; for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation: He is riſen to make great changes, therefore be ſilent, ſubmit, let there be no murmuring at, no contending with his providences; For dominion

Dominatus & quidem formidabilis eſt penes illum. Jun.

And fear are with him.] Some render this word fear, as an adjunct or Epithete of the former; Dominion, and that a terrible fearful or formidable dominion, is with him; but rather diſtinctly as we, Dominion and fear are with him. God hath no fear in him, nor upon him, for he is as infinitely above all fear, as he is above hope. But fear is with him; or, fear is his, becauſe he is ſo much to be feared. Fear is with God upon this threefold account.

Firſt, Becauſe many at preſent do fear the Lord: Every godly man is a man fearing God.

Secondly, Becauſe every man ought to fear, dread, and ſtand in awe of God, even the Princes, and Powers, and Dominions of the Earth ought to fear the Lord (Pſal. 2. 11.) Be wiſe now therefore, O ye Kings; be inſtructed, O ye Judges of the earth, ſerve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce with trembling. Kings and Judges muſt ſerve and fear the Lord; or ſerve the Lord with fear. Who then muſt not?

Thirdly, Fear is with him; becauſe all ſhall fear and dread him at laſt, whether they will or no; they whoſe hearts ſtout it againſt God, they that go on impudently in ſin, fearleſs of the Majeſty and wrath of God, yet a time will come when their ſtomachs ſhall be taken down; a time will come when all the world ſhall tremble before the Lord. As now many do it, and as all ought to do, ſo all ſhall do it (Iſa. 2. 19.) They ſhall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth. Such a day is coming upon the lofty ones, upon the Cedars and upon the Oaks, upon the fearleſs, and they ſhall fear, and (which is the greateſt argument of fear) run into a hole for fear. It is propheſied (Revel. 6. 15.) That, The Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief Captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free-man ſhall hide themſelves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains, and ſay to the rocks and to the mountains, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. They who having been threatned with the wrath of God, were no more affraid then the rocks, ſhall, for fear, wooe the rocks to hide them from the wrath of God. Though Adam had not the fear of God to keep him from ſin; yet the fear of God fell upon him as ſoon as he had ſinned (Gen. 3. 10.) I heard thy voice in the Garden, and I was affraid, becauſe I was naked, and I hid my ſelf.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God is in himſelf very dreadful; he is to be feared.

God is ſo much to be feared, that not only fear is with him, but he is fear. As becauſe God is ſo full of love, therefore the Scripture predicates love directly of God, God is love (1 John 4. 8.) ſo becauſe God is greatly to be feared, therefore he is called fear (Gen. 31. 42, 53.) Except the God of my Father, the God of Abraham, and the fear of Iſaac (that is, the God whom my Father Iſaac feared) had been with me, ſurely thou hadſt ſent me away empty, ſaid Jacob in his conteſt with Laban. And at the fifty-third verſe of the ſame Chapter he ſaith again to Laban, The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of their Father, judge betwixt us: And Jacob ſware by the fear of his Father Iſaac; that is, he ſware by God; for by him only can we ſwear in a holy manner, an Oath being a part or an act of divine worſhip. The dominion and fear of God are put together (Mal. 1. 14.) I am a great King (there is dominion) and my Name is dreadful among the Heathen (there is fear.) Even Heathens who know God only by the light of nature (which is ſo imperfect a way of knowing God, that the Heathen are ſaid not to know him, Jer. 10. 25. yet, I ſay, the Heathen who know God only thus) do fear him; they fear him in proportion to or according to the way of their knowledge of him. How much more then is the Lord to be feared, and how dreadful is he to and among his own people, who know him ſavingly, who know him by Goſpel light. God is greatly to be feared in the Aſſembly of the Saints; and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him (Pſal. 89. 7.) He is terribly dreadful amongſt the Heathen; he is awfully or reverentially dreadful amongſt the Saints. Fear is with him.

Firſt, In reference to the greatneſs of his power; conſider what God can do, and that renders him dreadful. We fear thoſe that can do great things, thoſe eſpecially that can do great things againſt us. For this reaſon Chriſt exhorts his Diſciples to fear God, when he ſaw them in danger of a ſurprizal by the fear of what men could do againſt them (Luke 12. 4, 5.) I ſay unto you friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye ſhall fear; fear him which after he hath killed hath power to caſt into hell; yea, I ſay unto you, fear him. How is he to be feared, who at one ſtroke can pierce body and ſoul quite through, and throw both into Hell? The Lord is to be feared upon the conſideration of the ordinary providential puttings forth of his Power: How much more when he puts forth his Power extraordinarily and judicially? (Jerem. 5. 22.) Fear ye not me, ſaith the Lord? Will ye not tremble at my preſence, which have placed the ſand for the bound of the Sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot paſs it; and though the waves thereof toſs themſelves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not paſs over it? I have done this thing, put a ſtop to the Sea, I have put a bridle into the mouth of the Sea, I can check the waves when they roar and toſs, and will ye not fear me?

Secondly, God is to be feared for his goodneſs, as we read at the twenty-fourth verſe of the ſame Chapter, where the Lord upbraids their want of fear, while they remembred his moſt ordinary good providences at land; Neither ſay they in their heart, let us now fear the Lord our God, that giveth rain, both the former and the latter in his ſeaſon; he reſerveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harveſt. If God be to be feared for that witneſs of his goodneſs which is held out by rain and fruitful ſeaſons, or by filling the hearts of men in common with food and gladneſs; then how much more is God to be feared for the diſtinguiſhing acts of his goodneſs and mercy, the pardon of ſin, and the giving out of his Spirit? There is forgiveneſs with thee, that thou mayſt be feared, ſaid the Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 130. 4.) and (Hoſea 3. 5.) They ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs in the latter dayes; that is, they ſhall fear the Lord becauſe of his goodneſs, his ſpecial goodneſs to his Church and People, in advancing them to all their ſpiritual liberties and priviledges in the latter dayes. And thus the Lord is ſaid to be not only glorious in holineſs, but fearful in praiſes; becauſe we ſhould fear him, when we are praiſing him, both becauſe he hath wrought ſo much goodneſs and mercy for thoſe who are unworthy, as alſo leſt while we receive ſo much from the hand of his goodneſs and mercy, we ſhould walk unworthily.

Secondly, When the Text ſaith, Fear is with him, we learn, That,

God can ſtrike man with fear when he pleaſeth.

Power is with him, and he can put forth his power: If God ſend out his power, it goeth and prevaileth. So fear is with him, and he can ſend out his fear to ſtrike whom he will with fear, when and as oft as he will. The Scripture ſheweth the Lord ſending forth his fear at pleaſure, and attaching the ſtrongeſt and hardieſt of the children of men. It is ſaid (Gen. 35. 5.) And they journeyed (that is, Jacob and his ſmall company) and the terror of God was upon the Cities that were round about them, and they did not purſue after the Sons of Jacob. The terror of God was ſent out to keep them in, ſo that none of them ſtirred, elſe no doubt but all the Cities would have purſued them becauſe of that high provocation which the Sons of Jacob had given them by the late ſlaughter of the Sichemites. When God promiſed to ſend Hornets before the people of Iſrael to drive out the uncircumciſed Nations, this fear was the Hornet (Exod. 23. 28.) God ſtung their hearts with fear, or (as it were by Hornets) buzz'd a fear into their ears; as he did into the ears of the Syrians, who encamped before Samaria (2 Kings 7. 6, 7.) The Lord made the hoſt of the Syrians to hear a noiſe of Chariots, and a noiſe of Horſes, even the noiſe of a great hoſt; and they ſaid one to another, lo the King of Iſrael hath hired againſt us the Kings of the Hittites, and the Kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us. Wherefore they aroſe and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horſes, and their aſſes, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life. As a word from God makes the heart confident and bold in the greateſt danger; ſo a word from God makes the heart fearful and cowardly, where there is no danger at all. This is the glory of God, that he can command our paſſions: That by a word he can make them fear, who do not at all fear his word.

Many men have fear belonging to them, yet they cannot ſend out their fear; they are in great place, and ſo both dominion over men, and fear are with them (for unto whomſoever dominion belongs, fear doth belong (Rom. 13.7.) Render to every man his due, tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtom to whom cuſtom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour. Yet (I ſay) many have dominion and fear belonging unto them, who cannot ſend out their fear. Their power is deſpiſed, and none regards them; they command, and are not obeyed; they promiſe, and are not believed; they threaten, and are not feared. Only God can ſend out his fear, and make every man fall and tremble before him. When many armed men came to take Chriſt, Chriſt ſent out a fear upon them, ſo that they went backward and fell to the ground (John 18. 16.) Chriſt gave them never an angry word, he only confeſſed himſelf to be the man they ſought for, I am he; and they were as men aſtoniſhed with fear; Chriſt in ſpeaking thoſe words did not only let out a little ray or beam of his Deity, and this ſtruck them down. O what fear will Chriſt ſend out when he cometh to judge the world, who could ſend forth ſuch a fear, while he yielded himſelf up to be judged and condemned by the world. Dominion and fear are with him. He can make all affraid; and yet as it followeth,

He maketh peace in his high places.

This latter part of the verſe is a continued deſcription of the irreſiſtible Power of God (as all agree) in making peace; yet there is ſome difference what ſhould be meant by the high places, where God maketh peace: He maketh peace in high places.

Firſt, Many underſtand theſe high places to be the Heavens, or (as the Scripture ſpeaketh) the Hoſt of Heaven, Sun, Moon, and Stars: There or among them peace is made through the Power of God, keeping them in or to order; that is, in their dueſt motions. The heavenly bodies are in continual ſtrong motion, and they are kept in their motion by the Power of God. The Sun, Moon, and Stars are mighty bodies, and they are in a perpetual career, yet they juſtle not one againſt another, nor do they fall ſoul upon one another. In this ſence it may be ſaid, that God maketh peace among them: They all, according to his appointment, keep their places, and ſtir not out of their own ſpheres. No man could ever keep his Watch or Clock in ſuch order as God keeps the Sun.

Secondly, By theſe high places others underſtand that which is ſomewhat lower; not Sun, Moon, and Stars, but the ſeveral Regions of the Air: God makes peace in thoſe high places, where ſtorms, and tempeſts, and all manner of fiery impreſſions are bred and wrought. Naturaliſts ſay, that the ſecond Region of the Air is both the ſhop where thoſe dreadful inſtruments of war, Thunder, Lightning, Hail, Snow, are formed, as alſo the Store-houſe where they are laid up; yet even in thoſe high places God maketh peace. If he ſpeak to the Thunder, it doth not ſtir, and to the Lightning, it doth not go forth; if he ſpeak to the Wind, it bloweth not, and to the Storm, it is huſht and quiet. Fire and Hail, Snow and Vapour, Stormy Wind and tempeſt, fulfil his word (Pſal. 148.8.) And they fulfil it whether in going or in ſtaying. Thus God maketh peace in the high places of the Air, and upon the high waves of the Sea. Chriſt did but rebuke the Sea, and ſay to it (when it was in its fierceſt rage) Peace, be ſtill, and there was a great calm (Mark 4. 39.) The Air is under the Empire of God as much as Sea or Land: And he maketh peace in thoſe high places.

Deum vel ſolo nutu tranquillat elementorum diſſidia tempeſtateſque ſerenat.

Thirdly, The words are expounded of thoſe high places which are the more proper ſeats of Angels. And ſo God may be ſaid to make peace in his high places, becauſe he maketh peace among the Angels; that is, he keepeth the Angels in peace: The Angels do not contend one with another; and none of them dares contend with God. Some urge this expoſition as moſt pertinent to Bildad's purpoſe for the conviction of Job: As if he had ſaid, The Angels dare not contend with God; And doſt thou (O Job) contend with God? The Angels utter not a word againſt God; And dareſt thou undertake to plead with him, and engage him in a controverſie?

His verbis vellicatur Job quaſi inſolens ſeditioſus & querulus homo. Pin.

A fourth ſort, by Gods making peace in his high places, underſtand only thus much, That all is quiet in Heaven, or that God hath a moſt peaceable and quiet fruition and enjoyment of himſelf: He hath had it from eternity, and will have it unto eternity; this is the bleſſedneſs of God, he is above all trouble and diſturbment. And thus alſo Bildad ſeems to reprove Job; Wilt thou begin a conteſt with God? Wilt thou trouble God himſelf, who maketh peace in his high places, who lives in everlaſting reſt and quiet? God doth not uſe to be ſued and pleaded with as thou ſeemeſt over-boldly to deſire.

Laſtly, Theſe high places are expounded for the high places of the earth: As if he had ſaid, God makes peace amongſt the States, Princes, and Powers of the World, who are in high places, and Gods high places: For every Throne is Gods, and Thrones are high places. As the Heavens are high places in compariſon of the whole Earth; ſo ſome places of the Earth (in a civil capacity, as well as in a natural) are higher then the reſt. Now among thoſe that are in his high places of Power and Authority, the Lord maketh peace; and this is a very glorious work of God. Thus we ſee there are many high places, and they are all the high places of God: Yet I conceive that Bildad chiefly if not only aims at Heaven, which is more peculiarly the high place of God; as being that to which (though many lay claim to the high places of the Earth) none beſides God ever did make claim or lay title.

Further, Beſides theſe different apprehenſions about the high places, there is a difference in the reading of the words together: Some thus, He worketh in peace in his high places: That is, what troubles ſoever are here on Earth, there is peace and quietneſs in Heaven; or there God worketh in peace and quietneſs. Others thus, The dominion and fear which are with him make peace in his high places: As if the dominion and power of God were that to which peace-making is aſcribed as an effect. Or as if he had ſaid, God hath authority enough to compoſe all differences; yea, he ſo orders things in Heaven, that there ariſeth no difference in thoſe high places, his dominion and fear keep all in peace. There are no murmurings nor diſcontents, much leſs any rebellions or open wars in Heaven.

Mr. Broughton reports the Chaldee tranſlation in a phraſe very uncouth in our language, Sultanſhip and fear be with him (ſome Eaſtern Princes are called Sultans) He maketh peace in his high Heavens. To which he adds the Expoſition or gloſs of the Chaldee paraphraſe, Michael is on his right hand, and he is of fire; Gabriel is on his left hand, and he is of water; and the heavenly Creatures be part of fire and part of water. But Mr. Broughton gives a good corrective, Such Fables St. Paul forbiddeth. To conclude, though it be difficult which of the high places before named are here meant, yet it is a truth that all high places are his high places; and that in what high place ſoever peace is made, God maketh it. He maketh peace in his high places.

Hence Obſerve, Peace-making is the work of God.

And as God makes peace every where, ſo he makes every kind of peace. We find peace ſpoken of in Scripture in a five-fold oppoſition; and God the Maker of that five-fold peace.

Firſt, He maketh peace in the high places of the World, as peace is oppoſed to any kind of trouble or affliction. Peace is uſually accompanied with proſperity, and peace ſignifies any kind of proſperity. Peace in this extent is aſſumed by God himſelf as his proper work (Iſa. 45.7.) I form the light and create darkneſs, I make peace and create evil; I the Lord do all theſe things: That is, I do them, and none can do them without me, or but by me.

Secondly, God maketh peace as peace is (more ſtrictly) taken in oppoſition to war and tumults; He cauſeth war to ceaſe in all the world (Pſal. 46. 9.) He maketh war to ceaſe unto the end of the earth; He breaketh the bow, and cutteth the ſpear in ſunder; he burneth the chariots in the fire. He that deſtroyeth all the Inſtruments of war, doth ſurely make peace; and he that maketh war to ceaſe, doth certainly make peace begin. Peace is made two wayes: Firſt, By taking up the differences and reconciling the ſpirits of men: Secondly, By breaking the power, and taking away all proviſions of war from men. The Lord maketh peace by both theſe wayes, or by either of them.

Thirdly, God maketh peace as peace is oppoſed to perſecution: There may be no war in a Nation, and yet no peace to the people of God by reaſon of ſore and fiery perſecution; yea, a general peace is the very opportunity which perſecutors look for, to break the peace of particular men. The moſt bloody times that the Church ever had, have been the moſt peaceable times of Nations. And when Nations are moſt troubled, then Churches uſually get their liberties, and are moſt quiet. Such a peace as this the Churches had, though I cannot ſay they had it upon this occaſion (Acts 9. 31.) Then had the Churches reſt (or peace; that is, they were quiet from their cruel perſecutors) throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the holy Ghoſt, were multiplied. This peace doth God make for his Saints, his little Flock, that they may ſometimes lye down in green paſtures, and beſide the ſtill waters, without fear of the Wolves and Lions, who would alwayes tear and worry them. Thus the Lord promiſeth (Iſa. 60. 17, 18.) I will make thy Officers peace, and thine Exactors righteouſneſs; violence ſhall no more be heard in thy land, waſting and deſtruction within thy borders.

Fourthly, God maketh peace, as peace is oppoſed to diſſention among brethren. It is poſſible there may be no war in a place, yea, no perſecution, none to vex the people of God, and yet they may have great diſſentions, vexations, and diviſions among themſelves. This peace the Church of Corinth wanted, when none from without troubled the Church. Hence that rebuke which the Apoſtle gives them (1 Cor. 3.3.) Whereas there is among you envying, and ſtriſe, and diviſions, are ye not carnal and walk as men? Thus Saints and Churches war one with and trouble another, when the world gives them no trouble at all. To the keeping of this peace Chriſt admoniſheth his Diſciples (Mark 9.50.) Have ſalt in your ſelves, and peace one with another. But why did Chriſt ſpeak thus to his own Diſciples, Have peace one with another? Were they ready to make war one with another? Had they any Armies to engage and lead out into the field againſt one another? Surely none. Therefore when Chriſt ſaith, Have peace one with another, his meaning was only this, wrangle not with one another, fall not out with one another. The Diſciples were not like to run into any other war but that of diſſention amongſt themſelves. And this war may be in thoſe Churches that live in the moſt peaceable condition. And 'tis God only who makes peace as in his high places both of Heaven and Earth, ſo in his holy places.

Fifthly, and laſtly, God makes peace as peace is oppoſed to diſorder; for there may be conſent amongſt men, and yet much diſorder among men, yea, they may (poſſibly) agree, conſent and center together in that which is moſt diſorderly. Of this peace the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 14. 33.) God is not the Author of confuſion, but of peace, as in all Churches of the Saints; that is, God would have every one keep his order and his place: He would not have the Prophets ſpeak all together in the Church, for that is diſorderly; nor would he have Women ſpeak at all in the Church, for that alſo is diſorderly. That which breaks order breaks peace; for there can be no true peace without order; and God is not the Author of diſorder or confuſion in Churches, but of peace.

Thus peace-making is the work of God in this five-fold oppoſition, as peace is oppoſed to trouble, as peace is oppoſed to war, as peace is oppoſed to perſecution, as peace is oppoſed to diſſention, and laſtly, as peace is oppoſed to diſorder. To make peace in all theſe kinds, is as much the honour as it is only in the power of God. He maketh peace in his high places.

Secondly, Obſerve, Where God is moſt eminently, there is moſt peace.

He makes peace on the earth; but in his high places, where his moſt glorious appearance is, there is nothing but peace. And as there is nothing but peace in Heaven, where God declares himſelf moſt clearly; ſo they to whom God declares himſelf moſt clearly on Earth are moſt for peace: The nearer and the liker we are unto God, the nearer we are unto peace, and the more we like it. All true peace floweth out from God; and the more of a healing and peace-making ſpirit appears in any man, the more of God appears in him.

Laſtly, By way of inference: Take this,

Firſt, Seeing God makes peace in his high places, or in Heaven above, how eaſily can he (when our breaches are wideſt) make peace in theſe low places of the Earth. And becauſe, as it is his property, ſo his promiſe to do it, we ſhould wait upon him for and urge him with the fulfilling of this promiſe, that he who makes peace alwayes in the high places of Heaven, would make that five-fold peace in the low places of the Earth.

Secondly, Seeing God is able to make peace in all places, he can alſo make war in all places. The ſame power doth both; and Bildad ſhews the preparations of God for war, as well as his ſanctions of peace. For he hath innumerable Armies under his command, as it follows in the next verſe.

Verſe 3. Is there any number of his Armies? And upon whom doth not his light ariſe?

There ſeems to be ſomewhat a ſtrange conjunction between theſe two verſes, He maketh peace, and, Is there any number of his Armies? One would think we ſhould hear of nothing but war, when we hear of ſuch numberleſs Armies. God hath innumerable invincible Armies, alwayes ready for war, yet he is moſt ready to make peace; yea, he who is The Lord of Hoſts, is alſo ſtiled, The Lord of peace (2 Theſ. 3. 16.) This likewiſe ſpeaks the Dominion, Power, and Majeſty of God, in that he maketh peace, and can make war. His Armies are at hand, and thoſe no contemptible ones. As if Bildad had thus beſpoken Job; It is in vain for thee who art a weak man, to think of contending with God, who hath numberleſs Armies to take his part againſt all oppoſers.

The word which we tranſlate Armies, properly ſignifies Troops, Is there any number of his Troops? And this is given in name to one of the Patriarchs (Gen. 30. 11.) And Leah ſaid, a Troop cometh; And ſhe called his name Gad. A Troop is a little Army, and a great Army conſiſts of many Troops. We ſay, Is there any number of his Armies?

When the Scripture ſaith, that God hath Armies, it is not to be underſtood as if God needed them, either to protect himſelf, or to ſuppreſs his enemies: The Lord of Hoſts himſelf is infinitely ſtronger then all the Armies and Hoſts of which he is Lord. Earthly Princes have their Armies, and Guards, to protect their perſons and dominions from danger and invaſion. They want Armies to help their Friends abroad, and to defend their Subjects at home. Worldly Princes borrow power from others to protect themſelves, while they undertake to protect others; but God is the guard of his Guards, and the ſtrength of his own Armies. Princes are ſaved by their Armies; but God is the ſafety of his Armies. The Gods of the Earth are affraid of what man may do unto them; but the God of Heaven is not only above thoſe fears, but alſo above all want of mans doing any thing for him. So that, As God is not worſhipped with mans hands (as the Apoſtle tells the Athenians (Acts 17. 25.) as though he needed any thing; ſo neither is he aſſiſted by mens hands, or by any hand, as if he needed any thing, ſeeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things.

And therefore when the Lord is ſaid to have Armies, it is either to ſignifie, Firſt, That he hath all things at his command, and is full of power: Or ſecondly, That although he can do all things by himſelf, yet he will uſe the agency of the creature to effect his purpoſes.

This Queſtion, Is there any number of his Armies? reſolves it ſelf into this Negative, There is no number of his Armies; or there is no number of them. But what are theſe Armies of God?

Firſt, The Angels are his Armies: We read of one Angel that deſtroyed a whole Army (2 Kings 19. 35.) And it came to paſs that night, that the Angel of the Lord went out, and ſmote in the camp of the Aſſyrians, an hundred fourſcore and five thouſand; and when they aroſe early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpſes. If one Angel deſtroyed an Army, what cannot an Army of Angels do? The Angels of God are Armies without number. We read them expreſſed by ſuch great numbers, as render their numbers inexpreſſible. So in Daniel's Viſion of the Glory of God (Chap. 7. 10.) A fiery ſtream iſſued, and came forth from before him; thouſand thouſands miniſtred unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him; that is, an innumerable company ſtood before him. Chriſt ſaid to Peter when he drew his ſword and ſought to reſcue him from the Officers of the High Prieſt that came to arreſt and bring him to Judgment, Put up thy ſword again into his place, for all they that take the ſword ſhall periſh with the ſword. Thinkeſt thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he ſhall preſently give me more then twelve legions of Angels? (Matth. 26. 53.) Here is an Army of Angels. Chriſt ſpeaketh in the Roman phraſe, who reckoned their Armies by Legions, as we do by Regiments, Six thouſand ſix hundred ſixty ſix was the number of a Legion as ſome affirm; and ſf ſo, then twelve Legions make Seventy nine thouſand nine hundred ninety two; a great Army; but (ſaith Chriſt) my Father can ſend more then twelve Legions. But how many more no man can ſay. Chriſt pitcheth upon a great certain number, to ſhew that he might have what number he would, if he did but call for them.

Secondly, The Sun, Moon, and Stars are the Armies of God (Judg. 5. 20.) They fought from Heaven: That is, the heavenly or aerial Meteors, Wind, Thunder, Hail, did, as it were, joyn their confederate forces for the deſtruction of Iſrael's enemies (as they had done before, Joſh. 10. 11. and as they did afterwards, 1 Sam. 7. 10.) yea, as it followeth in the ſame place, The Stars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera. The Stars charged like an Army in battel array, raiſing ſtorms and dreadful tempeſts by their influences, and ſo might be ſaid to fight againſt and ruine the whole Army of Siſera. By all which Rhetorical expreſſions the Spirit would lead us to underſtand, that the Lord himſelf by inviſible powers did fight againſt Siſera, while Iſrael ſought him with a viſible power. Surely if the Stars be the Lords Armies, we may well ſay, Is there any number of his Armies? When the Lord would ſhew Abraham that his Seed ſhould be an innumerable Army, He brought him forth and ſaid, Look now towards Heaven, and tell the Stars, if thou be able to number them. And he ſaid unto him, ſo ſhall thy ſeed be (Gen. 15. 5.) that is, thy ſeed ſhall be numberleſs, as the Stars are numberleſs.

Thirdly, By theſe Armies we may underſtand, not only the Angels, and the Sun, Moon, and Stars, that heavenly Hoſt, but any Creature, yea, all the Creatures, from the Elephant even to the Worm that creepeth upon the ground, or to the Fly that buzzeth in the air, or to the Lice that breed out of corruption. All theſe are the Armies of God; and by theſe he can do his work as well as by the Angels in Heaven. What were the Armies of God, with which he made war upon Pharaoh? Were they not Flies, and Lice, and ſuch like contemptible Creatures, muſtred together at his command? Therefore the Text may well ſay, Is there any number of his Armies? God can levy an Army upon the Earth, not only of Men, but of Beaſts; and not only of Lyons and Elephants, the ſtouteſt and greateſt Beaſts, but of the weakeſt and meaneſt; and not only of the weakeſt and meaneſt among living Creatures, but of the very Inanimate creatures; the Stones in the Fields, the Winds in the Air, the Waters of the Sea, yea, the Sand of the Sea, and the very Duſt of the Earth, are the Armies of God, if he gives them commiſſion and ſend them forth. God and the weakeſt Creature are an overmatch for the ſtrongeſt Creatures: 'Tis no matter how mean the means is, or how inconſiderable the inſtrument, ſo it be in the hand of God, ſo it be of Gods providing, and go forth at his bidding. God can leavy an Army where he will, and out of what he will, and it ſhall do the deed. Now if all things or any thing may be his Army, no marvail if it be ſaid, Is there any number of his Armies?

Hence Obſerve, All Creatures are the Hoſt, the Armies of God.

They may be called his Armies in a threefold conſideration.

Firſt, Becauſe of their multitude, a few cannot make an Army. There are many Creatures of every kind; how many then are all of every kind put together?

Secondly, They are his Armies, becauſe of their order: The greateſt many out of order do not make an Army, but a throng, or heap. Armies are martiall'd and diſciplin'd, trained and taught. An Army is an ordered company; all the Creatures are in order by Nature; and when God calls they are in order as it were by Art.

Thirdly, They are his Armies, becauſe as God hath a power to command them, ſo they are ready to obey him: They (as the Centurion in the Goſpel ſaid of his Souldiers) go when God ſaith go; they come when he ſaith come; and if he bid them do this or that they do it. Souldiers muſt neither refuſe nor diſpute the Commands of their General. The moſt violent and boyſterous Creatures are obedient to the call of God: Stormy winds and tempeſts fulfil his word (Pſal. 148. 8.) He ſpeaks to the Lightnings, and they ſay, Here are we (Job 38. 35.) The very Thunder, which ſeems to be all voice, is all ear at the voice of God. The Angels are ſo ready to go, that they are ſaid to fly; and their readineſs to do the will of God in Heaven, is made the pattern of our doing it here on Earth. The Scripture ſpeaks often of them as of an Army employed in wars, either to deſtroy the wicked, or to be a guard to the people of God. We have an illuſtrious example of the latter in Jocob's caſe (Gen. 32. 2.) And when Jacob ſaw them, he ſaid, this is Gods Hoſt; and he called the name of that place Mahanaim, that is, two hoſts or companies. And it might be ſo called, becauſe Jacob's company or little hoſt, and that company of Angels who were Gods Hoſt ſent out to convoy him in ſafety, did both encamp upon the ſame ground; or rather becauſe the Angels divided themſelves into two companies, the one encamping and marching before him as his Vantguard, the other behind him, or in his Reer, that ſo he might ſee himſelf every way protected, and might be filled with a full aſſurance of ſafety. That God hath ſuch numerous Armies alwayes at hand and under command, is,

Firſt, A very comfortable hearing to all that love and fear God. The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 8. 31.) If God be for us, who can be againſt us? That is, none can. Though many be againſt us oppoſingly; yet none can be againſt us prevailingly. We may ſay alſo, If the Lord be for us, who will not be for us? If God be our helper, we cannot want helpers; not only becauſe the help of God is enough without any more, but becauſe if he be onr helper we ſhall have many more. When we ſee our ſelves utterly deſtitute of all helps and helpers, yet God hath an Army of helpers; he hath Auxiliary forces ready for us (Pſal. 34. 7.) The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them. David ſpeaketh as if one ſingle Angel were an whole Army, The Angel of the Lord (ſaith he) encampeth; he doth not ſay the Angels of the Lord encamp about them that fear him; and indeed every Angel of the Lord is more in power then a whole Army of men; yet here, poſſibly, is meant that Angel who is the Lord, The Angel of the Covenant, who as Captain General, with his Army of created Angels, encampeth about them that fear God. And if ſo, then they need not be afraid (2 Kings 6. 16, 17.) When the ſervant of Eliſha cryed out for fear, Eliſha anſwered, Fear not; they that be with us are more then they that be with them. And Eliſha prayed, and ſaid, Lord, I pray thee open his eyes that he may ſee: And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he ſaw; and behold, the mountain was full of Horſes, and Chariots of fire round about Eliſha. And thus it is often with us though we diſcern it not. We have many inviſible ſuccours in our viſible dangers. And as that the Angels are our helpers in eminent and extraordinary dangers is very comfortable; ſo alſo, that they are ſo againſt ordinary, common, or every-day dangers (Pſal. 91. 11, 12.) He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy wayes: They ſhall bear thee up in their hands, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone; that is, leſt thou take hurt in thy daily works and travels.

Secondly, Theſe Armies are a terror to all thoſe who rebel and riſe up againſt God, or are enemies to his people. He that reſiſts God hath as many enemies as there are Angels in Heaven, or Stars in the Firmament, or Stones in the Earth, or Beaſts in the Field; ſo many enemies hath he; and if God appear as Captain General, none ſhall be able to ſtand before his Armies, though he levy them of Graſshoppers, or Flies, or Worms, or Lice. How ſhould the greateſt fear to provoke God, who can make them fall by that which is leaſt? For as David acknowledged (Pſal. 33. 16, 17.) There is no King ſaved by the multitude of an hoſt; a mighty man is not delivered by much ſtrength; a horſe is a vain thing for ſafety, neither ſhall he deliver any by his great ſtrength. So we muſt acknowledge, That if God will, any King may be deſtroyed by the ſmalleſt Hoſt; that a mighty man may be overcome by that which hath no ſtrength; that a Fly is a ſufficient thing for ruine, and that, if God ſay the word, even that ſhall not only trouble, but ſubdue any man with its little or no ſtrength.

Secondly, Note, The power which God can draw forth is a limitleſs power: His Armies are without number.

When Princes have greateſt Armies, they may number them, and tell you how many hundreds, and how many thouſands, and how many hundred thouſands they have. We have read of many very numerous Armies; but we never yet read of an innumerable Army; only Gods Army is without number; and therefore only his knows no bounds. Is there any number of his Armies?

And upon whom doth not his light ariſe?

Here Bildad ſets forth the glory of the Goodneſs, Omniſcience, and Omnipreſence of God, by his ſending forth his beams of light, as he in the former part of the verſe ſets forth the Glory of the Greatneſs and Power of God, by his ſending forth the Armies of his ſtrength.

De homine propriè dicit על מי ſuper quem, etſi omnia ſimiliter lumen & virtutem ab eo accipiunt. Merc.

Upon whom doth not his light ariſe?

The Text may be read thus, Upon whom doth not his light ſtand? Or, Upon whom ſhall not his light ſtand? We ſay, Upon whom doth not his light ariſe? Both tranſlations are good. But what is this light of God?

Firſt, We may underſtand it of that common light, the light of the Sun, for that is Gods light, and the univerſal ariſing of it upon the world is a wonderful work of God. For as God made the light, and gathered it into that great veſſel the Sun; ſo he carrieth it about the world every day. The light of the Sun is the meſſenger of Gods care and love to man every morning (Math. 5.45.) He maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good; that is, upon all, good and evil, divide the whole world between them: And while the Text in Matthew ſaith, God maketh his Sun to riſe, &c. it intimates, that the Sun riſeth daily by ſpecial direction from God: The Sun is his, and the light is his; there is no Creature that enjoyes the light of the Sun, but is beholding to God for it. He that made the Sun, maketh the Sun to riſe; as if the Sun like a weary or tired Traveller were unwilling to riſe in a morning and renew his Journey, or long Stage about the World, till called up by God, and commanded out for the ſervice of mankind: Of Sun-light we may ſay, Upon whom doth not his light ariſe?

Secondly, This light may be taken more ſtrictly for the light of Divine goodneſs. All the good, the peace, the comfort, which we enjoy in the world, is comprehended under the name of light. When the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Light is ſown for the righteous, his meaning is, Good or comfort is ſown for the righteous (Pſal. 97. 11.) And, upon whom doth not this light ariſe? The goodneſs of God extends it ſelf over all. God doth good to all, though he doth more good for ſome; for as God would have us to do good to all, but ſpecially to the houſhold of faith, ſo doth he. He ſends forth ſo much light of goodneſs as will make all men eternally inexcuſable who abuſe it; but he ſends forth ſo much light of his goodneſs to ſome as will make them eternally happy. The light of his goodneſs riſeth upon good men to cauſe them to rejoyce and live comfortably: And unleſs ſome light of his goodneſs did ariſe upon evil men, even upon the worſt of men, they could not ſubſiſt, nor live at all. His light is the life of man, And upon whom doth not this light of Divine goodneſs ariſe?

Thirdly, We may expound this light of the light of Divine wiſdom, which diſpoſeth and ordereth all things: And doth not this light ariſe upon the whole Creation? Doth not this light ſhine upon every Creature? Doth not this light direct the wayes of Man on Earth? Yea, doth not this light ariſe upon the Angels in Heaven, to direct them in all their wayes?

Fourthly, We may underſtand this light of the light of that Knowledge by which God himſelf knoweth all things. As God is light eſſentially, or as all that he is, is light; ſo we may ſay more eſpecially of his knowledge, it is light. Knowledge is the light of man, and therefore we ſay of an ignorant or unknowing man, that he is in darkneſs; and thus alſo knowledge is the light of God: And when the Apoſtle John ſaith (1 Epiſt. 1.) That in him is no darkneſs at all, his meaning is, in him is no ignorance at all. God ſends forth this light of his knowledge all the world over; he takes notice of all: As nothing is hid (in a common ſence) from the heat or light of the Sun in its walk about the World; ſo nothing is hid in, any, the ſtricteſt ſence from the knowledge of God.

Upon whom doth not this light ariſe? We are alwayes in the preſence of God, his eye is upon us and ſees us, he ſees where we are, and what we do; and as this light of his ſhines upon all things; ſo it will, at laſt, bring all things to light.

Now among theſe four Interpretations given, I conceive, that the word light is to be taken here in the ſecond ſence, Upon whom doth not his light ariſe? That is, the light of the goodneſs of God: Which goodneſs is the infinite freeneſs and readineſs of his nature to do good. And this light of his goodneſs ariſing upon the creature is five-fold.

Videtur potius lucis, nomen ad vim quam omnibus infundit pertinere, per eam ſunt omnia id quod ſunt. Merc.

Firſt, There is an upholding or preſerving Goodneſs, by which all things are maintained in their ſtate and being.

Secondly, There is a quickening and refreſhing Goodneſs, whereby all things (men, and among them godly men eſpecially) are renewed and revived in their well being.

Thirdly, There is a protecting Goodneſs of God, whereby his are kept while they are in dangers.

Fourthly, There is a delivering Goodneſs, whereby his are brought out of and ſet free from danger.

Fifthly, There is a ſtrengthening and ſupporting Goodneſs, whereby his are enabled to hear all the evils with which they are exerciſed in this world. And upon whom (yea, upon what) doth not the light of the Goodneſs of God ariſe every day in ſome one or more of theſe particulars?

Hence Obſerve, All the light of man, or the light of all men is from God.

If any light ariſe upon man it is of God; and upon what man ſoever light ariſeth it is of God. As the light of the air is his; ſo alſo is the light of our hearts. The light of life is his; and ſo is all that light of comfort which ſhines upon us while we live. God is the Father of lights, from whom every good gift and every perfect gift cometh (James 1.17.)

Secondly, Obſerve, God is very communicative of his Goodneſs; Upon whom doth not his light ariſe?

God doth not keep his light to himſelf, he is good, and doth good; he hath good, and doth good, he diſtributes it; God would not have us, much leſs doth he himſelf put his Candle or light under a buſhel, but he ſets it upon a Candleſtick, and it giveth light to all the world; it refreſheth and warmeth all the world. As the light of the ſpecial goodneſs of God in Chriſt ariſeth upon all ſorts and conditions of men in the world; ſo there is a light of his common providential goodneſs, which ariſeth upon each man of every ſort and condition in the world.

Another reading ſaith, Upon whom doth not his light abide? The light of God is not only an ariſing or ſpringing light, but a continuing and an abiding light: It doth not only break out upon us, but dwell with us. The natural Sun ariſeth every day upon us, but it doth not dwell with us, but is going from us as ſoon as it appears unto us; and therefore it was miraculous when the Sun ſtood ſtill, or haſted not to go down about a whole day (Joſh. 10. 13.) But the myſtical light of the goodneſs of God is a light that dwelleth alwayes over our heads, and haſteth not to go down. And indeed if God ſhould withdraw this light, or let it go down, if he ſhould ſtop the influences of his kindneſs from us, and ceaſe to do us good, we were ruin'd and undone; For in him all things ſubſiſt, and are upheld by the word of his power; if his light did not ariſe upon the creature, the creature would ſink into darkneſs. Nor could we abide what we are, if this light did not abide upon us. And as this is true in reference to our natural ſubſiſtence, ſo much more in reference to our ſpiritual. This light ariſing and abiding upon the Saints, maintains and upholds them, both in their graces and in their comforts.

Bildad having thus ſet forth the power and greatneſs of God in his dominion, and fear in his Hoſts and Armies, as alſo his kindneſs and beneficence in his light ariſing and abiding upon man, proceeds in the latter part of the Chapter to ſhew the ſinfulneſs and unworthineſs, the impurity and impotency of man compared with God.

VERS. 4, 5, 6.

How then can man be juſtified with God? Or how can man be clean that is born of a woman?

Behold, even to the Moon, and it ſhineth not; yea, the Stars are not pure in his ſight.

How much leſs man that is a worm, and the ſon of man which is a worm?

IN this Context Bildad gives further check to Job's preſumption (as he conceived) in appealing to Heaven, and in begging audience of God himſelf, which he did (as hath been ſhewed) with earneſtneſs at the twenty-third Chapter.

Verſe 4. How then can man be juſtified with God?

The words are an Inference from what he had inſiſted upon and diſcourſed before concerning the dominion and fear of God, concerning the number of his Armies, and the ſhinings of his light every where; from all which he concludes, How then can man be juſtified with God? Or as if he had ſaid, Seeing God is ſo dreadful, ſeeing he is an all-powerful, an all-ſeeing, and an all-upholding God, how dareſt thou, or any man living, plead with him? Or how is it poſſible for any man living to ſtand out with God and live?

How then can man be juſtified with God?

This Queſtion carrieth a ſtrong denial: To ſay, How then can man be juſtified with God? is more then barely to ſay, Man cannot be juſtified with God. How can it be? Is not only thus much, It cannot eaſily be, it cannot probably be, but it cannot poſſibly be, or it is impoſſible to be: Such Queſtions, How a thing may be? are uſually an anſwer that they cannot be at all. Queſtions are ſometimes put for Information, or with deſire to be directed, or to have the myſtery opened, how ſuch things may be. The holy Virgin put ſuch a Queſtion (Luke 1. 34. when the Angel had told her ſhe ſhould have a Son) Then ſaid Mary unto the Angel, How ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not a man? Her Queſtion did not import her denial of the thing, but her wonder at it; nor did it imply her unbelief, as if ſhe thought it impoſſible to be, but her deſire to be informed in the way and manner how it would be; and to that ſence ſhe is anſwered, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the moſt High ſhall overſhadow thee.

But here (I ſay) the Queſtion, How can man be juſtified with God? is reducible to this plain Negative Propoſition, Man cannot be juſtified with God: How can man? That is (as the word ſignifieth) miſerable man, ſickly man, weak impotent man; and it may note not only the impotency of his body, but of his ſpirit. Man is of a weak body at beſt, and of a more weak and ſickly ſpirit. Maſter Broughton's tranſlation reacheth both, And why ſhould ſorrowful man plead Juſtice with the Omnipotent? Man is compaſſed about with ſorrows; and every man is in himſelf, what Chriſt was more eminently for us all, A man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief (Iſa. 53. 3.) We take the word in its general ſignification.

How then can man be juſtified?

Bildad ſeems (as ſome expound him) by this Queſtion, to ſuſpect that Job had aſſerted a ſelf-juſtification; and it muſt be confeſſed, that what he ſpake at the twenty-third Chapter, ver, 10. 11, 12. might give him ſome colour for that ſuſpicion; He knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tryed me I ſhall come forth as gold. My foot hath followed his ſteps; his way have I kept and not declined, neither have I gone back from the Commandments of his lips: I have eſteemed the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary food. While Job thus aſſerted his own Innocency and integrity, Bildad might poſſibly ſuppoſe that he was aſſerting his own righteouſneſs, and therefore, not without ſome indignation he expoſtulates the matter with him, How can man be juſtified? That is, pronounced clean and quit at the Throne of God. Juſtification (conſidered in the Goſpel notion) is that gracious ſentence of God, wherein with reſpect to Chriſt apprehended by faith, he abſolveth the Believer from ſin and death, and doth repute him juſt and righteous unto eternal life. Of this the Apoſtle treats at large in the third, fourth, and fifth Chapters of the Epiſtle to the Romans, and in that to the Galatians. This Doctrine of free Juſtification is the foundation and corner ſtone of all our comfort. For whereas there is a double change in the ſtate of a ſinner: Firſt, A relative change: Secondly, An abſolute and real change. The one is made in Sanctification; the other in Juſtification: Sanctification is a real change, ſubduing corruption, deſtroying the power of ſin in us; But Juſtification is not a phyſical or real change in the perſon, it doth not make him that is unrighteous righteous in himſelf, nor is man at all juſtified (in this ſence) by any ſelf-righteouſneſs: but it is only a relative change as to his ſtate. To juſtifie is a Law term, ſignifying, the pronouncing or declaring of a man righteous: So that juſtification is an act of God upon us, or towards us: Sanctification is an act of God in us. This bleſſed Grace of Sanctification alwayes followeth the Grace of Juſtification, as an effect or fruit of it; and though it may eaſily be diſtinguiſhed from it, yet it can no more be ſeparated or divided from it, then heat from fire, or motion from life.

Yet I conceive, that Bildad in this place doth not ſpeak of Juſtification in that ſtrict Goſpel ſence, as it imports the pronouncing of a man righteous, for the ſake of Chriſt, or as if he ſuppoſed Job looked to be pronounced righteous for his own ſake. But Bildad ſpeaks of Juſtification here, as to ſome particular act: As for inſtance, If any man will contend with God (and that Bildad chargeth Job with) as if God had done him ſome wrong, or had afflicted him more then was need, is he able to make the plea good, and give Proof of it before the Throne of God? How can man be juſtified with God?

There is a fourfold underſtanding of that phraſe, With God.

Firſt, Thus, If any man ſhall preſume to refer himſelf to the Judgment of God, ſhall he be juſtified? (all at laſt muſt appear before the Judgment of God, whether they will refer themſelves to him or no; but) ſuppoſe a man refer himſelf to God (as Job had done by appealing to him) can he be juſtified? Will God upon the tryal and examination of his cauſe give judgment or ſentence for him? But in this ſence it is poſſible for a man to be juſtified with God; and thus Job was juſtified by God at laſt againſt the opinion and cenſures of his three Friends.

Secondly, To be juſtified with God, is as much as this, If man come near to, or ſet himſelf in the preſence of God, ſhall he be juſtified? Man uſually looks upon himſelf at a diſtance from God, he looks upon himſelf in his own light, and ſo thinks himſelf righteous; but when he looks upon himſelf in the light of God, and as one that is near God, will not all his ſpots and blemiſhes then appear? Or rather will not he himſelf appear all ſpot and blemiſh? When he is once with God, will he be any thing with himſelf, but an impure and wretched creature? In this ſence Bildad might check Job's boldneſs in deſiring to come ſo near God, even to his ſeat, which would but have made him more vile in his own eyes, and diſcovered to him his own impurities, as it did the Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 6. 5.) and as it did alſo to Job himſelf, when he attained his wiſh, and got ſo near to God, that he called it, A ſeeing him with his eyes (Chap. 42. 5.) Then we have not a word more of pleading his cauſe before God: His mouth was ſtopt, And he abhorred himſelf, repenting in duſt and aſhes.

Thirdly, Can man be juſtified with God? That is, if man compare himſelf with God, can he be juſtified? One man may compare himſelf with another and be juſtified. And thus, the faithful people of God are called righteous and juſt in Scripture, comparatively, to wicked and unrighteous men. But how can any man be juſt or righteous compared with God, in compariſon of whom all our righteouſneſs is unrighteous, and our very cleanneſs filthy?

Fourthly, To be juſtified with God, is, againſt God; that is, if man ſtrive or contend with God, in any thing, as if God were too hard and ſevere towards him, either by withholding good from him, or bringing evil upon him; can man be juſtified in this contention, or will God be found to have done him any wrong? without all queſtion he will not.

From the words taken in a general ſence, Obſerve,

Man hath nothing of his own to Juſtifie him before God.

There are two things conſiderable in man; Firſt, his ſin; Secondly, his righteouſneſs; his worſt and his beſt. All grant man cannot be juſtified by or for his ſins, nor can he at all be juſtified in or for his own righteouſneſs. And that upon a twofold ground.

Firſt, Becauſe the beſt of his righteouſneſs is Imperfect; and no Imperfect thing can be a ground of juſtification and acceptance with God. For though God doth juſtifie thoſe who are imperfect, yet he never juſtified any man upon the account of that which is imperfect. God never took cockle ſhels for payment, he muſt have pure Gold, and he ſeeth well enough what poor ſtuff, what baſe coyn the beſt of our righteouſneſs is, and therefore cannot admit any of it in juſtification. For the purpoſe of God is to exalt himſelf in juſtice as well as mercy by the juſtification of ſinners. And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 25. 26.) That God hath ſet forth Chriſt to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs (and he is not content to ſay it once, but ſaith it again) To declare, I ſay, his righteouſneſs, that he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him that believeth in Jeſus.

Secondly, All the righteouſneſs wrought by man is a due debt; how can we acquit our ſelves from the evil we have done by any good which we do, ſeeing all the good we do, we ought to have done, though we had never done any evil? When we have done our beſt we may be aſhamed of our doings, we do ſo poorly. But ſuppoſe we had done richly and bravely; ſuppoſe our works (which indeed are full of droſs) were pure Gold and Silver, were precious Stones and Jewels, yet they are already due to God. We owe all and all manner of obedience as we are Creatures; and we can never juſtifie our ſelves from our tranſgreſſions, by ſatisfying (could we reach them) our obligations. There is enough in Chriſt to juſtifie us, but there is nothing in our ſelves; all that Chriſt did was perfect, and Chriſt was under no obligation to do any thing, but what he willingly ſubmitted to do for us. This book of Job beareth as great a teſtimony to this truth as any; how often doth Job diſclaime all ſelf Juſtification (Chap. 9. 20, 21.) If I juſtifie my ſelf, mine own mouth ſhall condemn me: If I ſay I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe. Though I were perfect, yet would not I know my own Soul, I would deſpiſe my life. What can be ſaid more fully (to the tenour of the Goſpel) for the abaſement of ſelf, and the advancement of free grace in juſtification? He ſaid indeed (Chap. 13. 18.) Behold now I have ordered my cauſe; I know that I ſhall be juſtified. But he never ſaid that he ſhould be juſtified for the cauſe-ſake which he had ordered. There is a twofold juſtification.

Firſt, The juſtification of a man in reference unto ſome particular act, or in his cauſe.

Secondly, The juſtification of a man in his perſon. When Job ſaid, I know that I ſhall be juſtified, his meaning was, I ſhall be juſtified, in this caſe, in this buſineſs, I ſhall not be caſt as an Hypocrite (for he alwayes ſtood upon and ſtiffly maintained his integrity) or I know I ſhall be juſtified in this opinion which I conſtantly maintain; that a righteous man may be greatly afflicted by God, while in the mean time he ſpareth the unrighteous and the ſinner. A man may have much to juſtifie himſelf by before God, as to a controverſie between him and man; but he hath nothing at all to juſtifie himſelf by as to his ſtate towards God.

Again, As theſe words are referred to Jobs complaint of the ſeverity of Gods dealings with him.

Obſerve, Whoſoever complains of the diſpenſations of God towards him, cannot be juſtified in it.

Thus the Jews of old complained (Ezek. 18. 25.) Ye ſay the way of the Lord is not equal. But were they juſtified in this complaint, with God? How doth the Lord expoſtulate with them, in the next words, Hear O houſe of Iſrael, is not my way equal? is not your way unequal? As if he had ſaid; all the inequality is on your part, there is none on mine. The wayes of God, how hard and grievous ſoever they may be (as they were towards Job) yet unequal or unrighteous they can never be. The uſual dealings of God with us are full of mercy, and his ſevereſt dealings with us have no want of Juſtice. How then can man be juſtified with God,

Or how then can he be clean that is born of a woman?

Here's another queſtion of the ſame tenour, and in Chap. 15. verſ. 14. Eliphaz ſpake almoſt in the ſame terms, What is man that he ſhould be clean? and he that is born of a woman, that he ſhould be righteous? Jobs friends beat often upon this point, vehemently ſuſpecting that he did over-weene his own condition, and thought too highly of himſelf. Whereas Job did not only freely and ingenuouſly, but with a great deal of holy Rhetorick and Elegancy confeſs againſt himſelf again and again, that he neither was nor could be clean before God; only he would not admit their plea againſt him, that he ſuffered for his uncleanneſs, or that he was unclean becauſe he ſuffered.

Maſter Broughton tranſlates thus; or, The born of woman look to be cleared. We ſay; How can he be clean that is born of a woman? that is, how can he have a nature at all clean, or be altogether clean in his life, who cometh into the world through a world of uncleanneſs? Can the ſtream be clean, when the fountain is unclean? or the product be better then that which is produced. Man born of a woman by natural generation (ſo Bildad is to be underſtood) comes from an unclean fountain, from an impure Original; and therefore, how can he be pure and clean? What the particular Emphaſis, and importance of this phraſe (To be born of a woman) is, hath been opened already (Chap. 14. 1. & 15. 14.) and therefore I refer the Reader to thoſe Texts for a further Expoſition. And ſhall here only give out this Obſervation.

All men born of a woman by natural generation are impure and unclean.

There was never but one man, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, born of a woman who was not unclean, and he was born of a woman, not in an ordinary, but miraculous way; The holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the moſt high ſhall overſhadow thee (Luk. 1. 35.) All theſe born of a woman have been and are unclean. It is ſaid (Gen. 5. 3.) Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a Son in his own likeneſs, after his Image, and called his name Seth. Adam begat a Son in his own likeneſs; what likeneſs? it is not meant of his outward likeneſs, of the figure or the feature of his Body, that was the leaſt part of the likeneſs there intended, in which his Son was born; every Father begets a Son in a humane ſhape; and we ſay the Child is like his Father, not only as having the ſame ſpecifical nature, but as having the perſonal figure and proportions of his Father. But when it is ſaid, Adam begat a Son in his own likeneſs, in his Image, the meaning is, he begat a Son that was a ſinner as himſelf was, and corrupt as himſelf was, even Seth, who was given in the place of Abel. God in the Creation made man in his Image, after his likeneſs; man by procreation begets a Son, not in Gods Image, but in his own; and that not only like him in conſtitution as a man, but in corruption as a ſinner. David confeſſeth of himſelf (Pſal. 51. 5.) Behold I was ſhapen in iniquity, and in ſin did my mother conceive me. Some to avoid the ſtrength and dint of that Text, as to the proof of the corruption of nature by propagation, put a moſt corrupt and baſe gloſs upon it; as if David had therein only confeſſed his parents ſinfulneſs or inordinate affections in begetting and conceiving him; not his own natural ſinfulneſs as begotten and conceived. I know no better argument of the corruption of nature, then ſuch corrupt interpretations of Scripture; for doubtleſs as Bildad here in the Text, ſo David was acquainted not only with the doctrine of Original ſin, and the corruption of nature, but had found and felt the ſad effects of it in himſelf, and from that experience could ſay, I was ſhapen in iniquity, &c. as alſo conſent to what Bildad ſaith in this place, what is man that is born of a woman, that he ſhould be clean? do but acknowledge that any one is born ordinarily of a woman, and we may conclude him to be ſinful and unclean. That I may make this a little clearer, I ſhall touch at three things, which are diſtinctly conſiderable in the ſin of Adam.

Firſt, That particular act, or fact againſt the Law, which he commited in eating the forbidden fruit.

Secondly, The legal guilt that flowed from that act, both upon his perſon and upon his poſterity.

Thirdly, The natural corruption which, as a conſequent of the former, ſtained all mankind. Or there was, firſt, the tranſgreſſion of the Commandement, which was his eating the forbidden fruit; Secondly, there was the puniſhment of that tranſgreſſion, which was death inflicted for eating; Thirdly, the depravation of the whole maſs of mans nature, by which, as Bildad ſpeaks, Every man born of a woman is unclean. And theſe three fell upon the whole poſterity of Adam, or upon all that are born of a woman in a threefold way.

Firſt, The very act of Adams ſin becometh ours; for we did participate with him, and had, as it were, a hand in it, becauſe we all were ſeminally in him; ſo that when he ſinned, we all ſinned being in his loyns long before we were born, as Levi paid tythes in Abraham before he was born (Heb. 7. 9, 10.) Thus we all ſinned in his ſinning, and had a ſhare of that action of his, becauſe he ſtood as the root of mankind, and as having entred a covenant with God in that capacity. For he ſinned, not only as a ſingle perſon, but as he was the repreſentative of all mankind, and therefore what he did we are reckoned as doing the ſame with him.

Secondly, The guilt of that ſin is ours by particular Imputation, as the fact is ours by common participation; for as if Adam had ſtood in a ſtate of Innocency, that had redounded to us for good, ſo his fall or ſin redoundeth to us for evil.

Thirdly there is the pravity or corruption of nature, iſſuing from that firſt ſin, and that is chiefly aimed at in the preſent Text. And this is derived to us by propagation. The defilement of nature deſcendeth and paſſeth from generation to generation: Therefore, how can he that is born of a woman be clean? and that defilement hath two things in it.

Firſt, The loſs of Original purity, or the defacing and blotting out of the Image of God in which man was created.

Secondly, A ſucceſſion of horrible deformity and diſorder, which conſiſteth, firſt, in a proneneſs to all evil; ſecondly, in an impotency and weakneſs, yea in an averſeneſs from and enmity againſt all that is good. So then, we have to do with the very act of Adams ſin by participation, with the guilt of it by Imputation, and with the filth and deformity of it by propagation: From all which it may well be queſtioned, How can he be clean that is born of a woman, and concluded, Every man born of a woman is unclean.

Verſ. 5. Behold, even to the Moon and it ſhineth not, and the Stars are not pure in his ſight.

In this verſe Bildad proceedeth to argue down the preſumption (as he conceived) of Job, by calling him to conſider thoſe things which are far below God, and yet were far above him; as if he had ſaid; Wilt thou contend with God, when thou canſt not contend with the Moon and Starrs? they have a brightneſs beyond any thing of thine, why then doeſt thou inſiſt ſo ſtiffly upon the ſhinings of thy converſation towards men, and the brightneſs of thine integrity towards God?

Behold, even to the Moon and it ſhineth not.

There is a twofold underſtanding of theſe words; firſt, ſome expound them by deſcending, as if Bildad had ſpoken thus; Behold O Job, and be both aſhamed of and aſtoniſhed at thy own folly, in venturing upon a tryal before God, who is of ſuch infinite purity, that while he looketh upon all theſe heavenly lights that are above the Moon, even to or as low as the Moon, which (as Aſtronomers teach) is the loweſt of all the Planets, it ſhineth not, there is no brightneſs, no beauty in any of them; they are all in compariſon of God but clouds and darkneſs, but clods of Earth and dirt. And if they ſhine not in the eye of God, ſurely much leſs doeſt thou, who art a worm, and but a clod of moving or breathing Earth?

Secondly, Others expound it by aſcending. As if Bildad had ſpoken thus: Behold, O Job, and tremble at thy preſumption in deſiring that God ſhould take ſo exact a ſcrutiny of thee and of thy cauſe: for look upon all the parts of the inferiour viſible world, look upon all their glories and excellencies, and look not only upon thoſe things that are creeping here upon the Earth, but lift up thine eyes as high as the Moon it ſelf, behold even to the Moon (which is, as it were the boundary between the upper and the lower world: The Moon being the loweſt of the upper world, and the higheſt of the lower world: now ſaith Bildad, ſurvey the world up to the Moon) and it ſhineth not.

But doth not the Moon ſhine? yes! the Moon ſhineth, the Moon is that leſſer light which was made to rule the night (Gen. 1. 16.) Why then doth he ſay it ſhineth not? the meaning is only this, that Moon-light, and Sun-light, that all Creature-light, is no light, nor their ſhining to be called ſhining when we ſpeak of the light and ſhinings of God himſelf. The Moon ſhineth for the uſe and to the eye of man, but the Moon ſhineth not for any uſe to or in the eye of God. As becauſe he is light, he needeth no light, ſo becauſe there was no light till he created it, the light of the Creature is nothing unto him.

The Moon and Stars ſhine, but when the Sun is up they ſhine not, that is, not to our view; the Stars ſhine as much in the day as in the night, though we cannot ſee them, being over-power'd by that greater light, the light of the Sun; ſo when the glory of the Lord appeareth, both Sun and Moon diſappear, and are no more ſeen. The light of the world is no light where God is named; do but ſpeak of God, and all the beauty and brightneſs of the Creature fades and is extinct. The Moon is a very beautiful Creature conſidered by it ſelf, as Job ſpeaks to ſhew how far he was from Idolizing it, notwithſtanding all that beauty wherein it appeared to him (Chap. 31. 26.) If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs: that is, if I beheld either Sun or Moon ſo as to adore and worſhip them; if I reckoned any thing of Moon and Sun, in compariſon of God, if I did not judge the light of both as darkneſs and obſcurity in reference unto him, if I did not behold them ſo as if I did not behold them, not being taken up or dazzl'd at all with their ſhining brightneſs, ſcarce at all ſeeing, not at all admiring any brightneſs, but the brightneſs of God; if it were not thus with me, if I ſtood not at this diſtance, and upon theſe terms with the beſt of the Creatures, then, &c. It argues that there is much natural beauty in the Moon, when as Job to ſhew his ſpiritual chaſtity ſaith, that the beauty of it did not at all withdraw or ſteal away his heart from God. Indeed ſuch is the beauty of the Moon that it is uſed to ſhadow out the Church in her ſpiritual beauty (Cant. 6. 10.) Who is ſhe that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the Moon. The Moon is fair, yet ſhe hath her ſpots; but God is fair without any ſpot, and therefore the fairneſs of the Moon is no fairneſs at all to his.

Ne luna quidem lucida eſt collata cum deo. Vatabl.

There is another reading of the words (Behold even to the Moon, and it doth not extend its tents, or doth not extend its light like a tent; for when the light is ſpread firſt out, it is like the ſpreading of a tent upon the mountains. To which the Prophet Joel ſeemeth to allude (Chap. 2. 2.) in that phraſe; As the morning ſpread upon the mountains. Behold to the Moon, and it doth not ſpread out its light, nor extend its tents; our tranſlation reacheth the ſence fully; It ſhineth not;

ולא יאהיל Et non expandit lumē ſuum in modum Tentorii. Complut.

Yea the Stars are not pure in his ſight.

The Stars are ſuppoſed higher and greater then the Moon; the Stars are pure and ſplendid Bodies, as hath been ſhewed from other places of this Book. So that, when Bildad ſaith, the Stars are not pure, it is not an abſolute denyal of their purity, but as himſelf expounds it, they are not pure in the ſight of God. The Stars have neither thoſe ſpots, nor thoſe changes which the Moon hath, they are a more clear and a more certain light, yet Even the Stars are not pure in his ſight, and we may reckon the Sun among the Stars too, though ſometimes they are ſpoken of diſtinctly, Sun, Moon, and Stars. Thus Bildad pleads the excellency of God above the moſt excellent Creatures, how much more above man, who is now caſt much behind many of the Creatures, through the corruption of his nature, and is not diſparaged by being compared to the meaneſt of them. Behold, even to the Moon, and it ſhineth not, and the Stars are not pure in his ſight.

Hence Obſerve, The glory or beauty of the moſt glorious and beautiful Creatures is no glory, no beauty compared with the glory and beauty of God.

Bildad inſtancing in the moſt beautiful Creatures, takes in the beauty of all the Creatures; all which is but a ray, a beam to his infinite light, but a drop to his infinite Ocean: Their glory is but an effect of his; and though the meaneſt of them are perfect in their ſtate, yet the beſt of them are not perfect in degree. It was ſaid anciently, Look upon the Heavens, they are beautiful; look upon the Earth, that alſo is beautiful; but he that made Heaven and Earth is infinitely more beautiful then either of them both, or then both of them.

When God had finiſhed the work of Creation, it is ſaid (Gen. 1. 31.) And God ſaw all that he had made, and behold it was very good. How then is it ſaid, that the Moon ſhineth not, and that the Stars are not pure in his ſight?

I anſwer, firſt as before, all things which God made were good as Creatures, but nothing was good as the Creator.

Secondly, I anſwer, the creature is not now ſo good as it was when firſt Created, the ſin of man did not only pollute and ſtain the glory of man, but of the whole Creation; and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 8. 20, 21, 22.) That the Creature was made ſubject to vanity, not willingly, but by reaſon of him who hath ſubjected the ſame in hope, becauſe the Creature it ſelf alſo ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God: for we know that the whole Creation groaneth and travelleth in pain together until now. From this illuſtrious context it appeares that God for mans ſin hath put the whole Creation to diſgrace and ſuffering, and that all Creatures are fallen from the firſt perfection by the fall of the firſt man; the very lights of Heaven are made dark, and the Stars impure, by mans impurity. Now if by the ſin of man, thoſe Creatures who in themſelves are ſinleſs, even the Moon and Stars, have contracted defilement, and are not without blemiſh in the ſight of God; then how much leſs is man (by whom they have taken this infection) free from blemiſh or infection himſelf, as Bildad infers in the next words and cloſe of the Chapter.

Verſ. 6. How much leſs man that is a worm, and the Son of man which is a worm?

As if he had ſaid, If the Sun Moon and Stars are not pure in his ſight, how much leſs is man pure? Nor is Bildad content to ſay how much leſs is man? but he giveth a very debaſing compariſon of man,

Cum precedit ſententia negativa particula illa אשבו Communè redduntur quanto minus. Piſc.

How much leſs is man that is a worm, and the Son of man which is a worm.

How much leſs.] We may ſay alſo, how much more is man impure in his ſight; ſo, the Original words are often rendred; as the Reader may ſee in thoſe places (Pro. 11. 31. Pro. 15. 11.)

Bildad layeth man as low as he can, ſhewing that he is ſo far below the Stars that he is as low as a worm; and if the Stars be impure in the ſight of God, how much more is man a worm? What's a worm? what a dark dull thing is a worm to a Star? yet that is not ſo dull a thing to a Star, as a Star is to God, therefore if the Stars are not pure in his ſight, how much leſs man that is a worm?

רמה Vermis parvus in carne aut caſeo naſcens.

A worm is one of the meaneſt Creatures, and the word that is here uſed ſignifieth the meaneſt of worms, properly and ſtrictly thoſe little worms which breed in fleſh or Cheeſe, or in any other kind of food when it is corrupted. The word is uſed (Exod. 16. 24.) where it is ſaid of the Manna that was reſerved contrary to the command of God, that it bred worms; ſuch a worm is man; and Bildad is not content to ſay this once, but he ſaith it again,

And the Son of man which is a worm.

Here is the ſame thing doubled; and 'tis doubled by Bildad to aſſure us of the truth and certainty of it; as if he had ſaid, I am not afraid to aver what I have ſpoken, I have ſaid it, and I ſay it again, how much leſs man, who is a worm, and the Son of man which is a worm?

The Son of man.] That is, any man, high or low, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, they who are at greateſt diſtance in themſelves meet all in this, they are worms. To be called the Son of man, imports the meanneſs of man, and minds man of his weakneſs and frailty. Ezekiel the Prophet is often ſpoken to by the Lord, in this ſtile, Son of man; the reaſon given by ſome is this, becauſe he was a man often rapt up in the viſions of God, or had the viſions of God ſent down to him, he was a man that lived ſo much in Heaven, that he might even forget that he was of the Earth, therefore the Lord minds him often of his Original by calling him, Son of man, Son of man; ſo here, Bildad mindeth man of the meanneſs of his birth, he is but the Son of man. Some proud men have drawn their pedigree from the Gods, or from the Stars, Alexander the Great would be called the Son of Jupiter, which was to ſay the Son of the Sun, he did not like to be called the Son of man, though he was ſo; but he was ſoon after convinced, and confeſſed that he was ſo.

And the Son of man which is a worm.

We expreſs the latter branch by the ſame word worm in our Engliſh, but the Hebrew ſpeaks it in a different word; and Maſter Broughton renders it differently in the Engliſh, and the Son of man a vermin. The word ſignifieth both ſmall and great worms, all ſorts of worms or vermin; here's the ſtate of man; and how can he who is ſuch a worm ſtand before God, in his purity, when the Sun Moon and Stars are impure before him?

Again, we may take notice that Bildad doth not ſay, man is like a worm, but is a worm. 'Tis not ſpoken by way of ſimilitude, but of aſſertion.

Hence Obſerve, Man is a very poor thing.

So poor a thing that he is twice in this Text called a worm; the loweſt things ſerve for a Compariſon and bear the likeneſs of the higheſt and greateſt men in the world; man is but a worm, and the Son of man is no better, a worm or vermin. As it ſheweth the excellency of God, that nothing is ſo good, ſo great, ſo perfect, that is worthy to be compared with him (Iſa. 40. 18.) To whom will you liken God? or what likeneſs will ye compare unto him? Look over all the Excellencies that are in the Creature, is there any thing that looks like God, that hath not any excellency or beauty comparatively to him? And (Iſa. 46. 5.) To whom will you liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like? that is, there is nothing that you can compare or make me like unto, I am above all compariſon. Now (I ſay) as it ſhews the excellency of God, that there is nothing worthy to be compared to him, ſo it ſhews the meanneſs of man, that there is nothing ſo unworthy but that he may be compared to it, and that without wrong or diſparagement. The Scripture doth as it were ſtrive for compariſons, to ſet forth the weakneſs, the poorneſs, the worthleſneſs of man; he is compared to, yea called duſt (Gen. 3. 19.) Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt return. He is compared to the graſs of the field that groweth to day, but withereth or is cut down to morrow (Iſa. 40. 6.) He is compar'd unto a ſhadow that hath nothing of Entity or ſubſtance, and therefore continueth not, but vaniſheth away (Job 14. 2.) He is compar'd to that which is leſs then a ſhadow, even to that which is, as I may ſay, the nothingneſs of all things, vanity; and thus he is called when at his beſt or in his beſt eſtate (Pſ. 39. 5.) Further, man is not only nothing and leſs then nothing, but that which is worſe then nothing, a lye; he is naturally under ſuch diſgrace that he is the very word of diſgrace, a lye. Surely (ſaith David, Pſal. 62. 9.) men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lye. Nor doth the Lord ſpeak thus of ſingle perſons only, but of Nations, and not only of this or that Nation, but of all Nations: take mankind in a cluſter or as bundled up together, not only is this or that man, this or that Nation, but all men and all Nations before him are as nothing, and are counted to him leſs then nothing and vanity (Iſa. 40. 17.) They are not only duſt, but (which is the lighteſt and moſt inconſiderable duſt) the duſt of the ballance, and that the ſmalleſt duſt of the ballance (Iſa. 40. 15.) they are not only a drop, but the drop of a bucket, which is but the drop of a drop. The ſimilitude in the Text layeth man low enough, He is a worm. When the Lord would ſpeak of his people at the loweſt rate in reference to the opinion which they had of themſelves, or which others had of them, he calls them a worm, (Iſa.41.14.) Fear not thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Iſrael*:* God doth not ſpeak to the diſparagement, or the diſcouragement of Jacob; as if he had ſaid, though thou art a worm, though thou art thus low, thus mean, humbly in thy own thoughts, contemptuouſly in the thoughts of others, yet fear not; yea all ſhall have cauſe to be afraid of thee, for though thou art a worm, yet thou ſhalt threſh the Nations, and beat them ſmall, &c. As National Jacob then, ſo perſonal Jacob, or Jacob in perſon before was but a worm in his own eyes. (*Gen.*32.10.) I am not worthy of the leaſt of all the mercies (or I am leſs then all the mercies) and of all the truth which thou haſt ſhewed unto thy Servant, for with my ſtaffe I paſſed over this Jordan; that is, I came over in a very poor manner, all my ſtate was but a ſtaffe. Here Jacob in perſon ſpake of himſelf as a worm, and when we ſpeak thus like worms, we ſpeak moſt like Saintt. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſpake thus of himſelf, as for our ſakes he became poor and emptyed himſelf, as for our ſakes he took upon him the form of a Servant, and was made in the likeneſs of man, (Pſ.22.6.) I am a worm and no man, a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people. O how low did Chriſt eſteem and ſet himſelf, as, and while he ſtood in the place of ſinners? He not only confeſſed that he was a worm, becauſe a man, but that he was a worm and no man. How then ought every ſinful man to abaſe himſelf and ſay, I am a worm and no man? Man is a worm in a five-fold reſpect.

Firſt, Look upon his Original and conſtitution, he is from the Earth as the worm is.

Secondly, Look upon him in his natural ſtate and condition, he liveth upon the earth and earthly things as worms do.

Thirdly, He is a worm, becauſe continually ſubject to danger, every foot may cruſh him.

Fourthly, As the worm is very ſubject to danger, ſo likewiſe unable to reſiſt, or make defence; the worm is a naked Creature, and wears no Armes, neither offenſive nor defenſive. Such a one is man, a worm, unable to defend himſelf, unleſs the Lord be his ſhield and a defence to him round about.

Fifthly, Man is a worm, for he muſt ſhortly return into the Earth where the worms are houſed; he is going to worms, as a worm, and when he comes to the grave it will be worm to worm. As the Lord ſaid, Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt return; ſo we may ſay, a worm thou art, and to worms thou ſhalt return. Thus we ſee man is a poor thing, a very poor thing, and hence I ſhall make four or five brief inferences.

Firſt, Let no man be proud, or have high thoughts of himſelf; the Son of man is but a worm. O why doth man ſwell above the Clouds, or proudly make his neſt among the Stars, whenas he muſt ſhortly fall among the Clods, and as he is a worm, ſo be eaten up of worms?

Secondly, Let men take heed of adoring one another with great words and flattering Titles, let us take heed of having the perſons of men in admiration; it is as vain a thing, for any man to give great flattering Titles to others, as it is to have high thoughts of himſelf. The Titles which the Spirit of God gives to man, are humbling Titles, a flower, a ſhadow, &c. any thing which may keep down his Spirit and abate ſelf-valuations; we ſhould learn as to think of our ſelves, ſo to ſpeak of other men as the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh. As he doth not paint man out with praiſes, nor ſpeak of him as Courtiers (whoſe hearts are the ſhops of complements, and their tongues the venters of them) do of Princes; ſo neither ſhould we: There are two extreams which we ſhould labour exceedingly to avoid in our references to men; and yet moſt men walk in one of theſe extreams towards men. Firſt, we ſhould take heed of reproaching, vilifying, and deſpiſing others; for though it be a duty for every man to think meanly of himſelf, and to ſay of himſelf, I am a worm; and though we may lawfully think and ſay of all men, as to the general truth of the propoſition, yet it is ſo far from being a duty, that it is not at all lawful to call any man worm, with reproach and contempt of the meanneſs of his perſon. Secondly, we ſhould take heed of flattering and daubing others, as thoſe Tyrians did Herod, crying out it is the voyce of God and not of man (Acts 12.22.) whereas God to ſhew their miſtake, and that he was but a worm, ſmote him, and he was eaten up of worms. Elihu concludes and reſolves excellently to this point (Job 32.21, 22.) Let me not I pray you, accept any mans perſon, neither let me give flattering Titles unto man: for I know not to give flattering Titles, in ſo doing my maker would ſoon take me away. As God took away Herod for receiving flattering Titles, ſo they who give them are in danger to be taken away by God.

Thirdly, Be not envious at others; what if another have a little more glory, riches, beauty, ſtrength, power, then thou haſt, what though he have a little more knowledg, and be a little higher in gifts then others, yet he is but a worm ſtill; what's man but a worm? why ſhould a worm envy a worm, what though ſome men are ſilk-worms, a little better furniſhed and richer then others in mind and body, yet they are but worms in ſilk, and many who appear ſo, are but Glow-worms, which ſhine a little but have no conſiſtence.

Fourthly, Let the Sons of men take heed of vexing one another; why ſhould worms riſe up againſt worms, why ſhould worms deſtroy worms cruelly, bloodily? we are all weak as worms, let us therefore engage that little ſtrength we have, for the ſupporting, not for the ruining of one another. We uſually have ſo much tenderneſs towards worms in kind, that when we ſee them crawling upon the ground, we avoid treading upon them; yet how do men purpoſely tread upon worms in likeneſs. All men are worms in likeneſs, we ſhould not willingly tread upon or hurt any man. But poor men, and men of low degree, are more worms then rich men, and men of high places are; therefore take heed of oppreſſing the poor, for that is indeed, a treading upon worms. And though while you tread upon worms, the weak and needy, they cannot (as Chriſt ſpeaks of ſwine, Mat. 7.6.) turn again and rent you, yet if you do ſo, God, the ſtrong God will turn upon you and tear you while there is none to deliver.

Laſtly take this inference from it,

Man by ſin is much degraded and fallen below himſelf.

Man by ſin is become inferiour to the meaneſt Creatures, who was once above all viſible Creatures: Man in the ſtate of Creation was the chief peice of the inviſible world, but now man is fallen very low, he is level'd with the loweſt of the Creatures, a worm; not only do the Heavenly Bodyes exceed him in beauty, but even the Earthly Bodyes, the Beaſts of the field, and the worm that crawles upon the Earth, and lives in the bowels of it, is good enough to make compariſon with him. See what man hath loſt by ſin! ſee how he is degraded and fallen from his ſtate and ſtatelineſs! yea I may ſay that man by ſin is not only fallen from the ſtate and ſtatelineſs wherein he was Created, but he is fallen below the ſtate of the loweſt Creature. Man (by ſin) is not only a worm but worſe then a worm; a worm is not capable of moral polution; a toad hath natural poyſon, but man hath moral poyſon in him, which is worſe then natural poyſon; and which makes the condition of man yet more vile, his moral poyſon (ſin I mean) is to him natural. It is his miſery and his diſhonour that he hath it, and it is his greater miſery and diſhonour, that he loves it, and that it is not ſo much his diſeaſe as his deſire: And as the firſt ſin, the ſin of nature, hath debaſed all mankind at once; ſo every man that goeth on in and multiplyeth (with deſire) the acts of ſin, debaſeth himſelf yet more, and maketh himſelf not only lower then the worm, which is the loweſt of living things, but even lower then the loweſt things that have no life. Senſleſs liveleſs Creatures are better then ſinful men, ſuch I mean as live in ſin, and better it had been for any never to have had a being, or not to had lived at all, then to dye in ſin.

Seeing then ſin hath degraded us, and placed us among and below the worms, who were once next to Angels, how are we engaged to Jeſus Chriſt, who by becoming a worm for us, hath raiſed us to be Heirs of bleſſedneſs with the holy Angels for ever, and hath lifted us up to that height of honour, that even the holy Angels miniſter to us as long as we are here. And how ſhould we ſtrive to raiſe our ſelves up higher and higher in the improvement of all that grace which is freely offered to us in Chriſt, even to our daily converſation in Heaven, and our ſitting together in Heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Epheſ. 2. 16.) It is ſad for any man who is but a worm, to be lifted up in himſelf, but it is the duty of every man to ſtrive that he may be lifted up, not only above the worms, but above the Heavens. We may quickly ſin in ſeeking our own exaltation in a worldly, but the more we ſeek our exaltation in a heavenly ſtate, the more holy, yea the more humble we are. We never act as thoſe who know they are but worms, here on Earth, till we have an ambition to be like the Angels who are in Heaven.

Thus I have opened and done with this third, and that a very ſhort diſcourſe of Bildad in this Chapter, wherein he hath ſpoken excellently as to the general truth, in exalting God and humbling man, yet he is upon the old miſtake, concluding Job a ſelf-juſtifier, yea a contender with God; whereas indeed his thoughts were as low as his ſtate or perſon, in reference to any conceit of righteouſneſs in himſelf, or of any boldneſs in charging God with the leaſt unrighteouſneſs (though there was much ſeverity) in his dealings with him.

CHAP. XXVI. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

But Job anſwered, and ſaid,

How haſt thou helped him that is without power? how ſaveſt thou the arme that have no ſtrength?

How haſt thou counſelled him that hath no wiſdome? and how haſt thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

To whom haſt thou uttered words? and whoſe Spirit came from thee?

Non reſpondit ad Bildadi dicta, ſed eum ridet quaſi ea attulerit quæ parum ad rē faciant, imo ab inſtituto aliena. Merc.

THIS Chapter containeth Jobs anſwer to the third and laſt diſpute or oppoſition to his ſecond friend Bildad; wherein he doth two things.

Firſt, He complaineth of and in a manner derideth Bildads dealing with him, as if what he had urged were not only little to the purpoſe, but very wide from it. This he doth in the four firſt verſes of the Chapter.

Secondly, Job gives out a large narrative of the power, perfections, and excellencies of Gods, of his wonderful works, and providences, which Bildad had but ſlightly touched; this he doth in the remaining part of the Chapter.

Verſe 1. But Job anſwered and ſaid,
2. How haſt thou helped him that is without power?

מה Admirantis eſt, & hæc dicit εἰρωνικῶς ſive εἰρωνευόμενος. Druſ. In qua re adjuviſti ſententiā tuam de providentia dei particulari, in qua nulla ſunt viris. Quare ex Hebræo legit, non cujus ſed quid adjuviſti, Vatabl.

There is a queſtion among Interpreters, who is here meant, by him that is without power, and who by the arm that hath no ſtrength; who by him that hath no wiſdome. There are three opinions about the reſolving of this queſtion.

Firſt, Some expound it not of a perſon, but of a thing, for the Original leaves it in ſuch words as may be determined upon either, and may as well be rendred, that which hath no power, as, him that hath no power. And the thing without power, which this interpretation aimes at, is the opinion or tenet which Bildad and his friends had held forth in their diſcourſe: Which Job is conceived to look upon, as weak, and without power, as having neither ſtrength nor wiſdome in it. And becauſe Bildad made the laſt reply, Job (according to this expoſition) beſpeaks him thus; Thine own former arguments, as alſo thoſe of thy friends, had no power, no ſtrength of reaſon, nor true wiſdome in them; and haſt thou mended the matter now? haſt thou by what thou ſpakeſt laſt put any ſtrength into what hath been weakly and feebly argued already? as for my ſelf, I am neither better enformed nor comforted, then I was, and therefore have reaſon to conclude, that there is no more ſtrength nor power in what is now ſaid, then in what was ſaid before. It is uſual to apply ſtrength to a ſpeech, we ſay ſuch a man made a ſtrong ſpeech; as for ſuch a one, his ſpeech had no ſtrength, no ſinews in it. And that ſpeech which hath no ſtrength in it, can never adminiſter ſtrength to thoſe to whom it is ſpoken; ſo that to ſay, how haſt thou helped him that hath no power, is to ſay, the ſpeech by which thou haſt attempted or endeavoured to help him, that hath no power. Yet I conceive that Job doth here intend a perſon, whom his friends ſuppoſed without power, ſtrength, or wiſdome, rather then his friends ſpeech, which himſelf judged and (as his own relief) found to be ſo.

Hoc de deo accipio, O quam egregie eum adjuviſti qui imbecillis erat, & invalido es patrocinatus Quaſi tua defenſione deus indigerit. Merc. Cujus adjutor es num imbecillis & ſuſtentas brachium ejus qui non eſt fortis. Vulg. Cui auxiliatus es, cui non potentia? Mont.

Secondly, By him that hath no power, and the arme that hath no ſtrength, ſome underſtand God himſelf; who is indeed all power, all arme, who is altogether ſtrong and only wiſe. As if Job had ſaid, O Bildad, thou haſt ſtood up in the defence of God, as if he had not been able to defend himſelf, thou haſt been an Advocate for him, who hath no need thou ſhouldeſt. Hath not he power? hath his arme no ſtrength in it? or is he deſtitute of councel? ſurely God hath no need of thy patronage or aſſiſtance? therefore conſider whoſe helper thou haſt been? what? the helper of him that is weak, and haſt thou ſuſtained the armes of him that hath no ſtrength? ſurely no, God hath ſtrength enough to defend his own cauſe, and wiſdome enough to maintain his own acts againſt me and all men elſe. Thou oughteſt indeed to have helped him that hath no power, but thou haſt only given help to him that hath all power. Thus ſome carry on the whole context under that frame and form of this expoſition, as if Job did but rebuke Bildad for undertaking the matter on Gods part, whereas he ſhould have uſed his utmoſt endeavours for the ſupport and comfort of him a poor weak Creature, labouring under heavy burdens of moſt ſad afflictions, and wanting counſel how to bear and improve them, as laid upon him by the hand of God. For this Job had no power, and might expect help from his friend; but he beſtowed all his help in vindicating the honour of God againſt Job, not in helping or adviſing Job how to bear up under the hand of God, and therefore he thus interrogates him, How haſt thou helped him that hath no power? But

Thirdly, I rather expound the words of Job himſelf, as being now burdened and diſtreſſed with great affliction, and under ſore temptations, and therefore fitly repreſented in theſe words, a man without power, an arm without ſtrength, and him that had no wiſdome, at leaſt that he was ſuch in the opinion and judgment of his friends. As if he had ſaid, O Bildad, Thou lookeſt upon me as a man without power, ſtrength, or wiſdome; very well, be it ſo, as indeed (though not in thy ſence) it is ſo, what haſt thou done? how haſt thou helped him that is without power? how ſaveſt thou the arm that hath no ſtrength? how haſt thou performed the part of a friend, either in comforting me, or in counſelling me? ſo the words are a cloſe Ironical rebuke of what Bildad ſaid in the former Chapter. Thou cameſt to ſtrengthen and help me, conſider how well thou haſt made good thy own intendment; how haſt thou helped him that is without power? thou haſt ſpoken words fitter to weaken, then to ſtrengthen, to caſt down then to raiſe up; and ſo haſt quite miſtaken the matter. Thou ſhouldſt not have amplified the power and majeſty of God before a man in my condition: Thou ſhouldſt rather have opened the doctrine of free grace, and of the fatherly affection of God to his poor ſervants and children, while they are under his ſharpeſt corrections: Thy words ſhould have been like oyle, like milk and honey, but thou haſt ſpoken very hard words, if not gall and wormwood to my wearied ſoul. Though what thou haſt ſpoken be in it ſelf true, yet it is to me improper and unſuitable, out of time and unſeaſonable, and therefore weigh with thy ſelf, How haſt thou helped him that is without power? We may paralel this context with that of the Apoſtle, (1 Cor. 4. 8, 10.) where with much holy deriſion he rebukes the over-weening and high opinion which the Corinthians had of their preſent attainments and perfections in ſpirituals; Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have reigned like Kings without us, and I would to God that ye did reign, that we might reign with you. As if he had ſaid, I would wiſh with all my heart, it were as well with you as you think it is, that we alſo might have a part with you in thoſe glories of the Goſpel; but I fear ye are only puft up with notions, and that your portion is but ſmall in true ſolid ſpiritual knowledge: I fear ye have little except in conceat; and there ye have a great deal to much; and upon the ſame account he puts it upon them again at the 10th verſe; We are fools for Chriſts ſake, but ye are wiſe in Chriſt; we are weak, but ye are ſtrong; ye are honourable, but we are depiſed. Thus Job here, ye look upon me as a weak man, as a man of no power, but you are wiſe, and learned; ſee how ye have played your part and diſcharged your duty; you think you have a wonderful faculty in helping the weak, in ſaving thoſe who are ready to periſh, in teaching the unlearned, in counſelling the unwiſe; whereas I am neither ſo weak, nor ignorant, nor deſtitute of counſel as you think I am; and if I were, your oration is wide of the mark or reacheth not my caſe, and therefore can do me no good. How haſt thou helped him that hath no power? And which is the ſame in other words;

How ſaveſt thou the arm that hath no ſtrength?

The arm is an eminent member of the body, and in Scripture it often ſignifies ſtrength, becauſe the arm holdeth out and acteth the ſtrength of the whole body; How haſt thou ſaved the arm that hath no ſtrength? that is, the man that hath no ſtrength. There is a threefold ſtrength. Firſt, natural, which is twofold; firſt, of the mind or inward parts; Secondly, of the body or outward parts. Secondly, there is a civil ſtrength, which is the command or Authority which a man hath over others. Thirdly, there is a ſpiritual ſtrength, which is the command a man hath over himſelf, both in doing good and in avoiding evil, or both for the due enjoyment of good and induring of evil. When Job ſaith, How ſaveſt thou the arm that hath no ſtrength? We may expound it both of the firſt and third ſort of ſtrength. For Job had indeed loſt the ſtrength of his body, and his friends thought he had loſt the ſtrength both of his parts and graces, which is more clear in the next interrogation.

Verſ. 3. How haſt thou counſelled him that hath no Wiſdom?

To give counſel is the work of the wiſe, and they who are unwiſe have moſt need of counſel, though they ſeldom think ſo. And it may be a very diſputable queſtion, who is the wiſer man, he that gives good counſel, or he that readily receives it and makes good uſe of it. Good counſel directs how to judge of things, how to ſpeak, and how to act. In the Multitude of Councellers there is ſafety (ſaith Solomon) and they muſt needs be unſafe, who either have none to give them counſel, or refuſe wholeſome counſel when 'tis given. Counſel is to a man without wiſdom as bread is to a man that is hungry, or as cloaths to a man that is naked. Maſter Broughton tranſlates, What doeſt thou counſel without wiſdom? Right counſel is the very ſpirits of wiſdom; but thy counſel is flat and hath no ſpirits in it. Thus his tranſlation refers the want of wiſdom to the counſel which Bildad gave Job; but ours refers it to Job, to whom Bildad undertook to give counſel. How haſt thou counſelled him that hath no wiſdom? As if he had ſaid, Thou O Bildad lookeſt upon me, as a man without wiſdom; If I am ſo, I do not perceive that thy counſel is like to make me much wiſer. Thy counſel will even leave me where it found me, and 'tis well if it do not put me backward. What ſtrange kind of counſel is thine! How haſt thou counſelled him that hath no wiſdom? From all theſe cutting queſtions put together,

Obſerve, Firſt, They who are weak, and without wiſdom ſhould be holpen, and tenderly dealt with, by grave and gracious counſel.

The words of the wiſe conveigh ſtrength to the weak, comfort to the ſorrowful, and counſel to thoſe who know not what to do. See the tenderneſs of Chriſt to the weak, (Matth. 12. 18, 19.) Behold my ſervant whom I have choſen, and my beloved in whom my ſoul is well pleaſed: I will put my ſpirit upon him, and he ſhall ſhew judgment to the Gentiles. He meaneth not judgment, as judgment is oppoſed to mercy: Jeſus Chriſt did not come in that ſenſe to ſhew judgment to the Gentiles, he did not come to bring wrath upon them, but he came to ſhew mercy to the Gentiles, to thoſe who were ſinners of the Gentiles, who ſat in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, he ſhewed merciful judgment, he ſhewed them the knowledge of God, he reformed and purged them from their ſins and ſinſul Idolatries, he brought them into a holy ſtate and order under Goſpel Government; this is the judgment which Chriſt brought to the Gentiles, and this judgment is a mercy; he ſhall bring Judgment to the Gentiles; How ſhall he do it? he ſhall not ſtrive nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voyce in the ſtreets; that is, he ſhall not deal boyſterouſly, and contentiouſly, he ſhall not be vexatious, and rigorous, he ſhall not act as a man chaſed and enraged, as a man full of wrath and fury, but as a man moſt tenderly affected and full of pity, for a bruiſed reed ſhall he not break, and ſmoak-flax ſhall he not quench; a bruiſed reed, and ſmoaking flax, are emblems of the weak, of the arm without ſtrength, of thoſe who are without wiſdom; Chriſt will not deal roughly with thoſe, he will not break the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax, that is, ſuch as are broken with the ſence of ſin, ſuch as are weak in faith, ſuch as are ſo much over-power'd by corruption, thar they do rather ſmoak, and make an ill ſented ſmother, then burn or ſhine in a gracious profeſſion; ſuch as are thus low and mean in in ſpirituals, Chriſt will not break with his power, nor quench with his rebukes, till he ſend forth judgment to victory, that is, till he hath perfected their converſion, and hightned their graces to the full, and cauſed the better part in them to prevail over the worſe (as the houſe of David did over the houſe of Saul) till it arrive at a bleſſed victory. And again (Iſa. 61. 2.) The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, (for what) becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek, he hath ſent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound. Here is helping thoſe that have no power, and ſaving the arm that hath no ſtrength. Thus Chriſt handles thoſe who through temptation, affliction, or any trouble, are brought low. For the neglect of this duty, the Lord reproves the Shepheards (Ezek. 34. 2, 3, 4.) Son of man, propheſie againſt the Shepheards of Iſrael, Propheſie and ſay unto them, thus ſaith the Lord God unto the Shepheards; Wo be to the Shepheards of Iſrael, that do feed themſelves; ſhould not the Shepheards feed the flockes? That is, ſhould they not be more intent upon the feeding of their flock with ſpirituals, then upon the feeding of themſelves with temporals? ſhould they not labour more to feed the peoples ſouls then their own bellies? ſurely they ought. But what did the Shep- of Iſrael? The next words ſhew us both what they did, and what they did not, Ye eat the fat, and ye cloath you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed. Theſe things they were forward enough to do; But ſee what they did not, ye feed not the flock, That's a general neglect of duty; then followeth their neglect of particular duties; The diſeaſed have ye not ſtrengthned, neither have ye healed that which is ſick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away (by force of Satans temptation) neither have ye ſought that which was loſt (through ſelf-folly and corruption) Here is a large inditement againſt the Shepheards, All which may be ſummed up in Job's language to Bildad; They did not help thoſe who had no power, they did not ſave the arm without ſtrength, nor counſel thoſe who had no wiſdom. See again how the Prophet deſcribes the compaſſionateneſs of God to his people in an afflicted condition (Iſa. 27. 8.) In meaſure (that is, moderately) when it ſhooteth forth thou will debate with it: he ſtayeth his rough wind, in the day of the Eaſt wind; that is, when affliction, like an Eaſt wind blows fiercely upon his from the world, then he ſtayeth his rough wind, he will not bring his rough wind out of his treaſures to joyn with the Eaſt-wind. God will deal gently with his when they are hardly dealt with by man. And thus it is our duty when it is a day of the Eaſt-wind, a day of trouble and temptation upon any ſoul, to ſtay the rough wind, to breath gently, to give refreſhment and eaſe to the weary ſoul; How haſt thou helped him that hath no power? How ſaveſt thou the arm that hath no ſtrength?

Secondly, Obſerve, The manner how we perform any duty is to be attended as well as the matter.

Bildad's buſineſs was to comfort the ſorrowfull, to ſtrengthen the infirm; how did he perform this? His ſtrengthening was a weakning, his helping was a grieving of Job already weak and grieved; and the reaſon was, becauſe he failed in the manner, or mannaging of this work: we muſt be carefull as to do good for the matter, ſo to do it effectually, which cannot be unleſs it be done rightly. Some go with an honeſt purpoſe to help, who yet adminiſter no help at all; to every ſuch helper it may be ſaid with rebuke, How haſt thou helped him that is without power? How unhandſomly haſt thou done it? what work haſt thou made of it? Thou haſt but entangled the poor ſoul worſe then before. This runs through all duties, We may ſay to ſome, How have you prayed, and called upon God? They only ſpeake a few words, preſent a few petitions, but without a heart, without faith, without a ſence of the preſence of God, or of their own wants; how have ſuch prayed? call ye this prayer? We may ſay to others, how have you heard the word of God? is this to hear? what to receive the ſound or ſence of the word, and never to mind it more, never to digeſt nor turn what is heard into practice; is this hearing? We may ſay to others, how have you faſted and humbled your ſouls before God? Is this a faſt that God hath choſen, a day for a man to hang down his head like a bullruſh; Is this faſting to God, even to God? No; This is but a mock faſt, a no faſt; God hates ſuch formality, in praying, hearing, faſting, with a perfect hatred. A body exerciſed, and a ſoul ſitting ſtill, is not worſhip. God is a ſpirit, and will be worſhipped in ſpirit and in truth; In the truth, or according to the rule of his own word, as alſo in the truth, or according to the ſincerity of our own hearts: unleſs we worſhip God in this twofold truth, we worſhip him not at all, as he will be worſhipped, how much ſoever we ſeem to have a will to worſhip him. As Job here puts a queſtion mixt with admiration and indignation to his helper; How haſt thou helped him that hath no power? How ilfavourdly, how bunglingly haſt thou done it? So the Lord will put ſuch a queſtion to many of his worſhippers; How have ye worſhipped him that hath all power? How ſlightly, how formally, how hypocritically have ye done it? Therefore in all duties, look to the manner, as well as to the matter, and labour to do them well, as well as to do them. To neglect the doing of a duty, or the doing of it negligently, are alike offenſive unto God; and he will ſay to the latter with as much diſpleaſure, How haſt thou done what I commanded? as he will to the former, Why haſt thou not done what I commanded? yea

Thirdly, Obſerve, That which is not done as it ought, is to be judged as if not done.

That which we ſtrive not to do in a right manner, we (upon the matter) do not at all. We may reſolve theſe interrogations of the Text into negations, How haſt thou helped him that is without power? is as much as this, thou haſt not helped him: how ſaveſt thou the arm that hath no ſtrength? is indeed, Thou haſt not ſaved him: how haſt thou counſelled him that hath no wiſdom? carryeth this meaning, thou haſt given him no counſel; we uſe to ſay, as good never a whit, as never the better, and how good ſoever any thing is that we do, if we do it amiſs, it will be reckoned by God (what reckoning ſoever men make of it) as if we had done no ſuch thing. Moſes ſaid to the Lord under a temptation, when he was troubled at the complaint of the people, becauſe the deliverance promiſed did not come on, and they were not freed as was expected; Lord, wherefore haſt thou ſo evil entreated this people? why is it that thou haſt ſent me? for ſince I came to Pharoah to ſpeak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people, neither haſt thou delivered thy people at all, (Exod. 5. 23) Is this a deliverance? this is no deliverance. We are apt to think the mercies of God no mercies, unleſs he give us full and perfect mercies; unleſs we preſently receive all that we look for, we look upon it as if we had received nothing at all. But how truly may the Lord ſay to the children of men, when they perform duties ſlightly, and negligently, ye have not done them at all, ye have neither prayed, nor heard, nor faſted at all, becauſe ye have been negligent in and unprofitable under them. The works and duties of the beſt are not every way full, but the works and duties of ſome are altogether empty, and they do nothing in all they do.

Fourthly, In theſe ſeveral interrogations, are here held forth the ſeveral effects of holy advice given according to the word, and mind of God; how haſt thou helped him that is without power? ſaved the arm that hath no ſtrength? counſelled him that hath no wiſdom? As if he had ſaid, thou indeed haſt offered me counſel from God; if thou hadſt mannaged it right, this would have been the fruit of it; I who have no power ſhould have been helped, and I who am as an arm without ſtrength ſhould have been ſaved.

Hence obſerve, That the word of God or divine truths are mighty in operation, when duely adminiſtred.

The word of truth conveigheth ſtrength to the weak, wiſdom to the ſimple, comfort to the ſorrowful, light to thoſe who are in darkneſs, and life unto the dead. The word lifts up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees. The Law of the Lord (that is, every holy truth, ſaith David, Pſal. 19. 7, 8.) is perfect (and what can it do? the next words tells us) converting or reſtoring the ſoul. The teſtimony of the Lord is ſure (and what can that do? the next words tells us) making wiſe the ſimple. The Statutes of the Lord are right (and what can they do? even that which is moſt ſweet where it is done) rejoycing the heart: The commandment of the Lord is pure (in it ſelf, and it worketh gloriouſly in us) enlightning the eyes. I may ſay alſo, The word of the Lord is mighty, and it giveth ſtrength to thoſe who have no might. As it is mighty for the pulling down of ſtrong holds, caſting down imaginations, and every thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt, (2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.) So it is as mighty for the raiſing up of the weak, for the lifting up of thoſe who are caſt down and fallen below the knowledge of God through unbelief; and for the bringing of poor ſouls out of captivity into that bleſſed liberty of faith in Chriſt. What Great things the word rightly applyed, and divine truths brought home with Authority, have done and ſtill can do, was ſhewed at the fourth Chapter of this Book, verſ. 3. and 4. As alſo at the 25. verſe of the ſixth Chapter, upon thoſe words, How forcible are right words? Though we ought to help thoſe who have no power by more then words, yet words have holpen many who had no power; as Job doth more then intimate while he reproves Bildad for his unskilful wording it with him. How haſt thou helped, &c.

And how haſt thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

That which we render, The thing as it is, is but one word in the Original, and it hath a threefold ſignification.

תושיה an de Græcum οὐσία, Appellatio à ישׁ quod eſſe ſignificat, ſapientia enim rerum omnium exiſtentium prima & præcipua eſt Druſ.

Firſt, It is put for the eſſence, ſubſtance, or being of a thing; the Greek word for ſubſtance, is very near this in ſound, and may poſſibly be a derivative from it.

Secondly, it ſignifieth that working or operation which flows from being; things firſt are, and then they act, and they are to little or no purpoſe unleſs they act.

Thirdly, It ſignifieth counſel, advice, wiſdom, or ſound wiſdom (Prov. 3. 21.) ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates, And makeſt advice known abundantly. Others taking up the ſame notion render, How haſt thou declared wiſdom abundantly? As if he had ſaid, Thou thinkeſt thou haſt opened a treaſure, and declared ſtore of wiſdom and knowledge in this diſcourſe, or that thou haſt made a very wiſe and learned diſcourſe, whereas indeed it will be found lean and ſhort in it ſelf, as alſo impertinent to the point in hand. Our tranſlation takes it in the firſt ſence, How haſt thou plentifully declared declared the thing as it is, that is, how haſt thou declared the ſubſtance of the thing, or the ſolid truth in plenty, or as the Hebrew phraſe imports, in great number and with much variety.

Hence Note, Firſt, Every thing ought to be declared as it is, that is, the naked truth ought to be declared.

It is our duty to ſpeak of things as they are, not to put colours upon them, and ſo make them appear what they are not, or otherwiſe then they are; truth is plain, and truth ſhould be told plainly. The naked truth, or, the thing as it is, is moſt beautiful to the eye of the underſtanding. And though Bildad did not miſreport what he ſpake of God, yet he did not make a full report. How haſt thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

Secondly, Hence Note, As we ought to ſpeak the truth, ſo to ſpeak the truth out, or all the truth.

Paul tells the Church of Epheſus (Act. 20. 20.) That he had kept nothing back that was profitable for them; and ſaith he, (ver. 27.) I have not ſhunned to declare unto you all the counſel of God. Paul plentifully declared the thing as it was. Bildad ſpake truth, but not all the truth, as to Job's caſe. He ſpake great things of the power and holineſs of God, but Job's caſe called him to ſpeak as much if not more and rather of the goodneſs and kindneſs of God. He ſpake enough to humble and caſt Job down, at the ſight of his natural uncleanneſs, but he ſhould have ſpoken more to raiſe him up and comfort him, by ſhewing him that Fountain which is opened to waſh in for ſin and for uncleanneſs. We may quickly entangle a ſoul by ſpeaking truth, unleſs we ſhew him all that truth which belongs to his condition. The Scriptures have plenty of truth in them, and are therefore able to make us wiſe unto ſalvation; They are profitable for Doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs. The Scripture is like that River ſpoken of (Gen. 2. 10.) which went out of Eden to water the Garden, and from thence it was parted and became into four heads: Paul in that place now mentioned (2 Tim. 3. 16.) ſhews us the Scripture parting it ſelf into four heads; Firſt, of Doctrine, for eſtabliſhing the truth; Secondly, of Reproof, for removing of error; Thirdly, of Correction, for the beating down of ill manners; Fourthly, of Inſtruction, for building up in a holy converſation; That ſo (as it there follows) the man of God may be perfect, throughly furniſhed unto all good works; that is, in Job's language, that he may be able plentifully to declare (the ſolid truth) the thing as it is, and as knowingly to declare General truths, ſo to apply them diſcerningly to the ſtate of every perſon; a fayling wherein Job is ſuppoſed to charge Bildad with in the next verſe.

Verſ. 4. To whom haſt thou uttered words ?

Here Job taxeth Bildad with inconſiderateneſs, in reference to the perſon to whom he ſpake; To whom haſt thou uttered words? haſt thou conſidered to whom thou ſpakeſt? The vulgar tranſlation refers it to God, whom wouldſt thou teach? wouldſt not thou teach him who made thee breath? ſurely thou takeſt upon thee to teach him, who is the teacher of us all. Thus many carry on the ſence of this fourth verſe according to the ſecond interperation of the ſecond and third verſes. With which preſumption Job taxed his friends once before, and that in expreſs terms (Chap. 21. 22.) ſhall any teach God knowledge, ſeeing he judgeth thoſe that are high?

Quem docere voluiſti, nonne eum qui fecit ſpiramentum Vul.

But I conceive Job's meaning is only to ſhew Bildad that he had not well adviſed about his caſe and condition before he ſpake; for Bildad might ſay, is this a queſtion to be asked, to whom have I uttered words? have not I been ſpeaking to thee all this while? Art not thou the man for whoſe ſake we are here met, and about whom we have had all this diſpute? Why then doſt thou ask, to whom haſt thou uttered words? Job doubted not who it was to whom he ſpake; but Job queſtions him as fearing he was not well acquainted with or had not enough laid to heart the ſtate of the man to whom he ſpake; doſt thou know what my condition is, and haſt thou ſuited and cut out thy diſcourſe to my condition? To whom haſt thou uttered words?

Hence Note, We ſhould well conſider the ſtate of every perſon to whom we ſpeak, and apply our ſpeech or Doctrine accordingly.

Bildad in the former Chapter had been ſetting forth the power, majeſty, and dread of God, as alſo his infinite purity before whom the Angels are not clean; now ſaith Job, To whom haſt thou uttered theſe words? Should I be thus dealt with, thus handled, who am a man caſt down already, and under the terrors of God? Is this diſcourſe (though an undoubted truth) ſutable to my condition? Thou ſhouldeſt rather have repreſented God to my faith in his goodneſs, and mercy, in his long-ſuffering, and patience, in his tenderneſs and gentleneſs towards ſinners, thou ſhouldeſt have proclaimed that name of God to me which is his Glory (Exod. 34. 6.) The Lord, The Lord gracious, and merciful, long ſuffering, and aboundant in goodneſs and truth; this had been a deſcription of God, a proclamation of God fit for a man in my caſe. Whereas thou haſt only told me of his mighty power and dominion, of his Hoſts and Armies; doſt thou know to whom thou haſt uttered theſe words? Jeſus Chriſt, when here on earth, conſidered to whom he was uttering words, and therefore tells his Diſciples (John 16. 12.) I have many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Chriſt would not put new Wine into old Bottles, but attemper'd his ſpeech to the ſtrength and capacity of his hearers. Some muſt hear that which they cannot bear (when that ſprings from their paſſion and impatience, eſpecially when from their love to and reſolvedneſs to go on in ſin. Amos muſt not forbear to ſpeak, though Amaziah cry out, The Land is not able to bear all his words) But we muſt take heed of forcing words upon any which they cannot bear, or are not fit to hear, either by reaſon of their afflictions and temptations, or by reaſon of their preſent infirmities and incapacities. The Apoſtle (2 Tim. 2. 15. bids Timothy ſtudy to ſhew thy ſelf approved unto God, (he doth not mean it in his private courſe of life and daily converſe, which is the duty of every beleiver) but in his publick courſe of life, or converſe as a Miniſter of the Goſpel, in that ſaith he, ſtudy to ſhew thy ſelf as approved (unto God) a workman that needeth not to be aſhamed, (what kind of workman was Timothy? his work lay in the Word, ſhew thy ſelf a workman, and a Maſter in thy work) rightly dividing the word of truth; how is the word to be divided? He doth not mean of a Grammatical, nor of a Logical diviſion (though there may be a uſe of theſe diviſions of the Word) but the dividing of the word intended by Paul, is the dividing of it ſpiritually to the ſeveral ſtates, and conditions of men, giving to ſuch a word of inſtruction, to others a word of Reproof, to a third ſort words of comfort: This is dividing the word aright; And in doing this, Paul would have Timothy declare himſelf a workman that needeth not to be aſhamed. He would have him know to whom he uttered words: to know when he ſpake to ſinners, and when to Saints, when he ſpake to the afflicted, and when to them that were in a comfortable eſtate; He would have him know when he ſpake to thoſe who were hardened in their ſin, and when to thoſe whoſe hearts were broken under the weight and ſence of ſin. And thus as every man who uttereth words, ſo Miniſters of the Goſpel eſpecially, ſhould be well adviſed to whom they utter them. For as the ſame garment will not ſerve every body to wear, nor the ſame Bed to lye upon, ſo the ſame word will not ſerve every ſoul. We muſt not do as the Tyrant, who made one Bed ſerve all his gueſts, and they that were too long for it were cut ſhorter, and they who were too ſhort were ſtretched longer. Yet thus do they who have but one word for all comers, or for all they come to. We would judge him a very unskilful Phyſitian, who, let the diſeaſe be what it will, ſhould preſcribe one and the ſame Medicine, or apply the ſame Salve (though a very ſoveraign one) to every Soar. As we ſay, That which is one mans meat is another mans Poyſon, ſo we may ſay alſo, That which is one mans Medicine may be another mans Poyſon; That which cures one diſeaſe may encreaſe another. Therefore the Phyſitian muſt conſider to whom he gives the potion, as well as what he gives; and the Chyrurgion muſt not only know what his ſalve is, but to whom he applies it. So in this caſe, To whom haſt thou uttered words? weigh it well whether they be babes or ſtrong men in Chriſt, whether they be under peaceable or troubleſome diſpenſations, whether obſtinate, or tender hearted; for theſe muſt be differently dealt with, as their ſtates do differ: We may elſe do more hurt then good. We may quickly (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Ezek. 13. 19.) Slay the Souls that ſhould not dye (that is, grieve and trouble the Godly) and ſave the Souls alive which ſhould not live, that is, harden and fatten the wicked in their ſins. The Apoſtle hath left us an excellent rule by his own practice (1 Cor. 9. 19.) Though I be free from all men, yet have I made my ſelf Servant to all, that I might gain the more; and unto the Jews I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the Law, as under the Law, that I might gain them that are under the Law; to them that are without the Law, as without Law, being not without Law to God, but under the Law to Chriſt, that I might gain them that are without Law; to the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means ſave ſome, and this I do for the Goſpel ſake that I might be partaker thereof with you. In this context we ſee what was chiefly in the Apoſtles eye (even that which is the higheſt and faireſt mark in the world) the ſaving of Souls. And that he might attain to this end, he critically obſerved the temper and ſtate of his hearers, ſtriving to frame and ſute himſelf and his ſpeech accordingly; he was not the ſame to all, but he would be as they were to whom he ſpake, or with whom he did converſe; yet Paul did not ſymbolize with, nor connive at any in their ſins, he did not take upon him all colours, he was not a man for all men, or a man for all hours, or humors. The holy Apoſtle did not turn, as flatterers do, with the times, nor faſhion himſelf to the ſeveral garbes of men in a ſinful way; Paul was ſo far from any ſuch baſe compliances, that he having put the queſtion, do I yet pleaſe men? anſwers and concludes in the next words (Gal. 1. 10.) If I yet pleaſe men, I ſhould not be the Servant of Chriſt. But weighing the ſtate of all men, he formed his words, and did accommodate his Miniſtery for their gain, or rather for the gaining of them. Some are all things to all men, that they may gain by all, that they may advantage themſelves by all (which is a Spirit not only unworthy of a Miniſter, but of a man) but Paul complyed with all, that he might gain them, or bring them in the greateſt gain. Or he complyed with all men that Chriſt might gain, and faith in him be propagated: this I do for the Goſpel ſake. I do not this for my own ſake, I do not put my ſelf into all forms towards men for my own preferment in the world, but that Chriſt may be preferred in the hearts and acceptations of all men with whom I have to do, before the world. And that this was his purpoſe, we have his ſence fully from his own pen (1 Cor. 10. 32, 33.) Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God, even as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many that they may be ſaved.

There are five things to be taken notice of, that we may utter words to profit.

Firſt, The matter, or what we ſpeak. Thoſe words which have no worth in themſelves can never profit others. While the Prophet (Hoſ. 14. 2.) exhorteth the people to repentance, he ſaith, Take with you words, that is, choyce words, ſelect words, conſider what words you take with you, when you turn to the Lord, and plead with him for mercy, ſaying, take away all iniquity, and receive us graciouſly. And as we are to take words with us choice words to expreſs choice matter in when we ſpeak to the Lord, ſo alſo in proportion when we ſpeak to men, as from the Lord.

Secondly, We muſt conſider to whom we are to utter words, we muſt not ſhoot at randome, or without a mark; ſome doctrines are general, but there ought to be a ſpecial application of general Doctrines. Other Doctrines are peculiar to ſome: We muſt not caſt pearls before Swine, nor give Childrens bread to Dogs. And we muſt be as careful, that we ſpeak not to Children, that is, to the truely Godly, as we ſhould do to Dogs and Swine (for ſo the Scripture calls) prophane and ungodly men.

Thirdly, We muſt conſider the ſeaſon or time when we ſpeak. Thoſe words will take at one time, which will not at another. There is as much care to be had, and as much skill ſeen in due timeing of our words as of our actions.

Fourthly, We muſt conſider the quantum, or the meaſure of words uttered, we may over-lay and over-charge thoſe to whom we ſpeak; every one cannot bear a ſtrong ſhower of ſpeech, or words poured out like a flood upon ſuch. Our doctrine (as Moſes ſaid his did, Deut. 32. 2.) muſt drop as the rain, our ſpeech muſt diſtill as the dew and the ſmall rain upon the tender hearb, and as the ſhowers upon the graſs.

Fifthly, We muſt conſider the manner in which we utter words: Whether to ſpeak as a Barnabas, or as a Boanerges, whether as a ſon of Thunder, of wrath and judgment, or as a ſon of peace, of joy and conſolation. Of ſome have compaſſion (that is, deal tenderly with them, Jude 1. 22.) making a difference, and others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire. We do but caſt words into the air, unleſs we thus make a difference in the manner of ſpeech, as they differ to whom we ſpeak. When we have duly weighed, the matter which, the perſons to whom, the ſeaſon when, the meaſure how much, and the manner in which we ought to ſpeak, then we are like to ſpeak to purpoſe, and ſhall be above this reproof which Job here gives Bildad, to whom haſt thou uttered words?

And whoſe Spirit came from thee?

The word which we tranſlate Spirit, ſignifies alſo the breath; whoſe Spirit or whoſe Breath came from thee? The ſence is the ſame. And Firſt, Some interpret Job thus; whoſe Spirit, or whoſe breath came from thee? That is, conſider O Bildad, whoſe Spirit moved thee, or who breathed theſe things into thee? whoſe breath or whoſe Spirit came from thee when thou didſt utter theſe words? ſo 'tis a rebuke of Bildads preſumption, as if he had conceived himſelf wrought or acted by ſome extraordinary Spirit, while he was ſpeaking, or that the things which he uttered had been dropt into him by an immediate Revelation from Heaven; whoſe Spirit came from thee? what breath, what gale hath filled thy ſayles, thou haſt high conceits of thy ſelf, as if God had ſpoken to thee by his Spirit, or as if thou hadſt ſpoken theſe things to me from his mouth. But is it not rather thy own Spirit, thy own heart which hath dictated theſe words unto thee? Some think the ſame Spirit comes from them when they ſpeak, which came from the holy Prophets and Apoſtles, who yet are deceived. The Diſciples of Chriſt thought the ſame Spirit came from them, which came from Eliah, when they ſaid (Luk. 9. 54.) Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from Heaven, and conſume them as Elias did: But he turned and rebuked them, and ſaid, ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of. As if he had ſaid in the language of Job, ye know not whoſe Spirit comes from you; ye would ſpeak the words of Elias, but ye have not the Spirit of Elias; you have a zeal, but not according to knowledge, your is but a humane affection, not a divine inſpiration, as Elias his was, his was a pure Spirit of zeal, but yours is a raſh Spirit of revenge. And therefore your motion ſuits not with your calling; for as I am come, ſo I ſend you, to ſave, not to deſtroy. We may ſpeak the ſame words, and do the ſame things which others have done and ſpoken, and yet not with the ſame but with quite another Spirit. Therefore examine whoſe Spirit comes from you? This is a good and profitable ſence. Yet,

Secondly, Rather thus, whoſe Spirit came from thee? that is, whoſe Soul, or whoſe mind hath been recovered out of trouble and fear, out of ſadneſs and ſorrow by the words which thou haſt ſpoken? Thus the Spirit is taken for his to whom he ſpake, not for his Spirit who ſpake, or not for the Spirit with which he ſpake. This is a great truth, gracious and right words, rightly applyed, do as it were relieve the Spirit, and bring back the fainting, yea dead Soul, from the grave of grief and ſorrow, wherein it lay as buried. Now ſaith Job, whoſe Spirit came from thee? Haſt thou recovered or raiſed any languiſhing Soul by what thou haſt ſaid? who hath felt life and power coming from thee? I am ſure I have not, though I have heard thee out, and heard thee attentively. What the Moraliſt ſaid of Idleneſs, the ſame may we ſay of ſorrow or heavineſs, It is the burial of a man while he liveth. And therefore he that hath comforted a man and recovered him out of his ſorrows, may be ſaid to give him a new life, and that

Cujus anima prodiit è te? i. e. quē conſolatus es tam efficaciter ſermone tuo, ut anima ejus ex mærore quaſi in corpore ſepulta jacebat rurſum & lateberis prodierit ſiſeque per corpus exſeruerit. Piſc. Cujus animam verbis tuis vivificaſti? Hebræi, apud Merc, that the Spirit of ſuch a man is come forth from him: yea, he that inſtructeth the ignorant, and bringeth them to the ſaving knowledge of God, may be ſaid, to breath or put a Soul into them. In which ſence ſome of the Jewiſh writers expound that place (Gen. 12. 5.) where it is ſaid, that Abraham took Sarah his wife, and Lot his Brothers Son, and all their ſubſtance that they had gathered, and the Souls they had gotten in Charan, &c. that is, all thoſe whom by good inſtruction and example they had gained to God, or (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Theſ. 1. 9.) had by their means turned to God from Idols to ſerve the living and true God. Theſe Souls they got in Charan; though Abraham and Sarah were barren of natural iſſue, yet they had much ſpiritual iſſue, many Souls or the Souls of many came from them. And therefore when Job would put a diſparagement upon what Bildad had ſpoken, he puts him this Queſtion, Whoſe Spirit or whoſe Soul came forth from thee? or whom haſt thou re-ſouled, as the Greek word which the Apoſtle uſeth for refreſhing, doth elegantly ſignifie (Acts. 3. 19.) Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out, when the time of refreſhing (or re-ſouling) ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord. When a man faints, or is very weary, we ſay he hath loſt his Spirits, and he is even as a man without a Soul. But when in the uſe of any means he is refreſhed, then we ſay, his Spirit or Soul is come to him again. The Spirit of man comes only from God in its natural conſtitution, he is the father of Spirits (Eccl. 12.7. Heb. 12.9.) But the Spirit of man may come from man in its refreſhings and conſolations. And therefore ſaith Job to Bildad, whoſe Spirit came from thee? or whom haſt thou comforted? Thou haſt undertaken to comfort me; but I am not comforted.

Hence Note, Holy truths or words rightly applyed, have a relieving yea a reviving power in him.

Such words give a man his Soul again, when he hath loſt it, and when he is (as it were) gone from himſelf, he is brought back to himſelf again. For as it is ſaid of the repenting Prodigal, he came to himſelf, he was gone, he was loſt from himſelf, his Soul was departed from him, his underſtanding was none of his, he was no more maſter of any ſpiritually rational faculty, then a dead man is of any mere rational faculty; and ſo his father reported him whileſt in that condition, this our Son was dead, but is alive, he was loſt, but he is found (Luk. 15. 32.) Now (I ſay) as it is in extream ſinnings, ſo in extream ſorrowings and dejections of Spirit, a man is loſt from himſelf, he is as a dead man: and ſo when comforts comes in again, life may be ſaid to come in again; he who before was loſt is found, and he who was dead revives. The word revives from a twofold death; it revives a natural man from the death of ſin, and it revives a Godly man from a death in ſorrow. How many Spirits have come forth at the voice of the word, out of the grave of ſin? Chriſt foretold this Reſurrection of the Soul by the preaching and publication of the Goſpel (Joh. 5.25.) The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God (in the miniſtry of the word) and they ſhall live. And leaſt any ſhould think that this is meant of the Reſurrection of the Body, Chriſt ſpeaks of that diſtinctly (verſ. 28.) Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming (he doth not ſay as before, and now is) in the which all that are in the Graves (dead Bodies) ſhall hear his voice, and come forth, they that have done good, unto the Reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the Reſurrection of damnation. As if Chriſt had ſaid, that powerful voice (and a voice leſs powerful then that will not do it) which is able to raiſe dead Bodies, Bodies mouldered into duſt, from the Earth, and cauſe them to live again (that voice I ſay) is able to raiſe a dead Soul from a ſtate of ſin to newneſs of life. The Apoſtle ſaith as much, while he calleth the preaching of the word a ſavour of life unto life in them that are ſaved (2Cor. 2. 16.) They ſmell and taſte life, even eternal life, at the receiving of the Word. And as it is the means of conveighing life to thoſe who are dead in ſin, ſo of recovering and renewing life to thoſe who are dead in ſorrow. Worldly ſorrow, or the ſorrow of the World, worketh death (2Cor. 7. 10.) and extream ſpiritual ſorrow, or the extream ſorrow of the Soul about ſpirituals, puts us into a kind of death. Thus Heman ſpake of himſelf in that caſe (Pſ. 88. 4, 5.) I am counted with them that go down to the pit; I am as a man that hath no ſtrength, free among the dead like the ſlain that lye in the grave, whom thou remembreſt no more; and they are cut off from thy hand. As Heman was counted among the dead by others, ſo he was like a dead man in his own account too, as he ſpeaks at verſ. 15. I am afflicted and ready to dye, from my youth up, whilſt I ſuffer thy terrors I am diſtracted. He was not ready to dye for Bodily diſeaſes, but of Soul terrors, nor could any thing revive him, or fetch him back from that death, but the favour of God ſhining to him in the word of promiſe; how glorious is the word by the workings of the Spirit, which cauſeth the Spirit to come forth, and maketh them who were free among the dead, become free among the living. This effect and fruit of the word Job expected from his friends before, and now from Bildad, but all in vain; as their, ſo his diſcourſe with Job was fruitleſs and ineffectual. Much hath been ſpoken, but I have got nothing, I have got no Spirit, no refreſhing, my heart is no whit cheared, nor my Soul comforted, both you and the reſt of your Brethren, have proved miſerable comforters to me. To whom haſt thou uttered words? I am no better then if you had ſaid nothing. And whoſe Spirit came from thee? not mine, for as yet (notwithſtanding all your reaſonings) my Spirit is not returned to me, I am as deep in ſorrow as ever I was.

There is yet another reading of this laſt clauſe of the verſe given by Mr. Broughton. And whoſe Soul admired thee? The ſame word may ſignifie to admire, and to come forth; becauſe the Soul or Spirit of man comes forth (as it were) to gaze upon thoſe things and perſons which he admireth. As if Job had ſaid; Poſſibly O Bildad, thou preſumeſt that thou haſt ſpoken like an Oracle of Wiſdome, even much beyond the rate and proportion of ordinary men, or of what is common to man, and therefore doſt expect to be applauded, yea to be admired. But whoſe Soul is come forth by reaſon of thee? who hath admired thee? not I, nor do I know, that any man hath reaſon ſo to do, unleſs it be, becauſe thou haſt ſo much miſtaken my meaning and intention in what I ſaid, and haſt ſaid things ſo improper to my condition. Some have the perſons of men in admiration, becauſe of advantage, (Jude 1. 16.) and others deſire no other advantage, but to be cryed up and had in admiration. I dare not ſay, that Bildad was a man of ſuch a Spirit, though this tranſlation (whoſe Soul admireth thee?) ſeems to charge him with ſuch a folly.

VERS. 5,6,7.

Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof.

Hell is naked before him, and deſtruction hath no covering.

He ſtretcheth out the North over the empty place, and hangeth the Earth upon nothing.

IN the former part of this Chapter, Job reproved the laſt diſcourſe of Bildad as unprofitable, not that it was ſo in it ſelf (for that was true and a great truth which he ſpake of the greatneſs of God) but the method which he uſed, and the application of it to his caſe made it ſo, How haſt thou helped him that is without power? &c.

In this Context, and the ſubſequent part of the Chapter, Job enters upon, or reaſſumes the ſame argument or ſubject which Bildad had handled before; the power, ſoveraignty, and dreadfulneſs of God in his works, both of Creation and providence all the world over. Job would let Bildad underſtand, that he was not unacquainted with the doctrine which he had preſt upon him in the former Chapter. As if he had ſaid, Doeſt thou think that I know not theſe things, ſurely I can tell thee as much, yea more of the power of God then thou haſt ſpoken, and thereby thou ſhalt ſee that I am not to learn, nor to ſeek, in this matter; yea I will point and paint out the power of God not only in the viſible Heavens, but in thoſe things which lye unſeen, I will go down to the deeps, to the bottome of the mighty waters, I can tell thee that he is not only admirable above but beneath, in ſo much as nothing is bred or brought forth whether animate or inanimate in the vaſt Ocean, but it is by his power and at his diſpoſing. Yea I will go as low as Hell, and ſearch the power of God there; I will alſo aſcend up to Heaven, and ſpeak of the great things that God doth in the ayre, and in the clouds, and among the Stars, whereby you may ſee that I am no ſtranger to ſuch divine Philoſophy; and therefore this was not the point you ſhould have inſiſted upon, or that I needed to be informed in. That's the general ſcope and aime of Job in theſe words, I ſhall now touch upon the particulars.

Dead things are formed from under the waters.

Jobs firſt inſtance concerning the power of God, is about things under the waters; dead, liveleſs, inanimate things are formed there; properly that only is a dead thing which hath ſometime lived: we cannot ſay a ſtone is a dead thing, becauſe it never had any life, neither can we ſay that water or Earth are dead things, for they had never any life; but thoſe things that have had life, whether negative, or ſenſitive, or rational, as man, or beaſts, or plants, when once that life is withdrawn from any of them, that is properly called a dead thing. Yet in a general vulgar and improper ſence, even thoſe things that never had life may be called dead. Mr. Broughton renders ſtrictly, not dead things, but things without life are formed under the waters.

The Hebrew word may come from a twofold Root, and ſo hath a twofold ſignification. Firſt, to heal and cure; and in Scripture it is transferred from the healing of the body to the healing of the Soul in the remiſſion of ſins; becauſe as the wound of the Body is healed by the ſalve, ſo the Souls wound, namely ſin, is healed by remiſſion or forgiveneſs. The word is uſed in this ſence (Iſa. 6. 10.) Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and ſhut their eyes; leaſt they ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their hearts, and convert, and be healed, that is, pardoned. Secondly, it ſignifies to be diſſolved or looſned, to be weak and languiſhing; we tranſlate it dead, becauſe things that are dead are weakned and diſſolved, and therefore death is called a diſſolution; as Paul ſaid (Phil. 1. 23.) I deſire to depart or to be diſſolved, that is, to dye; and the ſame phraſe is uſed for death (2 Cor. 5. 1.) We know that when the Earthly houſe of this Tabernacle ſhall be diſſolved, &c. Again by the figure Antiphraſis (frequent in Scripture) this word as it ſignifies dead and weak things, ſo alſo ſtrong and lively things, yea thoſe that are ſtrongeſt or moſt lively, and therefore Giants who are the ſtrongeſt of men, are expreſſed by this word (Deut. 2. 11.) The Emims dwelt therein in times paſt, a people great and many, and tall, as the Anakims, which alſo were accounted Giants, &c. And the Vulgar tranſlates ſo here, Behold, the Giants groan under the waters. Giants are called Rephaim in the Hebrew, which word in the Root ſignifies to weaken, not from their nature, but from their effects, not becauſe they are weak, but becauſe they weaken others. Giants are ſo ſtrong that the very ſight of them make others weak and faint, or pulls down men of ſtrength and might. It is ſaid that Saul and the whole Army of Iſrael were diſmayed when they ſaw Goliah, and greatly afraid; they were weak before the Giant. There is much labouring to make out this ſence of the word here; ſome underſtand it of the Giants before the flood; Behold, the Giants groan from under the flood. Thoſe Giants were indeed overthrown by the waters, and ſo they conceive that Job alluded unto them, but I ſhall not ſtay upon that interpretation.

Ecce Gigantes gemunt ſub aquis. Vulg.

Others expound the Text of thoſe Giants whoſe proper Element is water, the mighty fiſhes of the Sea, the Whale, the Leviathan ſpoken of in this book of Job. Leviathan is a Sea-monſter, a Sea-Giant of huge dimenſions. Natural Hiſtorians and Travellers deſcribe the vaſtneſs of the Whale or Leviathan, to wonder and amazement. And 'tis granted, that in theſe Gods power is much ſeen; but I ſhall lay by this expoſition alſo, becauſe (I conceive) fiſhes are ſpoken of in the next words, where they are called the inhabitants thereof, that is, of the Sea or waters.

Again, this word Rephaim is often put for the dead, or thoſe that are departed this life. (Pſ. 88. 10.) Wilt thou ſhew wonders to the dead? ſhall the dead ariſe and praiſe thee? There are two words uſed for the dead in that verſe, one is the ordinary word, the other is that of the Text. Solomon (Prov. 2. 18.) ſhewing how dangerous it is to have to do with the adultereſs, ſaith, Her houſe inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the (Rephaim, or the) dead. The houſe of Adultery and uncleanneſs is the Gatehouſe to death; it is not a houſe raiſed up, but bowed down, her houſe inclineth unto death, and ſhe who is the governeſs, or rather the miſgoverneſs of the houſe, will by her ill life bring thee among the dead, even among thoſe who are twice dead, corporally dead at preſent, and ſpiritually dead for ever.

Incipit dei providentiā & potentiā deſcribere à rebus ſubterraneis initio ſumpto. Merc.

But that which I ſhall rather pitch upon according to our tranſlation, is that by theſe dead things are meant ſuch things as never had any life. Mr. Broughton expounds his tranſlation, things without life, of thoſe moſt precious things that are formed under the waters, Amber, and pearl, and goodly ſtones; theſe dead things are found under the waters, and there they are formed; Gods providence reacheth to the furtheſt places, even to the bottome of the Sea and loweſt Earth, which ſeem to be as caſt off, ſo he gloſſeth, and ſo do other Interpreters, concluding that Job is here ſetting forth the power of God in forming minerals and precious ſtones under the waters, or in the deeps, and ſo riſeth in his diſcourſe by degrees to higher things. As if he had ſaid, O Bildad, what doeſt thou ſhewing me the power and providence of God in the high places, where he maketh peace; I can tell thee that the ſame power and providence of God are extended to thoſe things which are wrought in the bowels of the Earth, and at the bottome of the Sea, and ſo are furtheſt removed from our ſight.

And whereas we ſay, Dead things are formed there; that word properly ſignifies to bring forth Children, or any living Creature (Job 39. 1, 2.) Knoweſt thou the time when the wild Goats of the Rock bring forth, or canſt thou mark when the Hindes do calve? Canſt thou number the months that they fulfil, or knoweſt thou the time when they bring forth? yea the eternal Word and Wiſdome of God ſpeaks of himſelf in the language of this word (Pro. 8. 25.) Before the Mountains were ſetled, before the Hills was I brought forth. It ſignifies alſo to be in pain, and groan for pain, becauſe child-bearing cauſeth much pain and groaning. So the word is uſed in a metaphorical ſence (Deut. 2. 25.) This day will I begin (ſaith the Lord) to put the dread of thee, and the fear of thee upon the Nations, that are under the whole Heaven, who ſhall hear report of thee, and ſhall tremble and be in anguiſh becauſe of thee. They ſhall be in anguiſh as a woman travelling with child and pained to bring forth. Whence that tranſlation takes its ground, The Giants groan under the waters. And as it ſignifies to form and faſhion the child or any living thing in the womb, and then to bring forth, ſo it is applyed to the forming of things that have no life (Pſal. 92. 2.) Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadſt formed the Earth and the world: even from everlaſting to everlaſting thou art God.

Dead things are formed.

But by whom? here is no power expreſt; Job ſaith only, they are formed, he leaves that to be underſtood, and what or whom can we underſtand but God, or the power of God, by whom or whereby dead things are formed as well as living things; for all things, whether animate or inanimate, receive their being and form from him; Dead things are formed from under the waters.

Hence Note, That all things are produced in their beings, by the power of God.

Dead things as well as living things, Gold and Silver, Minerals and Gemms are formed by God, as well as men or beaſts. And as they were of God in Creation at the beginning, ſo there is a continual putting forth of the power of God in continuing or renewing of them. God is dayly forming rich and rare things in the ſecret Cabinets of the Earth, and from under the waters.

And the inhabitants thereof.

That is, as dead things are formed under the waters, ſo are the inhabitants thereof, or thoſe living things that dwell in the water; we put in the Margin, with the inhabitants: who are they? The inhabitants of the water are the Fiſhes, they are bred and abide in the water. As if he had ſaid, Thoſe precious ſtones and minerals, called dead things, are formed from under or in the waters, as well as the Fiſhes, who are the proper inhabitants of the water. Mr. Broughton reads thus; Dead things are formed under the waters and places near them, that is, in the Mountains and Hills, in the Clifts and Rocks are theſe precious things formed. But I rather take our reading,, and ſo the Text gives a further illuſtration of the power of God; who as he formeth dead things under the waters, ſo living things, or the inhabitants of the water.

Hence Note, The power of God is great in forming the Fiſhes of the Sea.

And the greatneſs of it will appear if we conſider three things about them.

Firſt, Their number, as to us: the Fiſh of the Sea are infinite in number, there is no ſort of Creatures multiply ſo faſt as Fiſhes do, therefore when God created the Inhabitants of the water, we read (Gen. 1. 21.) how emphatically their increaſe is expreſt; And God Created great Whales, and every living Creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly after their kind. The waters did not bring them forth by any power of their own, but they were brought forth in the waters by that power which God had planted in the waters for that purpoſe. Now it is not only ſaid that the waters brought them forth, but the waters brought them forth abundantly, implying that fiſh do multiply and bring forth more then other Creatures; and therefore when the Spirit of God would ſhew a great increaſe of men, 'tis ſaid, They ſhall encreaſe like Fiſh (Gen. 48. 16.) Jacob bleſſing the Children of Joſeph, prayed thus; The Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bleſs the Ladds, and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers, Abraham and Iſaac, and let them grow into a multitude in the midſt of the Earth. The Original is, Let them grow or multiply like Fiſhes into a multitude in the midſt of the Earth; or let them be as numerous upon the Land as Fiſhes are in the Sea. And we find in the ſacred Hiſtory how the bleſſing and providence of God made good this Hiſtory. For of the Sons of Joſeph, Manaſſah and Ephraim were numbered eighty five Thouſand and two Hundred men meet for war (Num. 26. 34, 37.) which exceeded the encreaſe of any one Tribe beſide. How wonderfully doth the Lords power appear, not only in thoſe infinite ſholes of leſſer Fiſhes, but in the greater a ſo? Who is able to report the number of the Sea-Inhabitants, or of the Fiſhes who people the Sea?

Inter omnes beſtias nihil eſt fœcundius piſcibus, igitur transfertur ad multiplicationē immenſam.

Secondly, If we conſider their various kindes, that alſo ſheweth forth the great power of God. Naturaliſts obſerve that there is no Creature upon the Earth, but hath (as I may ſay) its repreſentative in the Sea, beſides thoſe that have nothing like them on the Earth; ſo various are their kinds.

Thirdly, Many of theſe inhabitants of the waters are wonderful for the vaſtneſs and greatneſs of their Bodies; the greateſt of all living Creatures are in the Sea (Pſal. 104. 25.) So is this great and wide Sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable: both ſmall and great Beaſts: The Pſalmiſt calleth the Fiſhes Beaſts, and there are ſmall Beaſts in the Sea, and great Beaſts even of a ſtupendious greatneſs. The greateſt Beaſts of the Earth are as nothing compared to them; the Elephant is little to the Leviathan. Naturaliſts have written much of this ſubject, the numerouſneſs, variouſneſs, and vaſtneſs of theſe water-Inhabitants. So that we may ſee much of the Majeſty and power of God, as in theſe things that are formed under the waters, ſo in thoſe that are formed in the waters. Job deſcends lower yet in the next words.

Verſ. 6. Hell is naked before him, and deſtruction hath no covering.

'Tis queſtioned what is here meant by Hell.

Some expound Hell of the loweſt parts of the Earth, ſo Maſter Broughton, The loweſt Earth is naked before him, and the loſt (that is, that which ſeems to be loſt and condemned, as himſelf gloſſeth it) hath no covering.

Secondly, Hell is often put for the grave (Pſal. 16.10) Thou wilt not leave my Soul (that is, me) in Hell (that is, in the grave) nor wilt thou ſuffer thy holy One to ſee corruption.

Thirdly, It is moſt uſually taken for that priſon or place of torment, where the Lord detains all thoſe, in hold, that have rebelled againſt him, and dyed impenitently in that rebellion. In this third ſence we may interpret it here (as I conceive) moſt ſuitably to the ſcope and purpoſe of Job in this place.

Hell is naked before him.] That is, it is fully diſcovered to him, he ſees who are there, and what is done there, he obſerves all paſſages there, even in that bottomleſs pit of Hell, as well as in Heaven or upon the Earth. As if Job had ſaid to Bildad; You told me that God maketh peace in his high places, I tell you God hath to do in hell, or in the loweſt places. The loweſt Hell is naked before him. The Apoſtle ſpeaks in this phraſe (*Heb.*4.13.) Neither is there any Creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight: but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to doe. The words are an alluſion unto Bodies, which being ſtript, and uncloathed, all ſee what they are; there may be many deformities, blemiſhes, and ſcarrs, yea ulcers upon the Body undiſcerned while 'tis cloathed or covered, but when naked, nothing is hid. All things are naked before God, that is, he as plainly diſcerns what they are, as we diſcern what a Body is, that ſtands naked before us. Hell is called darkneſs, and utter darkneſs, yet it is light to God.

And deſtruction hath no covering.] Here the ſame thing is again repeated, and 'tis uſuall in Scripture to ſpeak that in negative words, which was before ſpoken in affirmative. As to be naked, and to have no covering, are the ſame; ſo Hell and deſtruction are the ſame; and theſe two are often put together (*Prov.*15.11.) Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord: how much more the hearts of the Children of men? Though we know not where Hell is, nor what is done there, though we know not what is become of thoſe that are deſtroyed, not what they ſuffer, yet God doth; and if the ſecrets of Hell and Devils are known to him, then much more the ſecrets of the hearts of the Children of men. And as that proverb teacheth us that nothing is hid from God, becauſe Hell and deſtruction are not, ſo another proverb delivered in the ſame form, teacheth us, that nothing in the Creature can ſatisfie the deſires and luſtings of man, even as Hell and deſtruction can never be ſatisfied (*Pro.*27.20.) Hell and deſtruction are never full: ſo the eyes of man are never ſatisfied. The Devil who is the great executioner of the wrath of God, is expreſt by this word; as Hell is called deſtruction in the abſtract, ſo the Devil is called a deſtroyer in the concrete (*Rev.*9.11.) And they had a King over them which is the Angel of the bottomleſs pit (or Hell) whoſe name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollion; both the one and the other, the Hebrew end the Greek ſignifie the ſame thing, a deſtroyer; the Devil, who is the Jaylour of Hell, is called a deſtroyer, as Hell it ſelf is called deſtruction. From the coincidency of theſe two termes,

Note, Hell is deſtruction.

They that are once there, are loſt and loſt for ever. The reaſon why Hell is called deſtruction, is becauſe they that are caſt to Hell are undone to eternity. We read of a City (Iſa. 19. 18.) which was called the City of deſtruction, becauſe it was to be utterly deſtroyed. Hell may be called a City of deſtruction, not becauſe it ſhall ever be deſtroyed, but becauſe it ſhall ever be full of deſtruction, and nothing but deſtruction ſhall be there. There is no eſtate on Earth ſo miſerable, but a man may be delivered out of it, but out of Hell there is no deliverance. Heman ſaith (Pſ. 88. 11.) Shall thy loving kindneſs be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulneſs in deſtruction? There grave and deſtruction are put together; much more may Hell and deſtruction be put together, or for each other. Whatever comes into the grave is deſtroyed, it rots and periſheth; much more doth Hell deſtroy all that comes thither. And, look as the grave is to the body now, a deſtroyer conſuming, ſo Hell is to the Soul now, and will be to Soul and Body after the reſurrection, a deſtroyer tormenting. The loving kindneſs of God ſhall not be declared in Hell, nor any faithfulneſs of his in deſtruction, unleſs it be his faithfulneſs (according to what is threatned in the word) to deſtroy. The Apoſtle Peter ſaith, (1 Eph. 3. 19, 20.) that Chriſt by the Spirit, went and preached to the Spirits in priſon, which ſometime were diſobedient, when once the long-ſuffering of God waited in the dayes of Noah, &c. It is true, that Chriſt by the Spirit in the miniſtry of Noah, did approach to thoſe Spirits who were diſobedient in the time when Noah preached, and were in priſon (or in Hell) in the time when Peter wrote; but Chriſt did not preach by his Spirit in the miniſtery of Noah, or any other way to

Spirits who were in priſon (or in Hell) while he preached to them. There are no Sermons in Hell, nor any ſalvation there. The loving kindneſs of God is abundantly declared on Earth, but it ſhall not be declared in Hell; as there is nothing felt in Hell but deſtruction, ſo there is no ſalvation offered to thoſe who are in Hell. There's tears enow, and mourning enough in Hell, but there is not the leaſt godly ſorrow in Hell, which only worketh repentance to ſalvation, not to be repented of (2 Cor. 7. 10.) One of the Ancients hath reported the opinion of ſome in his time, who thought, that though there be deſtruction in Hell, yet not eternal deſtruction, but that ſinners ſhould be puniſhed, ſome a leſs, others a longer time, and that at laſt all ſhall be freed; and yet (ſaith he) Origen was more merciful in this point then theſe men, for he held that the Devil himſelf ſhould be ſaved at laſt. Of this opinion I ſhall ſay no more in this place, then this one thing which he there ſaid, Theſe men will be found to err by ſo much the more ſoulely and againſt the right words of God, ſo much the more perverſely, by how much they ſeem to themſelves to judge more mercifully. For indeed the juſtice of God in puniſhing ſinners is as much above the ſcale of mans thoughts, as his mercies in pardoning them are; let not ſinners flatter themſelves in a hope of ſalvation when they are in Hell, who have neglected ſalvation while they were on the Earth. For as the Apoſtle ſaith (Heb. 2. 3.) How ſhall we eſcape (that is, how ſhall we eſcape falling into Hell) if we neglect ſo great ſalvation; ſo I may ſay, how ſhall any eſcape by getting out of Hell, who neglect ſo great ſalvation. Hell is deſtruction, and as becauſe Heaven is a place of happineſs and ſalvation, therefore Heaven and happineſs, Heaven and ſalvation mutually or reciprocally ſignifie one another; to obtain Heaven is to obtain ſalvation; to obtain Heaven is to obtain happineſs. So becauſe Hell is a place of miſery and deſtruction, therefore Hell and miſery, Hell and deſtruction ſignifie the ſame thing, nor can they be ſeperated.

Auguſt. l. 1, 2. de Civ. Dei. c. 17.

Again, when he ſaith, Hell is naked before him, and deſtruction hath no covering. We learn,

There is nothing hid from the eye or knowledge of God.

Philoſophy and reaſon teach us, that the vertue and force of the Heavenly bodies, the Sun, Moon and Stars, do not only act upon thoſe parts of the Earth that are uppermoſt, but ſend their influences and powers to the loweſt parts or bowels of the Earth, for (as was ſaid before) according to the ordinance of God, dead things are formed there. Now (I ſay) as the power of the Heavenly bodies reacheth down into the Earth, much more doth the power and light of God reach into Hell it ſelf. I will not ſtay upon any curious enquires where this Hell is; whereſoever it is, God ſeeth it. Hell is naked before him, therefore ſaith David (Pſal. 139. 8.) If I aſcend up into Heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in Hell, behold thou art there (that is, there thou art by thy power and inſpection; thou ſeeſt what is in Hell) and if ſo, how much more doth God behold what is done here upon the Earth; if Hell be naked before him, then the Earth is naked before him; if deſtruction have no covering, then our actions here have no covering. Hypocrites put many coverings upon their actions, they have many policies to vail and ſcreen them from the eye of man; but the actions of men have no covering before God, yea the hearts of men have no covering before God. As Solomon in the Proverbs (which place was lately toucht upon) argues from this reaſon, becauſe Hell and deſtruction are before him (Prov. 15. 11.) Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord: how much more then, the hearts of the children of men; as if he had ſaid, God which looketh into Hell (which is not only darkneſs, but utter darkneſs, that is, darkneſs without any thing that hath the leaſt ray or ſimilitude of light in it, God (I ſay) who looketh into this Hell) can look into the hearts of men much more. There are ſome men (I grant) whoſe hearts are a very Hell, a very deep, and they hope to hide themſelves in the depth of their own hearts from the ſight of God, as the Prophet telleth us (Iſa. 29. 15.) Wo unto them that ſeek deep to hide their conucel from the Lord; and their works are in the dark, and they ſay, who ſeeth us? and who knoweth us? And what doth he mean by the deeps which they ſeek? Do they ſeek caves and dens of the Earth to take counſel or conſult together in? No, they may be in the open Air and yet ſeek deep to hide their counſels from God; ſo that the meaning is, they ſeek to keep their counſels cloſe lockt up in their hearts; but wo unto them that dig thus deep to hide their counſels from God, for they cannot be hid, for even Hell is before him, and deſtruction hath no covering; how then ſhall theſe deſtroyers cover themſelves or any of their counſels from him? As the reaſon of all things is naked and manifeſt before God, ſo are the motions and actions of all perſons.

Thirdly, When 'tis ſaid, Hell and deſtruction are before him: that word before, doth not only imply that God hath a view or ſight of what is in Hell, but alſo that he hath power in and over Hell, and can do what he will there; Hell is naked before him, that is, he hath Hell at his diſpoſe.

Hence note, The power and providence of God reaches to thoſe things that are moſt remote.

He orders all things in Hell as well as upon the Earth; his power rules there where there ſeems to be leaſt order, yea where there is no order at all; they who are caſt into Hell kept no order while they were upon the Earth, nor are they in any willing order there; when we ſee confuſions in the world we ſay, what a Hell is there, or we ſay, Hell is broken looſe; Hell is a place of confuſion, yet Hell is before God, he keeps Hell in order; and when by reaſon of troubles and confuſion among men, we are ready to ſay, there is a Hell in the world, yet this Hell is naked before God, he diſpoſeth and orders thoſe places, perſons, and things, which are moſt confuſed; Hell and deſtruction are before him.

Before I paſs from theſe words, I ſhall only take notice, that there are many words in Scripture by which Hell is expreſt. The Rabbins number ſeven or eight, here are two,

Firſt, Sheol or the grave, becauſe we lye as it were buried there in a ſecond death.

Secondly, Abaddon or deſtruction, becauſe all are there in a periſhing ſtate, or as given up into the hand of deſtruction.

Thirdly, Hell is called Tiſalmaveth or the ſhadow of death, and by the ſhadow of death, is not meant a ſmall appearance of death: as the word ſhadow is uſed (Jam. 1. 17.) where the Apoſtle exalts the glory of the Lord in his unchangeableneſs, that he is the Father of light, from whom every good gift, and every perfect gift cometh down, with whom is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning; that is, he is not ſubject to any turning at all; but Hell is called the ſhadow of death, as ſhadow is put for ſtrength and power, and ſo to be under the ſhadow of God or man, is to be under their protection. Thus Hell is the ſhadow of death, that is, the ſtrength and power of it; death never triumphs ſo much in its ſtrength, as it doth in Hell.

Fourthly, Hell is called Erets Tachith, which ſignifies, firſt, the Earth under, or the loweſt and moſt inferior Earth. whence in Scripture Hell is called the bottomleſs pit, and the way to it is deſcribed by deſcending and going down, as Heaven is deſcribed by aſcending and height; Heaven is high, and the higheſt aſcending is our aſcending to Heaven; ſo Hell is low, and the loweſt deſcending is deſcending into Hell. Secondly, it imports, fear, vexation, and trembling; Hell is a Land of trembling, it is a Land of fear; it is ſaid of Caine that when he went out of the preſence of God, after he had murthered his brother, he went into the Land of Nod, that is, into a Land of trembling, which ſome expound not of any ſpecial place that he went to, but that every place where he went was to him a Land of trembling, he having much fear and dread upon his conſcience after he had embrewed his hands in his brothers blood. Hell is indeed the Land of Nod, a trembling Land; they who have not rejoyced with trembling in this world, ſhall ſorrow with trembling for ever in the world to come.

Fifthly, Hell is called Berſhiachathith, that is, the pit of corruption, not that the bodies of the damned ſhall corrupt in Hell (as they do in the grave, for though we cannot ſay that the bodies of the wicked ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, as the bodies of the Saints ſhall, yet they ſhall be raiſed immortal, and in that ſence incorruptible, that is, they ſhall never dye) but they ſhall be corruptible, that is, filthineſs and corruption ſhall be upon them: The bodies of Saints only ſhall be raiſed ſo incorruptible, that nothing of corruption ſhall be ſeen upon them, or felt by them; but the bodies of the wicked ſhall ever feel corruption, and bear the marks of it, without total corrupting, or periſhing, as corrupting and periſhing are taken for not being. The wicked would be glad that they might periſh ſo, but they ſhall not; Hell will be a pit of corruption to them, for whatſoever is painful and grievous to the fleſh, ſhall dwell in their bodies, and therefore it is called the pit of corruption; and it may alſo be called a pit of corruption, in a moral ſence, becauſe all their ſins and luſts ſhall remain upon them for ever; Hell fire cannot purge the ſoul from ſin, nor free any man from the power of that old man, who (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Epheſ. 4. 22.) Is corrupt according to the deceitful luſts. Nothing but the blood of Chriſt can purge the ſoul from corruption; Hell is for the puniſhment of corruption, but not at all for the purging of it, and therefore it is well called, the pit of corruption.

Sixthly, It is called Erets Neſciah, that is, the land of forgetfulneſs; as the grave, ſo Hell is called the land of forgetfulneſs, where the wicked ſhall be remembred no more; God will remember them no more, to do them any good, and they are forgotten, how much ſoever they are remembred, who are not remembred for good. And as God will not remember thoſe in Hell for good, ſo they ſhall forget all the good they have had upon the Earth; or the remembrance which they have of it, ſhall only be to encreaſe their ſorrow under preſent evils. Abraham in the Parable (Luke 16. 25.) ſaid to the rich man in Hell, Son remember that thou in thy life time receiveſt thy good things; and that remembrance of the good things which he once enjoyed, was but an addition to all the evils and miſeries which he then endured; It is better never to have had any good thing, then only to remember that we have had it. How miſerable is their condition, who ſhall neither be remembred for good, nor remember any good, but to make them more miſerable!

Seventhly, Hell is called Erets Choſcec, that is, a land of darkneſs, a region of darkneſs; there is nothing but darkneſs in Hell. The wicked go to the generation of their fathers, where they ſhall never ſee light (Pſal. 49. 19.) They loved darkneſs here rather then light, and they ſhall be puniſhed with darkneſs hereafter, which hath no light. Darkneſs was their choice in this life, and it ſhall be their curſe in the next.

Eighthly, Hell is called Gehinon (whence the Greek Gehenna) from the valley of Hennon; in which the Idolatrous Iſraelites (imitating the abomination of the Heathens) were wont to ſacrifice their children with horrible cruelty. And hence the Scripture often makes uſe of that word to ſignifie the place of torment, or the torments of that place, where the damned muſt abide ſeparate for ever from the favourable preſence, and ſubjected under the wrath of God. This Hell is naked before God, and this deſtruction hath no covering.

Verſ. 7. He ſtretcheth out the North over the empty place, and hangeth the Earth upon nothing.

In this verſe Job exalts God in his Almighty power, upholding the mighty fabrick of Heaven and Earth. His diſcourſe mounts up from the Earth, from the Waters, and from Hell, as high as Heaven it ſelf; and he ſpeaks of Heaven and of the Earth in their conjunction together.

He ſtretcheth out the North over the empty place.

Bildad had ſpoken of the power of God in the Heavens, Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places, is there any number of his Armies? And upon whom doth not his light ariſe? Job alſo ſpeaks of the power of God in the creation and diſpoſition of theſe things; He ſtretcheth out the North over the empty place. The word is ſo rendred to ſignifie a gracious act of God to regardleſs men (Prov. 1. 24.) I have ſtretched out my hand, and no man regarded. God ſtretcheth out his hand to ſmite, and he ſtretcheth it out to ſave, but man layeth it not to heart. It is uſed alſo to ſignifie that powerful act of God, in preparing the Heavens for himſelf (Pſal. 104. 2.) Who covereſt thy ſelf with light, as with a garment: who ſtretcheſt out the Heavens like a curtain. As we draw or ſtretch out a curtain, ſo God ſtretcheth out the Heavens.

But why doth Job ſay, He ſtretcheth out the North.

I anſwer, by the North he meaneth that part of Heaven that is Northward, or the Northern Heavens. Again, the North may be taken for the whole Heavens by a Synechdoche: and Job might ſpeak of the North, becauſe the North-pole was neareſt the climate where he dwelt. He ſtretcheth out the North, or the Northern Heavens, that is, the whole Heavens, both the North and South, Eaſt and Weſt.

He ſtretcheth out the North over the empty place.] What is this empty place?

Firſt, By the empty place, ſome underſtand the moſt remote and uninhabited places of the Earth: He overſpreads them with Heavens, and diſpoſeth things there as well as here; he ſpreads the Heavens over thoſe parts where there is no man, and ſo may be called Empty places, becauſe un-inhabited, or not fill'd with men. God cauſeth it to rain on the Earth where no man is, on the Wilderneſs where there is no man (as he ſpeaketh of himſelf to Job in Chap. 38. of this Book, verſ. 26.) Now as God raineth upon thoſe (in this ſence) empty places, ſo he ſtretcheth out the Heavens over theſe empty places, that is, he takes care of them as well as of thoſe that are peopled or inhabited.

Secondly, Rather, by the empty place, we are to underſtand the Air, for in the natural diſpoſition or ſyſteme of the world, the Earth is loweſt, the Water next, the Air is the third, and the Fire fourth, over which God ſtretcheth out the Heavens. And becauſe nothing is viſible to us upwards on this ſide Heaven but the Air, therefore it may well be ſaid, that he ſtretcheth out the Heavens immediately over the Air, or the empty place.

But is the Air or that place which we call the Air empty? No, the Air is not empty, there is no vacuity, no empty place in nature; and nature will put it ſelf into ſtrange courſes to avoid a vacuity; Water will aſcend to avoid vacuity, and it will not deſcend to avoid vacuity; but though the Air be not empty or void, taking emptineſs ſtrictly and Philoſophically (for every place hath its filling) yet as emptineſs is taken largely and vulgarly, ſo the Air may be called an empty place; when we come into a room where there is no artificial furniture, we ſay it is an empty room: ſo the ſpace between us and the Heavens in a vulgar ſence is an empty place. The Scripture ſpeaks often of things according to the vulgar acceptation and underſtanding. Mr. Broughton tranſlates thus, He ſtretcheth out the North upon the empty. And we may conceive Job uſing this form of ſpeech, the more to magnifie and ſhew forth the great power of God; as if he had ſaid, The Heavens have nothing to bear them up but an empty place, what can the Air bear? The Air will bear nothing; yet the Lord uſeth no ſupport for the whole Heavens but this empty place.

Super inane; quod juxta communem opinionem intelligi decet. Vulgo enim totum ſpatium à terra uſque ad cœlum vacuum putatur, quum plenum aere ſit.

Thirdly, I conceive that this phraſe may be expounded barely of the Creation; for Moſes ſaith (Gen. 1. 1, 2.) In the beginning God created the Heavens and the Earth, and the Earth was without form and void or empty. It is the word Tohu uſed here in Job, over this Tohu or empty place did God at the firſt ſtretch the Heavens. And as this was the work of God at firſt in Creation, ſo it is his work ſtill in Providence; and therefore the Lord ſpeaks of it, as of a continued work (Iſa. 44. 24.) Thus ſaith the Lord thy redeemer, &c. that ſtretcheth forth the Heavens alone, and ſpreadeth abroad the Earth by my ſelf.

> Hence note, As the Heavens in creation, ſo the Heavens in their daily motion are ſtretched out and ordered by God.

(Iſaiah 40. 22.) It is he that ſitteth upon the circle of the Earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as graſs hoppers, that ſtretcheth out the Heavens as a curtain, and ſpreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in. The Prophet entitles God to this with a ſpecial emphaſis, It is he that doth it; as if he had ſaid, God doth it, and none but he, and in this he eminently declares that He is God. Who ever ſtretched out ſuch a curtain or canopy as the Heavens? Who ever pitched ſuch a tent to dwell in? This is a tent or a Tabernacle, which though it ſhall be changed, yet (as the Prophet ſpeaks of Sion in her beauty and glory, Iſa. 33. 20.) ſhall not be taken down, not one of the ſtakes thereof ſhall ever be removed, neither ſhall any of the cords thereof be broken.

Again, Conſider, the Heavens have no outward ſupport; They are ſtretched out over the empty place; which demonſtration of the power of God will be more cleared and heightned in the next words.

And he hangeth the Earth upon nothing.

If any ſay Heaven is a thin body, there needs no great matter to keep that up. What will they ſay to the Earth, which is a groſs and heavy body, a body of an unconceivable weight; who can count or caſt up the weight of the Earth, or how much the Earth weigheth? God not only ſtretcheth out the thin Heavens over the empty place, but he hangeth the Earth (that mighty maſs of the Earth) upon nothing, he hath not ſo much as a peg in the wall (ſo the word ſignifieth) to hang it upon.

Philoſophi rationem reddunt, quod illa ſit in ſuo centro; in quo res naturaliter quieſcunt, ideoque terra ponderibus librata ſuis quieſcat

He hangeth the Earth.] When he ſaith, the Earth, we are to underſtand both Earth and Water, the whole Terreſtial globe, this he hangeth upon nothing. The Original word is a compound, which in its parts may be rendred, not any thing at all, that is, nothing. But how can any thing be hung upon that which is nothing? If it hang, it muſt be upon ſomewhat. Philoſophers tell us that the Earth hangeth upon its Center, and ſo is poiſed by its own weight, and cannot move, which Center or Imaginary point is nothing.

But the Scripture ſaith the Earth hath a foundation; and David (Pſal. 24. 2.) tells us expreſly what that foundation is; The Earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein; for he hath founded it upon the Seas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the floods. According to this Scripture the Sea is the foundation of the Earth, and the Floods are the baſis of it. How then doth Job affirm, that he hangeth the Earth upon nothing? That indeed which David affirms, may ſeem very ſtrange, that the Earth ſhould be founded upon the Sea, and eſtabliſhed upon the floods; is the Sea a fit foundation for the Earth? And can that which is ſtable and unmoveable, be eſtabliſhed upon that which is the Embleme of inſtability, Floods and Waters? Jacob ſaith of Reuben (Gen. 42. 4.) unſtable as Water; and can Floods or Waters be the whole Earths eſtabliſhment? The Earth is rather the foundation of the Water: and many Philoſophers tell us that the Sea is higher then the Earth; and therein is the power of God ſeen, that he holds in the Sea as with bars, or as with a bridle, leſt it overwhelm the Earth; how is it then ſaid, the Earth is founded upon the Sea? I anſwer, the word that we tranſlate upon, ſignifieth, by, near, together, with; ſo, he hath founded it upon the Sea, is, by the Sea, or near the Sea, that is, the Sea and Land are next neighbours, they dwell ſo near each other, that the one ſeems to dwell upon, or be the foundation of the other. There are Waters within the Earth; whence it is ſaid, that at the time of the Flood (Gen. 7. 11.) as the windows of Heaven were opened, ſo the fountains of the great deep were broken up: and we read of the Waters as placed under the Earth (Exod. 20. 4.) yet if we ſay the Earth is upon the Waters, ſenſe contradicts it; and if we conſider the whole globe together, we cannot ſay which is uppermoſt; for in a ſphear or round figure, there is neither uppermoſt nor lowermoſt, but all the parts are equal and alike, being placed one by another, not one upon another. So that the Text, in the Pſalm, which ſaith the Earth is founded upon the Seas, doth not at all daſh againſt nor contradict this of Job, which ſaith, He hangeth the Earth upon nothing.

Super flumina eſt juxta vel ſecus flumina, quis enim terram iuiit fluminibus dixerit. Druſ.

Again, There is another Scripture that ſeems to oppoſe this, and from which we may infer, that ſurely the Earth hath ſomewhat to ſuſtain it (Pſal. 104. 5.) Who laid the foundations of the Earth, that it ſhould not be removed for ever. We put in the margin, He founded the Earth upon her baſis; if the Earth be founded upon a baſis or pillar, then it doth not hang upon nothing. I anſwer, the foundation or baſis, in the Pſalm, doth not oppoſe the Earths hanging upon nothing; for the foundation or baſis which upholdeth the Earth, is not any created power without, or extrinſical to the Earth. God did not build the Earth as we do houſes, firſt laying the foundation, and then ſetting up the walls and roof, there is no ſuch things imaginable in the work of God. But the foundation or baſis of the Earth, is the infinite and inviſible power of God who made the Earth. The will and word of the Builder is the pillar which ſuſtaineth this building. The thin Air is all the appearing foundation of the Earth. For as the Heavens hang over the Air, ſo the Earth hangs in the midſt of the Air. What then is the baſis and foundation of the Earth? I anſwer, which may be the point of obſervation from theſe words.

The Earth is upheld by the infinite and Almighty power of God.

Non fundamentis ſuis nixa ſubſiſtit terra, nec fulchris ſuis ſtabilis perſeverat, ſed dominus ſtatuit terram & fundamento voluntatis ſuæ continet. Amb. Hexam. 6.

The Earth hath no pillar, but hangs like a ball in the Air; we ſhould look upon it as a miracle did we ſee a little ball but of an ounce weight hanging in the Air without ſupport; the Air will ſcarce bear a feather: throw a feather up into the Air, and it will deſcend, unleſs kept up by a breath of wind; and yet this huge vaſt globe of Earth and Waters, hangs as a ball in the Air, and we ſcarce wonder at it. The Poets feigned an Atlas that bears up the Heavens with his ſhoulders; God is the Atlas that bears up the Heavens and the Earth too, the upper globe, and the under globe too; he made all things by himſelf out of nothing, and he ſupports them by himſelf upon nothing. We have an excellent expreſſion of the power of God in this thing (Iſa. 40. 12.) Who hath meaſured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meeted out Heaven with the ſpan, and comprehended the duſt of the Earth in a meaſure: and weighed the mountains in ſcales, and the hills in a ballance. God made all things in weight and meaſure; and he keeps the weight and meaſure of all things. As the Earth was not till his Word and Will gave it a being, ſo his Word and Will alone is allſufficient to uphold it in that being. God hath not hanged the Earth upon any thing but himſelf, who is indeed infinitely more then all things. Take two or three deductions from this grand Concluſion.

Firſt, The ſame power which made the world ſupports and maintains it.

Thus the Author to the Hebrews ſets forth the dignity of Chriſt the Son of God (Chap. 1. 2, 3.) Whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom alſo he made the worlds (both the Natural, Civil, and Spiritual worlds, with all the changes and ſucceſſions which have been in them) who is alſo the brightneſs of the glory of God, and the expreſs image of his perſon; upholding all things (the Natural frame of the world, as well as the Civil and Spiritual frame of it) by the word of his power, or by his powerful word, which as it once commanded all things into a being, ſo now it commands all things into that continuance of their being in which they are. Which power the Apoſtle attributes again to Chriſt (Col. 1. 17.) He is before all things, and by him all things conſiſt. Sin made the world ſhake, And had it not been for a ſecond creation, the firſt creation had been ruin'd and loſt. The Earth and all our concernments who live upon the face of the Earth, hang upon nothing but the will of God. If he let us go, we fall, though all the powers on Earth would underprop and uphold us; and if he hold us up we ſtand faſt, though we have no more of any earthly power to prop us up with, then the Earth hath, which is propt up with and hangeth upon nothing.

Secondly, God can do the greateſt things without any viſible means.

This work of God in hanging the Earth as it doth, is to be numbred among the greateſt works that ever he did; and thus it hangs without any the leaſt appearing means to hold it up. There are three arguments given in Scripture of the mighty power of God.

Firſt, That he works by ſmall, even the ſmalleſt means: we have reaſon to wonder when effects exceed all viſible cauſes: as it ſhews the great power of God when he ſtops great means from doing any thing; when he cauſeth men to labour in the very fire, that is, to toil and ſweat themſelves to the utmoſt for very vanity, that is, without any hoped for iſſue or advantage. Some labour in the fire for very vanity, becauſe all they get by their labours is worth nothing; but others may be ſaid to labour in the fire for very vanity, becauſe with all their labours they can get nothing. And this is of the Lord, this is an effect of the Lords power, to make the power of a man, in the uſe and improvement of the beſt and choyceſt means, ineffectual. So on the other ſide it is a great magnifying of the power of God, when by a little power put forth by the hand of a weak inſtrument, he produceth great effects. The Apoſtle James brings it in with a behold (Chap. 3. 5.) Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! When great matters are done by ſmall means, we have reaſon to extol and cry up the power of God.

Secondly, It argues the great power of God when he doth great things by means that are improbable, or that ſeem no way ſutable to ſuch an end; as Chriſt cured blindneſs with clay and ſpittle, which means had no ſutableneſs to ſuch an end, the curing of blindneſs: The means uſed to cure Naaman had no ſutableneſs for ſuch a cure; and Naaman was ſo ſenſible of it, that he was very angry with the Prophet about it, as if his leproſie could be cured by ſo ſlight a thing as that was; he thought he would have done it with ſome ceremony, not in an extraordinary way; yet this ſhewed that the cure was wrought by a divine power, becauſe it was wrought by ſo improbable an application. As the power of God appears in doing great things by ſmall means, ſo by doing great things by unlikely means.

Thirdly, It ſhews the power of God much more to do great things without the uſe of any means at all. Such actings are creatings, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Creation, (Heb. 11. 3.) Through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God; ſo that things that are ſeen, were not made of things that do appear. Nothing appeared out of which this world was created; there was no pre-exiſtent matter out of which the world was made; the world was made out of nothing; that goodly fabrick of Heaven and Earth which is now ſeen, was made of that which was never ſeen; no man can tell what were the materials of which God made the world. Now as God ſhewed his infinite power at firſt in making all things of that which did not appear, ſo the great power of God doth appear now in doing great things without the appearance or external concurrence of any thing. The Lord turns whole Nations ſometimes by nothing; things are done, and no man can tell how they were done, or by what. We love to have a fair appearance of means, when we attempt great matters; but God loves to act when and where nothing appears. We honour God moſt, when we are ſenſible that the greateſt means is nothing without him, and that he himſelf is enough when no means at all appears to ſenſe. It is Gods uſual way to do things in a way which is not uſed; and either to uſe no help, or that which ſignifieth nothing. Thus the Apoſtle deſcribes the dealing of God in bringing ſouls to himſelf by a holy calling, and in removing whatſoever ſtandeth in the way of that call (1 Cor. 1. 26.) For ye ſee your calling, brethren, how that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called, &c. (ſome wiſe and mighty men are called, leſt any thing in man ſhould ſeem too hard for the grace of God; and not many wiſe and mighty men are called, leſt any thing in man ſhould ſeem to contribute to or help out the call of God) but God hath choſen fooliſh things to confound the wiſe: and God hath choſen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and baſe things of the world, and things which are deſpiſed, hath God choſen; yea and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that is, thoſe things which are ſo fooliſh and weak, and baſe, and deſpiſed, they ſeem to have no being, or are accounted as nothing, even theſe non-entities, theſe poor tools doth God chuſe and take up to do great things by, and to nullifie or bring thoſe things to nought, which are all in all among or in the eſtimation of men. Therefore, ſo God own the work, the matter is not much (I ſpeak not in regard of lawfulneſs, but likelineſs, I ſay, the matter is not much) what the means is; God can over-wit wiſe men by fools, he can overpower mighty men by thoſe who are weak. Thus God triumphs over humane improbabilities, yea impoſſibilities, and would have no fleſh either deſpair becauſe of the ſmalneſs of means, or glory in his ſight, becauſe of the greatneſs of it. How glorious was Abraham's faith in the former Chapter, who was ſo far from deſpairing, that he was ſtrong in faith giving glory to God, though he ſaw nothing but death upon all the means which tended to attain the bleſſing promiſed (Rom. 4. 17, 18, 19.) As it is written, I have made thee a Father of many Nations before him whom he believed, even God (who was it that Abraham believed? It was God. And under what notion did his faith eye God? Even as he) who quickneth the dead: when God is cloſed with under this notion, as quickning the dead, what can be too hard for faith? But there is more in it, Abraham's faith eyed God not only as quickning the dead, but as he that calleth thoſe things which be not, as though they were; that is, as he who maketh ſomething of nothing: when once Abraham had theſe apprehenſions of God, then nothing ſtuck with him, his faith could digeſt iron, and therefore (as it followeth) he againſt hope, believed in hope, &c. and being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body being now dead (as to the procreation of children) when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs (as to conception) of Sarahs womb. He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief (that is, he never made any ſcruples or queries how the promiſe ſhould be accompliſhed) but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God; that is glorifying God by believing that he was able to make good the promiſe, or that it was as eaſie for God to create a performance, as to make the promiſe.

Thirdly, Then fear not when God is a working, but he will carry on his work; deficiencies in the creature, are no ſtop to his actings: his immediate or ſole power is enough who hangeth the Earth upon nothing. Where are the pillars that ſuſtain this mighty maſs? It hangeth faſt by no faſtning, but the order of God; and his order is ſtrong enough to hang the greateſt buſineſs that ever was in the world upon. The Jews have a ſaying, in reverence of the written Word of God, That upon or at every Iota or the leaſt tittle of the Law there hangeth a mountain of ſence: and 'tis as true in reference to his doings as his ſayings, God can hang mountains upon mole-hils, and turn mountains into mole-hils for his peoples ſake and ſafety. It is rare that we are put to the actings of faith at ſo high a rate (There is uſually ſomewhat in ſight to encourage the actings of our faith and dependance upon God; they that are in the loweſt condition, have ſomewhat to look to) but if there be nothing to be ſeen, then do but remember, that God hangeth the Earth upon nothing, and faith will ſay, I have all. Although the meal in the barrel, and the oyl in the cruſe ſhould fail; although the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall there be fruit in the vines; although the labour of the olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat, &c. yet the Lord faileth not, either in his power for us, or compaſſion towards us, and therefore the believer can even then rejoyce in the Lord, and joy in the God of his ſalvation. For while there is nothing in appearance, there is not only ſome thing, but all things are, that are for our good, in the promiſe. Faith may make all ſorts of comfortable Concluſions to and for it ſelf (and not build Caſtles in the Air) from this one Aſſertion, that, The Earth hangeth in the Air, or to give it in the words of the Text, That God hangeth the Earth upon nothing. The conſtitution or ſyntax of Nature well conſidered, is no ſmall advantage to our heightning and ſtrengthning in grace.

VERS. 8, 9, 10.

He bindeth up the waters in his thick Clouds, and the Cloud is not broken under him.
He holdeth back the face of his Throne, and ſpreadeth his Cloud upon it.
He hath compaſſed the waters with bounds untill the day and night come to an end.

JOB having ſhewed how wonderfully God upholdeth the Earth which is under us, goeth on to ſhew no leſs a wonder, in his binding up thoſe waters in Clouds which are above us. Whatſoever God hath done or doth in Heaven above or upon the Earth beneath, either as to creation and the firſt conſtitution of things, or as to providence, and the continual motion of things, is wonderful and glorious.

Verſ. 8. He bindeth up the waters in his thick Clouds.

צרר Colligavit & vinxit compreſſit.

As our Engliſh word, Bind, ſo the Original implieth a force upon the waters to keep them within the Cloud; water would not ſtay there, but that it muſt whether it will or no. It would ruſh down preſently and diſorderly to the ruine of all below, but God bindeth it to its good behaviour. As the mouth of a ſack is tyed or bound about, that the corn put into it fall not out; or (which alluſion comes neareſt the Text) as barrels are bound with hoops, leaſt the liquour put into them ſhould leak out. Thus

God bindeth up the waters.] What waters? There are two ſorts of waters; firſt, upper waters, or waters in the Air; of which the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, when he ſaith (Pſal. 104. 3.) He layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters; that is, in thoſe upper waters, which are neareſt the Heaven, called in Scripture, The habitation of his holineſs and of his glory. Earthly Architects muſt have ſtrong walls to lay the beams of their chambers upon, but the Lord who made Heaven and Earth, can make fluid waters bear up the beams of his chambers for ever. Secondly, There are lower waters, or waters on the Earth; which diſtinction Moſes gave long before Ariſtotle (Gen. 1.7.) And God made the firmament, and it divided the waters which were under the firmament, from the waters which were above the firmament. Where by the firmament we are to underſtand that vaſt ſpace which is extended or ſtretched out from the Earth up to the Clouds, commonly called, The Air; and by the waters above the firmament, thoſe rain-waters bound up in the Clouds. Theſe upper waters are the waters of which our divine Philoſopher here ſaith, that God bindeth them up

In his thicks Clouds.] Though Clouds are much thinner then the water which they hold, as Naturaliſts teach us, yet they are thicker then the common Air, or they may be called thickned Air, and therefore the Hebrew word for a Cloud is derived from a root that ſignifieth Thickneſs. And though we have a diſtinction of Clouds into thick and thin, comparing one with another, yet all Clouds compared to the Air are thick, and compared to the waters all are thin. Beſides, the Hebrew word ſignifies Clouds indifferently as well thin as thick, or rather Clouds Generally without any determination or reſtriction either to thick or thin. And therefore the Text is beſt tranſlated without an Epithete, In his Clouds; or if any Epithete were given, it would advance Job's ſcope and purpoſe moſt to tranſlate it, In his thick Clouds; for, the thinner the Cloud is, the greater is the power of God, and the wonder the more wonderful in making them the Continent of ſuch mighty waters. But, we tranſlate well, He bindeth up the waters in his thick Clouds.

It may here be enquired, why the Clouds are appropriated unto God in ſuch a ſpecial manner, by calling them, His Clouds.

I anſwer, the Clouds are His, not only

Firſt, In that common ſence (in which all things in the world are his) becauſe he maketh and diſpoſeth of them for that uſe, to hold the waters which the heat of the Sun exhaleth or draweth up in vapors from the Earth; but they are called his Clouds,

Secondly, Becauſe God is ſaid to uſe them as Princes do Horſes of State or Charots of triumph to ride upon (Iſa. 19. 1.) Behold the Lord rideth upon a ſwift Cloud: as alſo becauſe, the Lord, to ſhew the unſearchableneſs and incomprehenſibleneſs of his wayes and counſels in governing this world, and in ordering the affairs of his choſen people, is often expreſſed in Scripture as dwelling in a cloud, or covering himſelf with Clouds (*Pſal.*18.11.) He made darkneſs his ſecret place: his pavilion round about him, were dark waters, and thick Clouds of the skies. And again, it is no ſooner ſaid (Pſal. 97. 1.) The Lord reigneth, but in the very next verſe it is ſaid, Clouds and darkneſs are round about him; Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the habitation of his Throne; that is, his adminiſtrations are alwayes full of righteouſneſs, though ſeldom full of clearneſs; they are alwayes cloathed with equity, though uſually cloathed with obſcurity. His way and his dwelling is in the Clouds; and therefore alſo the Clouds are his. He bindeth up the waters in his thick Clouds. Some Philoſophers hold that the Cloud doth not ſo much hold the water, as is water, and that the Cloud is diſſolved into water when it raineth; others that the Clouds hold water like a ſpunge, which being preſſed, yields it out again. But Job's Philoſophy lifts up the glory of God moſt, which maketh the Cloud as a veſſel or garment, in which the waters are bound; and yet ſee the wonder,

The Cloud is not rent under them.

The waters being of a mighty bulk and weight, might eaſily break their way through the Clouds, did not God both bind and ballance them (as Elihu ſpeaks, Chap. 37. 16.) Doſt thou know the ballancing of the Clouds; to his ballancing, to his binding, we muſt aſcribe the not renting of the Cloud. As binding in the former clauſe, noted an act of power and force in God; ſo this word renting, noteth a power and force in water. It is ſaid (*Pſal.*78.13.) God rent or divided the Sea, that his people might paſs through; and this word is uſed (1 Chron. 11. 18.) concerning thoſe mighty men who fetched David water from the well of Bethlem; And the three break through the hoſt of the Philiſtines. And thus would the waters naturally break through the Clouds, but they are forbidden; the Cloud is not rent under all that weight, for God holds it together, and makes it as firm as bra[illegible].

Hence obſerve, It is an eminent, a wonderful act of divine power, by which the waters are contained and ſtayed within the Clouds.

The mighty power of God is ſeen in keeping the waters of the Sea in compaſs by the ſands and ſhoars; but it is a greater act of power to keep the waters of the Air in compaſs by the Clouds. There are three things very wonderful, or there are three wonders in this detention of the waters.

First, That the waters which are a fluid body, and love to be continually flowing and diffuſing themſelves, ſhould yet be ſtopt and ſtaid together by a Cloud, which is a thinner and ſo a more fluid body then the water. It is no great matter to ſee water kept in conduits of ſtone, or in veſſels of wood and braſs, becauſe theſe are firm and ſolid bodies, ſuch as the water cannot penetrate, nor force it ſelf through; but in the judgment of nature, how improbable is it that a thin Cloud ſhall bear ſuch a weight and power of waters, and yet not rent nor break under them. When Peter had encloſed a multitude of great fiſhes in his net, even an hundred fifty and three (John 21. 11.) we find this added as a wonder, And for all there were ſo many, yet was not the net broken, How much more may this be added as a wonder, that ſuch a multitude of waters ſhould be held in a Cloud, and yet the Cloud not broken, yea though the Cloud be toſſed and driven with fierce and raging winds. This is one of thoſe wonders in nature, which is therefore only not wondred at becauſe it is ſo common; and, which becauſe it is continually done, few enquire into or admire the power by which it is done.

Hoc ſane eſt ex illis naturæ mirabilibus, quæ aſſiduitate viluerunt.

Secondly, As it is a wonder that the Cloud is not rent with the weight of the water, ſo that the Cloud is rent at the ſpecial order and command of God. At his word it is that the Clouds are lockt up, and by his word they are opened. As in ſpirituals, ſo alſo in naturals, He openeth, and no man ſhutteth; he ſhutteth, and no man openeth. It is not in the power of all the world to rent or open a Cloud (though the Earth be parcht and all things that live languiſh) till God unlock it.

Nulla gutta deſcendit ex illis donec veniat verbum ejus & mittat illas per plateas. Moſes Gerund.

Thirdly, This alſo is wonderful, that when at the word of God the Cloud rents, yet the waters do not guſh out like a violent flood all at once, which would quickly drown the Earth, as it did (Gen. 7. 11.) When the windows of Heaven were opened; but the water deſcends in ſweet moderate ſhowers (as water through a Cullender, drop by drop, and ſtream by ſtream) for the moyſtning and refreſhing of the Earth. And God carrieth the Clouds up and down the world (as the keeper of a Garden doth his watering pot) and bids them diſtil upon this or that place, as himſelf directeth. The Clouds are compared to bottles in Chap. 38. of this Book (verſ. 37.) theſe God ſtops or unſtops uſually as our need requireth, and ſometime as our ſin deſerveth (Amos 4. 7.) I have withholden the rain from you; and he can withhold it, till the heavens over us ſhall be as braſs, and the earth under us as iron. I (ſaith the Lord of his vineyard, Iſa. 5. 6.) will alſo command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. The Reader may find further diſcoveries about this point at Chap. 5. verſ. 10. Only here I ſhall add, Firſt, That we depend upon God not only for grace, and pardon of ſin, but for rain and fruitful ſeaſons.

Secondly, When we have rain, let us acknowledge that God hath rent the cloud and given it us, that he hath looſed the Garment wherein he hath bound the waters (Prov. 30. 4.) that they may iſſue down upon us.

Thirdly, When the cloud rents not, let us go to God to do it. Are there any among the vanities of the Heathen that can cauſe rain? Surely there are none (Jer. 14. 22.) And therefore the Prophet (Zech. 10. 1.) ſends the people of God to him for it. Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain; ſo the Lord ſhall make bright clouds, and give them ſhowers of rain, to every one graſs in the field. Only he who bindeth up the waters in his clouds, can unbind the clouds and cauſe them to ſend out their waters. Job having thus ſhewed the power of God among the clouds and upper waters, riſeth yet higher in his diſcourſe, and from theſe waters wherein (as was toucht before) God layeth the beams of his chambers, he aſcendeth to the chambers themſelves, even to the Throne of God there.

Verſ. 9. He holdeth back the face of his Throne, and ſpreadeth his cloud upon it.

There are three things to be enquired into, for the explication of the former part of this verſe.

Firſt, What is here meant by the Throne of God.

Thirdly, What, by holding it back.

To the firſt Query, I anſwer, That according to Scripture, Heaven, or that place above, in oppoſition to the earth, or this ſublunary world, is called the Throne of God; and that not the inferior Heaven, or Air (which in Scripture is more then once called Heaven) but the ſupream or higheſt Heavens. Thus the Lord ſpeaketh by the Prophet (Iſa. 66. 1.) The Heaven is my Throne, and the earth is my footſtool, where is the houſe that ye build unto me, &c. Thus alſo our Saviour in his admonition againſt ſwearing (Matth. 5. 34.) ſaith, Swear not at all (that is raſhly) either by Heaven, for it is Gods Throne, nor by the Earth, for it is his footſtool. Again (Matth. 23. 22.) He that ſweareth by Heaven, ſweareth by the Throne of God. The reaſon why Heaven is called the Throne of God, is, becauſe there he manifeſts himſelf, as Princes do upon their Thrones in greateſt glory and majeſty: as alſo becauſe there he is more fully enjoyed by glorified Saints and Angels. God fills Heaven and Earth with his preſence, yet he declares his preſence more in Heaven then here upon the Earth. Heaven is the Throne of God, but Secondly, What is the face of his Throne?

I anſwer, The face of a thing is taken for the whole outward appearance, or for the appearing ſtate of it. As the face of a mans body is not only that fore-part of the head, which we ſtrictly call ſo, but the form and ſtructure of the whole body is the face of it. And in that ſence the word is applied both to thoſe great and natural bodies, the Heaven and the Earth, as alſo to a Civil-body, or to the Body politick of a City and Common-wealth. Thus whereas we render (Iſa. 24. 1.) Behold, the Lord maketh the Earth empty, and maketh it waſt, and turneth it upſide down, &c. The Hebrew is (and ſo our Tranſlators put in the margin) he perverteth the face thereof, that is, he changeth the ſtate and outward form of things, and putteth them into a new mould or model, reſpecting order and Government. And ſo we commonly ſpeak after great publick changes, The very face of things is altered, or things have a new face. And thus the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth the gracious and favourable changes which God maketh in the things of this world (Pſal. 104. 30.) Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are created, and thou reneweſt the face of the earth; that is, all things appear in another hiew and faſhion then before. So then, the face of the Throne of God, is that part of Heaven (ſay ſome) which looketh towards us, or which we look upon; all that greatneſs and beauty of Heaven which our eye reacheth unto, and which appears to us as a vaſt Canopy ſet with ſpangles or ſtuds of Gold, ſuch are the Stars to our ſight. But I rather conceive, The face of the Throne of God to be, the viſible and full demonſtration of that infinite light and glory wherein God dwelleth, and which appeareth or is given forth to the bleſſed Saints and Angels, who are ſaid to be about his Throne according to their meaſure and capability of receiving it. The face of his Throne, taken thus, he holdeth back from us alwayes in this life; and as the face of his Throne is taken in the other ſence, he often holds it back from us. About which it remains to be enquired,

Quidam faciem eſſe hominis putant os tantum & oculos & genas quod Græci proſopon dicunt, quādo facies ſit forma omnis & modus & factura quædā totius corporis à faciendo dicta, ſic mentis & cœli & Maris facies probè dicitur. Gel. lib. 13. c. 28.

Cœli vultus eſt cœli ſuperficies concava ſtellata, quæ nos reſpicit. Albert.

To hold back, ſeems to be the ſame, as to hide, cover, or conceal the face of his Throne; for when any thing is held back, it is concealed and hidden out of ſight. Thus God doth often hold back or cover the face of his Throne (as the face of it notes the appearances of Heaven towards us) with clouds; as it is ſaid in the report made of that terrible ſtorm wherein Paul had almoſt ſuffered ſhipwrack (Act. 27. 20.) That neither Sun nor Stars in many dayes appeared; here was a holding back or covering of the face of the Throne of God. And thus our experiences have often found it held back, the face of Heaven being masked or vailed over with natural clouds and vapors. Again, if we take the face of the Throne of God, for that eminent manifeſtation of himſelf, as in Heaven. Thus alſo God holdeth back the face of his Throne, by covering it with a Metaphorical cloud, as it is expreſſed (Pſal. 97. 1, 2.) The Lord reigneth, &c. clouds and darkneſs are round about him; that is, we can ſee no more of his glory in reigning then we can ſee of a Kings Throne which is covered with a Canopy, and compaſſed about with curtains. Job gives this plainly for the interpretation of this former part of the verſe in the latter part of it.

Eſt tollere apparentiam cœli. Cajet.

Tenere faciē throni, eſt cœlum occultare & obducere nubibus.

And ſpreadeth his cloud upon it.

That is, upon the face of his Throne. We may take this cloud, firſt, properly, thus God covers the Heavens from the ſight of our eyes. Secondly, improperly, as clouds note only ſecrecy and privacy; thus God ſpreadeth a cloud upon his Throne, to hide it from the eye of our underſtanding; ſo that we can no more comprehend the glory of God in himſelf or in his wayes and workings towards man, then we can ſee the Sun, Moon, and Stars, when muffled and wrapt up in thick clouds. Thus David ſpeaketh of the Lord (Pſal. 18. 11.) He made darkneſs his ſecret place: his pavillion round about him, were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies. But the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Tim. 6. 16.) That God dwelleth in light. How then doth the Pſalmiſt ſay there, and elſewhere, that he made clouds and darkneſs his ſecret place and his pavilion? I anſwer, As the Lord is light and hath no darkneſs in him (Joh. 1. 5.) ſo, as to himſelf, he ever dwelleth in light, and hath no clouds nor darkneſs at all about him. And therefore when it is ſaid, that he ſpreadeth a cloud upon his Throne, and maketh darkneſs his ſecret place, or his ſecret place dark; we are to underſtand it in reference to our ſelves; for whenſoever God hideth himſelf, or the reaſon of his dealings and diſpenſations from us, then the cloud is ſpread upon his Throne. When God is ſaid to ſpread a cloud over us, or any thing we have, it noteth his care over us, and his protection of us (Iſa. 4. 5.) And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of mount Sion, and upon her aſſemblies, a cloud and ſmoak by day, and the ſhining of a flaming fire by night (what is meant both by this cloud and flaming fire is clearly expounded in the laſt words of the verſe) for upon all the glory ſhall be a defence (or a covering.) Thus, I ſay, a cloud ſpread by God upon us, implieth that we are under his covert and defence. But when God ſpreadeth a cloud upon or covereth himſelf with a cloud, this implieth (all the Scripture over) the hiding and concealing of himſelf and his works from us. And in this ſence Job ſaith, He holdeth eth back the face of his Throne, and ſpreadeth a cloud upon it.

Hence note, Firſt, God hath a Throne.

Kings have Thrones, much more hath God who is the King of Kings. King Solomon made himſelf a great Throne of Ivory, and overlaid it with the beſt Gold (1 Kings 10. 18.) Kings have formal Thrones, God hath a real one. He hath all power in his hand, and this he adminiſtreth according to the pleaſure of his own will both in Heaven and Earth.

Secondly note, God manifeſteth himſelf in Heaven, as Princes upon their Thrones.

So Heaven is the Throne of God. And where God acts moſt, our affections ſhould be moſt, and our converſation moſt. Where the Throne is, thither the great reſort is, many flock to the Court. As it will be our glory hereafter to be in Heaven, or about the Throne of God for ever in perſon, ſo it is our grace to be daily there in Spirit while we are here. The Earth is Gods footſtool, yet many make that their Throne; Heaven is Gods Throne, and many make that their footſtool; they tread and trample upon the things of Heaven, while they ſet their hearts upon the things of the Earth. 'Tis a ſad miſtake, when men ſet their feet where they ſhould ſet their hearts; and prophane the Throne of God, not only by levelling it with, but by laying it lower then the ground.

Thirdly obſerve, God hideth his own glory from the ſight of man.

He holdeth back the face of his Throne, he will not ſuffer the luſtre of it to appear, but ſpreadeth a cloud upon it. Indeed we are not able to bear the clear diſcoveries of divine Glory (1 Tim. 6. 16.) God dwelleth in light which no man can approach unto, though he were permitted and offered the priviledge to approach unto it. God dwelleth in and is poſſeſſed of that infinite perfection of light that no creature is capable of. When Moſes made that petition to God (Exod. 33. 18.) I beſeech thee ſhew me thy glory. The Lord anſwered (verſ. 20.) Thou canſt not ſee my face, for no man ſhall ſee me and live. It ſeems that while God ſpake with Moſes his glory was overſhadowed, or that God (to uſe Job's language in the Text) held back the face of his Throne, and ſpread a cloud upon it; and therefore Moſes begg'd the removal of it, or that his glory might break through it, and ſhine unto him; Well, ſaith God, thou canſt not ſee my face, as if he had ſaid, If I ſhould grant thee that requeſt, thou art not able to enjoy it, or make uſe of it; for as my nature is altogether inviſible, ſo thou canſt not bear the ſuper-excelling brightneſs, which the clear manifeſtations of my immediate preſence would dart forth upon thee; for that glory of my preſence is too great a weight for humane frailty to ſtand under; it would aſtoniſh rather then comfort thee, and inſtead of refreſhing confound and make thee as a dead man. No man ſhall ſee my face and live. Man muſt die before he can (in that ſence) ſee the face of God, and then he ſhall (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 13. 12.) ſee face to face, and know as he is known. So that though we are much ſhort of the happineſs of the next life, while we ſee as through a glaſs darkly, and God holdeth back the face of his Throne, yet it is a mercy to us while we are in this life that he doth ſo, becauſe we are not able to abide the ſight of him face to face, or to behold the face of his Throne. As Chriſt had many things to ſay to his Diſciples, which they were not then able to bear; ſo Chriſt hath purchaſed ſuch mercies and priviledges for his people, as they are not able to bear while they are on this ſide the grave. Every ſtate hath enjoyments ſuitable and proper to it. Further as God hideth his glory from man, becauſe he is not able to bear it all; ſo he hideth much of that from him which he is able to bear, both to make him hunger and thirſt the more after it, and to draw him into the greater reverence and eſtimation of it. We uſually eſteem that more which is veiled and under a cloud, then that which is very clear and openly revealed; and according to our preſent ſtate and frame, that is moſt reverenced by us, which is moſt concealed from us. When a cloud hath dwelt a while upon the Sun we deſire the more to ſee the face of it, and are the more affected with the ſight of it. God will not hold back the face of his Throne from us in glory, nor will he ever ſpread a cloud upon it, and yet we ſhall have freſh deſires after it, and high valuations of it everlaſtingly. But while we dwell in this corrupt and corruptible fleſh, we are apt to neglect that which is alwayes with us, eſpecially if it be alwayes alike with us. And therefore as the wiſe and gracious God, will not let us ſee his Throne here at all in the full glory of it, becauſe we cannot bear it; ſo he will not let us ſee that glory of it continually, which we are able to bear, leſt we ſhould grow either careleſs of it, or unthankful for it. It is even beſt for us, that we have but a dark and imperfect ſight of God in this world, both in reference to what he is, and to what he doth: or firſt, In reference to himſelf in his nature and excellencies. Secondly, In reference to his wayes or works in their ſpecial reaſons and ends. As our darkneſs cannot at all comprehend the light of God, ſo God is pleaſed to cover much of his own light with darkneſs that we ſhould not comprehend it. How many glorious truths are there, the face of which he holdeth back from many of his precious ſervants? How often doth he ſpread a cloud, as upon the truths which he ſendeth in his Word, ſo upon the graces which he hath wrought in us by his Spirit? So that the ſoul is not only hindred from beholding what is without, but what is within, and is ſo far from beholding the glorious perfection of God and his works abroad, that it cannot ſo much as diſcern any of the gracious works of God at home, He ſpreadeth his cloud upon it.

Verſ. 10. He compaſſeth the waters with bounds, until the day and night come to an end.

Job having deſcribed marvailous acts of divine power in the Heavens, deſcends again to ſhew his marvails in or about the Seas and mighty waters.

He compaſſeth the waters with bounds.

The word which we render to compaſs, ſignifieth properly to draw a line, or make a circle, as Mathematicians do with a pair of Compaſſes, ſo that it notes the ſhutting up or circumſcribing any thing to a certain place or meaſure, beyond which it cannot move. And thus God compaſſeth the waters. At verſ. 8. Job ſhewed how God compaſſeth the upper waters, the waters in the Air, He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds. Here he ſheweth, how God by the ſame Almighty power compaſſeth about the lower waters, the waters of the Sea. The Hebrew is, The face of the waters, as in the former verſe, The face of his Throne. The face of the Earth is the upper part of the Earth (Gen. 1. 29.) I have given you every hearb bearing (or ſeeding) ſeed, which is upon the face of all the Earth. And ſo the face of the waters; is the upper part of the waters; becauſe the upper part of the water, as alſo of the Earth lyeth open to the eye, as the face of a man doth. And it may therefore be ſaid that he compaſſeth the face of the waters, becauſe (though the whole body and bulk of the waters ſwell and rage, yet) the face or upper part of the waters is that which at any times breaketh over and overfloweth; and therefore the face of the waters, only, as to us, is compaſſed about with bounds.

Proprietas peculiaris verbi חוג eſt lineam vel circulum deſcribere quaſi circino. Forte etiam indicatur eodem circumdandi verbo unum effici globum ex terra & aqua atq; unum & idem utriuſq; elementi eſſe centrũ. Pined.

The word noteth, a legal bound, a ſtatute or decree, and is frequently uſed in Scripture, eſpecially in Pſalm 119. for the Law or rule which God hath given man both for his worſhip and continual courſe of life. And hence the Prophet Jeremiah ſpeaking to the Jews about this thing, uſeth another word to ſignifie the bound of the Sea; and the word which here we render bound, is there rendred decree (Jer. 5. 22.) Fear ye not me, ſaith the Lord, will ye not tremble at my preſence, which have placed the ſand for the bound of the Sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot paſs it? And there is ſo much of a Law, or of an appointment in it, that the word is applicable to any thing which is put under a certain law or appointment. So it is put for an appointed time in Chap. 14. of this book (verſ. 13.) and for appointed food in Chap. 23. of this book (verſ. 12.) as here for an appointed ſpace or circle, within which as within a wall, or with gates and bars, the waters of the Sea are kept. He compaſſeth the waters with bounds.

חק Statutum conſtitutio, decretum; ſignificat præcepti conſtantiam & durationem nam חקק eſt inſculpere ſeu incidere lapidi ligno vel Metallo [illegible] ſeu. Sept.

Hence note, Firſt, The Sea is bounded by the power of God.

As God hath given Man underſtanding to provide a bit and a bridle for the mouth of the Horſe and Mule, which have no underſtanding, leſt they come near unto him (Pſal. 32. 9.) that is, nearer to him, then they ſhould, or near to him, not to ſerve him, or be uſed by him, but to kick or tread upon him. Thus God himſelf who is infinite in underſtanding, hath put a bit or bridle into the mouth of the Sea, which is further from underſtanding then either Horſe or Mule, leſt it come near to drown and overwhelm us. Neither ſhoars nor ſands, neither cliffs nor rocks are the bound and bridle of the Sea, but the Decree and command of God.

Secondly obſerve, It is an unanſwerable argument of the glorious power and ſoveraignty of God, that he is able to compaſs the waters with bounds.

Who ſhut up the Sea with doors? (was Gods humbling Queſtion to Job in Chap. 38. of this book, verſ. 8. 10, 11.) and ſaid, hitherto ſhalt thou come and no further, and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed. The Pſalmiſt (*Pſal.*104.) having ſhewed how at firſt (*Gen.*1. 1.) the whole Earth was covered with the deep as with a garment, and that the waters ſtood above the mountains, and were in the progreſs of the work of creation ſent down by the valleys into the place which God had appointed for them (having I ſay, made this excellent deſcription of the waters in creation, he concludes with the point of providence now in hand (verſ. 9.) Thou haſt ſet a bound, that they may not paſs over: that they turn not again to cover the earth. In which words the Pſalmiſt gives us three things clearly concerning the waters. Firſt, that once (he means it not of the deluge, but of the Chaos) the waters did cover the whole earth, till God by a word of command ſent them into their proper channels, that the dry Land might appear. Secondly, that the waters have a natural propenſion to return back and cover the earth again. Thirdly, that the only reaſon why they do not return back and cover the whole earth, is, becauſe God hath ſet a bound, that they cannot paſs. They would be boundleſs and know no limits, did not God bound and limit them. Wiſdom giveth us the like Elogium of the power of God in this (Prov. 8. 29.) He gave to the Sea his decree, that the waters ſhould not paſs his commandment. What cannot he command, who ſendeth his commandment to the Sea and is obeyed? Some great Princes heated with rage and drunken with pride, have caſt ſhackles into the Sea as threatning it with impriſonment and bondage if it would not be quiet, but the Sea would not be bound by them; they have alſo awarded ſo many ſtroaks to be given the Sea as a puniſhment of its contumacy and rebellion againſt either their commands or their deſigns. How ridiculouſly ambitious have they been, who would needs pretend to ſuch a Dominion? Many Princes have had great power at and upon the Sea, but there was never any Prince had any power over the Sea; that's a flower belonging to no Crown, but the Crown of Heaven. There are two things which are more peculiarly under the command of God; firſt, the waves of the Sea; ſecondly, the heart of man. And becauſe God is able to rule the waves of the Sea, take two or three inferences from it. Thus,

Firſt, That he is able to rule and command the heart of man. Solomon makes the parallel in this (*Prov.*21. 1.) The Kings heart is in the hand of Lord, as the rivers of waters: he turneth it whitherſoever he will. And as he turneth it both whitherſoever he will, ſo he ſtayeth both whereſoever he will. Moſt men at ſome times, ſome (wicked) men at all times are like the raging Sea when it cannot reſt, whoſe waters caſt up mire and dirt (Iſa. 57.20.) who could live by theſe raging Seas, theſe raging waves of the Sea at once foaming out their own ſhame, and threatning to ſwallow up others in deſtruction, did not God compaſs them about with bounds? Did not he ſay, here ſhall your proud waves be ſtayed. If God did not bound the Sea of ſome mens Spirits, they would not know, much leſs keep any bounds; they would neither know nor keep, not only the bounds of Religion and Piety, but not the bounds of Reaſon and Civility.

Secondly, God is able to rule and put a bound to the rage of the multitude, who in Scripture are compared to waters (Rev. 17. 15.) The waters which thou ſaweſt, where the whore ſitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues. And theſe are apt to ſwell and be enraged with vain paſſions and diſcontents, as the Sea is by winds and ſtorms (Pſal. 2. 1.) Why do the heathen rage? Rage as the Sea; and thus they will rage ſometimes though they know neither why nor wherefore. (So again, Pſal. 93. 3, 4.) The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice: the floods lift up their waves, which as it is true literally and properly, ſo it is as true (and ſo I conceive there intended) figuratively and improperly or myſtically and ſpiritually, that is, peoples and Nations like floods lift up their voice, they lift up their waves as if they would overwhelm all; but what followeth (verſ. 4.) The Lord on high is mightier then the noiſe of many waters, yea then the mighty waves of the Sea; that is, the Lord can quickly check and ſtop the rage of a people, when, or though they ſwell like a furious boyſterous Sea. And we find David putting both theſe together by way of Expoſition (Pſal. 65.) where exalting the power of God as he is the confidence of all the ends of the Earth, and of them that are afar upon the Sea (verſ. 5.) He addeth (verſ. 6, 7.) Which by his ſtrength ſetteth faſt the mountains: being girded with power. Which ſtilleth the noiſe of the Seas; the noiſe of their waves, and the tumult of the people. David joyns the noiſe and waves of the Seas, and the tumult of the people together; either implying, that he meant the tumult of the people, by the noiſe of the Sea; or that it is an act of the ſame power, to ſtill the tumult of the people, and the noiſe of the Sea.

Thirdly, God is able to ſtop thoſe Seas of error, and give a bound to thoſe floods of falſe doctrine, which are ready to overflow the face of the world. The Sea or flood of the Arrian hereſie (which denyed the Deity of Chriſt, or made him barely a man by nature, only cloathed with wonderful powers and priviledges; this hereſie, I ſay, like a Sea or flood) had almoſt overwhelm'd the whole world; yet God compaſſed thoſe Black waters with bounds, and gave them a commandment which they could not paſs: and though in this age they ſeem to return, and ſtrive to over-flow the Earth again; yet both the waters of that hereſie, and of all other damnable hereſies (as the Apoſtle Peter calls them, 2 Epiſt. 2. 1.) which abound in theſe dayes, and threaten us with a fearful inundation, are compaſſed with bounds which they ſhall not exceed. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſome in his time (2 Tim. 3. 8, 9.) Who as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, ſo did they alſo reſiſt the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate (or as we put in the Margin, of no Judgment) concerning the truth. But they ſhall proceed no further; ſo the Apoſtle propheſied of them; as if he had ſaid, They have a mind to proceed further, their will is to oppoſe truth and propagate error (in infinitum) without end. But they have now gone to the utmoſt of their line, they are come to their border, to their bound; they ſhall proceed no further, for their folly ſhall be made manifeſt unto all men, as theirs alſo was; that is, it ſhall appear to all men that the doctrine which they ſtood up for, was nothing elſe but a bundle of folly, and that the doctrine which they withſtood was the truth and wiſdom of God.

Fourthly, Then, the Lord is able to ſtop and bound the floods, the Seas of affliction, trouble, and perſecution, which are ready to ſwallow up his Church and people. The Church bleſſeth God for her deliverance from troubles, under this Allegory of Waters (Pſal. 124. 2, 3, 4, 5.) If it had not been the Lord, who was on our ſide, when men roſe up againſt us, they had ſwallowed us up quick; when their wrath was kindled againſt us, then the waters had overwhelmed us, the ſtream had gone over our ſoul, then the proud waters had gone over our ſoul. Waters, ſtreams, proud waters are nothing elſe but the perſecuting ſpirit and proceedings of ungodly enemies. And why did not theſe lay all waſt? God would not ſuffer them. When the Serpent (Rev. 12. 15, 16.) caſt out of his mouth waters as a flood over the woman (that is, ſtirred up many troubles) that he might cauſe her to be carry- ed away (that is, utterly ruin'd) of the flood. The Earth helped the woman (ſaith the Text) that is (as is conceived) God made earthly men, by the uſe of earthly means, and for the attaining of earthly ends, as a bound to ſtop thoſe waters; or as a gulf to ſwallow up thoſe waters which ſhould have ſwallowed up the Church. All theſe things doth he, and we may be fully aſſured he can do all theſe things, and many more, who hath compaſſed the waters with bounds, yea we may be aſſured that he will continue to do them, becauſe as he hath, ſo he will compaſs the waters with bounds.

Untill the day and night come to an end.] Or as our Marginal reading hath it, untill the end of light with darkneſs.

This laſt clauſe of the verſe is a proverbial ſpeech, ſignifying perpetuity; or that ſuch a thing either ſhall not be at all, or ſhall be as long as the world laſteth.

But ſhall day and night, light and darkneſs, end when the world or this frame or conſtitution of things endeth? Will there not be day and light, or an eternal day of light in the heavenly Glory? Is not that called, An inheritance among the Saints in light? (Col. 1 12.) And will there not be night and darkneſs, or an eternal night of darkneſs in helliſh miſery? Is not that called utter darkneſs? How then is it ſaid here that day and night ſhall come to an end?

I anſwer, Though after the end of this world there ſhall be both day and night, light and darkneſs; yet there ſhall be no viciſſitude of day and night, as there is in this preſent world, and as 'tis promiſed there ſhall be to the end of this world (Gen. 8. 22.) While the Earth remaineth, ſeed time and harveſt, and cold and heat, and ſummer and winter, and day and night ſhall not ceaſe. Theſe are called the Ordinances of the day and of the night, and the ſtability of them is made the ſhadow of that ſtability of God to his gracious promiſe, that the ſeed of Iſrael ſhould not ceaſe from being a Nation before him for ever (Jer. 31. 35, 36.) In this world, light and darkneſs, day and night are coming and going, departing and returning continually; and in this ſence day and night ſhall come to an end, at the worlds end. Job ſpeaks of day and night in courſe and ſucceſſion, not of day and night in being or conſtitution, when he ſaith, he hath compaſſed the waters with bounds, untill the day and night come to an end. The Hebrew ſtrictly tranſlated makes this reſolution of the doubt more clear and doubtleſs; for that doth not ſay abſolutely that day and night (light or darkneſs) ſhall come to an end; but that there ſhall be an end of light with darkneſs; that is, of the intercourſe or change between day and night, between light and darkneſs; or untill the conſummation of light with darkneſs, that is, untill light and darkneſs have conſummated or fulfilled their courſe one with another.

Ad conſummationem lucis cum tenebris. Jun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Beyond this world there are no changes of times or ſeaſons.

In the world to come all is day and light to the godly, to thoſe who dye in the Lord; and all is night and darkneſs to the wicked, to thoſe who dye out of the Lord. Heaven and Hell, a ſtate of eternal bleſſedneſs or wretchedneſs, have no changes in them, nor any thing that is Heterogenal or of another kind. Heaven which hath light and joy in it, hath no darkneſs, no ſorrow at all in it; Hell which hath darkneſs and ſorrow in it, hath no light nor joy at all in it; the mixtures and changes of light and darkneſs, of joy and ſorrow, of pain and pleaſure, are made here on earth. The wine of the wrath of God, and the wine of the love and conſolations of God, ſhall be poured out without any the leaſt contrary tincture or mixture in the life which is to come. Light with darkneſs ſhall no more be heard of; they who go into light ſhall never ſee darkneſs, and they who go into darkneſs ſhall never ſee light. We are now (as Job ſpeaks in Chap. 14. of this Book, verſ. 14.) Waiting all the dayes of our appointed time untill our change come; and when that change is once fully come, we ſhall go beyond all changes; Day with night will then be at an end.

Secondly obſerve, What God doth he can alwayes do.

As he hath hitherto compaſſed the waters with bounds, ſo he can compaſs them with bounds untill the day and night come to an end. Men can do that to day, which they are ſo far from being able to do untill the end of dayes, that, poſſibly they cannot do it the next day. The hand of man is continually ſhortning in regard of natural ſtrength or activity, and it ſeldom keeps long at the ſame length in regard of civil ſtrength or authority. As there are many things which man cannot nor ever could do, ſo there are many things, which once a man could do, but now he cannot. He is changed or the times are changed, either he hath not the ſame power in himſelf, or the ſame powers are not continued unto him. That man may be found ſhaking and trembling, who a while before (as 'tis ſaid of the Aſſyrian, Iſa. 14. 16.) made the Earth to tremble, and did ſhake Kingdoms, inſomuch that all (as 'tis at verſ. 10. of the ſame Chapter) ſhall ſpeak and ſay unto him, Art thou alſo become weak as we, art thou become like unto us? Thus we ſee the mightieſt men cannot do what they have done; they who have compaſſed the rage and fury of men with bounds, can bound them no more; but they break in upon them like a wide breaking in of the Sea, and bear down all before them. But the power of God knows no abatings, nor his hand any ſhortnings; as he hath bounded both the natural and myſtical waters, ſo he can and will bound them, and none ſhall hinder untill the day and night come to an end. The Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 29. 10.) ſitteth upon the flood, yea the Lord ſitteth King for ever; as if he had ſaid, The Lord doth not only ſit upon (that is, rule and govern) the floods for a while, but he ruleth and governeth them alwayes; he ſitteth upon them King for ever, even untill day and night come to an end.

As God hath given them a bound, ſo ſuch a bound as ſhall keep them in compaſs for ever; and as we have an aſſurance in the power of God, that he can keep or compaſs the waters with bounds to the end of the world; ſo alſo we have his promiſe and his faithfulneſs engaged that he will maintain thoſe banks and bounds, and keep them in ſuch repair that the waters ſhall never prevail over them (Gen. 9 8, 9, 10, 11.) And God ſpake unto Noah and to his ſons with him, ſaying, and I, behold, I eſtabliſh my Covenant with you, and with your ſeed after you, &c. neither ſhall all fleſh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood, neither ſhall there be any more a flood to deſtroy the earth. And as mankind is under this promiſe of freedom from an univerſal deluge, ſo every godly man may riſe up to this aſſurance, that no waters of any ſort can wet ſo much as the ſole of his foot, or the hem of his garment, but as they have leave and commiſſion from him, who hath compaſſed the waters with bounds, untill the day and night come to an end.

VERS. 11, 12.

The pillars of Heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at his reproof.
He divideth the Sea by his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud.

JOB ſtill proceedeth in the enumeration and illuſtration of the mighty works of God. What he doth in the Clouds, and what in the Heavens, was ſhewed from the former context; here Job tells us what the Lord doth with the Heavens; he who made the Heavens and ſtretched out the North over the empty place, can make theſe Heavens totter in their place and tremble, when he pleaſeth.

The pillars of Heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at his reproof.

There are three things to be enquired into for the opening of this verſe.

Firſt, What is meant by the pillars of Heaven.

Secondly, How the pillars of Heaven may be ſaid to tremble, and be aſtoniſhed.

Thirdly, What we are to underſtand by the reproof of God, when he ſaith, they are aſtoniſhed at his reproof.

The pillars of Heaven tremble.

There

Columnæ cæli, i. e. Angeli contremiſcunt. Aquin. Angelos vocat columnas cœli, quia ſcilicet eorum officio adminiſtratur motus cœlorum. Aquin.

There are various opinions about theſe pillars; Firſt, many of the Latines hold, that theſe pillars of Heaven are the Angels, by whoſe aſſiſtance (ſay ſome Philoſophers) the motions of the heavenly bodies, with their orbs or ſphears, are guided and maintained. And doubtleſs as the Angels have great employments upon and about the Earth, ſo alſo in and about the Heavens, and therefore may (not improperly) be called the pillars of Heaven; in which ſence alſo the Angels are called the powers of Heaven, as ſome interpret (Matth. 24. 29.) where Chriſt propheſieth, that immediately after the tribulation of thoſe dayes, the Sun ſhall be darkned, and the Moon ſhall not give her light, the Stars ſhall fall from Heaven, and the powers of Heaven ſhall be ſhaken. Many of the Antients interpret thoſe powers of Heaven by the Angels; as if the Lord would do ſuch things in that great day, as ſhould trouble and aſtoniſh not only men on Earth, but the Angels in Heaven, who may be called the pillars of Heaven, as ſome eminent men for parts and power are called the pillars of the Earth; and we may ſuppoſe them pillars of Heaven, not for the ſtrength and ſuſtainment of Heaven, but for the beauty and ornament of it. As we may ſee pillars in ſtately Pallaces, which are not placed there to bear up the weight of thoſe buildings, but only to adorn and beautifie them. Or Angels may be called the pillars of Heaven, becauſe of the firmneſs and ſtability of their own nature, not as if they were any firmneſs or eſtabliſhment unto Heaven.

Stabilitatē permanentē in natura angelorum intelligamus nomine Columnarum. Philip.

Secondly, By theſe pillars of Heaven are conceived to be meant the high mountains of the Earth, which ſeem to touch the Heavens, according to ſenſe, and ſo to ſuſtain and bear them up, as pillars; but this opinion not being grounded upon any truth in nature, but only upon a popular error (though it be a truth that even theſe ſuppoſed pillars of Heaven tremble at the reproof of God) I ſhall not inſiſt at all upon this interpretation.

Thirdly, Theſe pillars of Heaven, ſay others, are the Air; for as the loweſt parts of the Earth are called the foundations of the Earth, becauſe the foundation of a building is laid loweſt; ſo the lower parts of Heaven, the Air (which is ſometimes called Heaven, yea the firmament of Heaven, Gen. 1. 20.) may be called the pillar of Heaven. 'Tis true alſo that the Lord maketh dreadful combuſtions by ſtorms and tempeſts in the Air, inſomuch that thoſe pillars of Heaven tremble and are aſtoniſhed at his reproof. But I ſhall not give this neither as Job's meaning here.

Terra tota velut orbis totius fundamentum ac firmamentum. Merc.

Fourthly, By the pillars of Heaven, others underſtand (not the Air or the mountains) but the whole body or globe of the Earth. Thus David ſpeaks (2 Sam. 22. 8.) Then the Earth ſhook, and trembled, the foundations of Heaven moved and ſhook, becauſe he was wroth; where the foundations of Heaven in the latter part of the verſe, may be expounded by the Earth in the former part of the verſe. For if we conſider the whole fabrick of the world together, then the Earth ſeems to be the foundation or pillar of Heaven. And frequent experiences in all ages, eſpecially in ſome parts of the world, have felt and reported the trembling of the Earth. We commonly call it an Earthquake; and Philoſophers teach us, that the reaſon of it in nature is the ſtrength of vapors included in and ſtriving to make their way out of the bowels of the Earth. And as this trembling of the Earth hath a reaſon in nature, ſo it is often cauſed by ſpecial command from God, as a reproof of the ſinfulneſs of man, or to awaken him from his ſin. Yet,

Fifthly, I rather conceive, that this phraſe, The pillars of Heaven, is uſed only in a general ſence, and not particularly intended either of Angels or mountains, of the Air, or of the Earth; but that the pillars of Heaven, are the ſtrength of Heaven: the ſtrength of a building conſiſts in the pillars that bear it up: take away the pillars, and it falls down, as Sampſon ſaid to the lad that held him by the hand, ſuffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the houſe ſtandeth; and when he had once moved them, the houſe fell (Judg. 16. 26, 30.) ſo that when Job ſaith, the pillars of Heaven tremble, the meaning is, the greateſt ſtrength of or whatſoever is ſtrongeſt in Heaven, the Heavens themſelves with all their ſtrength, tremble at the reproofs of God. So that this is only a figurative and Rhetorical expreſſion, not that the Heaven hath any material pillars by which it is ſupported; but becauſe in thoſe mighty concuſſions which God cauſeth in the world, it is as if the pillars or powers of Heaven it ſelf were ſhaken, and did Tremble, and were aſtoniſhed at the reproof of God.

But how may theſe pillars (whatſoever they are) be ſaid to tremble and be aſtoniſhed? I anſwer, 'tis thus expreſſed in alluſion to men, who being ſeverely reproved, menaced, and threatned, tremble, and are aſtoniſhed. Here are two terms uſed, Firſt, They tremble, which word ſignifieth (as it were) the pounding and ſhattering of the Heavens to pieces, or as if they were even ground to powder or crumbled to duſt. Secondly, They are aſtoniſhed; The original word imports not a light, ſudden, tranſient aſtoniſhment; but an aſtoniſhment that ſtayeth, abideth, and taketh up the mind, or which draweth the mind to a deep conſideration of the matter preſented, and thereupon to wonder and admiration (Iſa. 29. 9.) Stay your ſelves and wonder, that is, ſit down and conſider this thing, and wonder; barely to wonder is not enough, you muſt ſit down, ſtay, and reſt your ſelves to wonder, you muſt take your fill of wonder at this thing. But how can the Heavens be aſtoniſhed, which are not only without underſtanding but without life? I grant, that to be aſtoniſhed is proper only to rational creatures, yet it is attributed to beaſts metaphorically, yea and to things inanimate or without life and ſenſe, as here, and Jer. 2. 12. to the Heavens; for as rejoycing is attributed to the Heavens, and to the Earth, to the mountains, and to the valleys; all theſe are ſaid to rejoyce, to ſing; ſo alſo aſtoniſhment, fear and trembling are attributed to Heaven and Earth. And as liveleſs creatures are ſaid to rejoyce, ſing, and praiſe God when men do it, ſo likewiſe they are ſaid to tremble, when men tremble; when God doth ſuch things as affect men with aſtoniſhment, then alſo Heaven and Earth are ſpoken of as affected with aſtoniſhment.

Thirdly, What is meant by the reproof of God, which cauſeth the pillars of Heaven to ſhake and be aſtoniſhed. The word ſignifies, a ſore-chiding, the ſevereſt reprehenſion, and that not a bare reproof, but a reproof with authority and command, as a father or maſter reproveth his ſon or ſervant. Thus, when Joſeph told his dream, That the Sun, Moon, and eleven Stars made obeyſance to him, Jacob his father rebuked him, and ſaid unto him, what is this dream that thou haſt dreamed? ſhall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down our ſelves to thee to the Earth? And when Joſhua the high Prieſt ſtood before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan at his right hand to reſiſt him, (Zeph. 3. 2.) The Lord ſaid to Satan, the Lord rebuke thee O Satan, even the Lord that hath choſen Hieruſalem, rebuke thee. This rebuke had a threatning in it, and was ſpoken as with an angry countenance, in which there might be read diſpleaſure, and indignation. The Vulgar tranſlates, not rebuke, but nod; the pillars of Heaven tremble at thy nod: There is a reproof in a nod, as it was ſaid anciently, He made Olympus tremble with a nod of his head. A nod of the head may ſignifie a reproof as well as a word of the mouth. There is a twofold reproof, firſt, verbal, or by words; ſecondly, real, or by action and geſture. A verbal reproof may be real, but every real reproof is not verbal. Both God and man can act reproofs as well as ſpeak them. And the word here uſed is applyed in Scripture not only to verbal, and voice reproofs, but to reproofs given by geſtures and by actions; for as the holy lives of godly men who walk exactly are a reproof to the world, though they ſpeak not a word of reproof; ſo the actings of God are reproofs, though he doth not ſpeak. Thus David ſaith (Pſal. 6. 5.) Thou haſt rebuked the heathen, thou haſt deſtroyed the wicked; how did God rebuke the heathen? Even by deſtroying the wicked; that act of thine hath been a reproof to the heathen, and ſhewed them their folly. In the ſame ſence 'tis ſaid again (*Pſal.*98.30.) Rebuke the company of ſpear men, the multitude of bulls, with the calves of the people, till every one ſubmit himſelf with pieces of ſilver. The rebuke there prayed for upon that boiſterous and bloody generation, was not a word but a work of rebuke, that God would do ſomewhat that might be a rebuke upon them, and a ſtop to them; as if he had ſaid, Seeing this company of ſpear men, and multitude of the bulls will not hear any of thy words, ſeeing they are not capable either of reproof, or counſel, therefore rebuke them by ſome extraordinary hand, and viſible tokens of thy diſpleaſure (as it follows) ſcatter the people that delight in war. Thus ſome underſtand it here, that God giveth a reproof to the Heavens, not by a word ſpoken, but by his providential actings and wonderful workings in the world.

Further, this reproof is expounded by that which is indeed the voice of God (and ſo called in Pſalm 29.) the Thunder; which though it hath a natural cauſe (for which reaſon Atheiſts laugh at the ſimplicity of thoſe who are led up to the thoughts of God, and to a reverential aw of his power at the hearing of it) yet that doth not at all hinder but that God doth in a ſpecial manner diſpoſe of it (as he doth of all other natural things) when he pleaſeth to ſerve his providence in the demonſtrations of his wrath among the children of men. To which end we may ſay that God doth often ſend forth his voice from the Clouds, and chides from Heaven in Thunder. The voice (this reproving voice) of the Lord is upon the waters (that is, upon the waters which are above the Firmament) the God of glory thundereth, the Lord is upon many waters, the voice of the Lord is powerful, the voice of the Lord is full of majeſty, the voice of the Lord breaketh the Cedars, he breaketh the Cedars of Lebanon; the voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire, the voice of the Lord ſhaketh the Wilderneſs, the Lord ſhaketh the Wilderneſs of Kades, &c. Thus the pillars of Heaven, proper, and the pillars of Heaven, in a figure, tremble at or are aſtoniſhed at theſe loud reproofs.

Hence obſerve, The greateſt ſtrength of the creature trembleth at the angry diſpenſations and appearances of God.

As the lifting up of the light of Gods countenance, puts joy into the heart more then Corn and Wine, the beſt things of this world; ſo the darkneſs of Gods countenance puts more trouble and ſorrow into our hearts, then gall and wormwood, the worſt of the world can do. David deſcribes at large in what a kind of huddle and hurry the world was in ſuch a day (Pſal. 18. 13, 14, 15.) Then the earth ſhook and trembled, the foundations alſo of the hils moved and were ſhaken becauſe he was wroth. The Lord alſo thundered in the Heavens, and the higheſt gave his voice, hail ſtones and coals of fire; he ſent out his arrows and ſcattered them, and he ſhot out lightnings, and diſcomfited them; then the channels of waters were ſeen, and the foundations of the world were diſcovered at thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blaſt of the breath of thy noſtrils. What David there ſpake of Thunder, and Lightning, and Hail-ſtones, hath been viſibly effected for the deſtruction of the enemies of the people of God, and for the deliverance of his children. The hiſtory of Joſhua gives us a famous inſtance at Chap. 10. and though it be not recorded that David obtained victories by ſuch immediate helps from Heaven, yet it is not improbable (conſidering the tenor of this Pſalm) that he did. And we have a notable inſtance of a victory obtained by Thunder and Lightning in the Hiſtory of the Church, whence that Chriſtian Legion of Souldiers who had earneſtly prayed that God would appear for their help, was called The Thundering Legion. But whether we expound this context in the Pſalm literally and ſtrictly, as expreſſing what God did for David in this kind; or figuratively, as expreſſing only thus much, that God did wonderful things in one kind or other, in helping David againſt his enemies; or whether we underſtand it myſtically, of what God doth to and for the ſouls and ſpiritual eſtates of men, yet it holds forth in all the utter inability of man to bear up when the Lord ſhews himſelf in any terrible demonſtrations of his preſence. Again (Pſal. 104. 32.) He looketh on the Earth, and it trembleth, he toucheth the hills, and they ſmoak. There is a twofold look of God, Firſt, there is the look of Gods favour, and thus Saints often pray that God will look down from Heaven upon them; this look is the relieving, yea the reviving of the ſoul. Secondly, There is a look of diſpleaſure, an angry, a frowning look, when Clouds and Storms are ſeen in the brow: Thus in the Pſalm God is ſaid to look on the Earth frowningly, chidingly, and then it trembled; he toucheth the hills, and they ſmoak, that is, they are as all one fire; the natural hills ſmoak at Gods touch, and ſo do the metaphorical hills; when God toucheth the great men of the Earth they ſmoak, preſently they fret and fume, till they break out into a flame of rage, heating and vexing both themſelves and all that are near them (Iſa. 50. 2.) Behold, at my rebuke, I dry up (or I can dry up) the Sea; I am as able to do it now with a word of my mouth, as I once did for the deliverance of your forefathers (Exod. 14. 21. 29.) I make (or I can make when I will with my rebuke) the rivers a wilderneſs (that is, as dry as a deſart or wilderneſs uſeth to be) their fiſh ſtinketh, becauſe there is no water, and dyeth for thirſt. What ſtrange work doth the rebuke of God make? By that he drieth the Sea, by that he maketh the river a wilderneſs: and as he doth this by the power of his reproofs upon the Sea and Rivers natural, ſo upon the Sea and Rivers miſtical. He can dry up thoſe worldly helps which ſeem as inexhauſtible as the Sea, and as laſting and conſtant to us as a River which is fed with a continual Spring. And when any power riſeth up againſt us as deep and dangerous as the Sea, as well ſupplied and ſeconded as a Rive, yet we need not fear for God can preſently dry it up, and make us a paſſage over it, or through it. Yea they who are as well bottom'd and foundation'd as the Earth, ſhall quickly feel the effects of his power (Pſal. 114. 7.) Tremble thou Earth at the preſence of the Lord, at the preſence of the God of Jacob. But ſome may ſay, if the Earth trembleth at the preſence of God, then the Earth muſt alwayes tremble, for God is alwayes preſent; or what is the preſence of God there ſpoken of? I anſwer, as there is a preſence of God, that maketh all thoſe that enjoy it to ſing for joy; In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at thy right hand are pleaſures for ever more (Pſal. 16. 11.) ſo there is a preſence of God that is very terrible to the creature; yea that preſence of God which is comfortable to his people, is terrible to his enemies; for when the Pſalmiſt had ſaid (verſ. 2.) Judah was his Sanctuary, and Iſrael his Dominion; that is, a people ſanctified to him, and governed and protected by him; preſently it followeth, The Sea ſaw it and fled, Jordan was driven back; The mountains skipped like Rams, and the little hills like Lambs. The Pſalmiſt perceiving all things in ſuch a trembling fit and confuſion, ſeems to wonder what the matter was, and therefore puts the queſtion, What ailed thee, O thou Sea, that thou fleddeſt, yea mountains that ye skipped? &c. And preſently maketh anſwer, Tremble thou Earth at the preſence of the Lord; as if he had ſaid, the cauſe of all this terror and trouble among the creatures, was nothing elſe but the preſence of God. And if the very ſence-leſs creatures were ſenſible of his wrathful preſence, how much more muſt man both be ſenſible of it, and ſtoop unto it. This the Lord inſinuates by a cutting queſtion (Ezek. 22. 14.) Can thy heart indure, or can thy hands be ſtrong in the day that I ſhall deal with thee, I the Lord have ſpoken it, and will do it. The Lord by his Prophet ſpeaks there to a people that had a double ſtrength; they were ſtrong hearted, and they were ſtrong handed; they had much force or outward power, and they had much courage or inward power; but neither hand-ſtrength, nor heart-ſtrength; neither force nor courage ſhall avail you in that day (ſaith the Lord) that I ſhall deal with you after the dealings of an enemy in wrath and Judgment. God ſtrengthens the hands of his ſervants and encourageth their hearts to endure his ſevereſt dealings with them. But when he cometh to deal ſeverely with thoſe who are rebellious and wicked, their hearts who are ſtouteſt among them ſhall not be able to endure, nor can they ſtrengthen their hands; They who have ſtrengthned their hearts and hands moſt to commit ſin, ſhall be leaſt able to ſtrengthen them for the bearing of the puniſhment of ſin.

And hence by way of Corollary or Inference conſider.

Firſt, If the pillars of Heaven tremble before God, if pillars (whoſe nature is to ſtand ſtill) move at the preſence of God, what ſhall become of weak man, of man who is a worm? If the pillars of Heaven tremble at the reproof of God, then certainly the pillars of the Earth cannot ſtand faſt at his reproof. The pillars of Heaven are the ſtrongeſt pillars. When Jehu ſent Letters to Samaria unto the rulers of Jezreel, adviſing them to ſet up one of the ſons of Ahab King and fight for him, the Text ſaith (2 King. 10. 4.) They were exceedingly affraid, and ſaid, Behold two Kings ſtood not before him, how then can we ſtand?

ſtand? And thus may the ſtrongeſt pillars on Earth cry out with fear at the diſpleaſure and reproofs of God. Behold the pillars of Heaven tremble and are aſtoniſhed at his reproofs, how then can we be eſtabliſhed? Some men are eſteemed to be like James, Cephas, and John, pillars in the Church (Gal. 2. 9.) and others are pillars in States and Common-wealths; ſo we may expound that of Hannah in her ſong (1 Sam. 2. 8.) The pillars of the Earth (that is, earthly powers or Magiſtrates) are the Lords, and he hath ſet the world upon them, for, indeed, the world would ſoon fall into confuſion, and ſhatter to pieces (as to its civil capacity) if the Lord had not founded it upon pillars of Government and Magiſtracy, or ſet up Magiſtrates and Governors as the pillars of it. And yet how often have theſe pillars of the Earth trembled? How many of them have fallen and been broken at the rebukes of God? There is a ſort of pillars that ſhall never be moved; how great an honour is it to be made ſuch a pillar, and Chriſt hath taught us who ſhall be made ſuch a one (Rev. 3. 12.) Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the Temple of my God; ſuch pillars ſhall not tremble, they ſhall not be aſtoniſhed, when all the pillars of the world are caſt down with trembling and aſtoniſhment. David hath a ſtrange expreſſion (Pſal. 75. 3.) The Earth and all the inhabitants of it are diſſolved (if ſo, whence was it that they were not utterly ruin'd and deſtroyed? He anſwers) I bear up the pillars of it. But how could David bear up the pillars of the Earth, when all was diſſolved? He means it not of a Natural but Civil diſſolution; things were out of order, the bands and ligaments of government were ſorely broken, men were divided into parties and factions. Thus the Earth, and inhabitants thereof were diſſolved, which is the ſadeſt condition a people can be in; when it was thus, when there was ſuch a rupture among the people, then David the chief Governor (under God) laboured to heal the breaches, and to be a pillar to thoſe ſhaking pillars. He by his great wiſdom, juſtice, moderation, and faithfulneſs, bore up the bearers of the people, and ſupported their ſupporters, whether perſons or things; as if he had ſaid, though there be much confuſion in the Earth, yet the Lord enables me to keep things together, ſo that they fall not to the ground, and are not utterly ruined. It is a great honour to be a pillar bearing up the building, but it is a greater honour to be a pillar bearing up the pillars. All good Magiſtrates have the former honour, and all ſupreme Magiſtrates if good, have the latter; yet both theſe honours do originally and primarily belong unto God; who as he make the pillars of Heaven tremble, ſo he can firmly ſettle (and will while they willingly ſerve his ends and intereſts) the pillars of the Earth, though but earthly pillars.

Secondly, Take this alſo by way of Corolary from the Text; If the pillars of Heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at the reproof of God; what ſhall we ſay of thoſe men, or of the heardneſs of their hearts?

Firſt, Who, hear the reproofs of God dayly, and yet tremble not; What? Do the pillars of Heaven tremble at the reproof of God, and ſhall not men! Yet, thus more then brutiſh are many men; they hear reproofs, ſevere reproofs againſt ſin, yet they tremble no more then the ſtones they ſtand upon, nor are moved any more then the ſeats they ſit upon; let God thunder, and lighten, and chide, and threaten, they are not ſtirred with it; the pillars of Heaven ſhall riſe up in judgment againſt this dedolent and obdurate generation. The Prophet (Jer. 36.24.) reports a ſad ſtory of this, a threatning roll was ſent to Jehoiakim King of Judah, written from the mouth of Jeremiah by Baruck; the King cauſed it to be read as he ſate at the fire, and then (whereas it might have been expected that he ſhould be cut at the heart with godly ſorrow and contrition for his ſin) he cut it with the Penknife and caſt it into the fire that was on the hearth untill all the roll was conſumed in the fire that was on the hearth; yet they were not afraid nor rent their garments, neither the King, or any of his ſervants that heard all theſe words; as if it had been ſaid, what a wonderful hardneſs was there upon the hearts of theſe men, that they could hear ſuch words read, words ſo full of terror, words cloathed with ſuch reproofs, words which ſpake nothing but death, wrath, deſtruction, ruine, and deſolation; yet notwithſtanding all this they were not afraid, neither the King nor any of his ſervants regarded it. The heart of man is more hard then hardneſs it ſelf, till God ſoften it, or breaketh it; man moves not, he relents not, let God reprove and thunder, let God do what he will, and ſay what he will, let God make (as it were) a Hell upon the Earth, and in the greateſt earneſt, caſt abroad his firebrands, arrows, and death, in the dreadfulleſt repreſentations of wrath and judgment, yet man trembles not, nor is he any more aſtoniſhed then if all this was ſpoken in jeſt.

Secondly, What ſhall we ſay of thoſe who as they tremble not when they hear the reproofs of God, ſo they tremble not when they ſee his reproofs. When God makes his reproofs viſible, and writes them in blood; when he brings forth his reproofs in woful effects (for as all our mercies and comforts are nothing elſe but the promiſes made viſible; ſo all the judgments which God brings upon the world, are nothing but his reproofs and threatnings made viſible, when (I ſay) he brings forth his reproofs in woful effects) how deſperately and indeed (though it may ſeem a contradiction) how preſumptuouſly are they hardned in ſin, whoſe eye never affects their heart, who can ſee ſuch reproofs of God yet never tremble. It is ſaid in the Law of Moſes that puniſhment ſhould be openly executed upon the preſumptuous ſinner (Deut. 17. 13.) that all the people ſhould hear and fear and do no more preſumptuouſly; if all upon the hearing, ſhould fear, and fear ſo as to do ſo no more, how much more ſhould all that ſee fear, and do ſo no more?

Thirdly, What ſhall we ſay of thoſe who not only hear and ſee the reproofs of God, but feel them alſo, and yet tremble not: when the Rod is upon their backs, a Sword in their bowels, Judgments round about them, and Death climbing up at their windows; yet they are not aſtoniſhed, they are not only Word proof, but Judgment proof: they are not ſenſible of what they feel, they are ſmitten, yet not ſick, ſorrow and grief of heart toucheth them not, though they are ſmitten for their ſins, and peirced with many ſorrows. They are ſo far from being troubled at the remembrance of former ſins while they ſmart under preſent afflictions, that with wicked King Ahaz they ſin yet more againſt God in the time of their affliction. They are ſo far from turning as wiſdom counſelleth us (Prov. 1. 23.) at the verbal reproofs of God, or at the reproofs of his mouth, that they will not return while he reproves them with his hand. Surely, at laſt the trembling pillars of Heaven ſhall reprove them, who tremble not, nor are aſtoniſhed at the reproofs of God.

Verſ. 12. He divideth the Sea by his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud.

The general ſcope and ſence of this verſe, is an illuſtration of the Power and Wiſdom of God by a twofold effect; Firſt, By dividing and vexing the mighty Waters of the Sea with boyſterous Winds and Storms. Secondly, By ſtopping and appeaſing them when they are in their higheſt rage and proudeſt fury, as if they were ſmitten to death.

First, He divideth the Sea by his power.

The word which we render to divide, hath a twofold ſignification, in a contrariety, as is frequent in the Hebrew; Firſt, To move and roul, to ſtir up, and trouble, as the waters and waves of the Sea are by the winds; which do ſo move and ſtir them as that they ſeem to divide and cut them aſunder, and cauſe them to daſh one againſt another, and ſo it is applicable to the Sea in a ſtorm. Secondly, It ſignifies to quiet and appeaſe, and ſo it is applicable to the Sea in a calm. The ſeventy render it, ſo here, He hath appeaſed the Sea by his power: and a learned Hebrician gives the ſame ſence, By his power the Sea is quiet. And 'tis indeed an act of the ſame power to quiet the Sea, to huſh the winds, and command a calm, as to raiſe ſtorms upon the Sea, or to put the Sea into a ſtorm; but I ſhall not proſecute that ſenſe in this firſt part of the verſe, becauſe the latter part of it ſpeaks rather of that point, as will appear in the opening of it; and ſo the whole verſe giveth us a compleat deſcription of the mighty power of God upon the mighty waters; firſt, in cauſing their rage and fury; ſecondly, in cauſing them to be ſtill, and quiet. The exerciſe exerciſe of which two powers carry a compleat Empire and Dominion over the Seas.

He divideth the Sea.] There is a general interpretation of the verſe which I ſhall touch before I pitch upon that which I conceive moſt proper. This diviſion of the Sea, and ſmiting through the proud, is ſuppoſed to be a deſcription of Gods dealing with Pharoah and his Egyptians, when he brought the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, at which time (the Hiſtory telleth us that) he divideth the ſea by his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmote through the proud, or through Rahab. The diviſion of the ſea is unqueſtionable (Exod. 14. 21.) And Moſes ſtretched out his hand over the ſea, and the Lord cauſed the ſea to go back by a ſtrong Eaſt-wind all that night, and made the ſea dry land, and the waters were divided. The latter part of the verſe is as clear in the plain ſignification of it, to the ſame work of providence, for then, By his underſtanding did God ſmite through the proud. And the word Rahab, which we tranſlate proud, is often uſed in Scripture to ſignifie Egypt. Thus (Pſal. 87.4.) I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me, that is, of Egypt and Babylon; as if he had ſaid, thoſe places which have been the greateſt enemies to the people of God ſhall deſire to joyn with the people of God, Sion ſhall have converts from Egypt and Babylon. And the reaſon why Egypt is expreſſed in Scripture under this word, ariſeth from both ſignifications of it; Firſt, Strength, for Egypt was a very ſtrong Nation, and therefore the Iſraelites were reproved for going to them for help, and relying upon their ſtrength, which though great in it ſelf, yet ſhould be to them but a broken reed. Secondly, As it ſignifieth pride, or the proud; men are uſually proud of ſtrength, and Egypt being a ſtrong nation, was alſo a very proud nation; yet this Egypt, this Rahab, ſtrong and proud, ſhall fall down and humble her ſelf before the Lord. And though now Egyptians be ſtrangers from the Common wealth of Iſrael, yet of them it ſhall be ſaid that they were born (by a ſecond or new ſpiritual birth) in Sion. We have the like ſence of the word, and almoſt the ſame phraſe of ſpeech with this in Job (Pſal. 89. 9, 10.) Thou ruleſt the raging of the ſea, when the waves thereof ariſe thou ſtilleſt them; then followeth in the next words, Thou haſt broken Rahab as one that is ſlain (that is Egypt) thou haſt ſcattered thine enemies with thy ſtrong arm. And again (Iſa. 51.9.) Awake, awake O arm of the Lord, put on ſtrength. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, Thou haſt ſcattered thine enemies with thy ſtrong arm, the Prophet prayeth Awake, awake O arm of the Lord, As in the ancient dayes, in the generations of old: art thou not it, that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon? art not thou it which hath dried the ſea? &c. Which plainly hints the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt in the Red-ſea. Job alſo ſeems to aim at that noble, and notable act of divine power, and underſtanding: And the words of the Text (as all muſt grant) without any ſtrain or trouble are applicable to it. The only difficulty lieth in this, becauſe it is not agreed upon by Chronologers, who have ſearched ſtrictly and critically into thoſe times, that Job lived after the departure of the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, yea ſome affirm, that Job died that very year when the Iſraelites departed out of Egypt, and if ſo, then he could not make inſtance ſo many years before he died (unleſs prophetically) concerning that miraculous diviſion of the Red-ſea, and the deſtruction of the Egyptians. Beſides this, another argument is alledged to invalidate this interpretation, becauſe all along Job inſtanceth in the general works of God, what he doth in the heavens, in the earth, in the air, and here in the Sea; ſo that it doth not ſeem probable that Job ſhould deſcend to the mention of that particular providence of God to the Iſraelites; though that may ſerve for a glorious proof and illuſtration of the point upon which Job hath ſo long inſiſted. The works of God in ordering the works of nature, bear the reſemblance of his works among the children of men; his repreſſing the raging of the Sea looketh like his repreſſing the rage of the wicked, who are like the troubled Sea.

Hæc accipere de decem plagis Egypti vix permittit ætas Jobi, quē mortuū putant & anno quam Iſraelitæ egreſſi ſunt ex Egypto. Druſ. Non placet hæc referre ad diviſionem maris rubri in Egypto Iſraelitarū gratia, quia ante illud tēpus credimus fuiſſe Job & generalitèr potius loquitur de dei operibus. Merc.

He divideth the Sea by his power.

We may take that act two wayes; either, Firſt, As dividing is uſed in an ordinary ſenſe, to cut out and part one thing or one piece of a thing from another. It is a great and powerful work of God, to divide the Sea, or the whole bulk of waters to ſeveral parts of the world, and for the accommodation of ſeveral Countries. At firſt the waters covered the whole earth, all was a great deep, and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters (Gen. 1. 2.) Nothing was to be ſeen, or there was no face of any thing but water. And therefore as it is ſaid (Gen. 1. 7.) that the Lord ſeparated or divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament. So (Gen. 1.9) God ſaid let the waters under the heavens be gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appear, and it was ſo, and God called the dry land earth, and the gathering together of waters he called Sea. And as that Scripture in Geneſis ſheweth that the Sea is the gathering together of waters; ſo other Scriptures ſhew that the waters of the Sea are divided or run out in ſeveral Diviſions. The 104 Pſalm is a continued meditation of the mighty power of God put forth both in creation and providence; where the Pſalmiſt having ſaid of God (verſ. 5.) Who laid the foundations of the earth that it ſhould not be removed for ever; he addeth (verſ. 6, 7, 8.) Thou covereſt it (that is, the whole earth) with the deep as with a garment; the waters ſtood above the mountains (that is, the waters were higher then the higheſt mountains.) But what did God then? at thy rebuke they fled, at the voice of thy thunder they haſted away (that is, when thou didſt ſpeak powerfully and ſtrongly to them, as with the voice of thunder) they go up by the mountains, they go down by the valleys, unto the place which thou haſt founded for them: thou haſt ſet them bounds that they may not paſs over, that they return not again to cover the earth. As the waters are now put into one great veſſel, ſo they are carried out in ſeveral great channels all the world over for the conveniency of traffick, and for the more eaſie intercourſe of nation with nation. Mr. Broughton expounds his tranſlation fully to this purpoſe; Of a general water, he made many; and he tranſlates the latter part of the verſe fully to that ſence; And by his wiſdom he parted the main water, or pride, that is, the proud Sea, that threatneth to drown the land. So that though the Sea be but one body of waters, yet it is divided into many members, and receives different names, according to the differing names, whether of Iſlands or Continents, whoſe ſhoars it waſheth.

Secondly, Others expound this diviſion of the Sea, of the violent motion of the Sea. So, He divideth the Sea, is, he maketh the Sea rage, and waters riſe up againſt waters, as perſons or nations do when they are divided among themſelves. Sometimes the Sea is (as if it were) all of one piece, in union, and concord, all is calm and quiet; by and by, the Lord divides the Sea, ſets wave againſt wave, flood againſt flood, water againſt water, as if the Sea were broken into a thouſand factions. It is ſaid in that myſtical Scripture (Dan. 7. 2.) That the Prophet ſaw in his viſion by night, and Behold the four winds of heaven ſtrove upon the great Sea; That is, there were great troubles and commotions raiſed in all parts of the world, which vexed divided, and turmoiled the nations, even as the Sea is when boiſterous winds, eſpecially when all the winds are let out of priſon to ſtrive and contend with one another. Men make many fights at Sea, and God many times makes the Seas fight. Which fightings and dividings of the Sea, are a clear emblem of all the diviſions and fights, which ariſe among men, and are acted either at Land or Sea.

> Hence Note, The diviſions, ſtorms, and ragings of the ſea are by the power of God.

The Pſalmiſt is much upon this, (Pſal. 107. 23, 24, 25.) They that go down to the ſea in ſhips, that do buſineſs in great waters, theſe ſee the works of the Lord in the deep; for he commandeth and raiſeth up the ſtormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof: (where note, they are lifted up by Gods command) they mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths, their ſoul is melted becauſe of trouble. (Jon. 1.4.) The Lord ſent out a great wind into the ſea, and there was a mighty tempeſt in the ſea. (Jer. 10. 13.) God is ſaid to bring the wind out of his treaſure: And (Prov. 30.4.) To gather the wind in his fiſt. The wind is ſent out, and the wind is gathered in, 'tis treaſured up, and 'tis disburſed out by his own appointment to ſerve his providences and deſigns towards men, both in mercy and in Judgment.

We may hence infer, That As the Lord divideth the ſea, ſo the earth.

When men are all of a mind, all as one man, he can ſever and divide their ſpirits, and then cauſe them to daſh againſt one another like the waves of a tempeſtuous ſea. The old world was of one mind, but the Lord came down and divided them, when he ſaw them united in that work (Gen. 11.6.) The people are one, and they have all one language, and this they begin to do, and now nothing will be reſtrained from them which they have imagined to do: ſo the Lord confounded their language, and ſcattered them abroad. They were building a Babel to ſecure themſelves againſt a ſecond deluge, and to get them a name, leſt they ſhould be ſcattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth. Therefore God brought their fears upon them, and ſcattered them. We lay our ſelves moſt open to that judgment, which we labour moſt to prevent in a ſinful way. As there are diviſions among men which are their ſin, ſo God ſends diviſions among men which are their puniſhment. And as God ſends diviſions among men for the puniſhment of ſome, ſo for the probation or tryal of others. Chriſt ſaith (Mat. 10.35.) I am come to ſet a man at variance againſt his father, and the daughter with her mother, and the daughter in law againſt her mother in law; and a mans enemies ſhall be they of his own houſe. Such diviſions the Lord makes on the earth, that it may appear how ſtrongly and immoveably his faithful ones are united unto him. As we are to aſcribe our union, ſo our diviſions to God; it is he that ordereth all theſe things, though they flow from the corruption, pride, and ſelfiſhneſs of men. When there are diviſions and emulations among us, we ſhew our ſelves (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 3.3.) and walk as men; But God ſheweth himſelf righteous, and acteth as God; He divideth the ſea by his power,

And by his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud.

The dividing of the ſea was aſcribed to the power of God in the former part of the verſe, and here his ſmiting through the proud is aſcribed to his underſtanding. The word ſignifies to ſtrike ſo, as to deſtroy, or ſtrike dead (Iſa. 30.26. Numb. 24.8.) God ſtriketh home when he ſtriketh the proud.

But who or what are the proud ones, whom God ſmiteth through? The word is Rahab, (as was toucht before in the general interpretation of the verſe) which ſignifies two things; Firſt, Strength, ſo ſome render it here; By his underſtanding he ſmiteth through ſtrength; that is, thoſe things which are ſtrongeſt. The very weakneſs of God is ſtronger then man, and therefore there is nothing ſo ſtrong, but God can quickly ſmite it through or deſtroy it. Secondly, It ſignifieth pride; becauſe men uſually are proud of their ſtrength; whence that caution (Jer. 9.23.) Let not the mighty man glory in his might. Any kind of ſtrength is apt to make man proud; the ſtrength of his eſtate, and purſe, is a great temptation to pride; ſtrength of body, ſtrength of parts, ſtrength of wit and underſtanding (which is the higheſt, and nobleſt natural ſtrength) puts on to pride; yea (ſo ſtrange are the wayes and methods of temptation) the very ſtrength of grace or ſpiritual ſtrength hath blown up ſome with pride: For though humility flow properly from the ſtrength of grace, and the more grace the more humility, yet upon a preſumption of the greatneſs and ſtrength of their graces, ſome have been proud and high minded, that is, they have not lived in ſuch dependance upon Chriſt as they ought. Our ſtrength lies much in the ſence of our weakneſs, becauſe, then we go out of our ſelves to Chriſt for ſtrength, that is the meaning of the Apoſtles confeſſion, When I am weak, then am I ſtrong (2 Cor. 12.10.) And they who are ſtrong in themſelves, muſt needs be weak, becauſe the ſtrength of God goeth out againſt them. And therefore it will not be unprofitable for us, before I come to the ſpecial explication of the proud here intended, to meditate upon and make uſe of this Scripture in the full latitude and compaſs of the word. For whoſoever he is that is proud, whether he be proud of his natural or civil or ſupernatural ſtrength, let him look to himſelf: God underſtandeth him, and by his underſtanding he will ſmite through the proud. The proud man is alwayes in danger of falling, though (becauſe of his pride) he leaſt of all men, either feareth or ſuſpecteth a fall. How can they be ſafe againſt whom God hath declared himſelf an enemy? There's no armour of proof againſt the ſtroaks of God; if God ſmiteth an enemy, he ſmiteth through, and ſo he alwayes ſmiteth the proud. Saul attempted more then once to ſmite David to the wall with his Javelin; yet David avoided his blow, and got out of his furious preſence; But when God caſteth his Javelin at the proud, they ſhall not eſcape a ſmiting through and nailing to the wall. By his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud.

But more diſtinctly, who is the proud in the Text whom God ſmiteth through?

Firſt, Some ſay the Devil; He indeed is the proud one, his pride was his fall from God, and God hath ſmitten him through for his pride.

Et ſcientia ſtratus eſt cetus. 70. i.e. ſuo imperio ſubegit.

Secondly, Others underſtand by the proud, the Whale in the ſea; thus the ſeventy tranſlate, and by his knowledge he hath deſtroyed the Whale or Leviathan, of whom the Lord ſaith (in Chap. 41. of this book, verſ. 34.) He is a King over all the children of pride.

Intelligentia ſua percuſſit Gigantus. Targ.

Thirdly, The Chaldee paraphraſe ſaith, He hath ſmitten through the Giants. Which whether it be meant of the Whales who are Giants among the fiſhes of the ſea; or of Giants who are like Whales at land, bigger and more formidable then the reſt of men, the ſence is the ſame; both agreeing in this, that God can quickly deſtroy and ſubdue thoſe who are greateſt, ſtrongeſt, and ſo proudeſt in this world. But leaving all theſe ſuppoſitions, I ſhall conclude.

Percutit, i.e. domat & compeſcit ſuperbiam maris. Druſ. Sua potentia ſcindit mare & intelligentia ſua compeſcit ejus ferociã. Tygur. Cum deus tranquillat mare, percutere & conculcare videtur ſuperbũ. Pined.

Fourthly, That by the proud, we are rather to underſtand the ſtrong and mighty waves and waters of the Sea in their greateſt height and pride. This holdeth faireſt correſpondence with the former part of the verſe, He divideth the Sea by his power, that is, He raiſeth ſtorms, nnd ſo divides the waters, and when the Sea is in its greateſt rage, then by his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud, the proud waves, and ſo maketh a calm. The ſea in it ſelf, eſpecially in its ſwellings and ſtormings is a proud creature, and that title or epethite of pride is often given to it: we read (Pſal. 124.5.) of proud waters, and (Job 38.11.) of the proud waves, at verſ. 13. of the Epiſtle of Jude, we read, of raging waves of the ſea, and (Luke 21.25.) of roaring waves of the ſea. The Prophet (Jer. 12.5.) ſpeaketh of the ſwelling of Jordan. So that when Job ſaith, by his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud, we may clearly interpret him of the ſea-waves, then which nothing in appearance is more proud and ſwelling; and therefore when God allayeth and guideth the high grown waves of the Sea, he may well be ſaid, to ſmite through the proud.

Hence Note, God knoweth how to bring down the Sea in its greateſt rage and pride.

God doth it by his underſtanding, as well as by his power. As God hath power enough to divide the Sea, and make it ſtormy, ſo he hath underſtanding enough to calm and quiet it. We read (Mat. 8.23,24,25,26,27.) That Chriſt being entred into a ſhip with his diſciples, a great tempeſt aroſe, inſomuch that the ſhip was covered with the waves, but he was aſleep. And his diſciples came to him and awake him, ſaying, Lord ſave us, we periſh. And he ſaith unto them, why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? then he aroſe, and rebuked the winds and the Sea, and there was a great calm. This is a plain exemplification and expoſition of Jobs aſſertion, by his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud. When the Sea was as furious as a mad man, who hath loſt his reaſon, and will hear none, yet then Chriſt by his divine power and wiſdom made it as obedient as they who have and act moſt reaſon are, when they hear the moſt rational and preſſing perſwaſions, or (we may ſay) that he huſht the Sea as a mother doth her crying child, and rock't it into a ſleep; yea he doth not only calm the ſea, but kill it, or ſtrike it dead (as the word of the Text imports.) There is a particular ſea which is called The dead ſea: But God can make all the ſeas dead ſeas, and then he delights moſt to do it, when they threaten to ſwallow up all living.

This may be a great ſupport to us among the ſtorms which we meet with here at land. When men and nations are divided and raging againſt one another, God can quiet them. It is an eaſie matter to make diviſions among men, but it calls for much holy skill and wiſdom, even the wiſdom of God, to heal and ſoder them. And when the ſpirits of men are proudeſt and lifted up like the high waves of the ſea, then uſually 'tis Gods time to appear and ſtrike them through; At his word (as the Prophet ſpeaks, (Iſa. 11. 13.) The envy of Ephraim ſhall depart, and the adverſaries of Judah ſhall be cut off, Ephraim ſhall not envy Judah, and Judah ſhall not vex Ephraim. Whence is it that Ephraim envyeth Judah? whence it is that Judah vexeth Ephraim? is it not from their pride? ſaith not Solomon (Prov. 13. 10.) By pride cometh contention. How then ſhall the contention between Ephraim and Judah ceaſe, but by ſtriking through their pride? When there is leſs pride among men, there will be more peace, and God will ſmite the proudeſt rather then his people ſhall not have peace. As the Jews were divided among themſelves, ſo likewiſe were the Jewes and Gentiles, Till Chriſt reconciling both to God in one body by the Croſs, did ſlay enmity thereby (Epheſ. 2. 16.) And how did he ſlay their enmity, even by ſmiting through their pride, and humbling their ſpirits under his own croſs or ſufferings, by which, and the throne of Grace, they were at once reconciled to God, and one to another.

Secondly, That God who can appeaſe the rage of the proud ſeas, can alſo appeaſe or deſtroy the rage of the proudeſt men who oppoſe his people. So ſome underſtand that, (Zech. 10. 11.) where we have a propheſie of bringing the children of Iſrael out of Egypt and Aſſyria into their own land; And he ſhall paſs through the ſea with affliction, and he ſhall ſmite through the waves in the ſea; and all the deeps of the river ſhall dry up; that is, Chriſt the deliverer of his people ſhall paſs through the nations, who are like the Red ſea, ſtanding in the way of his peoples return, and he will afflict them, or bring much affliction upon them, and he will ſmite thoſe who like proud waves ſhall threaten to ſwallow them up, ſo that the deeps of the river, even thoſe hindrances, which it was thought could never be removed, ſhall dry up at his command or rebuke, and the pride of Aſſyria ſhall be brought down, and the ſcepter of Egypt ſhall depart away, that is, they who ſhall then be to the people of God, as Egypt and Aſſyria were of old, hard Task-maſters and leaders of them into Captivity, ſhall be ſubdued and removed, when they are proudeſt and in their greateſt power. 'Tis matter of ſtrong conſolation to all the faithful, that they ſerve a God who is able to reconcile the divided ſpirits of his own people one to another, and cauſe all their envy to depart from them; who is able alſo to reconciſe their greateſt adverſaries to them, and either to ſlay their enmity, or to ſlay them as enemies.

Thirdly, 'Tis matter of comfort to the people of God. For he who can appeaſe the rage of the Sea, can alſo appeaſe the rage of Satan, and ſmite through the proud waves of his Temptations, Satan goeth about continually to raiſe ſtorms, and vex poor ſouls. O the rage of temptation that many poor ſouls are under, how do the billows of it riſe like a violent ſea, wave after wave, guſt after guſt. As God himſelf raiſeth ſtorms of temptation againſt a poor ſoul (thus David ſpake in his own caſe, Pſal. 42. 7. Deep calleth unto deep, at the noiſe of thy water-ſpouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me) which yet in due time he will appeaſe; ſo when Satan by his leave or command, direction, or permiſſion raiſeth ſtorms of temptation, which he hath no mind to allay, but rather to encreaſe and double daily more and more, yet O wearied and weather-beaten ſoul, be of good chear, the Lord can ſmite through the proud enemy Satan, with all his floods and waves of temptation, and make a calm.

Laſtly, Let them alſo remember this and be comforted, who find proud waves, proud luſts, and corruptions, ſtirring and raging like a Sea within them. For that which is ſaid by the Prophet of the wicked, is true in part of the righteous, and ſometimes it is in a very great meaſure fulfilled in them (The wicked are like the troubled Sea when it cannot reſt, (Iſa. 57. 20.) that is, they are like the Sea in a ſtorm, which is ſo, not only becauſe of the unquietneſs of their ſpirits about the providences and dealings of God with them, but becauſe their violent luſts hurry them this way and that way, as the ſea is toiled and toſſed by the windes; this (I ſay) is true alſo in part of Saints) ſome more, ſome leſs are like a troubled Sea, yea they have a Sea of ſinful luſts within them, which the Lord is pleaſed ſometimes to divide and ſtir up; their corruptions ſtorm and bluſter, and Satan labours to make them bluſter more and more. We daily hear the complaints and cryes of ſouls thus toſſed, coming to Chriſt, as his Diſciples once did, and crying to him, Maſter ſave us, we periſh; we fear we ſhall be over-whelmed and drowned in this black Sea of our corruptions. To ſuch Chriſt ſaith, O ye of little faith, wherefore do ye thus fear, cannot I ſmite through the proud, the proud waves of your hearts. Is unbelief the proud wave, that ye fear will ſwallow you up? Chriſt can give you ſuch an encreaſe of faith as ſhall ſwallow up your unbelief; is pride it ſelf the proud wave that is like to overwhelm you? Chriſt who ſmiteth through the proud in Judgment, will alſo ſmite through thy pride in mercy. It is a great act of grace in man to deſire God to ſtrike through his pride, and it is a great act of mercy to man when God doth ſo. The more God ſmiteth our ſins, the more he declares his love to and his care of our ſouls. The remainders of pride in the Saints ſhall be ſmitten through; but ſinners who remain in their pride ſhall be ſmitten through themſelves. God whoſe power and underſtanding are made known by ſmiting through the proud waves of the Sea, will at laſt make his Juſtice and his holineſs known by ſmiting through the proud hearts of men, or rather men of proud hearts. Proud men ſtrike at God, yea kick againſt him, no wonder then if he ſtrike and kick them. All the ſufferings of Chriſt are wrapt up under that one word. His humiliation, implying that he was ſmitten for all our ſins, ſo moſt of all for our pride. That man whoſe pride is not ſmitten to death or mortified by the death of Chriſt, ſhall ſurely be ſmitten to death, even to eternal death for his pride. As God underſtandeth throughly who are proud, ſo by his underſtanding he will ſmite through the proud.

VERS. 14, 15, 16, 17.

By his Spirit he hath garniſhed the heavens: his hand hath formed the crooked Serpent.

Lo, theſe are parts of his wayes, but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can underſtand?

JOB hath given us a particular of many illuſtrious works of God, what he doth in the depths below, and what in the heights above; in this verſe he gives another inſtance, and that a very choice one, upon the ſame ſubject. As if he had ſaid; After all this large diſcourſe which I have made of the works of God, I will conclude with that which is the moſt remarkable piece of them all. This is he who hath adorn'd the heavens with that unutterable beauty wherewith they ſhine; and the ſphears which wind and turn round about the heavens like Serpents, are ſmoothed and poliſhed by his hand.

Verſ. 13. By his Spirit he hath garniſhed the heavens.

The Spirit of God is taken two wayes in Scripture. Firſt, For the power of God. Secondly, And ſo here, for God, the power as diſtinct from the Father and the Son, by whom God wrought all things in the creation of the world (Gen. 1. 2.) The Earth was without form and void, and darkneſs was upon the face of the deep, and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. It is a rule in Divinity, That the external works of the Trinity are undivided; and ſo the Three Perſons concurred in the making of the world. God the Father created, and is called Father in Scripture, not only in relation to the Eternal ineffable Generation of God the Son, but alſo in reference to the production of the creature. God the Son, or the Eternal word created, (John 1. 1, 2, 3.) In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God; All things were made by him, and without him was nothing made that was made. God the Spirit or Holy Ghoſt, he likewiſe created, and he only is mentioned by Moſes diſtinctly, or by name, as the Agent in the Original Conſtitution of all things. And the Hebrew word (rendred in our tranſlation moved, the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters) by which the Agency of the Spirit in that great work is expreſſed, carryeth in it a very accurate ſignificancie of that formative vertue or power which the Spirit put forth about it. For it is a metaphor taken from birds who ſit upon their eggs to hatch and bring forth their young ones; and ſo importeth the effectual working of the Spirit, whereby that confuſed maſs or heap was drawn out and formed up into thoſe ſeveral creatures ſpecified by Moſes in the Hiſtory of the Creation; Among which we find the garniſhing of the heavens, ſpoken of here by Job, is reported by Moſes for the work of the Fourth day. Further, we may conſider the heavens; Firſt, In their matter and being; Secondly, In their beauty and ornaments. Job ſpeaks of the latter.

By his Spirit he hath garniſhed the heavens.

God hath not only created, but polliſhed, and (as it were) painted or embroidered the heavens. The Original word implyeth the making of them beautiful, contentful, and pleaſant unto the eye; this is the Lords work. And therefore as the whole world, becauſe of the excellent order and beauty of it is expreſt in the Greek by a word that ſignifies beautiful, ſo ſome parts of the world have a ſpecial beauty and luſtre put upon them beyond the reſt. The heavens are not like a plain garment (as we ſay) without welt and guard, but they are laced and trimmed, they are enamel'd and ſpangled, they gliſter and ſparkle in our eyes with rayes and beams of light. By his Spirit he hath garniſhed the heavens.

Κοσμος.

If it be asked, what is this garniſhing of the heavens? I anſwer, the ſetting or placing in of thoſe excellent lights, ſun, Moon and Stars in the heavens, are the garniſhing of them. Light is beautiful, and the more light any thing hath, the more beauty it hath. Precious ſtones have much light in them; thoſe lights the Stars are as ſo many ſtones of beauty and glory ſet or moving in the heavens. Light as diffuſed and ſhed abroad in the air is exceeding delightful and beautiful, but light as it is contracted and drawn together into the Sun, Moon and Stars, is far more beautiful. Light in the air pleaſeth the eye, but light in the Sun conquers and dazles the eye by the exceſſive beauty and brightneſs of it. In the firſt day of the Creation God ſaid; Let there be light, and there was light; but in the fourth day he ſaid, let there be lights, that is, let there be ſeveral veſſels, to receive, hold, and contain light, and then to iſſue it out among the inhabitants of the earth (Gen. 1. 14.) And God ſaid, let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for ſigns, and for ſeaſons, and for dayes, and for years, and let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth; and it was ſo. And God made two great lights, the greater light to rule the day, and the leſſer light to rule the night; he made the ſtars alſo, and God ſet them in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth. God in Creation did with the light, as he did with the waters, which being made were divided, the waters above the firmament were divided from the waters under the firmament, and the waters under the heaven he gathered together into one place (Gen. 1. 9.) God prepared a certain great veſſel into which the waters were called and gathered that they ſhould not ſpread over the earth, as they did at firſt, which gathering together of the waters God called Seas (Gen. 1. 10.) Thus the light which was ſpread and ſcattered through the air over all the earth; God gathered into ſeveral veſſels, and the gathering together of light he called Sun, Moon, and Stars, which are (as Job here calleth them) the garniſhing of the heavens.

Pulchritudo ei ornamenta cœlorũ ſtellæ ſunt, ſicut terræ animantia & plantæ.

Moſes epitomizeth or briefly ſums up his larger narrative of the Creation in theſe words (Gen. 2. 1.) Thus the heavens and the earth were finiſhed, and all the hoſt of them, that is, they were finiſhed not only as to their eſſentials, but ornamentals; not only was the foundation laid, the walls and pillars, the beams and rafters of that goodly ſtructure ſet up and perfected, but all the furniture of it was brought in, and the beauties of it compleated. Now, as gems, minerals, plants, trees, and all living creatures, are the garniſhing of the earth, and the hoſt of God there; ſo the Sun, Moon, and Stars, are the garniſhing of heaven, and the hoſt of God there. David ſpeaketh of theſe diſtinctly (Pſal. 33. 6.) By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the hoſt of them, by the breath of his mouth. All creatures whether placed in heaven or earth, are for their number, their ſtrength, their order, their readineſs at a call or command, the hoſt of God. Earthly Princes ſhew their power in their hoſts and armies; of what power God is, both his acts and his hoſts abundantly declare. And as theſe creatures are the armies or hoſt of God in heaven and earth, ſo they are the adornings and garniſhings of heaven and earth. Job in this place ſpeaketh only of the former, By his Spirit he hath garniſhed the heavens.

Only here take notice, that ſome expound the word Spirit, for the wind which bloweth in the air, and ſo render the Text thus; By his wind he garniſheth the heavens; As if this were Job's meaning, that God ſending forth the windes diſpelleth and ſcattereth thoſe clouds, fogs, and miſts, which often cover the face of the heavens, and hinder our beholding their glory and garniſhings. According to this interpretation the garniſhing of the heavens is nothing elſe but the removing of that which obſcureth the garniſhing of them. And it is true, that when the heavens are maskt over with clouds and darkneſs, God by the winds cleareth the air, and ſo reneweth the face of thoſe heavenly bodies. But I paſs by this, and ſhall only inſiſt upon the former expoſition of theſe words, as being more ſutable with Job's ſcope, and more expreſſive of the power and glory of God, in the great things which he hath wrought for us.

By his Spirit he garniſheth the heavens.

Hence learn, Firſt, We ought joyntly to acknowledge and give glory to the Father, Son, and Spirit, in the work of Creation.

Solomon in his advice to the young man ſaith (Eccl. 12. 1.) Remember thy creator in the dayes of thy youth. We tranſlate in the ſingular number, creator, but the Hebrew is plural, Creators; intimating the myſtery of the Holy Trinity, as Moſes alſo is conceived to do in that plural expreſſion (Gen. 1. 26.) And God ſaid, let us make man in our image after our likeneſs. And though this be added in a way of Eminency, when the particular creation of man is ſet down, yet we are to underſtand it ſo generally of the whole work of Creation; and as of the work of Creation, ſo of all other Divine works towards the creature. Redemption is the work of the Father and of the Spirit as well as of the Son, and ſanctification is the work of the Father and of the Son as well as of the Spirit. The three perſons work together, only they have a diſtinct manner of working, according to which each work is chiefly attributed to that perſon; and ſo creation is ſpecially appropriated to the Father, Redemption to the Son, and Sanctification to the Holy Ghoſt. Seeing then all Three work together in all things towards us, all three ought to be equally and eternally honoured, worſhipped, loved and obeyed by us. By his Spirit he hath garniſhed the heavens.

Secondly, Obſerve, The heavens are full of beauty; God hath not only made them, but adorn'd them.

What a rich and Royal Canopy hath God hung over the heads of poor worms, duſt and aſhes. God did not think it enough to give us a houſe, unleſs he gave us alſo a pleaſant houſe; he was not ſatisfied in ſetting up a large fabrick for us, unleſs he alſo furniſhed and garniſhed it for us. God hath made the world not only uſeful but contentful to us, he hath fitted it not only for our neceſſity but delight. The earth is beautiful, but the heavens exceed in beauty. The heavens are the Ceiling of our houſe, and the Stars are like Golden Studs and ſparkling Diamonds in that Ceiling. We may infer three things from the garniſhing of theſe heavens.

Firſt, If the heavens which we ſee are ſo glorious, what are the heavens which no eye hath ſeen? If God hath thus diſcernably adorned the firſt and ſecond heavens, how unconceiveable are the ornaments of the third heavens, If nature hath ſo much beauty in it, how beautiful a thing is glory? If God hath prepared ſuch heavens, as our eyes ſee, for thoſe who hate him, then ſurely eye hath not ſeen, ear hath not heard, nor hath it entred into the heart of man to underſtand what thoſe heavens are which God hath prepared for them, and for them alone, who love him. The light of theſe viſible heavens is but darkneſs to that inheritance of the Saints in light. The Moon light (if I may ſo ſpeak) of that ſtate, ſhall be better and more illuſtrious, then the Sun-light of this, and the light of the Sun ſhall be ſeven fold, as the light of ſeven dayes, in that great day when the Lord ſhall perfectly bind up all the breaches of his people, and heal the ſtroak of their wound. God, who by his Spirit hath garniſhed theſe heavens, will be himſelf with his Son and Spirit, the eternal garniſhing of thoſe heavens.

Secondly, Seeing God hath been ſo bountiful and munificent, as to garniſh the heavens for us, even for us, by his Spirit; ſeeing he hath provided ſuch a houſe for the comfort of our lives here, who never deſerved the meaneſt cottage, how ſhould we pray that he would garniſh our ſouls by the Spirit, as a heaven for himſelf to dwell in? or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Epheſ. 2.22.) That my may be builded for an habitation of God through the Spirit. God hath two houſes, an upper houſe, and a lower houſe; The heaven of heavens is his upper houſe, and the heaven of an holy and humble heart is his lower. God is every where, but he dwelleth no where but in a heaven; He dwelleth not in the heart of any man, till that be made a heaven, and that a heaven garniſhed by the Spirit. As the Sun Moon and Stars are the garniſhing of the natural heaven, ſo holy knowledge and the graces, faith, hope and love, are the garniſhing of thoſe ſpiritual heavens, the hearts of the ſons of men. And until their hearts be thus garniſhed, they are not an heaven for God, but a hell or habitation for the devil; and he puts furniture and garniſhings into them ſutable to himſelf, and fitting his own entertainment. We read in the Goſpel (Mat. 12.43.44.) That, when the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, ſeeking reſt and findeth none; Then he ſaith, I will return into my houſe from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty ſwept and garniſhed. Luſts and corruptions, unbelief, pride, wrath, envy, theſe are the garniſhings of Satans houſe. And as he delighteth moſt to dwell there where he findeth moſt of theſe garniſhings; ſo God delighteth moſt to dwell in that ſoul which is moſt garniſhed with grace. Then pray, and pray earneſtly that God who hath garniſhed the heavens by his Spirit for our uſe, would alſo garniſh our hearts by his Spirit, for his own uſe.

Thirdly, As this ſhould provoke us to pray that our hearts may be garniſhed as a houſe of delight, that God may dwell in us; So it ſhould provoke us to garniſh our lives, that God may be honoured by us. And as God hath not only made a good world for us, as to the matter, but made it pleaſant, and adorn'd it for us: ſo we ſhould ſtrive not only to do that which is good for the matter, but to put ornaments upon it, and make it pleaſant to our utmoſt in the eyes of God. We ſhould garniſh our works as God hath garniſhed his, God hath (as it were) poliſht and engraven his works for us by exquiſite art and skill, ſo that the workmanſhip is better then the matter; and ſhall we ſatisfie our ſelves, if we do that which is good for the matter, though we beſtow no coſt, no holy skill and workmanſhip upon it? ſhall we ſerve God only with plain work, when we ſee how curious and elaborate his works are? I grant, plain work is beſt, and moſt pleaſing to God, as plainneſs is oppoſed to hypocriſie; but plain work is not beſt as plainneſs is oppoſed to exactneſs. God loves to ſee ſome lace and trimming (in ſincerity) upon what we do; that is, it pleaſeth him, when he ſeeth that we do our beſt, and that we not only do good, but garniſh (to his praiſe) the good we do; he would have us not only walk in the truth, but honour the truth by our walkings. He would have us not only obey the doctrine, but (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Tit. 2. 10.) Adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things; or (to uſe Jobs language) Garniſh it, as he by his Spirit hath garniſhed the heavens.

And his hand hath formed the crooked ſerpent.

His hand.] That is, his power; hands are aſcribed to God in a figure, or in alluſion to men, who do all their external works by their hands. The hand is a noble and moſt ſerviceable Organ or Inſtrument, and therefore the great things which God hath done, eſpecially the heavens; are called the work of his hands, and his handy-work (Pſal. 19. 1.) yea the heavens are called the work of his fingers (Pſal. 8. 3.) Which notes (I conceive) the exactneſs and curioſity of the work, for ſuch are thoſe things which are wrought by the fingers. God being a Spirit inviſible and incorporal, hath no formal hands, but he hath a vertual hand. That executive power by which he performeth and bringeth about his will in every thing is his hand. This hand

Hath formed the crooked ſerpent.

There are ſeveral opinions about this crooked Serpent, who or what it ſhould be that Job here meaneth. The Hebrew is, The Serpent the bar. That is, The ſerpent which is like a bar or bolt of iron. Some render the flying or running ſerpent, becauſe as the bolt or bar of a door runneth from ſide to ſide, ſo that from place to place. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, the long ſerpent. But what is this ſerpent? Divers interpreters connect the ſence of theſe words with the former part of the verſe, and ſo place this crooked ſerpent in the heavens, as belonging to the garniſhing of them, or as if Job were giving a particular inſtance of what God hath done towards the garniſhing of the heavens; His hand hath formed the crooked ſerpent. By which they underſtand the cœleſtial circles or ſphears which are wrapt and involved one within another, as a ſerpent wrappeth and twineth himſelf in ſeveral rounds.

נחש ברח Serpentem vectem. Pagn. Serpentem fugacem. Mont. Serpentem oblongum. Jun.

Another following the ſame ſence expoundeth it of that which Aſtronomers call the milkey way, which is a beauty in heaven; It being (as it were) the coalition of a number of little ſtars, which becauſe they look white and milkiſh, are therefore called the milkey way; Which alſo hath ſomewhat of the form of a Serpent, as is evident to the eye of any diligent obſerver, Vatablus viam lacteā intelligit.

A third, keeping ſtill to that ſence, expoundeth it yet more particularly of that ſpecial conſtellation in the heavens known among Aſtronomers by the name of the dragon or ſerpent; Which is ſuppoſed to be ſpoken of here by Job ſynecdochically, putting a part for the whole, or one for all the other Conſtellations with which the heavens are garniſhed; As if it had been ſaid, His hand hath formed the crooked ſerpent; that is, all the Stars in their ſeveral ſhapes and configurations, among which one repreſenteth the form of a Lion, another of a Bear, another of a Ram, and among many others one appeareth in the form of a Dragon or Crooked ſerpent, ſhooting himſelf forth or forward like the bolt of a door.

I find a fourth ſort, who though they keep the crooked ſerpent of the Text ſtill in the heavens, yet they bring it down to a lower heaven, that is, from the ſtarry heaven, or from that heaven which is the ſubject of the Stars to the aiery heaven, which is the ſubject or ſhop in which the meteors, of all ſorts, are bred and formed, & among them there is a meteor called by Naturaliſts, the flying ſerpent: As if the meaning of theſe words, His hand hath formed the crooked ſerpent, were this, God hath wrought and formed by his power and wiſdom all thoſe fiery meteors that are often ſeen as it were flying and ſhooting in the air, to the wonder of many, and the aſtoniſhment of not a few There are the treaſures of the ſnow and of the hail, there God prepareth a way for the lightning of the thunder (Job 38. 22, 25.) Some learned Interpreters inſiſt much upon this Expoſition, placing the crooked ſerpent in the heavens, either the upper or lower, as hath been ſhewed under four diſtinct titles: nor can it be denied, but that the hand of God hath wrought all theſe things, much leſs can it be denied that the working of theſe things is a great argument and demonſtration of the power and wiſdom of God, which is the purpoſe of Job in this place; therefore I ſhall not totally lay it aſide: Neither yet will I leave it with the Reader as the ſpecial meaning of this place, for this reaſon, becauſe I much doubt, whether thoſe poetical phancies in giving ſuch fictitious names to the Stars of heaven, as, The Lion, the Bear, the Bull, the Dragon, the Serpent, &c. of which Philoſophers and Aſtronomers have made uſe, were at all born, or ever ſo much as heard of in thoſe elder times in which and before which Job lived. For though both in Chap. 9. of this book (verſ. 9.) as alſo in Chap. 38. (verſ. 21, 22.) many Names are given to the Stars, which both the Greek and Latine tranſlators, and we following them in the Engliſh, render by thoſe poetical names; yet the Original Hebrew words bear no alluſion at all to thoſe phancies. As for inſtance, The Hebrew word which we render Arcturus (Chap. 9.9.) hath nothing at all in it ſignifying, The Tail of a Bear. But here in this Text, the word properly ſignifyeth a crooked ſerpent and therefore to place it in the heavens as a Star, when as in the times when this was written, there is ſo little, if any probability at all, that any ſuch apprehenſions were taken up by any, or any ſuch alluſive names given to the Stars, ſeems to me ſomewhat improper.

There is another vein of interpretation carrying the ſence of theſe words, His hand hath formed the crooked ſerpent, to quit another point; for 'tis conceived by the Authors of this opinion, that as Job gave inſtance before in the works of God, above his higheſt works in nature, the garniſhing of the heavens; ſo he now giveth inſtance in his works below, or in his loweſt works. This general interpretation is delivered two wayes diſtinctly.

Firſt, That as God hath garniſhed the heavens, ſo he hath made and now governeth hell too, His hand hath formed the crooked ſerpent, that is, the Devil: That which favoureth this opinion, and hath poſſibly caſt the thoughts of many upon it, is, that in Scripture the Devil is often called a ſerpent, yea a crooked ſerpent, and that he acted a ſerpent as his inſtrument in the firſt temptation (Gen. 3. 1.) Now the ſerpent was more ſubtil then any of the beaſts of the field, which the Lord God had made, and he ſaid unto the woman; that is, The Devil in or by the Serpent ſaid unto her, &c. He hath well deſerved to be called a Serpent who acted his firſt malice againſt mankind by the help of a Serpent. And for his thus early making uſe of a Serpent, he is called not only a ſerpent but, that old ſerpent, (Rev. 12. 9.) The great Dragon was caſt out, that old ſerpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was caſt out into the earth, and his Angels were caſt out with him. The hand of God hath formed this crooked ſerpent. To clear which ſome interpret the former part of the verſe in compliance with this ſence, for the good Angels, thus, By his ſpirit he hath garniſhed the heavens; that is, he hath beſtowed excellent gifts upon the Angels, who are the great ornament of heaven and may tropically be called heaven, as men are called earth. And as holy, wiſe, juſt, and faithful men, are the ornaments, and garniſhings of the earth, ſo the holy Angels are the garniſhings of heaven, they having ſuch mighty power and excellent gifts. Now (ſaith this interpretation) as God garniſhed the heavens with good Angels, ſo he brought forth the crooked ſerpent the Devil, by his working power. Not as if they, who ſtand up for this expoſition, did affirm that God did make the Devil by his immediate hand, as he did the good Angels and the reſt of the creatures; for when God ſaw every thing that he had made, behold it was very good, and therefore the crooked ſerpent as taken under this notion for the Devil (who is the Evil one) could not be of his making. Therefore though the Devil according to his original or general nature, as an Angel was formed of God, yet the crookedneſs of his nature as well as of his wayes, which properly and formally denominate him a Devil was of himſelf, he having turned away from God, and defiled that ſtate, by the freedom of his own will, in which he was created pure, and had ſociety with his fellow Angels, till God for his ſin did (as it were) pull him and his adherents from the midſt of them; and as the Apoſtle Jude ſaith (verſ. 6.) Hath reſerved them (together) in chains of darkneſs unto the judgement of the great day. But I conceive that Job is not here ſpeaking of an Allegorical or Metaphorical ſerpent, ſuch a one as the Devil is, but of a real and proper one; And therefore I lay by this expoſition as unſutable to the Text in hand.

Spiritus ejus ornavit cœlos Vulg. i. e. cœleſtes ſpiritus ornamentis, ſcilicet ſpiritualium donorum. Aquin. Et obſtetricante manu ejus eductas eſt coleber tortuoſus. Vulg.

Eduxit deus diabolum è medio Angelorũ. Aquin.

And conclude, that Job having in the former part of the verſe ſet forth the power and wiſdom of God in garniſhing the heavens, his meditation deſcendeth in this latter part of it, though not ſo low as hell, yet as low as the waters, eſpecially the waters of the Sea, and there ſheweth us the hand of God at work both in making and deſtroying, in forming and wounding the crooked ſerpent. For the Hebrew-word which we render, hath formed, ſignifies alſo to wound, and ſo we tranſlate it (Iſa. 51. 9.) Awake, awake, O arm of the Lord, &c. art not thou it which hath cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon? yea it is ſo tranſlated by ſome in this text of Job, His hand hath wounded the crooked ſerpent. Which cometh near that of the Prophet according to the bare literal reading (Iſa. 27. 1.) In that day the Lord with his ſore and great and ſtrong ſword ſhall puniſh Leviathan, the piercing (or as we put in the Margin, the croſſing like a bar) ſerpent, even Leviathan that crooked ſerpent, and he ſhall ſlay the Dragon that is in the Sea. Where we may note by the way that our tranſlators render thoſe very original words a piercing ſerpent in this Text of Iſaiah, which they render a crooked ſerpent in Job; and, I conceive, it is better tranſlated, piercing (for ſo bolts or bars are rather) then crooked, another word being alſo uſed in Iſaiah, which we tranſlate crooked. For ſerpents are both ſtrait and long like a Bar, they are alſo crooked and can wind themſelves into a circle when they pleaſe, or ſee it for their advantage. Now the long Bar-like (or as we ſay crooked) ſerpent, which Job here ſaith the hand of God hath formed, is according to this interpretation, the Whale fiſh, or Leviathan, which is the greateſt not only of all the fiſhes in the Sea, but of all living creatures; and therefore may well be brought here by Job as an inſtance to demonſtrate the mighty power of God, whether in forming or wounding of him, eſpecially conſidering that God himſelf when he would humble and abaſe Job in the ſight of his own meanneſs, as he had led him to the meditation of many of his great works in nature, throughout Chap. 38, 39, 40. of this, he beſtowes the whole Chap. 41. in a large particular and Rhetorical deſcription of the Leviathan; and though he had ſaid of the Behemoth and Elephant (Chap. 40. 19.) He is the chief of the wayes of God: yet he ſaith more of the Leviathan or Whale (Chap. 41. 33, 34.) Upon earth there is none like him, who is made without fear, he beholdeth all high things, he is a king over all the children of pride. As if he had ſaid, The Elephant is the chief of all ſenſitive living creatures upon the earth, but the Whale is greater then the Elephant, therefore he exceeds all creatures moving upon the earth. The Whale is ſo vaſt and turbulent a living creature, that he is joyned with the Sea which is the vaſteſt and moſt turbulent creature without life. Thus Job ſpeaks (Chap. 7. 12.) Am I a Sea or a Whale that thou ſetteſt a watch over me? implying, that the Whale is among ſenſitive creatures as the Sea is among inſenſitive the greateſt and moſt unruly of them and therefore hath as much need to be watched by a divine providence as the Sea it ſelf hath. Thus the Pſalmiſt deſcribing the great works of God, putteth the Leviathan or Whale among the chiefeſt of them (Pſal. 104. 24, 25, 26.) O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wiſdom haſt thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches, ſo is the great and wide Sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both ſmall and great beaſts. There go the Ships, there is that Leviathan whom thou haſt made to play therein. Thus we ſee how the Scripture conſents in exalting the power and wiſdom of God in this part of his work, the forming of this long and mighty, or (as we tranſlate the Subſtantive Epithete) crooked ſerpent. And therefore Job might well claſp theſe two together (while he was ſtudying to exemplifie in particulars the greatneſs of the works of God) his garniſhing or peopling the heavens with ſuch infinite variety of Stars, eſpecially with the Sun, and his forming of and ſo ſtoring the Sea with ſuch infinite variety of fiſhes, eſpecially with the Leviathan, For as the Sun is a Prince among the lights of heaven, ſo Leviathan is a Prince, a King among the fiſhes of the Sea.

Malo hic cœtũ intelligi & balanã. Merc. A cœli ornatu ad maris ornatum tanqnam ad aliud extremum deſcendit. Pined. Intelligo Balænam inſigne in imis opus divinæ potentiæ & efficacitatem voluntatis atq; arbitrei ejus ſingulariter cõprobans. Coc.

His hand hath formed the crooked (or rather the long) Serpent. And if any ſhould object againſt this interpretation, that it ſeems unſutable to call the Whale or Leviathan a Serpent. I anſwer, that the Text in Iſaiah (Chap. 27. 1.) before alledged may well bear us out in it; which (though it be to be underſtood of the Devil or of his inſtruments the enemies of the Churches peace and ſafety, yet) calleth Leviathan, the piercing (which word in the Original, as I hinted before, is here in Job rendred crooked) ſerpent, and in the immediately following words, That crooked ſerpent, and the Dragon that is in the Sea.

Wherefore reſting (chiefly, if not only) in this interpretation, that Job having gone up in his diſcourſe to the heavens, and the garniſhing of them, came down to the Sea, and to the furniſhing thereof, and inſtances in that creature which is chief in the Sea. The Leviathan, thereby to exalt and lift up the glory of God in his works of creation and providence.

> Obſerve, The ſea as well as the heavens, and all the inhabitants thereof, declare the mighty works and workmanſhip of God.

As the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy work (Pſal. 19. 1.) So the earth declareth the glory of God, and the Sea ſheweth his handy-work. The leaſt creatures preach the power of God, how much more the greateſt: All believers are taught of God, and every thing we ſee teacheth us ſomewhat of God, and this they teach us eſpecially that God is the former of them all. The hand of God hath formed the Eagle, and a leſs powerful hand then Gods could not form a Flie. The hand of God hath formed the Elephant, and a leſs powerful hand then his could not form a Mouſe. The hand of God hath formed Leviathan, and a hand leſs powerful then his could not form a Shrimp. As Jeſus Chriſt was declared many wayes to be the Son of God, but (as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 1. 4.) He was declared to be the Son of God with power (or powerfully declared to be the Son of God) by the reſurrection from the dead. So all things that are created declare that their Creatour is God. But he is declared with power or powerfully declared to be God by many of the creatures. Who can make any thing to live, but the living God? Who can make great things, but the great God? His hand hath formed the crooked Serpent.

And ſeeing the Lord hath formed the crooked ſerpent, even thoſe creatures that are moſt dreadful and dangerous to man; then the moſt dreadful and dangerous creatures are under the power of God, he formed them, and therefore he can reſtrain and curb them. As it is ſaid of Behemoth (Job 40. 19.) He that made him can make his ſword approach unto him; that is, though he be to ſtrong for man, yet God who gave him that ſtrength, hath infinitely more, and can eaſily Maſter him, yea and give a weak man skill and power to do it: ſo though it be ſaid (Job 41. 26.) of Leviathan, that the ſword of him that layeth at him cannot hold the ſpear, the dart, nor the habergeon, yet God, who made him, can make his ſword approach to him, or as ſome render the words under hand, His hand hath and can wound Leviathan the crooked Serpent; He can put a hook in his noſe, and bore his jaw through with a thorn. And thus God can do alſo with thoſe, who are Leviathans, and crooked Serpents in a figure, The Devil, and all cruel-minded men who do his work, and carry on his deſign againſt the people of God, as is expreſſed in that lately alledged Scripture (Iſa. 27. 1.) In that day the Lord with his ſore and great and ſtrong ſword ſhall puniſh Leviathan, the piercing Serpent, that is, thoſe enemies and perſecuters of his people, who ſeem to be as ſtrong and invincible as Leviathan, and as ſubtle and dangerous as the moſt piercing ſtinging Serpent. Thus the Lord aſſured his faithful ones (Iſa. 54. 16, 17.) That no weapon formed againſt them ſhould proſper; for (ſaith he) I have created the Smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an Inſtrument for his work, and I have created the waſter to deſtroy. Therefore I can hinder the waſter from deſtroying, and make all his weapons edgleſs, pointleſs, no more able to wound, then a ſtraw or a ruſh. How ſoon can God blunt and abate the keeneſt ſpirits of men, and weaken their ſtrongeſt arms, when he ſeeth they will but do miſchief with them? He that cauſeth motion can ſtop it; and he that giveth power can call it in, or break it where it is. While God is on our ſide who made all, we need not fear who are made againſt us; Though they have teeth like Lyons, and ſtings like Serpents we are ſafe; The hand of God can kill and wound, for, His hand hath formed the crooked Serpent.

Verſ. 14. Lo, theſe are parts of his wayes, but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can underſtand?

Thus Job concludes; after he had given an enumeration or Induction of many particulars, he doth as it were hold them forth in his hand to the view of all men; Behold, or lo theſe are parts of his wayes.

The word which we render parts, ſignifieth the end or extremity of a thing. There is a twofold extremity; Firſt, That which is utmoſt or furtheſt from us; Secondly, That which is hithermoſt or neareſt to us. The word takes in both, and is uſed for both in one Text (Pſal. 19. 6.) His going forth (that is, the going forth of the Sun) is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: As if he had ſaid, the Sun compaſſeth the heaven round, and viſiteth both the hithermoſt and uttermoſt (as to us) extremities of it. In the preſent Text of Job we are to underſtand it of the hithermoſt extremity, or of that which is next us, implying that there are many and much more glorious things to be ſpoken of God, if we were able to comprehend them and reach the uttermoſt end or extremity of them. And that it is ſo to be underſtood here, is plain from the next words, But how little a portion is heard of him? In compliance with which ſence ſome render the Text thus, Theſe are the edges or borders of his wayes; as if Job had ſaid, I have ſhewed you only the borders, I have not led you into the heart of the Country, or into the midſt of the works and wayes of God, much leſs to the furtheſt extremity or outſide of them. I have indeed ſpoken of very great and wonderful things, yet all that I have ſaid is but little to what might be ſaid, or at leaſt to what really is. I have given you as it were the parings and chipings of Gods works, I have not gone to the bottom, nor reached the depth of them. So that Job ſeems to diſtinguiſh theſe effects and works of God, about which he had diſcourſed, from ſome greater works, which he was not able to attain unto, nor make any diſcovery of: There are not only Celeſtial, but ſuper-celeſtial workes of God, we cannot well apprehend, much leſs comprehend what he hath wrought under the heavens, which are only the outſide of his works, much leſs thoſe which are above the heavens: For as none of the works of God appear to us, or have been found out by us in their fulneſs and utmoſt extent, ſo God hath done ſome great works which do not at all appear to us. And thoſe things which appear are but ſmall parts or parcels in compariſon of thoſe which as yet do not appear to us. Lo, theſe are parts of his wayes.

The wayes of God are ſpoken of in Scripture under a twofold notion.

Firſt, As the wayes in which God would have us walk; ſo the commandments and ſtatutes of God, are called the wayes of God (Pſal. 119. 33.) Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy ſtatutes, and I ſhall keep it unto the end.

Secondly, The wayes of God are thoſe wherein he comes and reveals himſelf to us. As that is a mans way wherein or whereby he is known, ſo in whatſoever God manifeſteth or maketh himſelf known to us, that is the way of God (Iſa. 55. 8.) My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your wayes my wayes; ſaith the Lord. That is, my wayes of mercy are as far above your wayes of mercy, as your duties are below my wayes of holineſs; yea what are your wayes of ſinfulneſs in doing evil, to my wayes of graciouſneſs in pardoning the evils which ye have done? Man hath a vaſt and a large heart in ſinning, but the vaſtneſs and largeneſs of mans heart in ſinning, is but ſcantneſs and narrowneſs to the largeneſs and vaſtneſs of Gods heart in pardoning. We may underſtand the Lord ſpeaking in either of or in both theſe ſences; My wayes wayes are not as your wayes. And in general, the way of God is that wherein he acteth or revealeth himſelf towards us, whether it be in mercy or in Judgement, in love or terrour. God hath ſome wayes which we may call foul and troubleſome wayes, ſuch are his wayes of judgement: he hath other wayes, which we may call fair and delightſome wayes, ſuch are all his wayes of mercy. And as God comes to us continually in one or other of theſe wayes of providence, ſo he came forth of old in the way of creation (Prov. 8. 22.) The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way before his works of old. When God firſt came forth, and appeared in making the world, he poſſeſſed me (ſaith Wiſdom) that is, from everlaſting. A way is, that wherein we go out, and ſhew our ſelves openly or abroad. And hence it is elegantly ſaid, that Creation was the beginning of Gods way, for then God did as it were go out from himſelf into his works, and in his works he ſhewed himſelf openly, who was before hidden in himſelf from eternity. God had infinite, immanent or internal acts in himſelf before, or rather God was one infinite eternal immanent Act before. But the firſt external tranſient act of God, or the firſt expreſſion of himſelf (who can never be expreſſed, to the life, as he is) was by the work of creation; and therefore that was the beginning of his way. And of this way, the way of creation, as alſo of thoſe of providence Job ſpeaketh when he ſaith, lo, theſe are parts of his wayes.

And hence the Scripture calleth ſtorms and tempeſts, thunder, and lightning, in which God appeareth ſo terrible, the wayes of God (Nah. 1. 3.) The Lord is ſlow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked: The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind, and in the ſtorm, and the clouds are the duſt of his feet; that is, God declareth himſelf to be God by his judgments and angry diſpenſations, which like boiſterous winds and ſtorms, which, like clouds and darkneſs afflict the children of men, lo theſe are parts of his wayes.

Accommodarè ad ſubjectam materiam viæ dei dici poſſunt tempeſtates, namq; in hujuſmodi mirabilibus aeris mutationibus ille vanere ad nos dicitur

Hence Note, Firſt, All that we know of the works of God is but a part.

As 'tis ſaid of Solomon (Kings 4. 33.) that he ſpake of trees, from the Cedar-tree, that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyſſop that ſpringeth out of the wall: He ſpake alſo of beaſts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fiſhes; ſo Job had been diſcourſing from the heights of heaven to the bottom of the Sea, yea to the bottome of hell; and yet he comes off, and ſaith, lo theſe are parts of his wayes. He that ſpeaketh and knoweth many things. yea he that ſpeaketh all that he knoweth, hath yet ſpoken only a part of that which is knowable. The Apoſtle ſaith (1 Cor. 13. 9, 10.) We know in part, and we prophecy in part; Many know more then they utter or prophecy, but no man can utter or prophecy more then he knoweth; We know but a part of what is to be known; and we know what we know but in part, and therefore when we have ſpoken our all, we have ſpoken but a part. Though every godly man knoweth all things needful for him to do and believe, yet the holieſt man on earth doth not know all that God hath done; God hath ſome reſerved and ſecret wayes into which he doth not lead his people. As the beſt of Saints ſee but the Back-parts of God in this life, ſo they ſee but a part of the wayes of God in this life, lo, theſe are parts of his wayes.

Again, Taking the original word as it ſignifies not only a part but the outſide or extream of any thing.

Note, That which we know of the works of God, is not only no more then a part of his works, but 'tis indeed only the outſide of his works.

'Tis but as the hem to a garment, or the borders to a Continent. When we have travelled as far we can, and as we think into the very heart of the works of God, yet we have gone no further then the borders of them; And it is, as if a man coming to diſcover this Iſland, ſhould only walk upon the ſhoar where he diſ-embarkt, and there viewing the cliffs and rocks, the ſands, and neareſt Mariſhes, ſhould take upon him to report, the ſtate of the whole Iſland: what hath this man ſeen? nothing but the extremity, the border of the Land, and can he make a compleat diſcovery of the whole? he hath not ſeen the pleaſant hills and vales, the Towns, and Cities, the Forts and Caſtles, the trade and riches, the cuſtomes and manners of the people; no man can know the chief things of a Nation or Country that ſtands only upon the ſhoar. All that we know of the works of God, is only the ſhoar, and outſide of them; we cannot reach the heart, nor fathom the bottom of them. The works of the Lord are great, (Pſal. 111. 2.) Sought out of all them that have pleaſure therein; that is, they who take pleaſure in them do their utmoſt, to find out the utmoſt of them, A godly man is as induſtrious to underſtand the wayes and works of God as he is to underſtand his word, yet he cannot reach either fully; And therefore that Pſalm hath an excellent concluſion, to ſatisfie us in our excluſion (as yet) from the perfect knowledge of theſe things. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom, a good underſtanding have all they that do his commandments; As if the Lord had ſaid, though while ye labour to ſeek out my works, yet, ye cannot find them out to perfection, be not diſcouraged, as if ye were ſhortned in wiſdom, and knowledge, for the fear of my name is wiſdom enough for you, and obedience to my commandments is the beſt underſtanding; let this ſatisfie you while ye know but a part of my wayes. And if we know but a part, and that the outſide of the wayes and works of God, then ſurely we cannot know all of God himſelf: as it followeth in the next words,

And how little a portion is heard of him?

The Original notes any thing which is little, or a little portion of any thing. Hence ſome render it a drop, which is a little or the leaſt portion of water. So the Vulgar and the Seventy, We have heardly heard a little drop of his ſpeech. Others render it a whiſper, which is but a little portion of a voice. How little a whiſper have we heard of him? The works of God are as it were a whiſper concerning him; all that we ſee, or can ſay, makes but a kind of ſilent report of God, in compariſon to what he is, or to what might be ſaid of him. And ſo the word whiſper, is oppoſed to thunder in the cloſe of the verſe, But the thunder of his power who can underſtand? As if Job had ſaid, All that I have ſpoken of God is but a whiſper, there is a Thunder of his power, which I am neither able to utter, nor to underſtand. All creatures ſpeak a God; yea they ſpeak much of God, as the Apoſtle affirmeth for the conviction of the Gentiles in their Idolatrous departures from him (Rom. 1. 20.) For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head, ſo that they are without excuſe: The creatures ſpeak loud enough to ſtop mans mouth and leave him without all excuſe, yet comparatively they do but whiſper, there is a thunder of God infinitely lowder then their voice. So that Job calleth thoſe works of God wherein he had inſtanced a whiſper or ſtill voice, becauſe though they ſignifie to us and declare the glory of their Author, yet they are not a full declaration of it, but only ſuch a one as is accommodated to our childiſh capacity. All that they ſpeak or can ſpeak of God, yea all that can be ſpoken of God by the wiſeſt of men, is only as a whiſper to thunder, or as a drop to the Ocean; But I ſhall not ſay more of the elegancy of this word here, it having been already opened (Chap. 4. 12.) where Eliphaz thus beſpeaks Job. Now a thing was ſecretly (or as we put in the Margine, by ſtealth) brought to me, and mine ear received a little (a whiſper, a drop) thereof, in thoughts from viſions of the night, &c. All that we know, of God and his wayes is but little to what we know not, and but little to what we ſhall know hereafter; every day we hear great things reported and preached of God both to our eyes and ears, and though we ſhould have ſermon upon ſermon, line upon line all the dayes of our lives, yet at the laſt day of our lives we muſt ſay, How little a portion have we heard of him? The thunder of his power, the lowdeſt and cleareſt ſpeakings of it, are reſerved to that ſtate when our ears ſhall be bored and our hearts proportionably enlarged to receive it.

שמץ Pars particula murmur tennis ſuſurrus. Suſurrū verborum ejus. Symmach. ut deinceps cū ingenti tonitrus comparet, vix parvā ſtillā ſermonis ejus audierimus. Vulg. Further, Job had been long ſpeaking of the works and wayes of God, yet concludeth, how little a portion is heard of him? why doth he not rather ſay, how little a portion portion is heard of them? the reaſon is, becauſe what ever is ſaid of the wayes and works of God is to diſcover God. To ſpeak of the earth and ſeas, of the air and fire, of thunder and lightning, of the heavens and ſtars, is not an extolling of the works of God, but an extolling of God in and for his works.

Hence Note, The works of God ſhould lead us to God himſelf.

Our ſtudy of the creature ſhould be to gain a clearer light and knowledge of the Creator. There are many expreſſions and impreſſions of God upon the things which he hath made, and we never ſee them as we ought, till in them we ſee their maker. A critical eye looks upon a picture, not ſo much to ſee the colours or the paint, as to diſcern the ſkill and workmanſhip of the Painter or Limner, yea ſome (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in reference to ſpirituals) have ſenſes ſo exerciſed about theſe artificials, that they will read the Artiſts name in the form and exquiſiteneſs of his art. An Apelles or a Michael Angelo needs not put his name to his work, his work proclaims his name to thoſe who are judicious beholders of ſuch kind of works. How much more (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) that the name of God is near, do his wondrous works (both of creation and providence) declare to all diſcreet beholders? that which the eye and heart of every godly man is chiefly upon, is to find out and behold The name, that is, the wiſdom, power and goodneſs of God in all his works, both of creation and providence. It were better for us never to enjoy the creature, then not to enjoy God in it; and it were better for us not to ſee the creature, then not to have a ſight of God in it: And yet when we have ſeen the moſt of God which the creature can ſhew us, we have reaſon to ſay, how little a portion is ſeen of him? and when we have heard the moſt of God that can be reported to us from the creation, we have reaſon to ſay as Job here doth, how little a portion is heard of him? and to conclude as he doth this Verſe and Chapter,

But the thunder of his power who can underſtand?

This thunder of his power, may be taken,

Firſt, Strictly, and in the letter, for natural thunder; for, even that is numbred in Scripture among the wonderful and moſt dreadful works of God. The Scripture calleth it alſo the voice of God (Pſal. 29. 3.) The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, the God of glory thundereth. Thus a learned paraphraſt connects theſe words with the former; As if Job had ſaid; Now that I have ſaid all that I can, how little a thing is it in compariſon of him and his greatneſs; as may appear by one inſtance more, the power and majeſty which he utters in his thunder, which who can ſufficiently admire? and therefore none can fully underſtand.

Non alitero de tonitru loquuntur ſacræ ſcripturæ quam de dei voce, magnifica atq; terribili, plenaq; minarum.

Secondly, The thunder of his power, is any extraordinary work of God, eſpecially his dreadful and terrible works of Judgement. For by them he ſpeaks out his infinite power and majeſty in the ears of men as it were by thunder. Of ſuch a voice we read (Pſal. 68. 32, 33.) Sing unto God ye kingdoms of the earth, O ſing praiſes unto the Lord, Selah. Who this Lord is, and how he manifeſt himſelf is ſet forth in the next words, to him that rideth upon the heaven of heavens, which were of old: Lo he doth ſend out his voice, and that a mighty voice. Thus alſo the Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 30. 30.) deſcribes the Lord coming forth for the reſcue of his people, and the utter ruine of the Aſſyrian Army. And the Lord ſhall cauſe his glorious voice to be heard, and ſhall ſhew the lightning down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire, with ſcattering, and tempeſt, and hailſtones. For though that deſtruction of the Aſſyrians was effected by the miniſtery of an Angel (Iſa. 37. 36.) yet, doubtleſs it was not done in ſilence, but either with an amazing tempeſt, mixt with thunder and lightning, or with ſuch confuſion and terror as appeared like one. In the book of the Revelation (which hath as one of the Ancients ſpeaketh, as many myſteries as words) the dreadful judgments propheſied to come upon the world in the ſeveral Ages of it, are expreſſed by Thunder (Revel. 10. 4.) And when the ſeven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven, ſaying unto me, ſeal up thoſe things which the ſeven thunders uttered, and write them not. And as elſewhere, ſo eſpecially in this book of Job, we find, thoſe things which carry the greateſt ſtrength and terror in them, expreſt by thunder (Job 39. 19.) Haſt thou given the horſe ſtrength? haſt thou cloathed his neck with thunder? that is, haſt thou made the horſe who is ſo ſtrong and terrible? And at verſ. 25. (treating ſtill of the horſe) he ſaith among the trumpets, ha, ha, and he ſmelleth the battel afar off, the thunder of the Captains, and the ſhouting, that is, the horſe is pleaſed to hear the Great Commanders ſpeak with a loud voice, either directing, threatning, or encouraging their Souldiers. Thus, the thunder of Gods power, is ſome wonderful act of his power, which lifts up its voice (as it were) like thunder. This, who can underſtand? none can. The word ſignifies alſo to weigh and conſider, ſo ſome render it here, Who can ſufficiently conſider the thunder of his power? who can conſider it as he ought, either, Firſt, According to the depth and myſteriouſneſs of it; Or, Secondly, According to the dignity and worthineſs of it.

Inſignibus vero illius geſtis quibus non tam ſplendet quã cum tonitru coruſcat animo percipiendis quis tandem per fuerit. Bez.

Thirdly, Theſe words, who can underſtand the thunder of his power? may be expounded of the higheſt and cleareſt publication of his power, The thundering of it out. As if Job had ſaid, I have whiſpered a little to you, but if God ſhould thunder out himſelf, or if his works were ſpoken out (as they deſerve) in thunder, the minds of men would be amazed, and their underſtandings confounded, The thunder of his power who can underſtand? 'Tis uſual among the learned to expreſs high eloquence, and ſtrong confidence of ſpeech, by thundering. It was ſaid of Alcibiades, that he thundred Greece; He was a man ſo mighty in Elocution, that he made his hearers tremble. And hence Chriſt himſelf ſurnamed two of his Diſciples (James the ſon of Zebedee, and John the Brother of James) Boanerges, which is, the ſons of thunder. They did not ſpeak (as we ſay) like a mouſe in a cheeſe, but with a great voice, and with a greater ſpirit; they ſpake the meſſages of heaven as if it thundered from heaven. There may be a great force in a low voice, while what is ſpoken comes with much clearneſs of reaſon, and ſtrength of Authority, or (as the Apoſtle gives it) in the evidence and demonſtration of the Spirit; but when all theſe are conveyed by a mighty voice, a voice like thunder, how forceable are they? Baſil was ſaid to thunder in his doctrine, and lighten in his life. Such (to the height) was that voice of words (in Mount Horeb at the giving of the Law) Which voice they that heard, intreated that the Word ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more (Heb. 12. 19.) that is, that it ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more in that manner, or by an immediate voice from God, as appears (Exod. 26. verſ. 18, 19.) And all the people ſaw the thunderings and the lightnings, and the noiſe of the Trumpet, &c. And they ſaid unto Moſes, ſpeak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God ſpeak with us, leſt we die. We cannot underſtand the thunder of his power.

Hence Note, Man is not able to receive and bear thoſe higheſt diſcoveries of God.

God can ſpeak in ſuch a light as will blind the eyes of man, and in ſuch a language as will rather aſtoniſh then inſtruct him. As among believers, they who are carnal and babes in Chriſt, are not able to eat ſtrong meat, they muſt be fed with milk (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 3. 2.) So we may ſay of all believers, even of thoſe that are ſtrongeſt, God doth only whiſper and ſpeak gently to them, the thunder of his power they cannot underſtand. For as there is a peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding (Phil. 4. 7.) they that have it not, underſtand nothing of it; and and they that have it, underſtand but little of it; it paſſeth all underſtanding, not a natural underſtanding only, but alſo a ſpiritual. And as there is a love of Chriſt paſſing knowledge (Eph. 1. 19.) which yet we ſhould labour to know; a love which hath an incomprehenſible height, and length, and breadth, and depth in it, which yet all the Saints are labouring to comprehend: So there is a manifeſtation of the will and works of God, a thunder of his power, which were it made and ſpoken out to us, our underſtanding could not graſp nor comprehend, how much ſoever we ſhould deſire and labour to comprehend it. And thereſore God is pleaſed to put the treaſure of his mind and meſſages in earthen veſſels; not only, as the Apoſtle gives the reaſon (2 Cor. 4.7.) That the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us, but he doth it alſo condeſcending to our weakneſs, leſt if he ſhould give out this treaſure immediately from himſelf, or ſhould put it into ſome heavenly veſſel, we ſhould not be able to bear the excellency, or (as Job here ſpeaks) The thunder of his power.

Thus after a very long ventilation of the Queſtion between Job and his friends, we are arrived at the Concluſion of their diſpute. Job hath anſwered two of his friends thrice, the third (Zophar I mean) only twice. He it ſeems, gave out and ſate down, whether ſatiſfied or wearied, whether having no more to ſay, or being unwilling to ſay any more, or thinking that enough had been ſaid already, I determine not. But though Job's friends have done arguing againſt him, yet he hath not done arguing for himſelf; Which he doth in five entire Chapters, twice called the continuation of his Parable. In what ſence he calleth his enſuing ſpeech a parable, together with the ſubject matter of it, may through the gracious preſence, and ſupply of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, who hath helped hitherto, and hath not ſuffered that little oyl in the cruſe to fail, ſhine forth with a clearer light.

TO

Thoſe eſpecially of this CITY, who yet continue helpful to this WORK.

T*Hat Great Pattern of patient ſuffering*, Holy JOB, having been many wayes afflicted by God, and no way comforted by man, no not by thoſe men, his Friends, who deſign'd to comfort him, found yet this happineſs, that, as God comforted him at laſt, ſo his Friends had now left off to trouble him. Being thus free from their preſſures and provocations, he took freedom and full ſcope both to defend his ancient integrity, and to deplore his then preſent miſery; Which he doth in no leſs room then five whole Chapters together. The Good mans heart was full, and muſt have vent, 'twould break elſe. The pertinacy and openneſs of his Opponents, in cenſuring and condemning him for a Hypocrite and wicked, made him more then open, almoſt pertinacious, both in aſſerting his own uprightneſs, and in defying thoſe odious imputations, as he that runs may read and underſtand at the beginning of the twenty-ſeventh Chapter. Whatever came on it, he would not juſtifie his condemners, much leſs condemn himſelf; Let his enemy be as the wicked, and he that roſe up againſt him as the unrighteous, not He; nor doth JOB only deny that he was wicked, or a Hypocrite, but he proves (unanſwerably) that he was not; For, though he had loſt all that himſelf had gained, and God (as he believed) ſtood ready to take away his ſoul too, yet his hope remained not only alive, but lively; whereas the Hypocrites hope dyes, or What's the hope of the Hypocrite though he hath gained (and holds what he hath gained) when God taketh away his ſoul?

Again, though ſuch trouble came upon him as conſtrained him to cry, yet God heard his cry. Though the Almighty grieved him, yet he delighted himſelf in the Almighty, and alwayes called upon God; Whereas, when trouble cometh upon the Hypocrite, will God hear his cry? Or will the Hypocrite delight himſelf in the Almighty? Will he alwayes call upon God? A Hypocrite will ſometimes do theſe things, but he never hath a will to do them; and in many caſes he will not, ſo much as do them. An Hypocrite may for a while perform the acts, and put on the habit of a godly man; but he cannot at all put off his own nature; nor will he perſeveringly perform thoſe acts: Will he alwayes call upon God? That which is only feigned, and is not, eaſily returns to what it is: No man can alwayes appear to be, what he doth but appear to be. Truth only abides in and after all tryals. JOB was able to argue from the conſtant tenour of his heart toward God, that God lay at his heart, and was not (as the Prophet ſpeaks of the Hypocrite) far from his reins, while near in his mouth.

Indeed, the dealings of God with him were ſo intricate and full of myſtery, that to find out or aſſign a reaſon of them, was far more difficult then to find out the Silver vein and the place of Gold, or any of the moſt precious Gems and rarities which Nature (by the order of God) hath concocted and treaſur'd up in the boſom and bowels of the Earth, as he diſcourſeth at large in the former part of Chap. 28. The Wiſdom whereby God manageth ſuch providential diſpenſations among the ſons of men, being hid (as he there ſaith) from the eyes of all living, and kept cloſe from the Fowls of the Air, God alone underſtanding the way thereof, and knowing the place thereof. And therefore JOB, preferring an humble neſcience before a bold intruſion into the ſecrets of God, calls us off from the purſuit of that hidden wiſdom to a wiſdom plainly revealed in the laſt verſe of the Chapter; And unto man he ſaid, Behold, the fear of the Lord that is wiſdom, and to depart from evil is underſtanding.

And, That the Lord had given him wiſdom to fear him, and underſtanding to depart from evil, he demonſtrates by giving an account or narrative of the whole courſe of his life in the dayes of his proſperity, both in his publick Capacity as a Magiſtrate, throughout Chap. 29. (a deſcription of his ſad change from that fills the 30th*) as alſo in his private capacity, whether abſolute as a man, or relative to God or man, in the* 31th. That in the diſcharge of all theſe duties, the fear of the Lord had been his wiſdom, and a departure from thoſe ſin-evils, which hang about them, his underſtanding; he not only makes a very ſolemn proteſtation, but by way of ſacred imprecation invites the moſt dreadful vengeance of God upon his own head, in caſe he had not done or not forborn to do as he there proteſted.

And now what could JOB, or what could any man do more then he had done, to do himſelf right, and clear his own innocency in the opinion of man? Wherefore having done thus much, he forbears to do or ſay any more, but ſits down quietly (the words of JOB, are ended, ſo that Chapter endeth) till the Lord ſhould ariſe to plead his cauſe, and (ſcattering the clouds which had long darken'd his Name and Honour) bring forth his righteouſneſs as the light, and his juſt dealing as the noon-day. Nor was it long before he did ſo: The Lord is a God of Judgment, bleſſed are all they that wait for him.

Honoured Sirs, you have the general ſum of JOB's long Parable (that's the Title of his enſuing Speech) in this ſhort Epiſtle, and the particular Expoſition of three Chapters of it, in the Book which followeth: The whole five were intended for this one piece, but it grew too bulkie, and muſt be iſſued out in two. What is now offered, take in good part: The part behind may be offered in its ſeaſon; you alſo by earneſt prayer to the God of Light and Love, in whoſe hand our breath is, and all our wayes, helping on this work in the hand of

SIRS,

Your moſt affectionate
Friend to ſerve you,

JOSEPH CARYL.

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations UPON THE TWENTY-SEVENTH, TWENTY-EIGHTH, AND TWENTY-NINTH, CHAPTERS Of the Book of JOB.

CHAP. XXVII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

As God liveth who hath taken away my Judgment, and the Almighty who hath vexed my ſoul;

All the while my breath is in me, and the Spirit of God is in my Noſtrils;

My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs, nor my tongue utter deceit.

JOB having given his third anſwer to Bildad, his ſecond Friend, and anſwered him home in the former Chapter, we may ſuppoſe him breathing, pauſing, and waiting a while, to ſee whether his third Friend Zophar would renew the Combate, or undertake the diſpute afreſh.

But he either being convinced by that evidence of truth which Job had held forth, or being hopeleſs to convince Job, of what he judged the truth, gives it over in the plain 70 field, ſits down, holds his peace, and forbears to engage any more in this Controverſie.

Now, Job perceiving that Zophar had done, or had no more to ſay, we may ſuppoſe him making a ſecond ſtop, or ſtand, looking whether Eliphaz or Bildad would re-inforce the battel, or had any mind to deal further with him; but they alſo (either fearing that they had done ill in ſpeaking ſo much already againſt him, or being out of hope to do any good upon him, how much more, or how much longer ſoever they ſhould ſpeak to him) drew off too, and laid down the Bucklers.

The field being thus quite clear of all Opponents, not ſo much as one appearing againſt Job, he proceeds confidently and paſſionately in the purſuit and proof of his own Innocency in the five following Chapters; in which throughout, he refutes the opinion which his Friends had of him, and maintained againſt him, and fully vindicates his own much ſuſpected and oppoſed Integrity.

Thus we are at laſt arrived at the end of the diſpute between Job and his Friends, his Friends being all worſted in that diſpute.

Whence Obſerve, Firſt, Error cannot alwayes hold out.

A wrong cauſe will have the worſt in the end. Error may wrangle long, but at laſt it will have nothing to ſay: Truth may be oppoſed, but it cannot be prevailed upon; Truth is a Conquerour. Job's Friends had enough of it, and ſaw their own miſtake, though not in the matter, yet in their mark; though not in their Poſitions, yet in their Applications.

Hence take a ſecond Note, It is beſt to ſay no more when we have ſaid enough, or more then we ought.

'Tis no diſhonour to yield a weak or wrong cauſe: Contention ſhould not be a continual dropping; when all hath been ſaid as to reaſoning, what we ſay more is but wrangling. Job's Friends did well to give out, though they did ill to begin. 'Tis not courage, but pertinacy to oppoſe the appearances of truth; and where truth appears, 'tis true courage to reſiſt all oppoſers.

Verſe 1. Moreover Job continued his Parable, and ſaid.

Job's Friends had done, but Job had not. He had more to ſay for himſelf, when they had nothing to ſay againſt him. He had not yet brought forth all that was in his heart, therefore, Moreover, or and (the word is a Copulative) he continued his Parable: We render it Moreover, which intimates a full period of the former diſpute, and an entrance upon the concluſion of the whole matter.

Non quidem aliam ſed præcedentis continuativam dictorumque à ſe omnium confirmativum. Bold.

The Text is, He added to lift up, or to take up: This phraſe of adding to do a thing is frequently uſed in Scripture, and it ſignifies not only, firſt, to do the ſame thing again, or to repeat what hath been done; but ſecondly, to do it with a greater intention of ſpirit then formerly; not only to add a new act about the ſame matter, but to act higher. Thus, to add to ſin, implyeth more then to renew the act of the ſame ſin, it implyes to ſin more grievouſly, or to be more vile and ſinful in ſinning (Judg. 7. 12.) The Children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord: The Hebrew is, The Children of Iſrael added to do evil in the ſight of the Lord; they did both add a new act of ſin, as alſo a new degree of ſinfulneſs. We have a reproof of that people in the ſame form of ſpeech (Judg. 10. 6.) The Children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord, and ſerved Baalim, and Aſtaroth, and the Gods of Syria, and the Gods of Zidon, and the Gods of Moab, and and the Gods of the Children of Ammon, and the Gods of the Philiſtims, and forſook the Lord, and ſerved not him. This is to add to do evil with the higheſt aggravations. The word is uſed in the ſame ſence, in reference to the Lords manifeſtation of himſelf to Samuel (1 Sam. 3. 21.) The Lord appeared again in Shiloh, for the Lord revealed himſelf to Samuel in Shiloh by the word of the Lord; the Lord added to appear; that is, he appeared the ſecond time, and he appeared more fully and clearly, in a more glorious diſcovery of himſelf then formerly. Thus in the Text, Moreover, Job added to take up his Parable; that is, he did not only take up another Parable, or another ſpeech, about or upon the ſame ſubject, but he ſpake more clearly, and more fully, he ſpake with more ſpirit and life then he had done before; He added to, or continued to take up his Parable.

Though the phraſe here uſed, to take, or lift up, be no more in the letter then to ſpeak a Parable, as to lift up the eyes is no more then to ſee; and as when a thought is ſaid to aſcend up into or upon the heart, it is no more then to think (Jer. 7. 31.) yet we do not reach the elegancy of the Original when we ſay barely, He continued his Parable. Chriſt ſaid of Paul (Acts 9.) He is a choſen veſſel to bear my Name, &c. That is, to hold it up, to hold it forth with honour and with power. Thus a wiſe man doth not barely utter a Parable, or Sentence, but he lifteth it up. This form of ſpeaking is often uſed in the book of Numbers (Chap. 23. 7, 18. and 24. 3, 15.) Balaam took up his Parable; that is, he pronounced it with a high voice, that all might hear and take notice of the purpoſe of God, both againſt the Moabites, and for his people Iſrael. The Prophet is commanded (Iſa. 58. 1.) To lift up his voice as a trumpet; he muſt not ſpeak in the throat (as we ſay) nor ſwallow his words, he muſt ſpeak out; ſo a Parable muſt be lifted up, becauſe 'tis a choice Sentence, and therefore ought to be ſpoken in a higher ſtile and ſtrain, with ſtronger voice and quicker ſpirit then a plain ordinary diſcourſe.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, He that in ſincerity of heart maintains a truth, will maintain it to the end.

Job's Friends gave over, but Job had a moreover; they left off, but he continued ſpeaking. The path of the juſt is like the morning light (Prov. 4. 18.) We may take the path of the juſt two wayes: Firſt, In acting or doing that which is good, holy, and righteous: Secondly, In diſputing for, and maintaining that which is truth: When the righteous man is in any of theſe paths, his path is like the morning light: And what doth the morning light? The Text ſaith, It ſhineth more and more unto the perfect day; it continues to ſhine, and it ſhines brighter both in the defence of Truth, and practice of Holineſs. The Apoſtle gives a charge to Saints, to perſevere and grow up in holineſs (1 Theſ. 4. 1.) Furthermore, then we beſeech you brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jeſus, that as you have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to pleaſe God, ſo ye would abound more and more, to continue in the practice of holineſs, and in the defence of truth, to be ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, alwayes abounding in the works of the Lord, is both the duty and the honour of the Saints. When Michol mocked David for dancing before the Ark (2 Sam. 6. 22.) ſhe might have diſcouraged him, and cooled his zeal, but he waxed hotter and hotter; while he was compaſſed about with this cold, her chilling killing words warm'd his ſpirit to tell her plainly, That he would be yet more vile: As if he had ſaid, If this behaviour hath rendred me vile and cheap in the eyes and eſteem of my people, I am ſo far from being aſhamed of and repenting it, that I glory in it, I will continue to do what I have done, I will add to be vile; I care not how much I am deſpiſed, ſo God may be honoured; I will be yet more vile, if this be to be vile.

Further, there is not only continuance, but confidence expreſt in theſe words.

Hence Note, Secondly, He that holds and maintains truth with a true heart, the longer he holds it, the more confidently he holds it.

He lifts up his voice and ſpeaks out, he cares not who heareth. There is a twofold ground of this: Firſt, The underſtanding of a godly man gets more light, by how much the more he converſeth with light; his patronage and undertakings for truth confirm him in the truth; for as by converſing with God in Chriſt we get more of his holineſs and beauty, more of the Image of Chriſt ſtampt upon our hearts and lives; ſo by converſing with any truth (which is indeed the Image of God) we get more light into our underſtanding; and as the underſtanding gets more light, ſo the affections get more heat and confidence; and therefore the longer a ſincere heart ſtands up in the defence of truth, the ſtronger he is in it. Whereas the hypocrite, who maintains truth only for carnal ends, and worldly advantages, which he hopes to gain by it, though his underſtanding gains light, yet his affections gain no heat, and ſo the truth may cool under his hands, and he may cool in maintaining it. Upon theſe two Conſiderations, that the underſtanding gets more light, and the affections more heat and warmth, it muſt needs be that he who maintains truth ſincerely, will go on more vigorouſly and ſtrongly, he he will add to lift up his Parable, notwithſtanding all the oppoſitions that ſtand in his way.

Why doth Job call what he had to ſay a Parable? The Original word ſignifies to rule, to govern, to govern as a Prince, whoſe righteous Precepts and Commands, whoſe Laws and Councels his people ought to obey: Speeches or Sentences which are full of wiſdom and of truth are called Parables for a threefold reaſon.

Firſt, Becauſe Parables and wiſe Sentences rule over the ſpirits of men, as Princes and Magiſtrates do over their bodies or outward man. Parables carry ſo convincing a light, ſo great an authority in them, that every mans Judgment and underſtanding ſubmits and falls down before them, ſuch words bear rule and ſway. And though many contradict truth, and rebel againſt it; yet truth will ſubdue, even them to its power, who would not ſubmit to its rule, nor bow to its Scepter. And Job might well call what he had to ſay a Parable, a collection of ruling Sentences, ſeeing in the iſſue his Friends, who were no friends to what he ſaid, were forced to yield themſelves up to it, and ſubmit to him by the final ſentence or determination of God himſelf.

Secondly, Parables are ſo called becauſe ſuch ſpeeches came uſually from the mouths of Princes and great Perſons; they were ſpeeches of Rulers, therefore ruling ſpeeches. Solomon ſpake Proverbs, or Parables, who was a Great King, and ruled over men, more by wiſdom then he did by power.

Thirdly, Becauſe whether men will ſubmit to ſuch ſpeeches and truths or no, yet their judgments, actions, and opinions muſt be tryed and ruled by them. Parables are touchſtones of truth; they are rules, and therefore ought to rule.

Again, Others derive the Original word which we render a Parable, from a root which ſignifies to liken, or to make like; this alſo ſuits well with the nature of Parables, which are uſually expreſſed by Similes, or Similitudes, comparing one thing with another, or one thing to another (Matth. 13.3.) At that time Jeſus ſpake unto them many things in Parables: We have ſeven diſtinct Parables in that Chapter: And what were thoſe parables? They were all Similitudes; A Sower went out to ſow: There you have a Parable, intimating all ſorts of Goſpel-hearers, by four ſorts of ground: There alſo you have the Parable of the grain of Muſtard-ſeed, &c. holding forth the growing power of Grace. It is ſaid of Abraham, that By faith he offered up Iſaac, accounting that God was able to raiſe him from the dead, from whence alſo he received him in a figure, or Parable (Heb. 11. 19.) There was an Image or Similitude of death upon Abraham, in reference to that bleſſing; his own body was dead, and Sarah was dead too as to child-bearing: But he conſidering thoſe deaths out of which he had his Son, was willing to offer his Son to death, when God called him to it, becauſe he knew God was able to raiſe him even from the dead, from whence he at firſt received him in a figure. And if we expound Abraham's receiving of Iſaac from the dead, not of his firſt receiving him from his own and Sarah's dead body, but of his ſecond receiving him, after he at Gods command had bound him upon the Altar ready to be ſlain and offered up in ſacrifice, it makes no difference as to the point in hand; that being alſo an illuſtrious Parable, or figure of death, and of a reſurrection from it.

Again, Parables are called Similitudes, or Similies, becauſe they reſemble and bear (as it were) the expreſs Image of their wiſdom, gravity, modeſty, and truth, who ſpake and held them forth; all words are or ſhould be the Image of the mind, and Parables are a beautiful Image of the beautiful mind. A Parable is taken four wayes in Scripture, Firſt, For any Divine Maxim, Axiom, or Principle, which generally obtaineth and is retained among all ſorts of men (Prov. 26.7.) As the feet of the lame are not equal, ſo is a Parable in the mouth of a fool; that is, a divine holy ſentence; a grave and wiſe ſentence is an uncomely thing in the mouth of a wicked man. A Parable in his mouth is like a Pearl in a Swines ſnout.

Secondly, A Parable is a dark and a hard ſaying: They ſaid unto Chriſt, Now ſpeakeſt thou plainly, and doſt not ſpeak a Parable: A Parable is there oppoſed to a plain ſpeech; there is an outward darkneſs of words encompaſſing that light; and hence a Parable and a dark ſaying are put together, as expreſſing each the other (Pſal. 49. 4.) I will encline mine ear to a Parable, and open my dark ſaying upon the Harp; the dark ſaying in the latter part, is the Parable in the former part. So (Pſal. 78. 2.) I will open my mouth in a Parable, I will utter dark ſayings of old. A Parable is a kind of Riddle, or as we may well expreſs it, a Parable is a Candle in a dark Lanthorn, there's light in it, but darkneſs about it, you muſt open the Lanthorn before you can ſee the light, or ſee any thing by its light. Yet ſometimes a ſpeech or diſcourſe is a Parable, or dark, not ſo much by any intrinſecal obſcurity, as by the Hearers incapacity, The dulneſs and indiſpoſition of man, makes that a dark and hard ſaying to him, which is not ſo in it ſelf, Matth. 13. 13, 14, 15.

Proverbium quaſi probatum verbū. Græci vocant, ἀξίωμα γνόμη πρόβλημα. Qui publico docendi munere ex Authoritate fungebantur proprio nomine dicebantur משלים Moſcielim. i. e. parabolizantes. Sermo figuratus Metaphoricus Allegoricus dicitur Parabola.

Thirdly, Any Similitude or reſemblances from things in Heaven, or things on Earth, is a Parable.

Fourthly, A mans judgment or opinion, in any caſe, is his Parable; every mans opinion, whether true or falſe, is a Parable to him, and he would have it ſo to others; that is, he would have it a ruling Sentence. Thus Mr. Broughton tranſlates this Text, And Job proceeded to continue his Oration; and another, Job proceeded to deliver his Opinion; ſo that a mans opinion or ſentence (be it what it will) is his Parable, or that which rules him, and which he deſires may rule all others. Moſt men would have every Sheaf bow to theirs; and ſome have a higher ambition to make the minds and judgments of men ſtoop to them, then ever any had to make the bodies of men ſtoop to them. They would have every opinion of theirs a Parable, like a Prince upon the Throne, giving the law or rule to others. So much for the nature and extent of the word, by which Job expreſſeth all that he had to ſay, A Parable.

Hence Obſerve, Truth wiſely worded and delivered hath a commanding Power in it; it is a Parable.

As it commands the wiſe, and they ſubmit to it,; ſo it commands the wicked, and they ſhall fall before it. Error and ſin ſhall fall before it; blaſphemy and hereſie ſhall fall before it; every thing that's contrary to ſound doctrine ſhall fall before the commanding power of a holy Parable: What the Apoſtle ſaith of Rulers, or of earthly Powers (Rom. 13. 1.) Let every ſoul be ſubject to the higher Powers, that I may ſay of truth, let every ſoul be ſubject to it, for that's a Power, and that's a higher Power, that's Gods Power indeed: Truth is the Power of God; and I may ſay (as there it follows) He that reſiſteth this Power of God, receiveth to himſelf damnation; yea, I may ſay to every holy Parable, as 'tis ſaid (Pſal. 45. 4.) Ride on in thy Majeſty, ride proſperouſly, becauſe of truth, and meekneſs, and righteouſneſs, and thy right hand ſhall teach thee terrible things. Truth carried forth in the hand, and by the Power and Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, will do terrible things; it will conquer, and go forth Conquering and to conquer; it will be more then a Conqueror. How many are the trophies that truth hath brought in! And how much the blood (as I may ſay) that truth hath ſhed of the enemies that oppoſed it! Hence Job ſpake triumphantly, when he ſaw his Friends fallen before it; his ſpeech was a ruling ſpeech, and his opinion obtained.

Moreover, Job continued his Parable, and ſaid.

And what ſaid he?

Verſe 2. As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgment, and the Almighty, who hath vexed my ſoul.

He begins, ſomewhat ſtrangely, with an Oath, As God liveth; Job continues his Parable through this and the next Chapter; and in this Parable he doth inſiſt upon theſe two particulars (which may give you a little diſcovery of the whole, before I come to the parts.)

Firſt, He inſiſts upon the vindication of his own Innocency to the eleventh verſe of this Chapter.

Secondly, He proceeds to the refutation of his Friends, or Oppoſers Arguments, whereby they would prove him wicked, and he doth it by ſhewing, that though the Judgments of God overtake wicked men very often in this life, yet that every one is not wicked that is overtaken by judgments, nor are all wicked men ſo overtaken; this he continues from the eleventh verſe excluſively to the end of the twenty-eighth Chapter.

Theſe words (from the firſt to the fourth verſe) are part of the firſt part, or the vindication of his Innocency; in which he doth two things.

Firſt, He profeſſeth that he is innocent, verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

Secondly, He gives proof of it, verſ. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

He clears his Innocency by profeſſion two wayes.

Firſt, By calling God to witneſs by a ſolemn Oath that it was ſo, and this he doth in the ſecond, third, and fourth verſes.

Secondly, By ſhewing that he ſhould do an act of very great injuſtice and unrighteouſneſs to himſelf, if he ſhould ſay otherwiſe, in the fifth and ſixth verſes. And thus we have the ſum and ſubſtance of his Diſcourſe. Now to particulars.

As God liveth who hath taken away my judgment.

The Original text may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, As an Oath, ſo we, As God liveth, &c.

Secondly, As an Aſſertion, The living God, or the God that liveth, hath taken away my judgment. I ſhall touch the words under both notions. But,

Firſt, As an Oath: He ſwears by the life of God; which Job doth to ſhew, that as ſure as God is the living God for ever, ſo he certainly purpoſed that he would neither deſiſt while he lived from maintaining his own integrity, nor would he at all maintain it falſly.

Jurejurãdo ſolenni ſe eorum ſententiæ quãdiu vitam egerit, non ſubſcripturum, ſed in ſua innocentia præſtaturum. Merc.

We meet frequently in Scripture with this Oath, By the life of God, or, As God liveth (1 Sam. 25. 34. 2 Sam. 2. 27. Rev. 10. 6.) This chi Eloah was the great Oath, the greateſt Oath among the Jews. And as we find holy men thus ſwearing and vowing by the life of God, ſo God himſelf ſwears thus alſo, As I live is the Oath of God (Ezek. 18. 3.) and 'tis often repeated in that book, As I live, ſaith the Lord; As I live, ſaith the Lord.

Hence Note, Firſt, Oaths are lawful.

Yea, Oaths are not only lawful, but they are commanded (Jer. 4. 2.) And thou ſhalt ſwear, the Lord liveth, in judgment, and in righteouſneſs; where the Command lyes not only upon the (modus, or) manner of ſwearing, in truth, and in righteouſneſs, and in judgment, but upon the very act, Thou ſhalt ſwear, the Lord liveth. The Lord by Moſes laid this charge long before upon the people of Iſrael (Deut. 6. 13.) Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſwear by his Name.

But it may be objected, How then doth Chriſt ſay (Matth. 5. 34.) Swear not at all? And the Apoſtle James (Chap. 5. 12.) Above all things, my Brethren, ſwear not? How is it at all lawful to ſwear, when Chriſt ſaith, Swear not at all?

I anſwer; When Chriſt ſaith, Swear not at all, the Text explains it ſelf, that it is not a diſallowance of ſwearing at all in any kind, but of ſwearing at all in ſome kind; Swear not at all, ſaith Chriſt; that is, do not ſwear an undue Oath, Neither by Heaven, for it is Gods Throne; nor by Earth, for it is his Footſtool; nor by Jeruſalem, for it is the City of the great King; neither ſhalt thou ſwear by thine head, for thou canſt not make one hair white or black. To ſwear by the creature is forbidden by Chriſt, not ſwearing by the Creator. This alſo is the mind of the Spirit by the Apoſtle James, Above all things, my Brethren, ſwear not, neither by Heaven, nor by the Earth, nor any other Oath; that is, do not ſwear any ſuch kind of Oath; it is not an abſolute denial of an Oath, but of prophane Oaths, Oaths by the Creature. To ſwear by any Creature is Idolatry; becauſe ſwearing is a part of the worſhip of God, and ſo excellent a part of the worſhip of God, that ſometimes it is put for the whole worſhip of God. Compare that Text (Deut. 6. 13.) with that (Matth. 4. 10.) and it will appear, that ſerving of God, and ſwearing by God, are equally put for the worſhip of God.

And I ſhall touch a little further, to ſhew how much of worſhip there is in ſuch ſwearing.

Firſt, There is a Confeſſion, or an acknowledgment that the Lord is, and is the living God; for though we do not ſwear formally (as the Lord liveth) yet every Oath in the Name of God is a tacite acknowledgement that the Lord is: An Oath by God gives him the glory of his being, that he is Jehovah, the true, the living, the everliving God.

Secondly, Swearing is an acknowledgment of the omniſciency of God, that he knows, and takes notice of what is done, of what is ſpoken and affirmed by men here below; that he knows not only the word that is ſpoken out, but the thoughts which lye within, or what correſpondency is held between the heart and the tongue, between our thoughts and words; this is a high part of worſhip.

Thirdly, It is worſhip, in that, He who ſweareth yieldeth himſelf up to the Juſtice of God, who will take vengeance on all thoſe who ſwear falſly, or invoke his Name, in pretence to cover falſhood, who make Oaths as ſtalking-horſes to their own ends; to confeſs the Lord an Avenger of all ſuch, is a great part of his glory.

Fourthly, An Oath is an acknowledgement of the power of God, that he is able to take vengeance, that he can make the ſtouteſt ſtoop, the Cedars bow, and the Oaks fall, and the Mountains quake at his preſence; there's much holy worſhip in this acknowledgment.

Fifthly, It is an evidence of our faith that God will do what is right; and of our holy fear, that we dare not ſpeak what is falſe, nor do what is wrong. When Jacob ſware to Laban (Gen. 33. 53.) He ſware by the fear of his Father Iſaac; that is, by that God whom his Father Iſaac feared; who as he is to be feared much and alwayes; ſo then moſt when we ſwear by his great and reverend Name.

Laſtly, It is an evidence of our love to and confidence in God; why elſe do we put our cauſe to him, and caſt our ſelves upon him, but that we expect good from him, and to be righted by him? Some of the Ancients have ſaid concerning prophane Oaths, No man ſwears by the life of the King, but he that would be thought a lover, yea, an adorer of the King: No man ſwears by the Name of God, but he ſpeaks love to God, if he ſwear in ſincerity and holy fear. We may ſum up all into this Argument, That which carrieth the acknowledgment of the Being, of the Omniſciency, of the Juſtice, of the Power of God, that which is an evidence of our faith, of our fear, of our love to God, that which is all this is a noble act of the worſhip of God; therefore ſwearing, which is and doth all theſe things, is an eminent act of worſhip.

Again, Taking theſe words as an Oath, we may enquire why doth Job ſwear, As God liveth? I anſwer, Job was ſpeaking about a very ſerious matter, and ſpeaking very ſeriouſly; he was upon weighty buſineſs, and his ſpirit had the weight of it upon him; he had been in a long debate about a great Controverſie with his Friends; this occaſion'd his Oath, As the Lord liveth. Hence take two Obſervations in reference to Oaths:

Firſt, Oaths are to be uſed only upon weighty and urgent occaſions.

Light Oaths, or Oaths upon light occaſions are weighty ſins; and by how much the matter weighs leſs, by ſo much the ſin weighs more. How great then is their ſin, who ſwear about trifles, who will ſwear upon any occaſion, yea, upon no occaſion, who ſwear becauſe they uſe to ſwear, not becauſe they have any reaſon to ſwear. Oaths are are almoſt as common as words with ſome, you ſhall ſeldom hear them ſpeaking without ſwearing. Oaths are uſed by ſome as if they thought them ornaments of ſpeech, and the very grace of their diſcourſe; whereas indeed they are the very excrements of ſpeech, and an argument that the ſpeaker hath no grace. Some are ſo accuſtomed to ſwearing, that they ſwear and know it not. And moſt know not what they do when they ſwear, though they ſwear whatſoever they are doing. And as light ſwearing by the Name of God is abominable, ſo any light uſing of his Name in thoſe ſudden Out-cryes, O Lord, O God, is extreamly ſinful.

Secondly, Job ſware, becauſe his bare words were not believed; he had often profeſſed his own Integrity, but they gave no credit to him, as if he had ſpoken rather vauntingly, and vain-gloriouſly then truly; now Job ſwears.

Obſerve, It is lawful for us to ſwear when we cannot otherwiſe be believed, when others are not ſatisfied with words we may come to an Oath.

An Oath is the laſt remedy, and this indeed ſhould ſtop all contending, and be a remedy of ſtrife. The Apoſtle ſaith (Heb. 6. 16.) An Oath among men is the end of all ſtrife; that is, an Oath ought to be the end of all ſtriſe; men ſhould proceed no further in ſtrife when an Oath is paſt. The deſign of this great Ordinance, ſwearing, is, that men may ceaſe contending. If we can give ſatisfaction, or gain credit any other way, we ſhould not proceed ſo far as Oath; and when we have given an Oath, we have gone to the utmoſt to give ſatisfaction. When once a mans Oath is not credited, he hath loſt all his credit.

Thirdly, Job ſwears by God, by the life of God (as God liveth)

Obſerve, An Oath is proper to God, and as we are to ſwear by God, ſo God only is to be ſworn by.

(Jer. 12. 16.) And it ſhall come to paſs, if they will diligently gently learn the wayes of my people, to ſwear by my Name (the Lord liveth) as they taught my people to ſwear by Baal, then ſhall they be built in the midſt of my people: As if the Lord had ſaid, You were heretofore taught to ſwear by the name of Baal; now if you will give this honour to me alone, to ſwear by my Name, you ſhall proſper and be ſtrong (*Iſa.*65.16.) He who bleſſeth himſelf in the earth, ſhall bleſs himſelf in the name of the God of truth; and he that ſweareth in the earth, ſhall ſwear by the God of truth; That is, if any man ſwear, this ſhall be his Oath, and no other, he ſhall ſwear by the God of truth. To ſwear by any other is a forſaking of God (Jer. 5. 7.) How ſhall I pardon thee this; thy Children have forſaken me, and ſworn by them that are no gods. Whatſoever creature any one ſwears by, he commits two great evils: Firſt, He ſwears by that which is no God: Secondly, Swearing by it, he puts it in the place and gives it the honour of God. That rebuke which Chriſt gives (Matth. 5. 54.) ſhews plainly, that ſome uſed to ſwear by the Heavens, ſome by the Earth, ſome by their heads. To ſwear vainly by the Name of the true God, and to ſwear at all by any creature, are alike abominable. We read what a tongue-taint or infection Joſeph had got in the Court of Pharaoh, even to ſwear by the life of Pharaoh; yea, he ſeems to have contracted a cuſtom of it, for he uſeth it twice in two verſes (*Gen.*42. 15,16.) The Courtiers of Pharaoh had (as it ſeems) taken up a flattering faſhion to ſwear by his life (as it hath ſince been the uſe in other places to ſwear by the life of the Emperour) Joſeph (a godly man) living a while in that Court, had ſtained his language with that curſed Courtſhip, or vain complemental ſwearing. We provoke him highly who made all things, while we ſwear by any thing which he hath made: If we muſt give an account for every idle word, what account will they make who frequently vent idolatrous Oaths? And what eſteem ſhall we make of their faith, who inſtead of placing it in God by believing, put it in the place of God by ſwearing? He that ſwears by his Faith breaks it, and declares at his tongue an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. For ſwearing by falſe objects the Land mourns as well as for ſwearing falſly. Polluted lips pollute a Land. When the Lord turns to a people a pure lip or language, then they will call upon his Name (only) and ſerve him with one conſent or ſhoulder, Zeph. 3. 9.

But ſay ſome, Is it ſinful to ſwear by any thing but by God? Why then ſaith the Church (Cant. 3. 5. which ſome interpret as an Oath) I charge you, O ye daughters of Jeruſalem, by the Roes and by the Hinds of the field, that ye ſtir not up, nor awake my Love untill he pleaſe.

I anſwer; The words have an adjuration in them, not an Oath; the Spouſe chargeth the daughters of Jeruſalem, that they would not do any thing to provoke or diſquiet Chriſt, which even the Roes and the Hinds of the field would not do; or in caſe they do, ſhe threatens them, that the Roes and Hinds ſhall teſtifie againſt them, becauſe they did what the Roes would not, had they reaſon as men and women have. There is a vaſt difference between adjuring or charging others, and ſwearing our ſelves.

That of Paul is objected likewiſe (1 Cor. 15.31.) I proteſt by your rejoycing which I have in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, I dye daily: Paul ſeems to ſwear by their rejoycing.

I anſwer; Though Paul's ſpeech hath ſome appearance of an Oath, yet it is only an obteſtation; Paul doth not ſwear by their rejoycing, but makes a profeſſion, or proteſtation by it: As if he had ſaid, My troubles and afflictions which I endure for Chriſt, would teſtifie for me, if they were vocal, or could ſpeak, that as ſurely as you rejoyce in Chriſt, or I with you or for you, ſo ſurely I dye daily; that is, I daily expoſe my ſelf to the dangers of death, or to deadly dangers, for the Goſpel ſake, and converſion of the Gentiles. Thus the Prophets made obteſtations by the Heaven, and by the Earth, or called them ſolemnly to witneſs; but they never ſware by them.

For the cloſe of this point, I ſhall only add that there are four things which render an Oath ſinful and unlawful.

Firſt, When we ſwear falſly, though by the true God.

Secondly, When we ſwear raſhly, or without cauſe, by the true God.

Thirdly, When we ſwear lightly in the weightieſt cauſes, by the true God.

Fourthly, When we ſwear, though truly, upon the greateſt cauſe, and with the greateſt ſolemnity or reverence by any thing which is not God, or below God, as all creatures and things belonging to the creature are.

So much of thoſe words in the notion of an Oath, As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgment.

I ſhall touch them in the ſecond reading, as they are an aſſeveration, or a ſtrong aſſertion.

The living God, or the God who liveth, hath taken away my judgment.

This Attribute, The living God, is often uſed in Scripture; and God is ſo called,

Firſt, In oppoſition to Idols, or falſe Gods, who have no life at all in them (*Pſal.*95.) They have eyes and ſee not, and ears but hear not, &c. That's the ſtile which the Apoſtle Paul gives them (1 Theſ. 1. 9.) For they themſelves ſhew of us what manner of entring we had unto you, and how ye turned from Idols to ſerve the living and true God: The living God is oppoſed to Idols. We have the like oppoſition (Hab. 2. 19.) Woe to him that ſaith to the wood awake, to the dumb ſtone ariſe, it ſhall teach, &c. The ſtone is dumb, the wood is aſleep; woe to him that ſaith to dead things awake, But the living Lord ſpeaketh in his holy Temple.

Secondly, God is called the living God, as in oppoſition to Idols, and all falſe Gods: So

Firſt, As having life originally and primarily in himſelf, or as being life; we cannot ſo properly ſay that God hath life, as that he is life; he is life eſſentially; the life of God is the living God; the life of a man is another thing from man; God and his life are the ſame. Again, as God is called the living God, becauſe he is the principle of his own life, altogether life, and in him is no death, nothing of death at all. So

Secondly, He is called the living God derivatively, as conveighing and letting out life to all creatures; life of any degree it is from God, from him we receive life and breath (Acts 17. 28. Pſal. 36. 9.) With thee is the well of life, or the well of lives; that is, of all ſorts of lives. Firſt, The life of vegetation, or growth in Plants: Secondly, The life of ſenſe in Beaſts: Thirdly, The life of Reaſon in man: Fourthly, The life of Grace in Saints here on earth, and the life of Glory, which is the portion of Saints for ever in Heaven, proceed from God; He is the Well or Spring, the Well-ſpring of all theſe lives. And ſeeing he is the living God, therefore, firſt, Honour God as the living God.

How is that? Firſt, We honour him ſo by acknowledging him the living God, as ſubjects were wont to ſay to Kings in way of gratulation, and to teſtifie hearty affection, God ſave them, or let them live, 1 Sam. 10. 24. 1 Kings 1. 25. 2 Kings 11. 12. So we ought to ſay in way of Adoration, The Lord liveth, Pſal. 18. 46. Secondly, We honour God as the living God by giving him a living ſervice, or by being a living ſacrifice unto him (Rom. 12. 1.) Offer up your bodies a living Sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reaſonable ſervice. A living ſervice is the proper honour of the living God. This living ſervice is the fruit of the death of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle concludes emphatically (*Heb.*9. 13.) How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt purge our Conſciences from dead works to ſerve the living God: As if he had ſaid, Nothing is more unſuitable, more uncomely, then to ſerve a living God with dead works; if you were to ſerve an Idol, a ſtone or a ſtock, dead works were good enough for it; a ſervice without life, without heat, without ſpirit, would ſerve the turn for ſuch a Deity. But the blood of Chriſt ſprinkled upon Believers, purgeth them from dead wotks; that is, from thoſe works which are done in a ſtate of death and nature, and likewiſe from thoſe works which when we are in a ſtate of life, are yet liveleſs, powerleſs, the blood of Chriſt purgeth us from them alſo; there is a great deal of deadneſs even in thoſe who are in a ſtate of life; now the blood of Chriſt gets out this death. Remember when you come to hear, or pray, or perform any act of worſhip to God, that you are doing it to the living God; dead ſervices, dead worſhip are moſt improper for the living God.

Secondly, If the Lord be the living God, then acknowledge him as the Author of life; bleſs him and adore him, not only as he is original life, but as he is the Author of your life, as the Author of all the life that is in the world; the very life that is in Plants ſpeaks God the Author of it. Bleſs God that the Herbs grow, and the Trees bloſſom: Bleſs God for the life of Beaſts; that they move, and labour, and travel for us is of God: Bleſs him much more for the life of Reaſon, which we our ſelves receive from him as men: But above all, bleſs God for ſpiritual life, and for Jeſus Chriſt who is life, and who hath brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel: Bleſs him for Eternal life, who is the living, who is the everliving God.

Laſtly, If God be the living God, then we ſhould be willing to offer up our lives a ſacrifice for him; as we are to offer up our ſelves to the Lord a living ſacrifice; ſo we ſhould be ready to offer up our lives as a ſacrifice, we ſhould be willing to dye for the living God: No man would dye for a dead Idol; But who would not dye for the living God when God calls him to it? God is the life giver, and if we lend him a life, he can give us our life again, and will. What is given to the poor we lend unto the Lord, becauſe he is the giver of all, and hath promiſed to give it us back again. And if we give a life for God, we put it into ſuch a hand as hath all life in his hand, and he will give us back our life in a better life. This ſhould be our encouragement at all times, even to lay down our lives for God, who is the living God, and this is our aſſurance, that he will give us back our lives again. Let us alwayes give up our ſelves a living ſacrifice to God, by doing according to his will; And let us be alwayes ready to give up our lives as a ſacrifice to God, in ſuffering according to his will, whenſoever his will is to call us out to ſuffer.

Job having taken a ſolemn Oath by the living God, giveth us a further deſcription of God by two things which he had done to him: Firſt, He had taken away his judgment: Secondly, He had vexed his ſoul. As the Lord liveth,

Who hath taken away my judgment; or, Hath made my judgment to go back.

So the Text ſtrictly in the letter: The Chaldee Paraphraſt thus, He hath taken away the rule, or meaſure of my judgment: But what means Job by this Judgment which God took away? I anſwer, Judgment may be conſidered two wayes, Firſt, For an evil inflicted or feared: When God brings trouble upon a perſon, or upon a people, he bringeth judgment upon them; and when he threateneth trouble, he threatens judgment. The Prophet encourageth Sion to rejoyce, becauſe the Lord had taken away her judgments (Zeph. 3. 14, 15.) Sing O daughter of Sion; ſhout O Iſrael; be glad and rejoyce with all the heart, O daughter of Jeruſalem: Why is Sion called to this joy? The next words tell us why, The Lord hath taken away thy judgments: It muſt needs be a merry day with us, a mercy to us, to have thoſe judgments taken away from us which ſtand in oppoſition to mercy; ſo the Prophet explains himſelf. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath caſt out thine enemy the King of Iſrael, even the Lord is in the midſt of thee, thou ſhalt not ſee evil any more. Sion rejoyced becauſe her judgments were taken away; but Job complains becauſe his judgment was taken away. Job's judgment was taken away; but Job found his judgments ſtill upon him, or untaken away; he was ſtill poor and oppreſt, ſtill weak and reproacht: This kind of judgment was not taken away.

סור Receſſit, trãſitus ablatus fuit, in Hiphil recedere fecit. Fecit ut recedat judicium meum. Heb. Abſtulit regulam judicii mei. Chald.

Secondly, Judgment ſignifieth right, the right rule without, and the principle of righteouſneſs within. I will praiſe thee (ſaith David, Pſal. 119.7.) with uprightneſs of heart, when I ſhall have learned thy righteous judgments; or, the judgments of thy righteouſneſs. And again (ver. 20.) My ſoul breaketh for the longing that it hath to thy judgments at all times: As if he had ſaid, I deſire with great earneſtneſs, even with a kind of violence (for that is in breaking) both to know the rules of righteouſneſs exactly, and alwayes to do acts of righteouſneſs. And that's the meaning of David's prayer (Pſal. 72.1.) Give the King thy judgments, O God: As if he had ſaid, O God, give the King a ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding to know what is right, and give him a love and delight in doing it. This is the judgment which repenting Iſrael is commanded to ſeek (Iſa. 1. 17.) And to do this judgment is to do every man right in his cauſe. Hence that complaint (Iſa. 59. 8, 9.) There is no judgment in their goings; that is, they have no mind to go right in any matter, nor to do right to any man; ſo the Text explains it ſelf in the following words, They have made them crooked paths, whoſoever goeth therein ſhall not know peace: Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth Juſtice overtake us; we wait for light, but behold obſcurity. Every thing falls out croſs and contrary to our hope, becauſe we walk ſo croſs and contrary to the rule. It is a great judgment of God upon man, when judgment is not found between man and man; nor is there a clearer evidence, that wrathful juſtice hath overtaken us, then when righteous juſtice doth not. The ſame Prophet at once repreſents and rebukes the Church ſadly, yea, and ſinfully concluding (like Job here) that her judgment was departed (Iſa. 40. 27.) Why ſayeſt thou, O Jacob, and ſpeakeſt, O Iſrael (Is it comely for thee to ſay or ſpeak thus?) my way is hidden from the Lord; and my judgment is paſſed over from my God? The words carry a doleful ſound of diſtruſt, either of Gods good will to them, or power to relieve them. The way of Jacob was not the courſe which he took, but the courſe which was taken with him; or it was the way of Gods dealing towards him, not the way of his walking towards God. My way is hid from the Lord: As if he had ſaid, Surely the Lord looks not after me, he takes no more notice of what befals me, then if all were a ſecret to him, or to hard for him (for in Scripture thoſe things are ſaid to be hidden from us which are too hard for us (Deut. 17. 8.) If a matter be too hard for thee: The Original is, If a matter be hidden, ſtrange, or wonderful to thee. Thus Jacob ſaid (though expreſſed by another word) My way is too hard for, or my way is hidden from the Lord; and my judgment is paſſed over from my God. Chriſt reproves the Phariſees (Luke 11.42.) Woe unto you, for ye tyth mint, and rue, and all manner of herbs, and paſs over judgment. And thus the Church ſeems to complain of God, My judgment is paſſed over from my God: The Lord regards not to do me right; he takes no care of my cauſe; he doth not free me out of the hands of the enemy and oppreſſor; he hath laid me out of his thoughts. In this ſence Job ſpake here, God hath taken away my judgment; that is, he doth not give judgment or ſentence for me; he neglects me and my cauſe; I long ſince deſired that the Lord would have the hearing of it quite through, and ſo give judgment upon me and my Friends, or upon the whole matter between me and my Friends (Chap. 23. 3, 4.) O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his ſeat, I would order my cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments: This hath been my earneſt ſuit to God, but God hath taken away my judgment, he refuſeth my petition, he will not acquit me from my adverſary (which is my due) for he knoweth that I am righteous.

But was not this a great diſtemper in Job, to charge God thus, or to complain that God had taken away his judgment.

I anſwer, We are not to underſtand this ſpeech as if he charged the Lord directly with a neglect of doing him right, much leſs that he charged the Lord with doing him any wrong. His words at the beſt had much boldneſs in them and impatience, but no blaſphemy, which was the thing that Satan laboured to bring him to, even to curſe God, and charge him fooliſhly. His meaning then (taking his words with a grain of ſalt) is only this, that God did defer to clear up his innocency, or that God did, as it were, for the preſent lay his buſineſs aſide, and would not determine his cauſe, that God did not appear for him, nor vindicate him (though he had ſo often appealed to him) according to his earneſt expectation. We find Elihu caſting this paſſage upon Job, as a high ſtrain of preſumption (Chap. 34. 3.) For Job hath ſaid, I am righteous, and God hath taken away my judgment. Elihu expounded Job's words as a complaint againſt God, refuſing to do him juſtice: As if he had ſaid, I am righteous, but God will not do me right; whereas Job only declar'd the matter of fact, how the caſe ſtood with him, that God to that day had not declared for him according to the righteouſneſs of his cauſe, or judgment, but left him in appearance under the cenſure cenſure of his Friends, even ſuch, as they judged him to be an Hypocrite, or the worſt of wicked men.

Si judiciũ ſnmatur (ut ſæpe ſolet) pro æquitate cauſæ cui debetur illa judicii pare quæ eſt abſolntio; tum auferre judicium erit non abſolvere pœna. Pined.

Hence Obſerve, God doth not alwayes give teſtimony to, or clear up the innocency of his faithful Servants.

He lets them lye under the clouds, he ſuffers the haſty judgments and harſh opinions of men to continue upon them, without any anſwer for their integrity; they are aſperſed, and dirt is caſt in their faces, they lye among the pots, and are blackt all over as with a coal, they are accounted (as Job was) the vileſt of the ſons of men, and yet (though the Lord knows it is otherwiſe with them) he lets it be ſo with them.; he lets the dirt ſtick upon them, even upon the face of their reputation, and will not waſh it off. They whom God hath made clean, the world either makes or reputes unclean. As that which is highly eſteemed among men is an abomination in the ſight of God; ſo they who are highly eſteemed of God, are an abomination in the ſight of m[illegible] Theſe ſufferings of the Saints in their own credit, or [illegible]e opinion of men, ſerve the holy ends and purpoſes of G[illegible]d as much as any of their ſufferings, whether in body or eſtate, by the oppreſſions and perſecutions of men. And therefore Saints are detained under theſe tryals as well as any other, till thoſe holy ends are ſerved; and longer then that they ſhall not be detained under them. This tongue-rod either of wicked men, or of miſtaken and miſunderſtanding brethren, ſhall not reſt upon the lot of the righteous; though God take away their judgment for the preſent, yet at laſt he will give judgment for them. David was not only riſen up to that aſſurance, but had it in experience (Pſal. 9. 3, 4, 5.) When mine enemies are turned back, they ſhall fall and periſh at thy preſence, for thou haſt maintained my right, and my cauſe; thou ſatteſt in the Throne judging right, or, in righteouſneſs. David found God ſtanding up preſently for him, and aſſerting his innocency, he found God ſitting in his Throne, and giving right judgment againſt his enemy. But is not God alwayes upon his Throne? Or doth he any thing at any time upon his Throne but what is right? Wo to thoſe who think otherwiſe: God is alwayes upon his Throne, and can do nothing but right there. But he doth not alwayes give out or declare his righteous judgments, or the righteouſneſs of his judgments: All men have not the fruit or benefit of them, as David then had. Thou haſt rebuked the heathen, thou haſt deſtroyed the wicked, thou haſt put out their name for ever and ever. Thus the Lord did execute judgment for David even upon the place. He gives a like report of the preſent appearance of God for him (Pſal. 41. 12.) As for me thou upholdeſt me in mine integrity; that is, while I walk uprightly, ſincerely, and with a ſingle heart, thou takeſt my part, and maintaineſt me againſt all mine enemies, or notwithſtanding the oppoſition of mine enemies, thou doſt maintain in me a deſire and purpoſe to walk ſtill ſincerely, uprightly, and in the ſingleneſs of my heart. And indeed we have great reaſon to hold faſt, and to hold on in our integrity, while the Lord undertakes to uphold us in our integrity. And if he ſhould let us fall in our integrity, or our integrity fall for a while, yet we have a promiſe (Pſal. 37. 6.) that the Lord will do it for all his people at laſt, or in the fitteſt ſeaſon; Wait upon the Lord, truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs; he ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſs as the light, and thy judgment as the noon day: Though thy judgment or right be like midnight, dark, and obſcure, ſo that none can ſee it; though the Lord himſelf (as Job here ſpeaks) ſeemeth to have taken away thy judgment, yet wait a while, and thou ſhalt ſee a glorious turn, thou ſhalt ſee darkneſs turned to light, and midnight to noon day; thou ſhalt ſee God bringing forth thy righteouſneſs as the light, and bringing back or reſtoring thy judgment (which he took away) like unto the noon day. Thus Paul comforted himſelf when God had taken away his judgment, and he lay under the ſevereſt judgment of men (1 Cor. 3. 4, 5, 6.) With me it is a very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of you, or of mans judgment (I know men cenſure me liberally) for I know nothing by my ſelf (I am clear in my own conſcience) yet am I not hereby juſtified; but he that judgeth me is the Lord. God judgeth all men preſently, as to his own knowledge of their eſtate, and he will ere long publiſh the knowledge of their eſtate to others, even in the ears and to the open view of all: Therefore (the Apoſtle concludes, ver. 5.) judge nothing before the time until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs,, and will manifeſt the counſels of the heart, and then ſhall every man (who hath been falſly accuſed and wrongfully diſgraced by men) have praiſe of God. In the great Judgment God will take away that judgment of outward approbation from all wicked men which the world had given them, and he will give that judgment of outward approbation to all godly men, which himſelf had taken away from them while they were in this world. And they ſhall ſay in that day, The Lord liveth, who hath reſtored our judgment which he was pleaſed (as Job ſaith here) once to take away.

And the Almighty who hath vexed my ſoul.

Here again we are to repeat or ſuppoſe the Oath, As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgment (as) the Almighty (liveth) who hath vexed my ſoul. This title of God, Almighty, notes, Firſt, the Strength; Secondly, The goodneſs of God. As the Lord is powerful, ſo he is the Spring and Fountain of goodneſs and mercy to his people; nevertheleſs though the Lord be thus almighty, though he be thus merciful and good in himſelf (Yet ſaith Job) he vexeth my ſoul. The Text is, He maketh my ſoul bitter; he is bitter to me; it is uſual to expreſs affliction by bitterneſs, and the inflicting of affliction upon any, by imbittering them. There is a threefold notion of bitterneſs in Scripture: Firſt, Sin is called bitterneſs (Hoſ. 12. 14.) Ephraim provoked him to anger moſt bitterly. We tranſlate in the Superlative: The Text is, Ephraim provoked him to anger with bitterneſſes. What provokes God to anger? It is ſin: And what is ſin? Bitterneſs, yea, bitterneſſes; there is a collection of all bitterneſſes in any ſin; How many bitterneſſes are there then in a collection of many ſins! Ephraim provoked him to anger with bitterneſſes; that is, with many ſins. We render well, Ephraim provoked him to anger moſt bitterly; either implying the degree of Ephraim's ſinfulneſs, which provoked God to anger, his was a high provocation; or implying the degree of that anger which the Lord expreſſed by reaſon of that provocation: The Lord was moſt bitterly angry at the ſinful provocations of Ephraim. And this complyes with the following notion of bitterneſs in Scripture.

Quaſi mirandum ſit; quod tam bonus Deus, tam durè diuque illū affligat: Bold.

Secondly, Anger and wrath it ſelf is called bitterneſs, or a bitter thing; anger is hot, and heat makes the natural humour bitter; whence by alluſion anger is expreſſed by bitterneſs, becauſe it doth imbitter the ſpirit, as much heat imbittereth the ſtomach. The word is uſed in that Propheſie of the Ram, and the He-goat (Dan. 8. 8.) and I ſaw him (that is, the He-goat) come cloſe to the Ram, and he was moved with choller againſt him; ſo we tranſlate: The Text is ('tis the word here uſed in Job) he was imbittered againſt him, or vexed at him. The Goat (or Alexander King of Greece) was imbittered againſt the Ram (or againſt Darius the King of Perſia) and ſmote the Ram, and brake his two horns. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 17. 11.) An evil man ſeeketh only rebellion; ſome read it, He ſeeketh only anger: The Text is, An evil man ſeeketh only bitterneſs, that is, to imbitter the ſpirits of others; he careth not how much anger he kindles among men, and therefore he loves to blow the coals: Whereas it is the buſineſs of a gracious man to ſweeten and quiet the ſpirits of others: He is peaceable himſelf to others, and a Peace-maker between others: But an evil man ſeeketh only anger.

Adducere animam in amaritudinem, vel juxta Hebr. amaricare animam eſt provocare ad iracundiam. Bold.

Thirdly, Bitterneſs is put for affliction. That which makes our lives bitter to us, may well be called bitterneſs. When that good Woman Naomi came home, afflicted, and emptied, to her friends and fellow Citizens, who had formerly known her, they being much moved between compaſſion and wonder at her ſad condition, ſaid, Is this Naomi! Is it poſſible: What is this Naomi! Then ſhe ſaid unto them (Ruth 1. 20.) Call me not Naomi (that is, beautiful) but call me Marah (that is, bitter) for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me; I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home empty. And as bitterneſs is put for worldly ſorrow, or for that ſorrow which ariſeth from troubles or wants in the things of the world; ſo alſo for ſpiritual or godly ſorrow (Zech. 12. 10.) They ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only Son, and they ſhall be in bitterneſs terneſs for him, as one that is in bitterneſs for his firſt-born. That which the Prophet calls mourning in the former part of the verſe, he calls being in bitterneſs in the latter: As it is an evil and a bitter thing to ſin againſt God; ſo ſinning againſt God ſhould be followed with that good, but bitter thing, mourning, or godly ſorrow. Here Job was vexed or imbittered, not ſo much with ſorrow for his ſins, as with the ſence of Gods afflicting hand in the tryal of his Graces. Thus the Almighty (ſaith he) hath vexed my ſoul.

He did not ſay, The Almighty had vexed his body, or eſtate, though the Lord did vex both, or him in both: He pitched only upon the vexation of his ſoul; his affliction went deep, it reached not only his skin and fleſh, but his ſoul and ſpirit; yet when he ſaith, The Almighty hath vexed my ſoul, he doth not mean it of a ſoul-affliction, either alone, or in oppoſition to the afflictions of the body, ſuch as are trouble of mind for ſin, diſquietneſs of conſcience, and ſence of divine wrath; but he means thus much only (I ſuppoſe) in this place, That his troubles were great and burdenſome, ſo great and burdenſome, that he was ſmitten all over, and felt the ſad effects of the Lords afflicting hand in the grief of his ſoul, as well as in the pains of his body, The Almighty hath vexed my ſoul.

Firſt, Obſerve, The Lord hath all power in his hand.

He were not Almighty if he had not. Some men have preſumed themſelves able to do all things, and ſo have moſt blaſphemouſly uſurped this attribute of Almightineſs; but none ever were ſo.

Amicus fui amicis, Eques & Sagittarius optimus omnia efficere potens; Inſcriptio ſepulchro Cyri. Arian. l. 6. Expedit. Alex.

Secondly, Obſerve, It is not for want of power that God doth not preſently relieve and help his diſtreſſed Servants.

As God never wants ſtrength to afflict, ſo not to deliver. He is alwayes furniſhed with power to execute whatſoever he hath a will to appoint. When we lye in affliction unrelieved, we are more ready to queſtion the power of God, then our own ſinfulneſs. The Jews had ſuch apprehenſions of God, as we may collect from that redargution in the Prophet (Iſa. 59.1.) The Lords hand is not ſhortned that it cannot ſave: As if he had ſaid, Ye think ye are in a diſtreſs ſo deep that the Lords hand is not long enough now (though it have been heretofore) to reach your ſalvation, whereas in truth the Lords hand is not ſhortened that it cannot ſave: The reaſon why ye are not delivered, is, not becauſe God hath not power to deliver you, but becauſe your ſins ſtand in the way of your deliverance: Your iniquities have ſeparated between you and your God; and your ſins have hid his face from you that he will not hear. Till our ſins be removed either by pardon or repentance, or both, troubles will not remove from us. While the fountain of good is ſeparated from us, evil muſt needs abide with us. Our help is alwayes in the hand of God; but he hath not alwayes a will to help us; and the moſt uſual reaſon why his will is not to ſave and deliver us from or out of trouble, is, becauſe our will is ſo big with ſin, and ſo much in the deliverance of it.

Thirdly, Obſerve, The Lord is ſometimes ſo far from putting forth his power to relieve his precious ones, that he puts it forth to afflict and lay them low.

To comfort the ſoul is the moſt proper work of God, and yet 'tis his work alſo to vex the ſoul. And as he ſpeaks to the wicked in his wrath, and vexeth them in his ſore diſpleaſure (Pſal. 2. 5.) ſo 'tis his pleaſure (ye not without infinite wiſdom and gracious intendments alſo) to ſpeak to many who are godly in his anger, and to vex their ſouls under ſevereſt diſpenſations.

Fourthly, Obſerve, Afflictions are to the ſoul, as bitter things to the taſt.

No chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous (Heb. 12. 11.) Though affliction bring forth peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs to them that are exerciſed thereby; yet to be under that exerciſe is ſorrow and trouble: Even thoſe chaſtenings which are (as to the iſſue) only for the tryal and cleanſing of the ſoul, are alſo (in the way) a vexation to the ſoul.

Fifthly, Obſerve, Saints acknowledge the hand of God in all their afflictions.

The Almighty hath vexed my ſoul, ſaith Job. He had many other hands upon him, but he took moſt notice of the hand of God, as hath been ſhewed at the twenty-firſt verſe of the firſt Chapter, and elſewhere in this Book. Faith ſeeth him who is inviſible, vexing as well as comforting: And 'tis comfort to Saints, not only to remember God in their afflictions, but to remember that it is God who afflicts them.

Sixthly, Note, A godly man hath good thoughts of God, while he aſcribes his penal evils or ſufferings unto God.

Job knew and acknowledged that God was not only good in himſelf, but good to him while he vexed his ſoul; while God afflicts us and makes us poor, or ſick, while he ſtrips us naked of riches, children, friends a[illegible]elations, yet we ſhould ſay (as David, Pſal. 73. 1. [illegible]ly God is good to Iſrael, even to all them that are upright in heart. While the Lord vexeth our ſouls, our ſouls ſhould magnifie the Lord. While the Lord makes our ſouls bitter, our ſouls ſhould ſweeten the dealings of God. While the Lord troubles us, we ſhould not be diſpleaſed; yea, we ſhould be well pleaſed with the Lord. God doth his people no hurt, much leſs doth he intend them hurt when he makes them ſmart; therefore it is their duty, even when they ſmart, to make the faireſt reports of him to all that come about them: God is ſuch a Fountain as ſends forth both bitter waters and ſweet, as to our preſent ſence; but all the waters which he ſends forth are ſweet as to our future benefit; therefore though ſence ſay of ſome of them they are bitter, yet let faith ſay of all of them they are ſweet.

Seventhly, Obſerve, Saints afflictions are often very deep afflictions.

They go down to the very ſoul. Not only were Joſeph's feet hurt in the ſtocks, but the iron entred into his ſoul, as the old Tranſlation hath it (Pſal. 105. 18.) or, as we put in the Margin, His ſoul came into iron; that is, he was afflicted, or (as Job here ſpeaks) vexed to his ſoul. As the Word of God (Heb. 4. 2.) pierceth to the dividing; ſo the Rod of God can pierce to the grieving and paining of ſoul and ſpirit, of the joynts and marrow. Thus Job deciphers God in his dealing with him; As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgment, and the Almighty, who hath vexed my ſoul: But what was Job's Oath, or whether did it tend? The two next verſes ſhew us: Firſt, The continuance of this Oath upon him: Secondly, The concernment of it, or about what he took this ſolemn Oath. The former we have in the third verſe, the latter in the fourth.

Verſe 3. All the while my breath is in me, and the Spirit of God is in my noſtrils;

4. My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs, nor my tongue utter deceit.

Job takes his Oath, not for a day or a year, but for his life, All the while my breath is in me; that is, as long as I live: While breath continues, life continues. It is ſaid (Gen. 2. 7.) The Lord breathed into man the breath of life. The Hebrew word for breath hath an affinity with that by which the Heavens are expreſſed in the ſame language; implying (ſay ſome) that the breath of man came from Heaven, or was of God: The breath of man was not created with man in the forming of the body, as it was with the beaſts; but after the body was formed, God infuſed the breath, and therefore Moſes in that Text ſpeaks diſtinctly concerning man: Firſt, The Lord God formed man out of the duſt of the earth, and (then) breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life, and man became a living ſoul. So then, To have breath in us, is to have life in us, or it is a circumlocution of life; and as ſoon as breath departs, life departs, we dye. It is ſaid (1 Kings 17. 17.) That the Son of the Woman the Miſtreſs of the houſe fell ſick, and his ſickneſs was ſo ſore, that there was no breath left in him; that is, he dyed. When Eutychus, falling from the third loft, was taken up dead, Paul went down and fell on him, and embracing him, ſaid, Trouble not your ſelves, for his life is

is in him. The Greek is, His ſoul is in him. They who took him up concluded him dead, becauſe he did not breath, knowing that when breath goes life goes too: But Paul fetcht him again by prayer, and his breath returned. When Paul embraced him breath re-enter'd him; and therefore he ſaith peremptorily, his life is in him, either becauſe it was then returned, or becauſe he knew it would; according to the uſual language of faith, he ſpake of it as of a thing already done. Senſe and reaſon ſaid, he was dead becauſe his breath was gone; but faith ſaid, his life was in him, knowing that God was able to bring the breath back again. Mans life amounts only to this, He hath his breath in his noſtrils (Iſa. 2.22.) Or (as Job ſpeaks) breath is in him. All the while my breath is in me,

And the Spirit of God in my noſtrils.

This latter clauſe is of the ſame ſignification with the former, and is but a repetition in other words, yet there is ſome difference of opinion, what ſhould be here meant by the Spirit of God. There are among the Ancients who underſtand, the holy Spirit; not only the Spirit of God, but God the Spirit; and they tell us, that we have a deſcription or ſpecification of the whole Trinity in this Text: by the living God, underſtanding the Father; and by the Almighty, the Son; and by the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghoſt. But I cannot comply with this interpretation; for though I doubt not but Job had the Spirit of God, yet here he is deſcribing his natural life, not his ſpiritual; and it is plain that he intends nothing but his natural life by the Spirit of God, becauſe he calleth it, The Spirit of God in his noſtrils. The holy, ſanctifying, comforting Spirit, is not ſaid to be a Spirit in our noſtrils, that's no way ſuitable to Scripture-ſpeaking, which ſaith, that the holy Spirit of God dwells in our hearts, or in our inner man, as alſo in our bodies, but never in our noſtrils. So then Spirit is the ſame with Breath. As for that addition, The Spirit of God, it ſignifieth only thus much, that God is the Maker or Author of the Spirit here ſpoken of; not that the Spirit here ſpoken of is God our Maker, or that God is the efficient cauſe of this Spirit, as of all other creatures, not that this Spirit is God by nature. So that when Job ſaith, All the while my breath is in me, and the Spirit of God is in my noſtrils, his ſcope is, to give utmoſt aſſurance to his Friends, that he intended to hold his own to the utmoſt: His breath he granted might quickly paſs away, and the Spirit in his noſtrils ſit upon his lips, ready to take leave and be gone; but if his life ſhould continue long, and he appear rather like a home-dweller then a ſtranger or ſojourner in this world, yet he was fully purpoſed to abide and continue in the ſame opinion, and defence of himſelf unto the end.

Spiritus Dei, Genitivus efficientis.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Life is of God.

The Spirit whereby we live the life of Nature, as well as the Spirit whereby we live the life of Grace; the Spirit in our noſtrils, as well as the Spirit in our hearts, is the gift, the only gift of God; all the powers in Heaven and Earth (without God) cannot give breath, nor make life. Art hath imitated living things; but never was there any Artiſt which could make things live: The Painter can make the Image of a man; but he cannot put life into his Image; God only doth that.

Firſt, Then our life depends upon God, we live or dye at his pleaſure (Pſal. 104. 29.) Thou hideſt thy face, they are troubled; thou takeſt away their breath, they dye and return to their duſt. Life is breath given, death is breath taken away. Daniel tells Nebuchadnezzar, The God in whoſe hand thy breath is, and whoſe are all thy wayes, haſt thou not honoured (Chap. 5. 23.) He deſcribeth God in his Greatneſs, by having that Great Kings breath in his hand; that is, in his power; He gave it thee, and he can take it from thee when he will. David puts this power among thoſe Excellencies of God, for which he is to be magnified by mankind (Pſal. 66. 8, 9.) O bleſs our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praiſe to be heard, which holdeth our ſoul in life: The Hebrew (as our Margin hath it) is, Which putteth our ſoul in life. We may take in both readings, and not at all enlarge the Text beyond its due bounds, for God firſt putteth our ſoul in life; that is, he cauſeth our ſoul; that is, our ſelves, or our perſons, to live by bringing and uniting ſoul and body together. Secondly, He holdeth our ſoul in life, by preſerving or delivering us from thoſe daily dangers and evils which threaten to ſeparate or divorce our ſouls from our bodies. If God did not hold and keep our ſouls in life, our ſouls could not continue in life one minute. No ſooner doth the living God withdraw his hand of preſervation, but man is among the dead, or upon the borders of diſſolution; diſeaſes and dangers would ſoon break this union, and unty this marriage-knot between ſoul and body, if God did not hold it; when God lets go it hold, out it goes; when God calleth, out it muſt. As God ſaid to Abraham (Gen. 12. 1.) Get thee out of thy Countrey, and from thy Kindred, and from thy Fathers houſe: God called him from his own home, and he willingly obeyed: So when God calls our ſpirit out of the body, and commands it to diſlodge, it muſt diſlodge and come out whether we will or no. And ſeeing our life or breath depends upon God, and a call from him fetcheth it forth at any time, let us pray (to ſpeak in alluſion to that of Chriſt in the Goſpel about the miſeries that were to come upon Jeruſalem, let us (I ſay) pray) that the flight of it may not be in the winter of ſin, in the night of ignorance, or on the Sabbath (I mean Satans Sabbath) of carnal ſecurity and impenitency. Seeing our breath muſt depart when God calls, it is our wiſdom to make ready for our departure. It is beſt to be ready and prepared for that, which we cannot avoid, how unready and unprepared ſoever we are. Moſt live as if their life were in their own hand, or at their own diſpoſe, and not in the hand or diſpoſe of God. They who live as they liſt, ſeem to ſay, they can live as long as they liſt. Let us remember, that as we are daily dying, and that as it cannot be many dayes before we muſt dye, ſo we may dye any day. As it is appointed for all men once to dye by a general decree; ſo it is appointed by a ſpecial decree when every man muſt dye; this decree is in the breaſt of God, in whoſe hand our breath is. Therefore as the Prophet exhorts (Zeph. 2. 1, 2.) let us gather our ſelves together, yea, gather together (in the acting of faith and every grace) before the decree bring forth, for our gathering to our fathers in the Grave.

Secondly, Obſerve, Our life is but breath in our noſtrils.

Such is the frailty of mans life, that his life ſtands alwayes at the door, as if it were taking leave of him. How ſoon may that be gone, which cannot ſtay when our breath is gone? When the Holy Ghoſt would ſhew how poor a thing man is, and how little, or rather how not at all to be truſted, or reckoned upon, he ſaith, Ceaſe ye from man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils (Iſa. 2. 22.) As if that were the moſt diſparaging expreſſion of mans life. Why ſhould we keep ſo much ado about any man living, ſeeing his breath, and ſo his life, may be gone before he or we can do any thing. And as the Prophet calleth us off from relyance upon man in general, becauſe his breath is in his noſtrils: So the Pſalmiſt upon the ſame reaſon calleth us off from relyance upon great men in ſpecial, knowing how apt we are to rely upon them, and to give the Gods of the earth that honour which is due only to the God of Heaven (Pſal. 146. 4, 5.) Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſon of man, in whom there is no help; his breath goeth forth, he returns to his duſt, in that very day his thoughts periſh. Unleſs breath go forth we dye, and death is nothing elſe but the going forth of the breath. Life is the going forth of the breath by reſpiration; and death is the going forth of the breath by expiration. And how ſoon may reſpiring be changed into expiring? And as we dye when our breath goes out, but returns not, ſo when it cannot get out. The body hath been called the priſon of the ſoul, and ſo in ſome ſence it is; but here is a riddle, The keeping of this priſoner is quite contrary to that of other priſoners; we keep priſoners by ſhutting up the doors; but if you ſhut up the doors of your body, the mouth and noſtrils, you looſe your priſoner, the ſoul gets preſently out; unleſs the breath have liberty to paſs out, you cannot hold it. The way to keep the breath in, is to give it free paſſage out; if the outward air be kept out, and the breath kept in, life is loſt; and we know how ſmall a matter will do this; a Gnat, a Fly, the ſtone of a Raiſon, a ſingle hair have done it in great Examples. Therefore let us ceaſe from other men, but chiefly from our ſelves, ſeeing we and they are ſo ſoon ceaſing; let us not over-rate the perſons of other men, nor (which we are very apt to do) our own, for our breath is in our noſtrils. Thus Job deſcribes himſelf in his mortal ſtate, All the while my breath is in me, and the Spirit of God in my noſtrils: As if he had ſaid, This is the ſhort and the long, the all of my reſolutions, while I am in this world, that whether my life or ſtay in this world be long or ſhort, I am ſtrongly reſolved, That,

Verſe 4. My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs, nor my tongue utter deceit.

In this verſe Job removes two evils or diſeaſes, or two evil diſeaſes of the tongue from himſelf. Firſt, The ſpeaking of wickedneſs, which is openly evil: Secondly, The ſpeaking of deceit, which is cloſely evil. Theſe two are joyned as in the Text; ſo (Pſal. 10. 7.) His (that is, the wicked mans) mouth is full of curſing, deceit, and fraud; from both theſe inſtruments and engines of the wicked, David prayeth earneſtly for deliverance (Pſal. 120. 2.) Deliver my ſoul, O Lord, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue. And here Job proteſts againſt both theſe tongue-abominations.

My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs.

Juxta jusjurandi formulum Hebræis familiarem, qua imprecationem ſolent omittere conditione tantum poſita. Merc.

The Hebrew is, If my lips ſhall ſpeak; that is, my lips ſhall not ſpeak. The words have the force, though not the form, of an imprecation; if my lips ſhall ſpeak wickedneſs, let this or that evil fall upon me, let my own tongue fall upon me (as David ſaith) The tongues of the wicked ſhall fall upon themſelves (Pſal. 64. 8.) let men account me a lyar, and let God give me to eat the fruit of my own lips.

My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs.

What wickedneſs is it which Job thus diſclaims? Some underſtand it of ſin in general; others more particularly, of that ſpecial wickedneſs which Satan hoped to thruſt him upon, by heaping afflictions upon him, the ſpeaking evil of, or blaſpheming the Name of God: As if he had ſaid, Though my afflictions and troubles ſhould be continued all the dayes of my life; yea, though I ſhould have more bitter potions given me to drink, then I have had to drink to this day, yet I will not ſpeak wickedly, I will not blaſpheme God (as Satan promiſed himſelf I would (Chap. 2. 5.) put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face) I will not curſe, nor ſpeak unbecomingly of his dealings with me; the worſt of evils ſhall not make me have an ill thought, nor ſpeak an ill word of God; however it fares with me, I will acknowledge not only that God is juſt, but that he is good, as in himſelf, ſo to me, to Afflicted Me: All my calamities and ſorrows cannot ſeparate me from the love of God to me, nor ſhall they (through his grace) ſeparate me from that duty which I owe to him. God loves me ſtill, though he puts me to trouble, and I will honour God ſtill, notwithſtanding all my troubles. Thus Job takes it upon him, that all the dayes of his life he will not ſpeak wickedneſs, though God ſhould continue to deal with him in outward things, as he uſually doth with the wicked. This is a holy and an heroick reſolution indeed, a reſolution well becoming that integrity which Job had profeſſed towards God, and which God had given teſtimony of concerning Job: Yet,

Secondly, I rather underſtand it of wickedneſs, reflecting upon himſelf in his preſent caſe, or the buſineſs that was in queſtion; I will not ſpeak wickedneſs; that is, I will not ſay or grant, either directly or by conſequence, that I am a wicked man, for then I ſhould miſ-judge and wrong my ſelf, as ye do. Ye have not only had and held up an ill opinion of me, but ye have held it forth; yet I will not take up an ill opinion, either of my perſon or of my cauſe; as long as I live I will not do it, my conſcience bearing me witneſs to the contrary. Taking this ſence, wickedneſs may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, For wickedneſs in the matter ſpoken: And ſo when he ſaith, I will not ſpeak wickedneſs, it is as if he had ſaid, I will not ſpeak the thing that is wicked, I will not aſſert that to be juſt which is unjuſt, or that to be righteous which is unrighteous; I will not call evil good nor good evil; I will not (to the beſt of my underſtanding) put darkneſs for light, nor light for darkneſs.

Secondly, For wickedneſs in the ſpeech, or ſpeaker: I will not ſpeak of my ſelf, or of my cauſe againſt my knowledge or conſcience; ſhould I adulterate what I know of my own condition, by mingling a lye with me, or by covering it either with excuſes or denyals, ſhould I conceal any part of my knowledge, to the detriment and diſadvantage of the truth, or to the ſaving of my own credit, This were wickedneſs, but my lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs.

Nor ſhall my tongue utter deceit.

He doth not ſay, my tongue ſhall not treſpaſs, or I will not offend with my tongue; no man can ſay, much leſs ſwear that he will not ſin with his tongue; but a man may ſwear and bind himſelf with an oath, that he will not utter deceit; that is, ſin deceitfully with his tongue: He may ſwear that he will not utter a word ſtudiedly, with an intent either to deceive others, or to wrong and prejudice his own cauſe. Thus any man may engage himſelf (when he ſeeth it needful) by ſtrongeſt aſſeverations, That, His Tongue ſhall not utter deceit.

Neque anima mea meditabitur injuſta. Sept.

The word here rendred to utter (which is a ſpeaking out) ſignifies alſo to meditate (Pſal. 1. 2.) which is a ſpeaking within. Thus the Seventy tranſlate; and becauſe they ſuppoſed the tongue to be an improper inſtrument of meditation, they, inſtead of tongue, tranſlate ſoul, Neither ſhall my ſoul meditate deceit; but it is uſual in Scripture to aſcribe meditation to the tongue, though it be properly the work of the heart or mind: That which the heart doth meditate with a purpoſe to utter with the tongue, may be ſaid to be meditated by the tongue. David makes a promiſe in that form (Pſal. 35. 28.) My tongue ſhall ſpeak of thy righteouſneſs, and of thy praiſe all the day long: The Hebrew is, My tongue ſhall meditate of thy righteouſneſs. (Pſal. 37. 30.) The mouth of the righteous ſpeaketh (the Hebrew is, meditateth) wiſdom. Meditation is aſcribed both to the tongue and mouth, becauſe we ought to meditate before we ſpeak; or we ſhould ſpeak that which we have meditated. It is not good to ſpeak raſhly, though that be good which we ſpeak; there ſhould be ſo much meditation before we utter any thing with the tongue, that the tongue it ſelf may be ſaid to have meditated what it uttereth. Solomon gives us an excellent rule for this (Prov. 16. 23.) The heart of the wiſe teacheth (or maketh wiſe) his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips; that is, a wiſe man never ſpeaks any thing till his heart hath taught it him; till he hath digeſted it by meditation, and his heart hath inſtructed his lips. Indeed every godly wiſe man hath himſelf been taught of God to be both a Teacher and a Learner, a Maſter and a Scholar to himſelf: He ſitteth as a Teacher or Maſter in the chair of his own heart, and thence giveth out leſſons to all the parts of himſelf, how to perform their ſeveral and reſpective duties. His heart teacheth his foot whither to go, and his hand it teacheth what to do: His heart teacheth his eye how to ſee and not ſin; as alſo his ear how to hear that he may be ſaved, and what not to hear leſt he be enſnared. But the chiefeſt Scholar and hardeſt to be kept in order which the heart hath, is the mouth or tongue; yet this the heart of the wiſe teacheth, and teacheth ſo effectually, that the mouth is made wiſe; that is, it is made to ſpeak wiſely, and then the mouth (if ever) ſpeaketh wiſely when it ſpeaks what it hath learned from the meditation of the heart. Thoſe are uſually the wiſeſt words when they come abroad, which have been brought out of the greateſt ſilence, and which the tongue may be as well ſaid to have meditated as to have ſpoken. What an age of truth ſhould we have, if all mens tongues did well meditate what they utter, as Job here profeſſeth, his tongue ſhould not utter, or meditate deceit? For we may put both together in Job's text, My tongue ſhall not utter any deceit which I have meditated, or any meditated deceit. To utter deceit, though in haſte and unmeditated, is bad enough; but to utter a meditated deceit is as bad as can be. Any evil which the tongue uttereth, hath by ſo much the leſs evil in it, by how much it hath the leſs of the heart or meditation in it. As they who ſpeak raſhly, do often ſpeak falſly; ſo it were well if they who ſpeak falſly, did alwayes ſpeak raſhly, and could ſay that their tongue hath not uttered, as Job ſaid his ſhould not utter a meditated deceit.

Conſidering this verſe with the former, While my breath is in me, while the Spirit of God is in my noſtrils, my lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs, or my tongue utter deceit.

Firſt obſerve, The purpoſes and reſolves of a godly man, to do good, or not to do evil, are not for a day, or a time, but for ever.

As the promiſes of God in mercy, ſo the purpoſes of the godly in duty are for ever. God is alwayes doing us good, and we ſhould never be doing evil; ſin is never in ſeaſon; there may be a time wherein we may forbear to do this or that good, but there is no time in which we muſt not forbear to do that which is evil. That which is unlawful to be done, ought never to be done. Some duties may be left undone at ſome times, but nothing may be done at any time againſt duty. Affirmative commands are alwayes binding, yet they do not bind alwayes, but Negative commands reach both. As the duties of them are ever in force, ſo they ever force us to duty.

Secondly note, Though a godly man be in a poſſibility to ſin every moment, and cannot but ſin while he is in this world, yet he may ſolemnly ingage himſelf by vow and oath, not only to take heed of ſin in general, but alſo that he will not, wilfully or knowingly, run into this or that particular ſin.

Not to ſin at all is the command of God, but no man can promiſe, much leſs take an oath, or make a vow, that he will not ſin at all; we muſt vow to do or not to do more then (according to the general tenor of the Covenant of Grace) God hath promiſed us an ability to do or not to do. We may ſay that we will depart from all iniquity, and that we will not wickedly depart from God; we may ſay our lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs, nor our tongue utter deceit, becauſe the grace of the new Covenant doth enable believers in all this. Grace fixeth the heart of a godly man againſt all ſin to the death, though, till he dye, he cannot be freed from all ſin. Every godly man can ſay he would never ſin, but no godly man may ſay, he will never ſin. The truth of Grace conſiſts in oppoſing every ſin, the ſtrength of Grace conſiſts in the mortifying of every ſin, but our full conqueſt and total prevalence over every ſin is our entrance into glory.

Thirdly, From the ſpecial matter about which Job takes up this oath and proteſtation, My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs, that is, this wickedneſs to betray my own cauſe.

Obſerve, We ought to be very reſolute in keeping and maintaining our innocency againſt all the world.

As our firſt and greateſt care ſhould be to be innocent and upright, ſo our next great care ſhould be to appear innocent and upright. He that is not innocent is loſt with God, and he that doth not appear ſo is loſt with men. Uprightneſs is ſuch a Jewel, that we cannot let go the Cabinet of it, reputation, without ſin; if by any ſinleſs endeavours of ours we may preſerve it. Whence by way of Corolary, Fourthly obſerve, To ſpeak falſly of our ſelves, or betray our own innocency, is a great wickedneſs, and the worſt kind of deceit.

As it is an abhorred wickedneſs to ſpeak good of our ſelves beyond what is (ſo the more cloſe and refined ſort of hypocrites do, who would have all the world believe they are godly, when they have no acquaintance with God, or the power of godlineſs, and therefore make it their buſineſs and ſtudy to paint over their rottenneſs with falſe and borrowed colours) ſo for any man to make himſelf worſe then he is, by a ſleight departing from his own integrity, and uprightneſs, when men caſt dirt upon it, and darken it with falſhood, is a wickedneſs alſo. It is wickedneſs to ſpeak falſly of another, and it is little leſs to let others ſpeak falſly of us, and not labour to right our ſelves. Every mans own credit and honour ought to be dear to him, as well as the credit of another. Some will ſay of a man, whoſe faults or failings they would mitigate, He is no mans enemy but his own; whereas indeed to be our own enemy in any kind, or to hurt our ſelves, is more ſinful, then to be an enemy to, or hurt another man. Self-love is a very great as well as a very common ſin; yet not to love our ſelves, or to do any thing which ſignifieth a want of love to our ſelves, is a greater ſin. As we muſt not ſeek our ſelves, ſo we muſt not looſe our ſelves, if we can help it. I have elſe-where upon former paſſages of this book, had occaſion to note this point, yet could not well paſs it here.

Fifthly obſerve, A godly man ſhould have a ſpecial care of his tongue, that he offend not in his words.

A godly man is careful what he ſpeaks, and how he ſpeaks, not only leſt his lips ſhould ſpeak wickedneſs, or his tongue utter deceit; but leſt his lips ſhould ſpeak an idle word, or his tongue the leaſt offence. There are two things about which the care of a godly man is very converſant; the firſt is his Heart, the ſecond is his Tongue, theſe two hold correſpondence with each other. Solomon puts us (as it were) upon an equal care of keeping them (Prov. 4. 23, 24.) Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the iſſues of life; put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverſe lips put away far from thee. The original Text runs in the abſtract, Put away from thee frowardneſs of mouth and perverſeneſs of lips. The heart is the Citadel, and muſt be chiefly kept; the lips are the out-works, and therefore muſt not be neglected. He that would put away a froward mouth from him, muſt keep his heart; and he that keeps his heart will look to his mouth; a froward mouth is the ſign of a froward heart: And he that keepeth not frowardneſs from his heart, ſhall hardly keep frowardneſs from his mouth. There is ſuch a continual intercourſe between the heart and mouth, that if the one be out of courſe, the other will not long continue in it. As the outward ſenſes, unleſs well watcht, quickly conveigh vanity to the heart; ſo unleſs the heart be well watcht, it quickly conveigeth vanity to the tongue; and unleſs the tongue be well watcht it will quickly diſcover and vent all the vanity and traſh that is wrought in the heart. David (Pſal. 39. 1.) took up a ſtrong reſolution about this duty, I ſaid I will take heed to my wayes, that I offend not with my tongue. When our wayes are wrong, our words are ſeldom right. I ſaid I will take heed to my wayes, that is, to my whole courſe of life; one would think, he ſhould rather have ſaid, I will take heed to my words that I offend not with my tongue; but he ſaith wayes, becauſe the tongue is ſoon out of the way in ſpeaking, when we are out of the way in acting; he that offends with his tongue, is apt to offend in his wayes; and he that offends in his wayes is thereby made more apt to offend with his tongue. And therefore as Solomon put the keeping of the heart and tongue together, ſo David puts the keeping of the way and tongue together. O how hard is it to keep the tongue, which cannot be kept unleſs both heart and wayes be kept. Hence again that of Solomon (Prov. 13. 3.) He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life; he that opens wide his lips, ſhall have deſtruction. The holy proverb may carry an alluſion to a City that is beſieged; he that keepeth the gates of the City, keepeth the whole City ſafe; but if you ſet the gates open, you let in the enemy, and with him deſtruction. Thus he that keepeth his mouth, keeps his life; he keeps his life as to the purity and holineſs of it, and he keeps his life as to the peace and ſafety of it. Yet take notice, Solomon doth not ſay, He that opens his lips ſhall have deſtruction, he doth not forbid ſpeaking, and we cannot ſpeak unleſs we open our lips; but he ſaith, He that opens wide his lips, ſhall have deſtruction; that is, he that opens his mouth ſo wide that he lets all come out, lets in deſtruction. Such an opening of the lips, is an opening of the grave and an inlet to death; unleſs our mouth hath a guard, our life hath none. Many have loſt their lives, and more their ſouls by a careleſs opening of their mouths. While at that wide opened gate vanity hath ruſhed out, whole troops of miſchief and death it ſelf have ruſhed in upon them. The Apoſtle James (Chap. 1. 26.) reckons this keeping of the mouth not only as a great piece of Religion, but as that without which all Religion is nothing, or comes to nothing; If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this mans religion is vain. An unbridled or unruly tongue, ſhews that religion is no bridle upon, or hath no rule, bears no ſway in the heart, and when religion (which is ſo called, ſay ſome, from bridling or binding) doth not bind the heart, it doth not attain its end, nor ſerve for the uſe it is appointed to, and therefore (as all other things are, which do not attain their ends) is vain. It ſeems there were many unbridled tongues, even among the profeſſors of religion in thoſe dayes; which put the Apoſtle ſo much, and ſo often upon that point in this Epiſtle. The whole third Chapter is ſpent about the government of the tongue. The tongue unbridled is too hard and head-ſtrong for us to govern. It is an unruly evil, as the Apoſtle there calls it, and can no more be ruled without a bit or bridle, then the Horſe or Mule. The Word and Grace of God is that bridle, and all our care is little enough to put and keep that bridle on, yea it is too little; and therefore holy David, who had profeſſed his utmoſt care to keep his tongue (Pſal. 39.1.) ſaw yet a neceſſity of having recourſe to God in prayer, that he would be pleaſed to take the care and charge of keeping it for him. We have as much need that God ſhould be our Tongue-keeper, as our Heart-keeper (*Pſal.*141.4.) Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, and keep the door of my lips. And he adds in the next verſe a prayer for his heart (*v.*4.) Encline not my heart to any evil thing, that is, ſuffer not mine heart (to which by nature it is only and altogether inclined, and to which notwithſtanding the power of grace, I find many inclinations in my heart,ſuffer not, I ſay, mine heart) to encline to any thing that is evil, and ſo prompt my tongue to ſpeak evil. It is better not to be able to ſpeak at all, then to ſpeak ill; better to be ſpeechleſs like a beaſt, then to ſpeak like a beaſt; that is, to ſpeak beaſtly, falſly, laſciviouſly, wantonly, vainly, corruptly. The Apoſtle dehorts (Eph. 4.29.) Let no corrupt communication come out of your mouth. And Solomon gives counſel to ſtay there at leaſt (Prov. 30. 32.) If thou haſt done fooliſhly in lifting up thy ſelf, or if thou haſt thought evil; if thou haſt not kept thy ſpirit from pride, and thy heart from folly, both which thou ſhouldſt have done; yet there is another thing thou muſt look to after thoſe miſcarriages, and that will be ſome help and amends, or at leaſt it will keep matters from growing worſe; Lay thy hand upon thy mouth, that is, impoſe ſilence upon thy ſelf, let not thy mouth proclaim or tell abroad the pride and folly of thy heart, much leſs maintain and defend it. Though no man ſhould ſatisfie himſelf when he hath much wickedneſs in his heart, that he doth not utter it with his lips, or that he keeps his mouth clean, when his heart is foul, and to reſt much in Tongue-purity, is a great argument of the Hearts impurity: yet it is better to keep in the impurity and vanity of the Heart then to vent it at the Tongue. As to colour-over foul and filthy thoughts with fair words, ſo to draw out foul thoughts into filthy words, is doubled iniquity. An evil thought kept in is extreamly evil, and to be deeply repented of; yet when this evil thought goes forth and ſpreads at the mouth, it is far worſe. It is beſt when our hearts meditate no wickedneſs, and the next beſt is, when, though the heart meditate, yet the mouth is ſtopt and will not utter it to the diſhonour of God, and the ſcandal of others. Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from ſpeaking guile, is David's counſel to that man whoſoever he is, that, deſireth life, and loveth many dayes, that he may ſee good (Pſal. 34. 12, 13.) and in the next (or fourteenth) verſe, he ſeems to imply, that he who keeps his Tongue from being ill imployed, is in a ready way to have his hands well employed, or to the doing of good, and that both to himſelf and others. And indeed our words do give ſo great a light to, and concerning our own actions, that though no mans perſon be at all juſtified meritoriouſly, either by his words or works, yet the perſons of all juſtified men ſhall be juſtified declaratively, that is, they ſhall be declared to be juſt and good men by their words (Mat. 12. 37.) By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned. And as good words declare goodneſs in our ſelves, ſo they are an excellent means of doing good to others, yea of making others good, even of miniſtring grace to the hearers (Eph. 4. 29.)

Thus upon the occaſion of Job's proteſt againſt evil ſpeaking in his own caſe, I have a little inſiſted upon the care we ought to have of our ſpeech in all caſes. And as Job hath already proteſted that he would not ſpeak any thing, which might have a tendency to condemn himſelf wrongfully; ſo he proceeds in a like proteſt, that he will not ſpeak any thing for the juſtifying of his friends, who had ſo raſhly and wrongfully condemned him.

VERS. 5,6.

God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you: till I die, I will not remove mine integrity from me.

My righteouſneſs I hold faſt, and will not let it go: my heart ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live.

THE former verſe contained the matter of Job's oath, that in this cauſe, his lips ſhould not ſpeak wickedneſs, nor his tongue utter deceit; in theſe two verſes he proceeds upon the ſame point, ſhewing that as he intended not, yea was reſolved not to ſpeak deceit or deceitfully, to wrong himſelf, ſo not to flatter others. As he would not condemn himſelf, ſo neither would he juſtifie them who had condemned him. God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you: till I die, I will not remove mine integrity from me; that's his ſcope in theſe words.

Verſ. 5. God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you, &c.

The Original is an interjection of indignation, uttered by the Tongue, at the riſing of the heart againſt that which is offenſive. The word hath a double ſence in it, firſt, of Prohibition; ſecondly, of Abomination; God forbid, that is let this thing never be done, which to do were an abomination. This word was commonly uſed by the Jews (as the Rabbins obſerve) when they rent their garments, as their cuſtom was when they were extreamly offended. This ſpeech and that paſſionate action uſually went together in occaſions of worſt reſentment. And as they uſed to ſay, God forbid, when they would ſhew how far themſelves were or others ought to be from doing, what God had forbidden them to do, ſo when they would ſhew what God himſelf was furtheſt off from doing. When Abraham pleaded with God for Sodome (Gen. 18.25.) he telleth him of righteous men there; and adds, Let this be far from thee, to ſlay the righteous with the wicked, or, that the righteous ſhould be as the wicked. The ſame phraſe of ſpeech, which here, in Job, is rendred, God forbid, is there rendred, Let this be far from thee, let it be as a prophane, or execrable thing. Such a procedure in judgment with man, is infinitely below the moſt holy and juſt God. O righteous Judge, let it be far from thee to ſlay the righteous in common with the wicked. The word is uſed (Joſh. 22.29.) God forbid, that we ſhould rebel againſt the Lord. To do any thing which God hath forbidden is ſinful, but to rebel againſt God is to act to the height in things forbidden. We have need with a holy paſſionateneſs to beg of God, that what his Word forbids us to do, his grace may forbid us alſo, God forbid that we ſhould rebel againſt the Lord. And when Joſhua the Governor, according to his divine politicks, had put it to the choice of the people of Iſrael, and (thereby the more to reſtrain and keep them cloſe to God) ſeems to leave them to their own liberty of election (in that wherein indeed no man hath any election) Chooſe you this day whom you will ſerve, whether the Gods which your fathers ſerved, which were on the other ſide of the flood, or the Gods of the Amorites in whoſe Land ye dwell; but as for me and my houſe, we will ſerve the Lord. When Joſhua (I ſay) had thus left them to do what they would, that they might be withheld from doing what they ought not, and had (by a like holy skill) ſhewed them what himſelf would do, that in his example, they might ſee, what themſelves ought to do, we preſently find that the Spirits of the people were fired with indignation againſt any thoughts of Apoſtacy from the true God to Idols, of one ſort or other, and therefore anſwered and ſaid (Joſh. 24. 16.) God forbid that we ſhould forſake the Lord, and ſerve other Gods. To be bid to do that, if we will, which no wiſe or ſober man will do, is the ſtrongeſt way of forbidding it. And as this phraſe is uſed to ſhew our abhorrence to do wickedly our ſelves, ſo that wickedneſs ſhould be done by others (1 Sam. 20. 2.) When David told Jonathan that there was a plot for his life, Jonathan ſaid unto him, God forbid, thou ſhalt not dye; as if he had ſaid, it can hardly be imagined that ſuch an execrable murther ſhould be committed; but aſſure thy ſelf it ſhall not, if I can prevent it. So when David was put on by his men to take revenge upon Saul, he ſaid

(1 Sam. 24.6.) The Lord forbid that I ſhould do this thing to my Maſter the Lords anointed. David's heart ſmote him for that little which he had done in cutting off the lap of Saul's garment, but his heart roſe with deteſtation againſt the deſtroying of him. Thus we render the word upon ſuch occaſions; yet I conceive, exceptin[illegible]n thoſe places where the Name of God is expreſſed in the Hebrew, as it is (1 Chron. 11.19.) He ſaid, God forbid it, that I ſhould do this thing. I ſay, in other places, where nothing is expreſſed in the Hebrew but an Interjection, I conceive it were ſafer to render the word only thus, Far be it; as here, Far be it from me that I ſhould juſtifie you, and not, God forbid, &c. The word, God, being not in this and many other texts, where our Tranſlaters render God forbid; For the frequency of this phraſe, may embolden ſome to take the Name of God in vain, which as it ought to be uſed only in ſerious matters, ſo with the greateſt not only ſeriouſneſs but holineſs.

And when we tranſlate Job ſpeaking thus, God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you; he prayes that God would keep it upon his heart for ever, not to do or never to have any thing to do with a thing ſo repugnant both to his duty and conſcience; as if he had ſaid, I ſhould defile my ſelf, if I ſhould pleaſe you, yea I ſhould condemn my ſelf, if I ſhould juſtifie you in this, and ſo betray my own innocency to your ungrounded cenſure and opinion of me. Some expound Job yet higher, as implying himſelf worthy to be excommunicated and thruſt out of the company of all that were godly, as a Heathen, and prophane perſon, in caſe he ſhould render up himſelf to their judgment of him, or juſtifie them in their condemnatory ſentence paſſed upon him. Thus highly he reſents it, and turneth from it with deepeſt indignation, God forbid, &c. Hence Note.

Excommunicatio ſit mihi ſinq; tanquam Ethnicus & prophanus. Bold.

A gracious heart doth not only deny to do evil, but hath an abhorrence againſt the doing of evil.

As corrupt nature is not only backward and unwilling to do good, but hath an enmity againſt it; ſo Grace doth not only ſtay us from, but ſtirreth up an holy enmity againſt every unclean thing. The ſpirit of a godly man riſeth [illegible]d his ſtomach turneth at the ſight of ſin. As they who are moſt emptied of ſin by Goſpel-repentance, complain moſt that they are full of it. And as they who have leaſt ſin in them, are moſt burdened with the ſin that remains in them; ſo likewiſe, they moſt abominate both the committing of any ſin, and every ſin committed, whether by themſelves or others. The Apoſtle reckons this among the effects of true repentance (2 Cor. 7.11.) In that ye ſorrowed after a godly ſort, behold what carefulneſs it wrought in you, what clearing of your ſelves, yea, what indignation; that is, indignation againſt your ſelves, even for failings and weakneſſes; much more for any thing done by you, or among you, which may be called wickedneſs, or a provocation. Thus David chargeth folly upon his own ſoul (Pſal. 73. 22.) So fooliſh was I and ignorant, I was as a beaſt before thee. When he reflected upon his ſinful envy at the proſperity of the wicked, he rebuked himſelf, as a fool, as a beaſt, as an ignoramus, as one that knew nothing of the providential diſpenſations of God. And thus Job (being convinced of his over-boldneſs with God, upon the clearer diſcoveries of his holineſs and ſoveraignty) abhorred himſelf, repenting in duſt and aſhes (Chap. 42. 6.) He that abhors himſelf for what he hath done, cannot but abhor what he hath done, as much as he abhorreth himſelf for doing it. As a godly man repenting, abhorreth the evil which (being over-powered by a temptation) he hath done; ſo, when he is in a compoſed form, he abhorreth to do that evil to which he is tempted. David ſaith (Pſal. 119.104.) I hate every falſe way; I hate not only the way, when I have been miſled into it, but I hate to go in it; and he profeſſeth at verſ. 163. of that Pſalm, I hate, and abhor lying, but thy Law do I love. To abſtain from, and forbear lying, is a ſign of a gracious heart, much more to hate, and abhor it. A godly man not only doth that which is good, but he delights to do it, his ſoul cleaves to it, he is in his element when he is doing it; nothing comes more ſuitably to him, then the buſineſs of his duty, he loves to do it, yea he loveth it when he cannot do it (Rom. 7.22.) Paul complained much that his corruptions clogged, hindered, and ſhackled him, he was in limetwigs, as to the doing of good, yet (ſaith he) I delight in the Law of God after the inward man; that is, the inward man delightfully moves after the Law of God, when I am baſely moved by my corrupt heart, and ſtirred by temptation againſt it. Now (I ſay) as a godly man not only chooſeth to do the holy will of God, but delights and rejoyceth to do it, and hath ſweet content in doing it; ſo likewiſe a godly man not only refuſeth to do the will of the fleſh, or to follow the courſe of the world, but hates to do it, and is never ſo diſcontented with himſelf, as when through careleſneſs and neglect of his watch he hath been overtaken and done it. A carnal man may forbear the doing of evil, and do what is materially good, but he never abhors what is evil, nor delights in what is good. Though he abſtain from acting thoſe things, which God forbids; yet he doth no[illegible]y (with Job) God forbid, I ſhould act them. David gives that as one of the moſt diſtinguiſhing characters of a wicked man (Pſal. 36. 4.) He deviſeth miſchief upon his bed, he ſetteth himſelf in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil. And though he doth good, yet his heart doth not cleave to nor delight in it. To delight in good, is better then the doing of it, and to abhor evil, is better then abſtaining from it. And if we compare the nature of ſin, with the new nature of a godly man, we may ſee clear grounds, why his abſtinence from ſin, is joyned with the abhorrence of it.

Firſt, Sin is filthy and unclean in its nature, the Scripture calls it vomit; we loath and abhor what is filthy and unclean, eſpecially our vomit. And to ſhew how much ſin is to be abominated, it is called abominable, yea an abomination (Prov. 12. 22.) And that wicked Idolatrous people, the Heathen Romans, who were skilful to deſtroy (and after their laying deſolate many other Lands, at laſt, laid the Holy Land deſolate, to puniſh the unholineſs of them that dwelt in it, they I ſay) are called the Abominations of deſolation (Matth. 24. 15.) no marvail if thoſe perſons and actions are abhorred by others, which are themſelves abominable, it is marvailous that they are not more abhorred by all thoſe who (through grace) are made ſenſible of their abomination. When the river was turned to blood, and ſtunk, the Egyptians loathed to drink of the water of the river (Exod. 7. 18.) As corrupt water, ſo corrupt actions ſtink in the noſtrils of a godly man, how much more in the noſtrils of God; there is a ſameneſs of ſpirit (in God and in a godly Man) in reference to the thing it ſelf, though infinitely different in degree; ſin ſtinks in the noſtrils of a godly man, as well as in the noſtrils of God, and therefore he loaths to drink it, and cannot bear it, when he hath, but muſt vomit it up again.

Secondly, Sin and all ſinful wayes are preſented to a godly man, as extreamly hurtful, poyſonous, and deadly; Nature, much more grace, turneth away from thoſe things that are deſtructive. Shall I meddle with that which will be my death? (ſaith a godly Man) ſhall I ſuck the blood of a Toad, or eat the fleſh of a Serpent? Shall I do this? The Lord ſaid to Moſes (Exod. 4.2,3.) what is that in thy hand? and he ſaid a rod, and he ſaid, caſt it on the ground, and he caſt it on the ground, and it became a Serpent, and Moſes fled from it; there is an antipathy in the nature of a man againſt hurtful creatures. A man before converſion hath ſin in his hand, and heart too; but when once converted, he througheth his ſin out of his hand, as Moſes did his rod, and then he ſeeth it is a Serpent, a hurtful noxious thing, and then he fleeth from it. That ſin which an unregenerate man carrieth as a pleaſant rod in his hand, he finds to be a ſtinging Serpent when he is regenerate. The heart being changed, our opinion quickly changeth concerning thoſe wayes and practices, which before were moſt pleaſing to us. And as God hath in his Commandments forbidden us to do evil, ſo we (with holy Job in the Text) ſay God forbid, that we ſhould do it. But it may be queſtioned, what there was in this action ſo ſinful, that his ſpirit roſe up ſo againſt it, or that he ſhould ſay, God forbid, I ſhould do it. See what it was, God forbid,

That I ſhould juſtifie you.

It was the Juſtification of his friends which his ſoul did ſo abhor. To juſtifie ſome men is a duty, and there are many men (I grant) whom to juſtifie were a ſin. There is a ſinful judging of others, concerning which Chriſt ſaith (*Matth.*7.1.) Judge not, that ye be not judged. They who judge others unjuſtly, ſhall be juſtly judged. There is alſo a ſinful juſtifying of others, they who juſtifie others unduly, may expect condemnation as their due. But were Job's friends ſuch as could not be juſtified without ſin? Could he not juſtifie them, without deſerving to be condemned himſelf? Did he judge them hypocrites, as they judged him, and ſo not to be juſtified? I conceive not, ſurely he did not judge them wicked, and doubtleſs they were not, as hath been ſhewed before; how is it then that he ſaith, God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you? I anſwer, we muſt reſtrain this act of juſtification to the cauſe or caſe in hand, it doth not refer to their perſons, but to their diſpute. God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you in this, in your judgment of me, in the opinion you have taken up of me, or in the cenſure ye have given of me. Ye have caſt me as an evil-doer, but I cannot ſubſcribe to your ſentence; God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you in this. So then, Job doth not ſpeak of them as of reprobates, whom God had not brought, nor would bring into a ſtate of juſtification; but he ſpeaks of them as having ſpoken and done ſuch things as ought to be reprobated, or diſapproved by all good men, which no man ought to juſtifie. Job medled not either with the conſtant courſe of their lives, or the ſtate of their ſouls, he went no further then what concerned the preſent diſputation, God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you in that.

Abſit ut vos juſtos & veraces habeã hac in parte, ut veſtrã ſententiam probem. Mer.

But how doth man juſtifie man? Is it not God that juſtifieth? As the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks (*Rom.*8.33.) How then doth Job ſpeak, as if he had power to juſtifie? I anſwer, as before, Job's words are not to be underſtood of the juſtification of their perſons before God, but of the juſtification of their actions towards him, before man; God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you, that is, that I ſhould affirm that to be true of me, which ye my friends affirm to be true, or that ye have dealt friendly, according to the rule of truth with me. We juſtifie a man, when, what he affirms we ſtand to, or when we ſay that thing is well done which he hath done, or that he hath done well in doing it; this is to juſtifie him. Man juſtifieth man, when he affirms that to be true which he ſaith, and that to be good which he doth; or that he hath done and ſpoken nothing but what is good and true. No man can either juſtifie or condemn another, as to the determining of his ſtate, but we may (upon juſt grounds) either condemn or juſtifie another, as to the approving or diſapproving of his way.

Thus Job profeſſeth he will not juſtifie his friends, he will not ſay as they ſaid, nor think well of what they had done, he could not do it, he would not do it till he died (as he ſpeaks in the next clauſe) that is, he would never do it.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, We may, and muſt judge of men, as they are and do.

We muſt both juſtifie and condemn as we ſee, or according to what appears. Mans juſtification of man, muſt proceed upon other terms then Gods juſtification of man doth. God juſtifieth the ungodly (Rom. 4. 5.) But wo to thoſe men who juſtifie the ungodly; God would not juſtifie the ungodly, but for the righteouſneſs of another; and ſhall we juſtifie the ungodly in their own unrighteouſneſs? Whomſoever we juſtifie, muſt firſt be juſt, our juſtification cannot make him ſo. As the terms of Gods electing man are quite different from thoſe upon which man ought to elect or chooſe, ſo alſo are they in juſtification; God electeth thoſe in whom he ſeeth no good, nor doth he elect any for their goodneſs, either becauſe he ſeeth them good, or foreſeeth they will be good. He beholdeth no excellency, beauty, or worthineſs in them; he elects according to the pleaſure of his own will; mans goodneſs is not the cauſe, but the effect of Gods election. The election of God maketh men good, it doth not find them ſo. But if man elects, he muſt elect thoſe that are good, thoſe that have ſomewhat in them to commend them to him; he muſt chooſe them becauſe they are learned and skilful in reference to the imployments, and buſineſſes, to which they are called, or becauſe he ſeeth they are honeſt, ſober, gracious; man muſt not elect, as God elects, neither muſt he juſtifie as God juſtifies; therefore (ſaith Job) God forbid I ſhould juſtifie you; I muſt ſpeak plainly, according to what I find you. Solomon hath given us the determination of this point in full and down-right language (Prov. 17. 15.) He that juſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the righteous, even they both are abomination to the Lord. Of which wicked practice the Lord complains by the Prophet (Ezek. 13. 19.) Will ye pollute me among my people for handfulls of barley, and for pieces of bread, to ſlay the ſouls that ſhould not die (that is, condemn the righteous) and to ſave the ſouls alive that ſhould not live (that is, to juſtifie the wicked) by your lying to my people, that hear your lyes? God juſtifieth whom he will, man muſt juſtifie according to the will of God.

Secondly, Conſidering that Job's friends were (as to their ſtate) godly and righteous perſons, ſuch as God juſtified; and yet Job ſaid well, God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you.

Note, We muſt not juſtifie a good man, when he doth evil, or in that which he doth ill.

A good man, a man juſtified in the ſight of God, may do amiſs in the ſight of man, and in that he ought not to be juſtified by man. We muſt not juſtifie any man in any one evil action, becauſe he hath done many that are good. As it is very ſinful for any man to juſtifie and defend any evil that he hath done, ſo it is as ſinful to juſtifie others, or to be their advocates when they have done evil, or in any evil deed. Every action muſt be weighed by it ſelf, and ſtand upon its own bottom, one cannot help or ſave another. It is our duty to forgive another, many ill carriages and uncharitable, yea injurious actings towards us; but to juſtifie them, or him in them, would be our ſin. In all ſuch caſes let us ſay, God forbid I ſhould juſtifie you, though you may be ſuch as God juſtifieth, and thou ye have done many things which are not only juſtifiable, but commendable in another kind. Chriſt knew that Peter was a holy man for the main, yet when he gave him ill counſel, he turned, and ſaid unto him, Get thee behind me Satan, thou art an offence to me, for thou ſavoureſt not (in this thing) the things that be of God, but thoſe that be of men (Matth. 16. 23.) And we read that the Apoſtle Paul was ſo far from juſtifying the Apoſtle Peter himſelf when he ſaw, that through his fault, many walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the Goſpel, that (ſaith he) I withſtood him to the face, becauſe he was to be blamed (Gal. 2. 11, 14.) We cannot do better for our beſt friends, then to let them know when they do badly. Nor ſhould we for any thing more condemn our ſelves, then for juſtifying another in any thing for which he ought to be condemned. God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you.

Till I dye I will not remove mine integrity from me.

In this latter part of the verſe, Job gives a reaſon of what he ſaid in the former; he could not juſtifie them without removing, or parting with his own integrity, which was the beſt Jewel he had in the world, and which he was reſolved never to part with while he lived. Therefore, ſaith he,

גוע Expiravit animam, efflavit, leniter mortuus fuit.

Till I dye, &c.] The Original word notes an eaſie, a quiet, a natural death; though I ſhould live till my candle doth conſume away and ſpend it ſelf, not being violently blown out by others; though I ſhould live as long as I could live, I could not juſtifie you; God forbid I ſhould juſtifie you, Till I dye, &c. There is a double connexion of theſe words, till I dye. The Greek Interpreters joyn them to the antecedent words, the Latines to thoſe which follow, Till I dye I will not remove my integrity from me; but it is not of concernment whether we connect them to the former or latter, or divide them between both; I will not juſtifie you till I dye; neither will I, till I dye, remove mine integrity from me.

Till I dye.] The meaning is not, that Job would remove his integrity at or before his death, but this is a ſtrong affirmation that he would never remove it; I will not do it till I dye, is, I will not do it at all.

We may give a twofold interpretation of this his reſolution, I will not do it till I dye. Firſt thus, as if he were reſolved not to do this, though it ſhould coſt him his life; he eſteemed his integrity at ſuch a rate, that he could eaſier lay down his life then let go his integrity; life is the beſt of Naturals, but integrity is the beſt of morals and ſpirituals; and therefore though he died for it, he would not (by any act or conceſſion of his) remove, no nor blemiſh his integrity: As if he had ſaid, though I knew my life were in your hands, and ye able to take my life from me, yet I would not do this thing; I am fixed and at a point with you in this, what ever it coſt me. And becauſe this ſence is much inſiſted upon by ſome, it being a truth, and complying with other Scriptures.

Obſerve, A godly man reſolveth he will not do evil, come of it what will.

Fall back or fall edge, he will not do it. A godly man reſolves againſt doing that which is an evil or wrong to others, much more againſt doing that which is an evil both of wrong and ſin to himſelf. Zealous Daniel was thus reſolved when he ſaw he could not preſerve his integrity without endangering the life of another, which could not but be extreamly dangerous to himſelf (Dan. 1. 8.) Daniel purpoſed in his heart that he would not defile himſelf with the portion of the Kings meat, nor with the wine which he drank; therefore he requeſted of the Prince of the Eunuchs that he might not defile himſelf. And the Prince of the Eunuchs ſaid unto Daniel, I fear my Lord the King, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; for why ſhould he ſee your faces worſe liking then the children which are of your ſort? then ſhall ye make me endanger my head to the King. Daniel might well think, this Great Officer would not eaſily grant him a favour which in the iſſue might looſe him not only the Kings favour, but his head too. Courtiers do not uſe to be free of ſuch favours, eſpecially to poor Captives, who have no means to oblige them; yet Daniel put it to a venture, purpoſing in his heart to abſtain from all unclean, whether meats or drinks, what e're came on't. And as the godly are, or ſhould be alwayes reſolved not to do any evil, though they die for it; ſo they reſolve ſometimes to do this or that good, though they die for it; they will run all hazzards rather then forbear a known preſent duty in its ſeaſon. That magnanimous woman, Heſter, ſaid, If I periſh I periſh, it is my duty, at ſuch a time as this, I ſee it is my duty, I am reſolved, I will go in to the King, which is not according to the Law, and if I periſh, I periſh (Heſt. 4. 16.) When Paul ſaw it was a duty to go to Jeruſalem, he was reſolute againſt all ſuggeſtions of dangers, But none of theſe things move me, neither account I my life dear to my ſelf, that I might finiſh my courſe with joy (Acts 20. 24.) As if Paul had ſaid (as a great man once did) It is neceſſary for me to go, but it is not neceſſary for me to live; and therefore go I will, though I die for it. And as he was fixed againſt all the dangers which the Enemy at Jeruſalem threatned him with, ſo againſt all thoſe diſſwaſives with which his Friends endeavoured to take him off from the purpoſe of his intended journey to Jeruſalem (Acts 21. 11, 12, 13, 14.) When Agabus a Prophet had taken Paul's girdle and bound his own hands and feet, ſaying thus ſaith the Holy Ghoſt, ſo ſhall the Jews at Jeruſalem bind the man that oweth this girdle; the Diſciples hearing theſe things, added their exhortation to his prediction, and beſought him not to go up to Jeruſalem; Then Paul anſwered, what mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? For I am ready not only to be bound but to dye at Jeruſalem for the Name of the Lord Jeſus. True courage delights in the Air of that danger where duty dwels, and will neither be beaten off from doing an incumbent duty, nor beaten on to do any thing againſt a duty by the reports or appearances of the greateſt peril. To be reſolved is an heroick, and noble reſolution indeed. As a wicked man will ſin, ſo a godly man ſaith he will not ſin, though he die. He chooſeth the worſt of afflictions rather then iniquity.

Secondly, We may take theſe words, till I die, in a milder ſence, though it was in the breaſt of Job to die rather then to do this; yet I will not do this till I die, may here carry in it no more then this, I will not do it as long as I live.

Hence obſerve, A godly man is everlaſtingly reſolved, and ſet againſt ſin.

In this caſe he makes no temporary promiſes, he doth not purpoſe to forbear ſin for a time, much leſs till he hath a fit time; but for ever. Some will not ſin for a time, and they forbear only till they have a fit time to ſin. All the reaſon why ſome do no evil is becauſe they cannot, or becauſe they have not an opportunity to do it. Falix ſaid to Paul, Go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient ſeaſon I will ſend for thee; ſo ſay they of their ſin, at a convenient time I will do it. There is neither time nor ſeaſon allowed or appointed by God for ſin, and therefore we muſt not give our ſelves allowance for it at any time or ſeaſon. We ſhould (as was ſhewed before) rather chooſe to die then to ſin, how much more ſhould we reſolve, not to ſin till we die. Till I die

I will not remove my integrity from me.

לא אסיר סור Ceſſit, receſſit, in hiphil removere, recedere fecit. תמם integer perfectus animo & corpore.

The word ſignifies to yield or give back, to remove, or cauſe to give back; Thus ſaith Job, I will not yield up my integrity, or I will not cauſe my integrity to give back. The word which we render integrity, ſignifieth alſo perfection, and ſimplicity, that is, a religious, plain, honeſt and ſimple diſpoſition, without guile or wickedneſs, or (as we ſay) without welt or guard. In the breaſt-plate of Aaron, there was the Urim, and the Thummim, which latter is this word; Job had the true Thummim in his Breaſt, and he would not remove it.

Hence note, A godly man is a man of integrity.

He hath Urim and Thummim, as well as the High Prieſt had, he hath his light of truth, or his fire of zeal, and he hath his perfection, or integrity, both in his Breaſt, and upon his Breaſt. Theſe are ſeated as heavenly principles in his Heart, and they are held forth in the courſe and practices of his life, as a light ſhining from Heaven.

Secondly note, Integrity is, in it ſelf, a thing of great price.

We can eaſily part with or remove thoſe things which are not of worth. Integrity is plain and ſimple, yet the beſt ornament and decking (next Chriſt) of the whole man. Solomon in all his outward glory was not arraied like one of theſe Lillies. We are never ſo fine as when we are plain. To be plain, ſimple, to have a ſpirit without tricks and turnings, without knots and riddles, is better and more honourable, then the higheſt titles of honour. Integrity is our perfection under the Covenant of Grace, and ſimplicity is our greateſt excellency. 'Tis the fundamental excellency of God himſelf, and ſo it is of his people. That which is truly ſimple is truly perfect in its kind, and therefore the ſame word ſignifies both ſimple, and perfect; this is the Glory of Grace, and the Grace of Glory. How Glorious are we when this pretious ſtone of integrity, this ſpiritual Thummim fixed in our hearts, ſparkleth in all our wayes.

Thirdly obſerve, A godly man is acquainted with his own integrity.

He knows he hath this Jewel about him, though others ſee it not, he doth; poſſibly a godly man may ſometimes ſuſpect himſelf to be a hypocrite (for as there are ſome hypocrites, who think themſelves to be ſincere, all are not groſs, or ſelf-condemned hypocrites, ſo it is poſſible for ſome who are ſincere to judge themſelves hypocrites) yet take a godly man out of the Clouds, and darkneſs of temptation, or diſſertion, and then as he is what he appears to others, ſo he appears to himſelf as he is, ſincere, and full of integrity.

What a man will not remove, and part with, ſurely he reckons as his beſt. That which is worthleſs, filthy, or unclean, as dung, we take away as dung, till it be all gone (as 'tis ſaid, 1 Kings 14. 10.) take it who will; but our Treaſures, our Jewels, we will not part with. The reaſon why a carnal man will not remove his iniquity from him, is becauſe he values it and looks upon it either as his pleaſure, or as his profit. This makes him hold it faſt, as the Prophet complains (Jer. 8. 5.) The hold faſt deceit. We ſay proverbially, and we ſay it truly, Plain dealing is a Jewel; but with ſome, Deceit or falſe dealing is a Jewel, and therefore they hold it faſt, and will not let it go. Whatſoever it is, whether good or bad, which we will not remove, nor ſuffer (if we can help it) to be removed from us, that's our Jewel, that's High-prized, and much eſteemed by us. Our integrity is our all, next Chriſt, and Chriſt is nothing to thoſe who have no integrity. It is ſaid of a Woman, That having loſt her modeſty, ſhe hath nothing more to looſe. And it is moſt true both of man and woman, they have nothing more to looſe then their integrity. How highly ſhould we prize that, without which all that we have beſides is of no price at all?

Fifthly obſerve, A godly man ſhould do nothing in prejudice to his integrity.

Not to remove integrity, is leſs then not to throw away integrity, it is to do nothing that may ſtain, or lay the leaſt blot upon it. They who are fulleſt of integrity, are often blotted by others; the dirt of hypocriſie is thrown in their faces, while their hearts are upright with God, and their wayes towards men. How common is it to object that which doth not appear, when nothing appears to object. Thus others remove the integrity of the moſt upright. But how ſad is it for an upright man to do that which may ſtain his own integrity, and render him not only ſuſpected but blotted. That which was Job's great care, ſhould be ours, not to move in any thing which may remove our integrity. God upholdeth his people in their integrity (Pſal. 41. 12.) How ſteadily then ſhould his people hold their integrity. Let integrity and uprightneſs preſerve me, was David's prayer (Pſal. 25. 21.) O let us preſerve our integrity and uprightneſs; What ſhall we preſerve, if not our preſervers!

Sixthly note, He that admits of any falſe accuſation or wrong judgment againſt himſelf, removes or ſtains his own integrity.

We muſt ſtand our ground, and be ſtiff for our ſelves againſt all miſ-judgings. It is good to be zealouſly affected alwayes in a good matter, whether it reſpect the glory of God immediately and alone, or whether it reſpect the credit of our brethren, or our own. To deſire to be famous in the world, and (as thoſe Giants in the old world (Gen. 6. 4.) men of renown, or (as the original Text hath it) men of name, is a very great vanity, but to protect and preſerve our good name, is a great and neceſſary duty. Job thought it ſo neceſſary, that he was not ſatisfied with affirming this once, but doubles the ſame affirmation, though in other words.

Verſe 6. My righteouſneſs I hold faſt, I will not let it go, my heart ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live.

This verſe is filled with the ſpirit of the former; Job here alſo ſhewing the ſtedfaſtneſs of his purpoſe to inſiſt upon his innocency, and keep it cloſe, againſt all aſſaults of enemies, or ſuſpitions of friends. Though they pull'd, yet he would hold faſt.

My righteouſneſs I hold faſt.

The Hebrew is, Upon my righteouſneſs I hold ſtrongly, or, I will fortifie and ſtrengthen my righteouſneſs. The righteouſneſs of a man may be conſidered two wayes; either in reference to Juſtification, or Sanctification; and this righteouſneſs of Sanctification may be conſidered two wayes: Firſt, As it is the righteouſneſs of a mans perſon, or that principle of righteouſneſs implanted and inherent in him: Secondly, As it is the righteouſneſs of his actions, or that practice of righteouſneſs which is held out by him. That which Job intends here by righteouſneſs, is not the righteouſneſs of Juſtification, but the righteouſneſs of Sanctification; and not ſo much the righteouſneſs of his perſon as of his actions or cauſe in this engagement with his friends. My righteouſneſs I hold faſt. A believer doth not hold faſt his righteouſneſs in reference to Juſtification, there he letteth it go, he will have nothing to do with it, he will not own it. Paul while a Phariſee held faſt his own righteouſneſs for Juſtification, but being converted, Chriſt taught him better Divinity (Phil. 3. 6, 7, 8, 9.) Touching the righteouſneſs which is in the Law I was blameleſs. But what things were gain to me (that is, what I then counted gain as to my acceptation with God) thoſe I counted loſs for Chriſt; that is, I let them go, and they were as loſt to me, that I might take faſt hold of Chriſt, and bear my ſelf, or, lay the whole weight of my Juſtification upon him alone, as he expounds himſelf in the next verſe; Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things but dung and droſs for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord; for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Chriſt, and be found in him, not having my own righteouſneſs, which is of the Law. As if he had ſaid, I would not be found to have any of my own righteouſneſs in my hand for a world; for as to the buſineſs of Juſtification, our righteouſneſs is droſs and dung, yea all our righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags (Iſa. 64. 6.) Not only are thoſe righteous acts filthy which are done (as the Phariſees did theirs) for ſelf-ends, or in hypocriſie, but there is a filthineſs (as they have done by us) in thoſe righteous acts which are done to a right end, or in ſincerity; and therefore the moſt righteous perſon muſt not hold his righteouſneſs, he muſt let it go. Though I were righteous (ſaith Job, Chap. 9. 15.) yet would I not anſwer (in a legal way for Juſtification in my ſelf) but I would make ſupplication to my Judge; that is, I would humble my ſelf and beg his pardon. And again (verſ. 21.) Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my own ſoul. But when it cometh to a caſe or controverſie between him and his friends, then he held faſt his righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of his Sanctification and converſation. There righteouſneſs is no droſs, but Gold, Silver, pretious Sones, the Souls riches; of this righteouſneſs Job profeſſeth in the preſent Text, I hold it faſt. The word ſignifies to hold ſtrongly; as if he had ſaid, This my righteouſneſs I hold with all my ſtrength; no man ſhall take it from me, but I'le know why. This ſteady purpoſe of Job here repeated may import two things.

Firſt, Perſeverance in doing righteouſly; as if he had ſaid, I will never give over the wayes and works of righteouſneſs. The Lord beſpeaks Satan (Chap. 2. 3.) Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, That there is none like him in the Earth, a perfect man, and an upright, one that feareth God, and eſcheweth evil, and ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity, although thou movedſt me againſt him to deſtroy him without cauſe. When the Lord ſaid, he holdeth faſt his integrity, the meaning is, he perſevereth, or goeth on, acting his integrity; he will not be beaten off, no not by all theſe blows: Thou haſt moved me to deſtroy him, but deſtruction it ſelf cannot remove him from his duty. So ſome expound the place here, my righteouſneſs I hold faſt; as if Job would ſhew, that as he had kept, ſo he was purpoſed to keep a perpetual courſe of holineſs, righteouſneſs, and juſtice, from the very firſt to the laſt; but I conceive this is not the proper interpretation of this place. The word which we tranſlate, I hold faſt, doth not ſo much imply perſeverance in doing righteouſly, as the defence and maintenance of what he had done, to be righteous, or of the right which he had done; my righteouſneſs I hold faſt, I maintain it, I ſtand to it; and he ſpeaks in the preſent tenſe noting a continued act through all time. He doth not ſay, I have held it faſt, or will hold it faſt, but I hold it faſt, as with my very teeth. Job is not treating of his perſeverance in righteous wayes, but affirming that his wayes had been righteous, though his ſuſpitious friends ſuggeſted otherwiſe.

My righteouſneſs I hold faſt.] The Emphaſis of the word here rendred, Hold faſt, reaches a little further then hath yet been ſignified, even to hold with a kind of obſtinacy, or pertinacy of ſpirit; it notes ſuch a holding as takes incouragement by oppoſition; which the more it is aſſaulted to let go, the more it is engaged to hold. That ſpeech of Chriſt (Luke 19. 15.) attains this ſence fully. And it came to paſs (ſaith the Evangeliſt) that when the time was come that Chriſt ſhould be received up, he ſtedfaſtly ſet his face to go to Jeruſalem; the Greek is, he hardned or ſtrengthned his face; the Syriack ſaith, He prepared himſelf to go (that which we firmly purpoſe to do, we prepare to do) Chriſt would not be diverted by any adviſe, counſell, or perſwaſion, but the time being come, that he ſhould be received up, that he ſhould ſuffer, and enter into glory, he ſtedfaſtly ſet his face, he was irrevocably ſet to go to Jeruſalem; He prepared himſelf, though he knew what a bitter cup was preparing for him, and that he muſt paſs through the valley of the ſhadow of death. Thus Job hardned his face, and was invinſibly reſolved to ſtand to his tackling, my righteouſneſs I hold faſt,

And will not let it go.

That's the Negative of the former Affirmative; when a man is reſolved to hold any thing faſt, he will not let it go; there is an elegancy in the expreſſion. The original word ſignifies to be weak or infirm: To let a thing go, or to remit it, ſhews a weakneſs in him that doth ſo, and ſo this word is properly oppoſed to that in the former clauſe, to holding faſt. In this ſence we read it (Prov. 18.9.) He alſo that is ſloathful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waſter. The ſloathful man is weak at his work, he will eaſily let it go, his work drops out of his hand, or from between his fingers. What we do not ſet our hearts to, we care not to ſet our hands to, or hold it in our hands. That Scripture (Num. 13. 18.) will give us a little more light about the force of this word. When Moſes ſent out the ſpies, and gave them inſtructions what they ſhould do in the Land of Canaan; See (ſaith he) what the people are, whether they be ſtrong or weak, few or many; learn or enform your ſelves, whether they be a people that will eaſily part with their Land, and give up the hold of their poſſeſſions. Conſider whether they be ſtrong, and valiant men, that will diſpute and fight for every patch of ground ere they part with it, or whether they be weak, that is, ſuch as will eaſily let their Land go, and be turned out of all their labours, to ſave themſelves a labour. The word is uſed alſo in the ſtory of the Levite (Judg. 19. 9.) And when the man roſe up to depart, he and his concubine, and his ſervant, his father in law, the damſels father ſaid unto him, Behold now the day draweth towards evening; the Hebrew is, as we put in the Margin of our larger Bibles, the day is weak, or ready to let the light go; in the morning the light increaſeth, and waxeth ſtronger and ſtronger, but towards evening the day or the light is going away, it groweth weak when the Sun departeth. Now ſaith Job, I will not let go mine integrity, my integrity ſhall be as the aſcending or morning Sun, climbing higher and higher, my integrity ſhall not decline nor go down, I will not let it go, but it ſhall ſhine brighter and brighter, till it ſhineth forth in full ſtrength. And in this ſence Jacob ſpake to the Angel (Gen. 32. 24.) who made requeſt, Let me go, for the day breaketh; no, ſaith Jacob, I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me. And thus ſaith Job, I will not it go; I will not act like a weak man, what I have undertaken I will abide by, and not give an inch of ground. As Moſes ſaid to Pharaoh about the departure of Iſrael (Exod. 10. 26.) Our cattel ſhall go with us, there ſhall not an hoof be left behind, I will not let any thing go that belongs to Iſrael. Thus conſtant is Job in this controverſie, about his righteouſneſs, he would not looſe a hair of it. I will not let it go.

Hence obſerve, As a godly man reſolves to hold on in the practice of righteouſneſs againſt all temptation, ſo to maintain his righteouſneſs againſt all oppoſition.

He that knoweth he is ſincere, cannot be perſwaded, nor beaten from holding his ſincerity: a godly man (as the Apoſtle James deſcribes the wiſdom from above, that is, thoſe who are made wiſe from above, Chap. 3. 17.) is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſie to be intreated. He may be intreated eaſily in ſome things, but in others you may as ſoon remove a rock as move him, there's no intreating, no perſwading him; a godly man is eaſily intreated to do good for others, and he is eaſily intreated to remit the wrong which others have done him; in theſe two caſes he is eaſily entreated: but if you come to take his integrity from him, and touch him in his uprightneſs, he will by no means be intreated to wrong himſelf. As it is ſinful (in many caſes) not to remit the wrong done to us by others, ſo not to maintain the right done by our ſelves; we may, ye we ought ſometimes (for peace ſake) to part with our right; but we may not, we muſt not part with our righteouſneſs: for that indeed is as, if not more ſinful then to wrong others; to bear falſe witneſs againſt our ſelves is the falſeſt witneſs-bearing; In what we are honeſt and innocent, we cannot be too ſtout. He buyes his peace too dear, who either quits the truth of God for it, or the truth of his own wayes. It is dangerous laying down our own will, to ſubmit to any thing which is not according to the will of God. Here and no where elſe wilfulneſs is a vertue. I will not let it go, ſaith Job, and he did well in ſaying ſo; for elſe he had fallen into the after-claps, indeed, the thunder-claps of his own conſcience, which he had no mind to do, as he profeſſeth in the next words.

My heart ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live.

That is, my conſcience ſhall not; the heart in Scripture is put for the underſtanding, for the will, for the affections, as hath been elſewhere ſhewed, here for the conſcience; my heart ſhall not reproach me. To reproach, is to caſt a blot upon our ſelves or others. The original word is ſometimes tranſlated to blaſpheme (Iſa. 65. 7.) Blaſphemy is the higheſt degree of reproach. Job ſpeaks here to his friends dealing with him; as if he had ſaid, Ye my friends have reproached me often, but I am reſolved my own heart ſhall not reproach me. He tells them (Chap. 19. 3.) theſe ten times have ye reproached me; but reproach ye as long and as often as ye will, my heart ſhall not reproach me once or at all, if I can avoid it, as long as I live.

There is a double rendering of theſe words; ſome give them in the time paſt, My heart hath not reproached me all my dayes, or all the time that I have lived; That is a very good ſence, Job was of ſuch integrity, that though he had many failings, yet he had not ſinned againſt the dictates of his conſcience, and ſo had not broken his peace by what he had done, though he had often done that which called him to repentance. Our Tranſlation, and ſo generally others, read the words in the future tenſe, My heart ſhall not reproach me, I will not give it cauſe to reproach me, which I ſhould do, if I ſhould aſſent to your reproaches. My heart ſhall not reproach me as long as I live; the Hebrew is, from my dayes; which hath a double interpretation, Firſt, Concerning my dayes, that is concerning my manner of living. Maſter Broughton ſeems to comply with this reading as beſt, My heart ſhall take no ſhame from my dayes, that is, from thoſe things which I have done in my dayes, or from my whole converſation; not as if he thought himſelf free from ſin, but he had not gone on knowingly in a way of ſinning, or he had not acted againſt his knowledge. We cannot but do that we know to be ſinful, and yet, poſſibly, we may not ſin againſt our knowledge. Secondly, From my dayes, that is, all the dayes that either I have, or ſhall live. This form of ſpeaking being uſed indifferently, both in reference to the time paſt, and to come, is a confirmation of Job's integrity; he had ſo lived that his conſcience did not check him, and he was reſolved ſo to go on, with ſo much clearneſs, that his conſcience ſhould have no cauſe to check him, My heart ſhall not reproach me as long as I live.

ביומי A diebus meis. De vita mea & moribus meis. Druſ.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Conſcience, or the heart of man hath an accuſing, or an upbraiding power in it.

Conſcience is a very buſie faculty of the ſoul, and it hath many offices. Firſt, Conſcience is as a regiſter to take notice of and record what we do. Secondly, Conſcience is a witneſs againſt us, or an accuſer, when we do amiſs. Thirdly, Conſcience is a Judge, and gives the ſentence, (1 Joh. 3. 20.) If our heart condemn us, God is greater then our heart, and knoweth all things: if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God. Conſcience ſits upon a Throne, as Gods deputy, to award life or death. Fourthly, Conſcience hath the office of a tormenter, it is that worm which dieth not, and a fire that never goeth out. The damned ſhall feel the teeth and ſting of conſcience for ever, though here they have brib'd it, and blinded it, that it might not trouble them. The work of conſcience intended in this Text is the ſecond, the accuſing and witneſſing work of conſcience. He that accuſeth another, reproacheth him, and every accuſation is a reproach; if it be falſe 'tis a reproach till it is removed, and if it be true 'tis a reproach that cannot be removed. Of this work of conſcience the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 2. 15.) Which ſhew the work of the Law written in their hearts, their conſciences alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another. Though the lives of carnal men oppoſe the Law, yet the conſcience of the moſt wicked man in the world doth comply and correſpond with the Law, to bind or to looſe him, to accuſe or excuſe him upon the view of what he hath done.

Secondly obſerve, An inlightened and awakened conſcience, will vex and upbraid thoſe that do evil.

Many have done as much and more, then Job ſaith here he would not do, leſt his conſcience ſhould reproach him, and yet their conſciences never reproached them for it; theſe have ſilenced their own conſciences, or through ignorance, their conſciences have not learned to ſpeak, and ſo they ſin, and conſcience ſaith nothing; They who are alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Epheſ. 4.18.) may and do live like Devils in a courſe of wickedneſs, and never receive ſo much as one check from conſcience; yea the reaſon why many deſire to have no light in their conſcience, is, becauſe they would not be under the rebukes of conſcience. A blind ſleepy conſcience will let a man ſin, and ſin a thouſand times, and never give him an ill word; but if a Job, a man of an inlightned conſcience ſin, his conſcience will be upon him preſently, and tell him his own. Therefore he ſaid, my conſcience ſhall not reproach me, I know it will, if I ſhould do evil; it is poſſible for an ill man to have a good conſcience in its kind, that is, a conſcience naturally good, though not morally good; for when conſcience doth its office, it is a natural good conſcience. The office of conſcience is to reproach us when we do evil; a wicked mans conſcience may do that, it may tell him, he hath done this or that ſinful evil, and ſo deſerves this or that penal evil. Again, it is poſſible for a godly man to have an ill conſcience (in this ſence) that is, a conſcience, which doth not its office, as to ſome particular, his conſcience may be aſleep, or not inlightned in ſome things; his conſcience may be much out of order, and unfit for the exerciſe and diſcharge of its proper duty. When David had committed thoſe horrible ſins of Adultery and Murther, his conſcience was diſcompoſed and off the hinges for a whole year, it never reproached him, he was as a ſtranger to his own boſom, till his ſin was diſcovered to him, it troubled him not. But when Nathan came to him and (having made him give ſentence againſt another man in a parable) told him plainly, thou art the man, his conſcience quickly gave ſentence againſt himſelf, and he confeſſed, I have ſinned againſt the Lord (2 Sam. 12. 13.) Nothing beſides the blood of Chriſt, can ſtop the voice and ſtill the cry of an awakened conſcience. But being once thus purged, we have no more conſcience of ſins, (Heb. 10. 2.) that is, no more rebukes and reproaches of conſcience for ſin. They who know they are pardoned in Chriſt, make conſcience of committing the leaſt ſin, but they have no conſcience of the greateſt ſins committed.

Thirdly obſerve, A godly man is afraid of the chidings, and upbraidings of his own conſcience.

It is better to have the reproaches of all the men in the world fall upon us, then the reproaches of conſcience; better that all the men in the world ſhould call us hypocrite, and wicked, then that conſcience ſhould tell us ſo; a godly man fears the accuſation and ſentence of his conſcience, next to the judgment and ſentence of God himſelf. Yea natural men many times are much afraid of their conſciences, and do therefore eſchew evil, leſt conſcience ſhould trouble them, and upon the ſame terms they do good. They find if they ſhould omit ſuch a duty, if they ſhould not ſometimes pray, and hear the Word, they muſt anſwer it to their conſciences. This is a true diſtinction between a godly and a carnal man; a godly man doth good, not for fear his conſcience ſhould trouble him, but becauſe his conſcience is pleaſed with, and ſuited to the doing of good. Yet conſcience is terrible to a good man when he ſins, as well as to a wicked, even he is afraid of the chidings of conſcience; therefore as Paul ſaith in reference to civil Magiſtrates (Rom. 13. 3.) ſo I ſay in reference to that natural Magiſtrate in your breaſts, conſcience, Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power, do that which is good, and thou ſhalt have praiſe of the ſame. The Magiſtrate is a terror, not to good works, but to evil works; conſcience is a Magiſtrate within, and that is a terror, not to good works but to evil; therefore my advice is, would ye not be afraid of the power of conſcience, do that which is good, and ye ſhall have praiſe of the ſame, that is, your conſcience will commend you, or give teſtimony for you: it is ſweet, no man knows how ſweet but he that hath it, to have the teſtimony of a good conſcience upon good grounds. A flattering teſtimony from conſcience is the ſoareſt curſe, but a true teſtimony from conſcience is an unſpeakable mercy. Do good, and ye ſhall have good words, and a good witneſs from conſcience.

Fourthly obſerve, A godly man is very careful, not to give his conſcience any occaſion to reproach him.

Whatſoever he doth, or what ſhift ſoever he makes, he will not do any thing which may put him into the hand of conſcience to ſchool and chide him; that is the tendency of all. When Job ſaid, My conſcience ſhall not reproach me, his meaning was, I will not do that which ſhall render me naked and liable to the reproaches of conſcience. It is impoſſible to avoid the reproaches of conſcience, unleſs we avoid and turn from that which puts a word of reproach in the mouth of conſcience. Sin puts not only a Word, but a Sword into the mouth of conſcience to wound us; therefore a godly man next to his care that he give not God an occaſion againſt him, will not give his conſcience an occaſion againſt him. Conſcience acts in ſubordination to God. A good conſcience is as a paradiſe, it makes muſick within; conſcience is a pleaſant bird, it ſings ſweetly, and when conſcience ſings ſweetly, we are fitteſt to act vigorouſly. Conſcience is a book, for the mending of the faults whereof all other books have been made; and when once conſcience is mended and ſet right, ſo that we can ſay in truth as Paul (Acts 23. 1.) We have lived in all good conſcience before God, and (as he ſpeaks in another place of that book) have kept our conſciences void of offence both towards God and towards man; then have we confidence both towards God, and towards man, and have good ground to ſay, Our heart ſhall not reproach us as long as we live.

A good or pure conſcience (as other Scriptures call it) will certainly be a quiet and a peaceable conſcience; a good conſcience will not only not reproach or trouble us, but it will exceedingly refreſh and comfort us. So the Apoſtle profeſſed from his own experience (2 Cor. 1.12.) Our rejoycing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world, and more abundantly to you-wards. When conſcience bears its teſtimony with us, and for us, how full of joy is the ſoul, even in the midſt of many outward ſorrows? And as trouble of conſcience is the greateſt trouble, ſo joy of conſcience is the greateſt joy. That man can never want muſik, whoſe conſcience ſpeaks in conſort, and is harmonious with himſelf. A good conſcience is the poor mans riches, and the rich mans Jewel; a good conſcience is the beſt pillow to ſleep upon, and the beſt diſh to feed upon. A diſh, ſaid I? 'Tis a feaſt; A feaſt, ſaid I? Solomon ſaith more (Prov. 15. 15.) 'Tis a continual feaſt? The Geneva tranſlation ſaith, A good conſcience; ours a merry heart (which doth not contradict the other, but explain it; a good and a merry heart or conſcience) is a continual feaſt; and as they who are merry are fit for a feaſt, ſo at a feaſt 'tis both proper and comly to be merry. And while conſcience continues good, the feaſt will continue, and therefore a good conſcience muſt needs be a continual feaſt. Nor is it to play the Epicure, to be alwayes at this feaſt; for in this feaſt every pot and diſh is Holineſs to the Lord. Nor ſhall any need to fear a ſurfet, by being continually at this feaſt; for as the feaſters are temperate, ſo their appetite and ſatisfaction are perpetually enterchangeable. They ſhall be alwayes feaſted by conſcience, who are careful that their conſcience ſhall not at all reproach them; this was Job's reſolution, My conſcience ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live.

VERS. 7, 8.

Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me, as the unrighteous.

For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he have gained, when God taketh away his ſoul?

IN the former verſe, we found Job holding faſt and ſtifly maintaining his own righteouſneſs, againſt all the objections and jealouſies of his friends; in this he either faſteneth unrighteouſneſs, or the reward of the unrighteous, upon his Enemy, or oppoſer.

Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me, as the unrighteous.

Vaticinium eſt non votum. Janſ. Majorem vim & energian videtur habere imprecatio. Merc.

Let mine Enemy.] Some render and expound the words, not as a wiſh or deſire, but as a Propheſie; in which Job foretelleth what would become of his Enemy, or what evil ſhould befall him; Mine enemy ſhall be as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me as the unrighteous. But I rather take it (according to our reading) for an imprecation, or wiſh, that evil might come upon his Enemy.

Let mine Enemy be as the wicked.] What a wicked man is, and the force of the original word here uſed, hath been opened heretofore, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it. Both parts of this verſe are of one ſence and meaning: that which he ſaith in the beginning (Let mine enemy be as the wicked) he ſpeaks again in the cloſe of this verſe (and he that riſeth up againſt me, as the unrighteous.) This latter is but a reinforcement of the ſame thing in a different form and ſhape of words.

He that riſeth up againſt me.] This riſer is none other then his Enemy before ſpoken of; yet the Title beſtowed upon him, gives us a deſcription of an Enemy, or tells us more clearly what an Enemy is, or who is an Enemy. He is an Enemy who riſeth up againſt us; an Enemy riſeth up in his ſpirit againſt us, and he riſeth up in his actions againſt us. He riſeth up to make us fall, he riſeth up againſt us, that he may riſe above us.

There are two ſorts of Enemies.

Firſt, Some are ſecret Enemies, that lye, poſſibly, in our very boſoms, that ſalute us courteouſly every day, as Judas did Chriſt, with a kiſs, and a hail Maſter, no appearance of an Enemy, either in words or actions; and yet, The deepeſt and moſt dangerous Enemy, is the ſecret Enemy.

Secondly, There are open Enemies, profeſſed Enemies, ſuch as hold out a flag of defiance, and ſend challenges to us; ſuch a one is here meant by theſe words, He that riſeth up againſt me. David (Pſal. 41.9.) deſcribeth his Enemies by lifting up the heel; He that did eat of my bread, lifted up his heel againſt me; that is, he hath acted openly againſt me, he hath kicked at me like a wild Horſe, or would have trampled me under his feet. To riſe up, and to lift up the heel againſt one, are the ſame, as the Enemy, in the Text, and he that riſeth up, are the ſame; and as the wicked, and the unrighteous are the ſame; only in theſe two laſt different words, there is a different reſpect. Properly a man is ſaid to be wicked in reference to his Impieties againſt God; and unrighteous in reference to his Injuſtice and wrong dealings with man; juſtice giveth every man his own, his due: and therefore he who either by profeſſed violence, or ſecret fraud, oppoſeth another mans due is unrighteous. Yet theſe words are often uſed promiſcuouſly, the wicked for the unrighteous, and the unrighteous for ſuch another as the wicked; Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me, as the unrighteous. In theſe things there is no difficulty.

But though theſe words are plain in their literal ſence, yet there is ſome difficulty in gathering up the meaning and Interpretation, as alſo the ſcope and deſign of them.

Let mine Enemy be as the wicked.] May be Interpreted three wayes, Firſt, As an argument of Job's charity.

Secondly, As an argument of his piety.

Thirdly, As an argument of his courage and magnanimity in maintaining his own cauſe, ſtill and ſtiffly inſiſting upon his Integrity; the ſence is good, and the Interpretation fair either wayes.

Firſt, Theſe words are expounded as an argument of Job's charity (Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me, as the unrighteous) As if Job had ſpoken his mind thus, Ye my friends have adjudged me to be a wicked man, ye have ſentenced me to be unrighteous: well, let this be granted or ſuppoſe that I am ſo, ſay (ſeeing ye have ſuch a mind to it) that I am an unrighteous man, let me abide under this cloud of cenſure; all the hurt that I wiſh you, who are in appearance mine Enemies, and continually riſe up againſt me, is this, that ye were ſuch as I am, whom ye call wicked, or that ye were like him whom ye ſuppoſe the unrighteous man. I would you were as I am, except theſe ſorrows, except the bonds of theſe ſickneſſes and ſores, and ſore afflictions which are upon me; for my part I wiſh that you mine Enemies who diſpute with, and oppoſe me, who reſiſt and riſe up againſt me, were as my ſelf, whom ye account the wicked and unrighteous man.

Thus Paul (pleading his cauſe and Integrity before King Agrippa, and having almoſt perſwaded him to be a Chriſtian, Acts 26.29.) anſwered, I would to God that not only thou, but all that hear me this day, were both almoſt, and altogether ſuch as I am, except theſe bonds. As if he had ſaid, I am judged as an heretick, as a diſturber of the peace, as a wicked man, I would that mine Enemies and oppoſers were but as this heretick, as this ſeditious perſon; I would that thou, O King, and all that hear me were ſuch as I am, except theſe bonds; I would keep my troubles to my ſelf, and wiſh that that ye all were partakers of my grace and ſpiritual priviledges. The expoſition of Job's wiſh now under hand, hath a parallel ſence with this of Paul. There is no greater argument of ſincerity and Goſpel charity, then to be willing to bear the whole of our own troubles, and that others ſhould bear a part and ſhare with us in all our mercies.

Secondly, The wo[illegible] may be Expounded as an argument of Job's piety; [illegible] that two wayes.

Firſt, Job doth aſſert his piety, by aſſertaining who or what kind of men they were, with whom he had uſed to converſe as friends; as if he had ſaid, You account me wicked, and unrighteous, a man delighting in the ſociety of the ungodly, doing th[illegible] courteſies, and making them my counſellors; whereas indeed I have looked upon the wicked and unrighteous as mine Enemies, even as they that riſe up againſt me. It is an argument of holineſs and piety, to love thoſe that are holy and righteous, to make them our friends and favourites, who are friends to God, and the favourites of Heaven. And to ſay of the wicked, he is as my Enemy, or let mine Enemy be as the wicked, is to act like a friend or ſervant of God. When Jehoſhaphat ſaid to wicked Ahab, I am as thou art, and my people as thy people (2 Chron. 18.3.) The Lord ſent a Prophet to him with this reproof, Shouldſt thou help the ungodly, and love them who hate the Lord? (2 Chron. 19.3.) Some are known to be wicked, by being companions of the wicked, and it ill becomes thoſe who are godly to have any intimacy of communion with the wicked. And therefore Job gives a probable character of his own piety, by diſowning (according to this interpretation) the impious, and reckoning ſuch in the number of his Enemies.

Secondly, We may expound the words as an argument of his piety; thus, as if Job had ſaid, Though I have ſpoken much about the worldly proſperity of the wicked, yet I am ſo far from judging their condition to be good, or their eſtate happy, that I would not wiſh the worſt Enemy I have in the world a worſe lot then to be a wicked man; I could not deſire any thing more evil to him then this, that he were evil and unrighteous. And therefore you are much deceived in your judgment of me, as if while I have ſpoken of the proſperity of the wicked, I were of opinion, that their eſtate is good, or they happy; whereas indeed I look upon them as men to be pittied, not envied in the higheſt pitch of their worldly pomp and greatneſs. And as I have no hunger after their dainties my ſelf, ſo I would not wiſh any friend of mine to partake with them; but (were it lawful to wiſh evil to an Enemy) I would not wiſh the vileſt Enemy I have upon the face of the earth a worſe condition, then that of a wicked man, how much ſoever he flouriſheth in the eye of the world. Thus he ſeems to be of Moſes his choice Spirit, yea to have made his choice like Moſes (Heb. 11.25.) Rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon. This is a great argument of Job's piety, ſhewing that he had no deſire, no ſuitableneſs at all in his ſpirit to the condition of a wicked man, how glorious or glittering ſoever among men. It is a common way of Expreſſing that which we moſt diſtaſte, to ſay, Let this be to mine Enemy, let this be to thoſe that hate me. And this ſuppoſeth ſuch a diſpleaſure againſt the perſon, as cannot be ſatisfied with any particular trouble. When Abigail came to meet David, and to interpoſe between him and her husbands deſtruction by his Sword, ſhe thus beſpake him (1 Sam. 25.26.) Now therefore my Lord, As the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, Seeing the Lord hath withholden thee from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging thy ſelf with thine own hand; now let thine Enemies, and they that ſeek Evil to my Lord be as Nabal. Nabal was a proſperous man in the world, yet a wicked and wretched man; and the hand of God was upon him, and he died preſently after; now let the Enemies of my Lord (ſaith Abigail) be as Nabal; that is, let them be as vile and low in the eſteem of men, as Nabal is, upon whom, one of his own ſervants could beſtow no better language, then Son of Belial, ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man could not ſpeak to (v. 17.) yea let thine Enemy be as unable to hurt thee, as Nabal is; and let him as ſurely fall under the revenging hand of God as Nabal ſhall, upon whom not to revenge thy ſelf with thine own hand, thou haſt been ſo eaſily perſwaded. We have a like wiſh formed up in the ſame terms (2 Sam. 18. 32.) The King ſaid to Cuſhai, Is the young man Abſolom ſafe; And Cuſhai ſaid, Let the Enemies of my Lord the King, and all that riſe up againſt thee be as that young man. When he would ſet forth the miſerable end and fall of Abſolom (who was hung on a tree and ſlain) he ſaith, Let all that wiſh my Lord the King hurt, be as that young man is. Once more we read this way of imprecation (Dan. 4. 19.) Then Daniel (whoſe name was Belteſhazzar) was aſtonied for one hour, and his thoughts troubled [illegible] : the King ſpake and ſaid, Belteſhazzar, let not the D[illegible], or the Interpretation thereof trouble thee; Belteſhazzar anſwered and ſaid, My Lord, the Dream be to them that hate thee, and the Interpretation thereof to thine Enemies; as if Daniel had ſaid, I have cauſe enough to be troubled, it is a black Dream, and the viſion is a viſion of darkneſs and aſtoniſhment. I could wiſh that thy Dream were to thine Enemies, and the accompliſhment of it to them that hate thee. In this language ſpeaks Job here, you think that I am a man much taken with the proſperity of the wicked; for my part, Let mine Enemies be as the wicked, and they that riſe up againſt me as the unrighteous. That's the beſt eſteem and higheſt value that I have of all them that are wicked and unrighteous. Hence Obſerve,

> To be wicked, or an unrighteous man, is to be in the worſt eſtate, incident unto, or imaginable by man.

To be poor and deſpiſed, to be weak and ſickly, all theſe evils of ſtate, name, and body, are not evil at all, in compariſon of ſin. Moral evils are the worſt of evils. And in the opinion of godly men, none are in ſo bad a condition as ungodly men; if it were lawful to wiſh the worſt that could be to an enemy, the worſt we could wiſh him (putting all evil wiſhes in one) is, that he ſhould be as the wicked, and unrighteous. Indeed they who are like them in wickedneſs, think none like them in happineſs, and ſo they think themſelves. We have both theſe tempers, or diſtempers rather, laid down in one verſe (Pſal. 10. 3.) The wicked boaſteth of his hearts deſire (that is, when he hath gotten, which is not worth the getting, what his heart deſireth) and bleſſeth the covetous (that is, counts them bleſſed) whom the Lord abhorreth. They who are of the world, bleſs the worldly, and bleſs themſelves in their worldly bleſſedneſs, and would not turn tables with any in the world unleſs ſuch as have more of the world then they (Pſal. 36. 2.) The wicked flattereth himſelf in his own eyes, till his Iniquities be found abominable. He thinks all is well with him, and ſo do many beſides himſelf. Yea ſo ignorant, or impudent are ſome, that they think God himſelf approves, and hath a good opinion of the ungodly. Such bold blaſphemers are at once diſcovered, and reproved by the Prophet (Mal. 2. 17.) Ye have wearied the Lord with your words, yet ye ſay wherein have we wearied him? When ye ſay every one that doth evil is good (that is, approved, accepted, and well eſteemed) in the ſight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, or where is the God of Judgment? Which latter words are either a new accuſation, or the proof of their former accuſation, as if they had ſaid, if he did not delight in, and approve them, he would puniſh them. This is (as the Septuagint render) a provoking word, or (as the Chaldee hath it) a moleſting troubling word; we render it fully, a wearying word. What? when God ſuffers wicked men to proſper and receive good, doth he account them good? The Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 43. 24.) preſents the Lord thus complaining, Thou haſt wearied me with thine iniquities. But that which wearieth the Lord moſt, is, when man ſaith he is pleaſed with, or approves either iniquity wrought, or the workers of iniquity. To ſpeak or think thus of God, is not only iniquity, but higheſt blaſphemy. It is a moſt groſs error, when man thinks ſo of man, as the ſame Prophet ſhews (Mal. 3. 15.) And now ye call the proud happy; ſuch as are men of aſpiring minds, and work their own ends confidently, daringly, ye call the only men. A proud man is the worſt of wicked men; every wicked man hath abundance of unmortified pride in him, but pride is a predominant luſt in ſome wicked men; how unhappy and blind in judgment are they who call theſe happy? The preſent point ſaith, that all wicked men are in a bad condition, but among them all, none is in ſo bad a one as the proud, for him God reſiſteth (Jam. 4. 6.) and if it muſt needs go ill with them, whom God doth only leave to themſelves, not giving them aſſiſtance; then who can ſay how ill it muſt needs go with them) though never ſo high and great in the world) whom God reſiſts, and ſets himſelf againſt? There are two conſiderations, which ſhew how far all wicked (much more proud) men are removed from happineſs.

Firſt, They are out of the favour of God, they have no room in his heart. How miſerable is their life, who ſhare not in the loving kindneſs of God, which is better then life? We enjoy nothing that is truly good, without God, who is the chiefeſt good. The light of his Countenance is better then all the comforts of this life; what have they that enjoy not the light of his Countenance, but ſorrow and darkneſs? As it is the ſin of a wicked man, ſo it is his puniſhment, that he is without God in the world. He is without God in the world, as to the fear of, or faith in his Name, this is his ſin; and he is without God in the world, as to any favour or good will which he hath from God, and this is his puniſhment. As whatſoever good a carnal man doth, what ever ſervice he performes to God, or for God, his heart, his good will is not in it; ſo whatſoever the wicked have from God, they have none of his heart, nothing from his good will.

Secondly, Such are not only out of the favour of God, but (for there is no middle ſtate) they are the ſubjects of his diſpleaſure, and ſtand naked to his wrath; they have no ſhelter, nothing to keep off the daily droppings, or moſt dreadful ſtorms and threatnings that are written in the Book of God. And indeed there can be no ſhelter from divine wrath, but in divine love. Therefore (ſaith Job) I would have no Friend of mine, no Child of mine, no Neighbour of mine in ſuch a condition as they are in; Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, and let him that riſeth up againſt me as the unrighteous. That's a ſecond Interpretation, repreſenting theſe words as an argument of Job's piety, who, how much ſoever he had ſpoken of the proſperity of wicked men, yet was far from believing that any true happineſs belonged to them; the choyceſt of their comforts their moſt perfect proſperity, doth not put them one ſtep beyond miſery.

Thirdly, We may Interpret theſe words as an argument of Job's courage in his Cauſe. And then, Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, either a Propheſie (mine Enemy ſhall be as the wicked) or an Imprecation, I wiſh they were ſo. Many read it only as a Propheſie (as was toucht before) foretelling what ſhould become of his Enemy. But what Enemy doth he mean? He means not an Enemy in reference to his perſon, but to his cauſe; his Enemy was his oppoſite in Judgment and opinion; and when he ſaith (Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, or mine Enemy ſhall be as the wicked, he ſpeaks of their deſert, not of his own deſire, or he ſpeaks of what might juſtly befall them, not of what he would have them fall into, as if he had ſaid, mine Enemy, or he that oppoſeth me in this Cauſe, deſerves to be as the wicked, and to be handled as the wicked, or in the carriage and handling of this Cauſe mine enemy will be found as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me as the unrighteous. It is puſſible for a good man to engage in a bad matter, and in the uprightneſs of his own heart to do and ſay that which is not right. Holy Paul could ſay of himſelf before his converſion, I verily thought with my ſelf, that I ought to do many things contrary to the Name of Jeſus of Nazarath (Acts 26. 9.) And ſome after converſion have done things contrary to the name and truth of Chriſt, how much more of their brethren.

Adverſariū deſignat cujus inimicitia verſetur, non inter perſonas, ſed compugnantes ſententias, ſit ergo de merito, non autem de eventu ut impius inimicus meus. Janſ.

But no good man can oppoſe a good Cauſe, or a good Man, but he gets a ſtain upon his goodneſs by it. It is iniquity, or unrighteouſneſs to vex any man in his righteous Cauſe, or in the righteouſneſs of his Cauſe. Job ſpeaks home and ſomewhat harſhly, when he called his Friends Enemies, but they had conſtrained him. Yet two things give ſome allay to the ſharpneſs of his language.

Firſt, That he did it only in reference to the ſtate of the buſineſs, not of their perſons.

Quiſquis mihi in hac cauſa adverſitur, tandem aliquando injuriæ condemnabitur. Jun.

Secondly, That he did it to awaken and ſtir them up to conſider what they had done. He ſpeaks roughly to them, that they might deſiſt from ſpeaking and dealing ſo roughly with him, and forbear to faſten the Cenſure of hypocriſie upon him. And we find that the Lord himſelf in the cloſe of this diſpute, doth verifie this Propheſie of Job (Mine Enemy ſhall be as the wicked) for the Lord tells them (Chap. 42. 7.) when the buſineſs came before him) My wrath is kindled againſt thee (namely Eliphaz) and againſt thy two friends, for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job. There God verified it, that Job's enemies, or they that ſtood in this Cauſe againſt him, were as the unrighteous and wicked.

Secondly, We may take notice of the qualifications of this ſpeech (Let mine enemy be as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me as the unrighteous) he doth not poſitively affirm that they who were Enemies to him in that Cauſe or buſineſs, were wicked, or were unrighteous, but let them be as the wicked. While they take part and joyn with the wicked and unrighteous in their cenſures upon me, they make themſelves ſuch; ſuch was Job's confidence in the goodneſs of his Cauſe, that he feared not to affirm his oppoſers would be found as the unrighteous and the wicked.

I do not ſay (nor did Job) that every one who oppoſeth a righteous Cauſe, is unrighteous; but he that oppoſeth a godly or righteous Man, in a righteous Cauſe, acts like an ungodly Man, or he takes up the work of the unrighteous. Thus Job ſaid to his Wife (Chap. 2. 10.) Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women uſe to ſpeak; he doth not ſay, thou art a fool, or a wicked woman, but in this thou acteſt like one of them. Thus a good man may act as a wicked man, both in oppoſing that which is good, and in complying with that which is evil, and ſo he may be numbred with the wicked, yea deſerve to be dealt with as the wicked, to be wrapped up under the ſame reproofs, and in the ſame common calamities. We may quickly bring the rod of God upon our ſelves, by being a rod upon the backs of others; and may ſooner or later, feel hard blows of correction from God, for the hard words of Cenſure which our brethren have felt from us.

So then, when Job ſaith, Let mine Enemy be as the wicked, he doth not imprecate Evil upon his friends, becauſe they oppoſed him to have done ſo, had been ſinful and diſſonant to the rules of Charity; and it were as uncharitable for any to conceive he did ſo, as for himſelf to have done it. And for proof that nothing of revenge was upon his Spirit, he makes an open proteſtation to the contrary, accompanied with a ſecret and ſevere imprecation upon himſelf, in caſe it were ſo (Chap. 31. 29.) If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me, or lift up my ſelf when Evil found him? Then, &c. He that really wiſheth Evil to his Enemy, cannot but rejoyce when evil finds him. Joy ariſeth from the accompliſhment of deſire. But though Job did not wiſh Evil to his Friends, yet he would not ſpare them in what they did ill, their ill dealing with him.

Hence note, It is no breach of Charity to ſpeak home, and tell them who oppoſe the truth, that they do wickedly, though otherwiſe they be good men.

Truth is a friend to be preferred before all friends. We muſt take heed of ſowing pillows under their arms, who maintain a bad Cauſe; they who flatter and ſpeak them fair, do ſo. Such lenitives encourage Error, and ſuch gentleneſs is deadly to thoſe who Err. There is a ſinful provocation in ſpeaking, eſpecially in diſputing; yet we may ſpeak plain, and tell men their own, without any juſt provocation. To maintain love and unity is good, but to maintain purity is better. We muſt rather be againſt all men, then do any thing againſt the truth. Thus Paul dealt with Peter (Gal. 2. 11.) I withſtood him to the face, becauſe he was to be blamed. His holy zeal for God was not ſtopt by the reſpect and reverence which he bare to man. Such was Job's courage according to this interpretation, while he ſaid, Let mine Enemy be as the wicked. I can give no better Judgment of him in this Caſe.

Verſe 8. For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he have gained, when God taketh away his ſoul?

Some conceive Job in theſe words giving a reaſon of what was ſaid before, that he had nothing to do, in a way of complyance with wicked men; for what is their hope when God taketh away their ſoul? Who would be in their coat, who though they flouriſh, and are gay while they live, yet will be moſt miſerable when they die. Our reading ſeems to carry this ſence.

Further, We may expound this Text as an argument by which Job would prove that he was no hypocrite; as if he had ſaid, Ye my friends have long ſince given your opinion of me, that I am an hypocrite, and were I indeed ſuch a one, my condition, I confeſs, were moſt miſerable: although I might flatter my ſelf with the gain of outward comforts and advantages in this world, yet when I die (it may be to day before to morrow) I ſhould have no true comfort in poſſeſſion, nor any ſolid ground to hope for it; For what is the hope of the hypocrite, what comfort, or hope of comfort can he take up, when God taketh away his ſoul? But if God take away my ſoul, I have hope; I am fully perſwaded my hope ſhall not dye when my body dieth, therefore I am no hypocrite, no wicked man. Job hath given proof in divers parts of this Book, that he had hope, and another ſpirit in affliction then the wicked have, therefore his affliction did not prove him wicked. Firſt, he acknowledged all his afflictions to come from God, yea from God as a Father, while he wounded him as an Enemy. Secondly, In his deepeſt afflictions he begged help of God. Thirdly, He had hope of help, or would hope upon God, though he ſhould not help him; this no hypocrite ever did. Yea Job profeſſeth, that though God ſhould take away his ſoul, yet he had hope (Chap. 13. 15.) Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; I will maintain mine own wayes before him; he alſo is my ſalvation, and an hypocrite ſhall not come before him. Job could truſt God ſlaying him, or taking away his ſoul, and therefore he could not but have hope, if God ſhould take away his ſoul. We read (Chap. 6. 8, 9, 10.) that when he ſpake of dying, and of his deſire to dye, yea, was begging that he might dye, he declared a lively hope; O that I might have my requeſt, and that God would grant me the thing that I long for; Even that it would pleaſe God to deſtroy me, that he would let looſe his hand, and cut me off, Then ſhould I yet have comfort; that is, that would be the moſt comfortable news to me, that I might but die. This is my profeſſion, and this is my perſwaſion, I have hope in death, and therefore I am no hypocrite, as you take me to be; For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his ſoul?

Confirmatio innocentiæ ſuæ à fide in Deum etiam in ipſis afflictionibus Jun.

What is the hope of the hypocrite?

The meaning is, the hypocrite hath no hope at all; he neither hath, nor can have any hope when God taketh away his ſoul. Hope is taken in Scripture divers wayes, Firſt, For the habit or grace of hope, implanted in the ſoul; as there is a habit of faith, and a habit of love, ſo there is a habit of hope, that is, an abiding principle of it.

Secondly, Hope is put for the putting forth, or for the acting of this grace in our dependance upon God in greateſt ſtraits.

Thirdly, Hope is often put for the object of hope, and that two wayes.

Firſt, For the perſon in whom we hope. Thus God in Scripture is often called hope (Jer. 14. 8.) O the hope of Iſrael, &c. that is, O thou, in whom thy people hope.

Secondly, Hope is put not only for the perſon in whom we hope, but for the thing or mattter which we hope to attain; the good, the bleſſedneſs which we look or hope for, is in Scripture called hope (Tit. 2. 14.) Looking for that bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. That bleſſed hope is, that ſtate of bleſſedneſs which believers hope and wait for, at the appearing of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Here in this place we may take in all, or any of theſe ſences; Hypocrites pretend to the habit of hope, they ſeem to act hope, and to act it both upon God himſelf, and that bleſſedneſs which floweth out from him. But what is the hope of the hypocrite? It is nothing; he hath no hope in him, nor is any act of hope put out by him, either upon God, or upon the good things which God hath promiſed in the world to come, how much ſoever he hath gained in this world. What is the hope of the hypocrite?

Though he have gained.

There is a difference about the reading of this clauſe. Some thus, That he ſhould bring it about, ſo Mr. Broughton; What can be the hope of the hypocrite, that he ſhould bring it about? that is, that he ſhould perfect or make it good. The hypocrite may have a great hope (which really is only a great preſumption) but he cannot bring his hope about, he cannot compaſs or obtain that which he looks and longs for?

Nam quæ eſt expectatio hypocricæ quam expleverit. Jun.

Secondly, (reads another) What is the hope of the hypocrite, which he hath fulfilled, or brought about? As if he had ſaid, The hypocrite looks but for worldly gain, if he can fill his purſe, and get preferment, if he can fill his belly, and take his pleaſure, he ſits down ſatisfied and ſaith, I have enough. Now what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath fulfilled this hope? Though he hath gained? Though he hath gotten as much as ever he expected? Though he be as rich, or richer then ever he expected? Though he be as great, and greater in this world, then ever he expected? Though he have as much pleaſure and more then ever he expected? What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath fulfilled and reached the utmoſt line of all theſe hopes? May we not write emptineſs and inſufficiency, may we not write weakneſs and uncertainty, may we not write vanity, yea vexation of ſpirit upon the forehead of all theſe things? Then, What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he have gained?

Becauſe the particular gain of the hypocrite is not expreſt in the Text, therefore we may affix any thing to it, that is gain in the eſteem of the world, or worldly men; as thus,

Firſt, Though he have gained wife and children, that's one gain.

Secondly, Though he have gained credit, and a good name among men, that's another gain.

Thirdly, Though he hath gained honour and authority above men, though he be become a great man, one of the greateſt men in the world, yea, though he hath gained the command of the whole world, what is his hope?

Eho, pecuniæ accipiter, avidè & invidè, procax rapax, trahax trecentis verſibus tuas impuritates loqui nemo poteſt. Plaut. 1 Perſa.

Fourthly, Though he hath been a Money-catcher (as a Heathen deſcribes greedy gripers) like a Kite, or a Hawk, ſnatching at all gain as his game, avaritiouſly heaping up his prey, and glutting himſelf with, and glorying in his abundance, what is his hope?

Fifthly, Though he hath gained (which is a more precious gain then all theſe) all Knowledge and Learning in all Arts and Sciences, and be able to ſpeak with the tongue of Men and Angels, both to God in Praying, and to men in Diſcourſing and Preaching; yet What is his hope?

When God taketh away his ſoul.] There are two readings of this laſt Clauſe.

Firſt, Some derive the word, which we tranſlate taketh away, from a root, which ſignifieth to be quiet, and to reſt. Chriſt is called Shiloh from this root (Gen. 49. 10.) The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, untill Shiloh come; that is, till Chriſt come, who giveth true-reſt, ſoul-reſt, eternal-reſt to his people. And then the Text is rendred thus, What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he have gained, and God cauſeth his ſoul to reſt, or to be quiet, and ſit at eaſe in the uſe and enjoyment of his gain. This puts the beſt of the hypocrites caſe; ſuppoſe that he hath gained much, ſuppoſe alſo that God gives him a quiet poſſeſſion of his gain, which is not the lot of many. Some get much, but their ſouls never reſt, they are tumbled up and down with reſtleſs turmoils in the world; they get much trouble to themſelves, by what themſelves have gotten. Thus Solomon deſcribes the condition of worldly gainers (Eccleſ. 2. 22, 23.) What hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the Sun? For all his dayes are ſorrows (that is, he hath ſorrow all his dayes) yea his heart taketh not reſt in the night. And again (Chap. 5. 12.) The aboundance of the rich will not ſuffer him to ſleep. Uſually the things of the world, either reſt not with us, or make us reſt-leſs; yet it muſt be granted that ſome men gain, and that greatly, and God cauſeth their ſouls to reſt, they are at eaſe in their poſſeſſions. Now though this be the hypocrites preſent caſe, that after he hath gained, God giveth his ſoul reſt. As the rich man adviſed his ſoul (Luke 12. 19.) Thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry. Suppoſe all this, and let the hypocrites ſoul take eaſe, lye down and tumble in his greatneſs, honour, and riches; let him rock himſelf aſleep in carnal delights and delicacies, yet what is the hope of the hypocrite, when he hath not only gained riches, but gained (which is better then riches) reſt. Though reſt be good, yet the hypocrites reſt is not good; his is a reſt in ſin, as well as in riches, and that is not good; his is a falſe reſt, and that is not good; his is a ſhort reſt, a reſt only fitting and fatting him for the ſlaughter, and ſuch a reſt is not good; though he hath a reſt, yet he hath no hope of reſt, and what is reſt in poſſeſſion, where there is none in expectation?

Secondly, Others derive the Original word from a root, which ſignifies to pull away, to draw off, to draw out; ſo we, What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God draws out, or takes away his ſoul; the ſoul is taken away by death, and that by a natural death as well as by a violent. But the word here uſed doth properly imply a violent death, and that ſenee is moſt agreeable to the preſent Text, becauſe the ſoul of a wicked man (as will further appear in the notes) is (as it were) forced out of his body, though he dye (as we ſay) fairly upon his bed. The word ſignifies properly, the drawing of a Sword out of the ſheath or ſcabbard, which notion doth elegantly comply with that expreſſion of the Prophet Daniel, who calleth or compareth the body of man to a ſheath; we tranſlate him ſpeaking thus of himſelf, My ſpirit was grieved within me (Chap. 7. 15.) The Chaldee is (as we put in the Margin) in my ſheath, that is, in my body; the body being as the ſheath, and the ſoul as the ſword. When God calleth the ſoul of any man out of his body, he unſheath's it. But he pulls the ſoul of a wicked man out of his body, like a ruſty ſword out of the ſheath, which comes not out without much ſtrength and tugging. The word is alſo applied to the pulling of the the ſhoo from the foot; our ſhooes do not drop or fall off, but are untied and pulled off. Thus the word is uſed (Exod. 3. 5.) Put off thy ſhooes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is holy ground, ſaith the Lord to Moſes when he appeared in the burning Buſh. The ſoul of a wicked man parts with his body like a ſtrait ſhoo, or a ſhoo faſt tied from the foot, very uneaſily. So that under both alluſions, the word implies ſuch a kind of violence in the departure of the hypocrite out of this life, as if, loath to depart, were alwayes his parting, his dying ſong. God putteth off, or pulleth out the ſoul of the hypocrite, he doth not freely reſign or yield it up when called to come forth. So much for the opening of theſe words, What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his ſoul? The Obſervations from them are many.

> Firſt, A wicked man while he liveth may be full of hope, and his hope may live with him as long as he liveth.

The hypocrites hope is nouriſhed both with temporal and ſpiritual things. He hopeth that he hath the love and favour of God, becauſe he enjoyeth many outward (as he thinks) favours from God. His eſtate is good here, and therefore he hopes it will be ſo hereafter. Poſſibly he is rich and great, and proſperous in the world, and thence concludeth, ſurely God loves me. Yea, and in reference to ſpirituals, the hypocrite may have hope, he may be planted into Church-priviledges, he may be reckoned among Saints, or true believers; he may enjoy all the Ordinances of the Goſpel; he may eat bread at the Table of the Lord, and ſit among the Lords people; All which may breed in him a great deal of hope.

Further, He may have many and great ſpiritual gifts, yea he may have a fair appearance of grace; As he often hath great gifts of knowledge, of utterance, of prayer, ſo he may have that which looks like grace, like faith, like repentance and godly ſorrow, he may have that which looks like love, and humility, and patience, he may have the appearances of all theſe graces, and theſe may wind up his hope very high, and fill his ſails with ſuch ſtrong confidences, that he may reckon himſelf among the darlings of heaven, and the delight of Chriſt. He may look upon himſelf not only as in favour with God, but as one of Gods ſavourites, and ſay in his heart, ſurely I ſhall be ſaved if any are to be ſaved; he may come and lean upon the Lord, as the Prophet tells us that ſinful people did (Mich. 3. 11.) The heads thereof Judge for reward, and the Prieſts thereof teach for hire, and the Prophets thereof divine for money; yet will they lean upon the Lord, and ſay, is not the Lord among us, none evil can come upon us? But indeed the Lord will do to him as another Prophet (Ezek. 29. 7.) ſaith, Egypt did to the houſe of Iſrael, When they took hold of thee by the hand, thou didſt break and rent all their ſhoulder; and when they leaned upon thee thou breakeſt and madeſt all their loins to be at a ſtand. Thus will the Lord do to all thoſe who lean upon, and make their boaſts of him, while their hearts are not perfect with him. And therefore,

Secondly, Obſerve, Death puts an hypocrite quite off from all his hope; when God taketh away his ſoul, his hope is alſo taken away.

When he dies, then all his hopes die; as when the Princes of the world die, their thoughts periſh, ſo when they who are meer worldlings periſh, their hopes periſh too. How can an hypocrite hope for good in death, when his hope never entered, nor anchored within the vail, for life? his hope is not faſtened upon the word of eternal life, and therefore his hope cannot be a ſtay to his ſoul when he departs this life. The hope that holds out is entred into that within the vail (Heb. 6. 19.) that is, it cloſeth with God himſelf in Jeſus Chriſt, it hath ſweet Communion with God by Jeſus Chriſt our high Prieſt, who as our forerunner is for us entred into heaven. A believer is ſubject to be toſſed with troubles of mind and manifold temptations, as a Ship upon the Sea, while he is in this world; yet that hope which is entered within the vail, ſtayes him as an Anchor ſure and ſtedfaſt in all ſtorms, and in all times. But the Anchor of the hypocrites hope enters not within the vail, but is caſt upon falſe and looſe ground, and therefore when the ſtorm comes his Anchor drives, and is unſtedfaſt, and ſo his hope and heart fail together. The ſtouteſt hypocrite in the world will droop at laſt, when God comes to take away his ſoul; then his Creſt falls, and his Plumes flag. When the rain deſcendeth, and the floods come, and the winds blow and beat upon the houſe that is built upon the ſand, it falls, and the fall thereof is great (Mat. 7. 27.) A falſe heart cannot hold out in real hardſhips; when rain and floods and winds (by which are meant all the troubles of this life) aſſault him, he runs to ruine, and cannot ſtand his ground: much leſs will he be able to ſtand in the hour of death, when the rain and floods and winds of temptations fall moſt furiouſly upon the ſoul. Thus Solomon concludes (Prov. 11. 7.) When a wicked man dieth, his expectation ſhall periſh, and the hope of unjuſt men periſheth. Poſſibly that may be everlaſting which they hope for, yet their hopes are not laſting; the hopes of ſome periſh, becauſe they hope only for periſhing things; others have hopes of unperiſhing things, whoſe hope yet ſhall periſh. The voluptuous rich man is ſaid to have had his good things (Luke 16. 15.) He had no more to hope for, no more to look for, his hope periſhed when God took away his ſoul. When a godly man dieth, his hope is perfected by the fruition of that which he hoped for, he enjoyeth all and more then ever he expected. But when an ungodly man dieth, his hope periſheth in a diſappointment of fruition, he enjoyeth nothing at all of all that, which he (though with little reaſon) ſo much expected.

Again, What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he have gained? The Spirit of God joyns gain with the hypocrite.

Hence Obſerve, Thirdly, Covetouſneſs and hypocriſie uſually dwell together.

The true love of worldly gain, and the falſe love of ſpiritual gain, hunt in couples, and are ſeldom ſevered. Hypocriſie aims at gain, and often hits it, but it alwayes miſſeth true gain; falſeneſs in the things of God, waits for fulneſs in the things of men, but real fulneſs it gets none. When a falſe heart ſeeth that Religion is in credit, that godlineſs is the way to worldly greatneſs, and that (as ſometimes it doth, though rarely) the profeſſion of it leadeth to advancement; preſently he takes upon him the profeſſion of Religion, and puts on the garb or faſhion of godlineſs. Chriſt ſaith of hypocrites, They devour widows houſes, and for a pretence make long prayers. A falſe heart prayeth, and will be much in duty, that he may devour the houſes and eſtates of others, or that he may ſmooth his way to his own ends; but he cares not to be, nor is he at all in duty to draw near to God, or improve his own ſpiritual eſtate to the end. This is a dangerous temptation in theſe times, becauſe now Religion is looked upon with a good eye, and Religious godly men are in place; a falſe heart works upon this, and will be in any form of Religion, that hath a fair acceptance in the world, through the favourable eye of Princes and earthly Powers, caſt upon it. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſome (1 Tim. 6. 5.) who ſuppoſed that gain was godlineſs; and ſurely the end which ſuch had in profeſſing godlineſs, was that they might be gainers, or have outward preferment by it. As for godlineſs in it ſelf, or abſtractly conſidered, they deſpiſed it, they cared no more for it then for their old ſhooes; but the hope of gain was ſo ſweet to them, or they were ſo hungry and ſharp ſet after it, that they counted godlineſs, which to their natural appetite was bitter, or at beſt had no better taſte in their palates, then the white of an egg, to be a pleaſant morſel. Covetouſneſs being predominant in the hypocrite, he will be ſo far a ſervant to any thing as it brings in gain, which is the diet and food of covetouſneſs.

Fourthly, Job ſuppoſeth the hypocrite gaining,

Hence Note, Hypocrites may, and uſually do, gain much in this world.

As they have a great deſire of worldly gain, ſo they get it; they would fain have the world, and God ſaith, take it. The Lord gives them (as he gave the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, (Pſal. 78. 29, 30.) Their own deſire, and they are not eſtranged from their luſts, that is, they have what they will or luſt to have. God gives them their requeſt (Pſal. 106. 15.) but ſends leanneſs into their ſoul, yea, while the meat is in their mouthes the wrath of God comes upon them. The hypocrite brings his hope about, he fulfils his deſire, and obtains what he projects; hypocriſie is to ſome a very thriving trade. The hearts of Saints only are filled with the hidden Manna, but the bellies of the wicked are often filled with hidden Treaſure (Pſal. 17. 14.) that is, with thoſe dainties and good things, which are vertually hidden in, and formally ſpring out of the belly and bowels of the earth. The Lord eaſily grants them their wiſh in ſuch things, and gives them their portion (which is all their portion) in this life. For as they are but common profeſſors, ſo theſe are but common mercies, ſuch as many of his Enemies receive, who are but fatted as Oxen for the ſlaughter, and fitted for deſtruction. True happineſs is not to be judged by lands or houſes, by gold or ſilver. The world is a narrow bound, unleſs we get beyond the creature, and ſet our hopes above this world, we cannot be happy. As hypocrites deſire, ſo they attain much of the world, but they ſhall attain no more, how much ſoever they ſeem to deſire it.

Obſerve, Fifthly, Riches or worldly gains avail nothing in the approaches of death.

The hypocrite (which Job Chap. 31. 24.) profeſſed he had not done) maketh gold his hope, and ſaith to the fine gold, thou art my Confidence. But when pale death appears, when the King of terrours ſhews his face, neither gold nor fine gold can give any comfort. The Apoſtle Paul could ſay upon a well grounded aſſurance (Phil. 1. 21.) To me to die is gain. Happy are they who gain when they die, but all the gains of this life cannot make us die happily. Solomon hath told us ſo, (Prov. 11. 4.) Riches profit not in the day of wrath, but righteouſneſs delivereth from death. Riches and profits are (in common ſpeech) the ſame things, yet there's a time when riches are unprofitable. Many have been delivered unto death for their righteouſneſs (Mat. 5. 10.) yet righteouſneſs will deliver all, that have it, from death, that is, from the ſting and wrath that is in death. But ſaith the Prophet (Ezek. 7. 19.) Their ſilver and their gold ſhall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord; whether that be a day of common publick deſtruction upon a Nation, or a day of particular perſonal death. And ſeeing worldly things give us no relief in death, let not us linger after, much leſs live upon wordly things; let us not live upon worldly things while we live here, much leſs expect any thing from them when we go hence. Godlineſs will ſtand by us when we die, the riches of faith, the gain of ſpiritual knowledge and experience, the encreaſes of grace which we have made, will ſtand by us, and ſtand us in ſtead when we are dropping to the ground, and our frail bodies falling into the grave. When God takes away the ſoul of a believer, all his ſoul gains ſhall abide with him; But, what doth all that avail a rich man which he hath, if he hath not God, who gave him all that he hath? They who (as Chriſt ſpeaketh, Luk. 12. 20.) Lay up treaſure for themſelves, and are not rich towards God, that is, rich in the graces which they have received from God, and rich in the duties and acts of grace which they have returned unto God. They (I ſay) who are not thus rich towards God, ſhall find no benefit in all the treaſures which they have laid up for themſelves, in the day of their greateſt need, the day of death.

Quid prodeſt diviti quod habet, ſi deū, qui omnia dedit, non habet. Aug. Epiſt. 7c.

Sixthly, Job ſpeaks here ſlightingly of all the hypocrites gain upon this account, becauſe his ſoul continues in a loſt condition. What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, &c.

Hence Note, They are miſerable who loſe their ſouls, though they get much of, or all this world.

He makes an ill market that puts off his ſoul at any price; Chriſt who knew the worth of a ſoul, and laid down a price to the utmoſt worth of ſouls, puts theſe queſtions (Mat. 16. 26.) What is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and looſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul; that is, he is not at all profited by all the profits of the world, if he looſe his ſoul; nor is there any thing in this world, which a man giving, may receive his loſt ſoul back again, as it were by way of Barter and Exchange.

Seventhly, From thoſe words, When God taketh away his ſoul.

Obſerve, The ſoul is at Gods diſpoſe, he may ſend for it when he will.

The Lord can command away the Soul of the ſtrongeſt, of the richeſt, of the wiſeſt; life and death are in the hand of God. He can either cut the thred of life, or ſpin it out at pleaſure. Moſes tells the Jews as one man (Deut. 30. 20.) He is thy life, and the length of thy dayes. He alſo diſpenceth death, and ſhortneſs of dayes. The marriage of the ſoul and body together is life; the breaking of this marriage bond, or the parting of ſoul and body is death. God can part the ſoul from the body, he can break that marriage bond when, and how he pleaſeth. He can uncloath the ſoul, and leave it naked, he can quickly ſtrip it of this garment of fleſh. The ſoul ſeparate from the body is naked and uncloathed. So the Apoſtle ſpeaks about his own death (2 Cor. 5. 2, 3, 4.) Not that he would be uncloathed, but cloathed upon, that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life. When we are uncloathed or die, mortality ſwalloweth us up, but when we ſhall be cloathed upon with, or live in glory, mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up. Now, as the time when the body ſhall be cloathed with glory, and mortality ſhall be for ever ſwallowed up; ſo the time when the ſoul ſhall be uncloathed of this body, and this life ſwallowed up of mortality, is at the appointment, and under the decree of God. When God will take away the ſoul no man knows, only this we know, that he both can and may take it away when he will.

Laſtly, As theſe words, (God taketh away his ſoul) imply a force.

Obſerve, Though hypocrites and moſt wicked men dye a natural death, yet to them their death is violent.

Their ſouls are, as it were, ſnatcht, and taken, yea rent and torn from them; a wicked man doth not Commend his ſoul into the hands of God, but the hand of God taketh and pulleth his ſoul from him. Old Simeon could ſay, Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace (Luk. 2. 29.) And Paul could ſay, I deſire to depart (Phil. 1. 23.) No hypocrite could ever make any of theſe prayers, for if his tongue hath ſpoken them, his heart hath not. An hypocrite may ſometimes deſire to die, but he is never willing to die. We read in the book of the Revelation (Chap. 9. 6.) that many men ſhall ſeek death and ſhall not find it, and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them. But was this becauſe they were willing to die? No, but becauſe they were weary of their lives, or afraid to live: they did not ſee any other good in death, but to get out of the penal evils of this life. Thus a wicked man may deſire to die, that he may be quit of the troubles miſeries and dangers that threaten his life, but he is never willing to die when he quietly enjoys the good things of this life; much leſs doth he ſee that the beſt things of this life are better'd in the next. He doth not ſee that there is more good to come then any that he leaves; yea, he will not leave his ſin, his beloved luſt, for any good that is to come. And therefore though the Lord ſuffer him to live till he be as fruitfully ripe, yea almoſt rotten, and ready to drop off the tree, though he be ſo old that he can live a natural life no longer; yet his death is violent to him. As the ſecond or eternal death rejoyns and reunites his ſoul to his body ſore againſt his will, ſo the firſt or temporal death ſeparates and pulls his ſoul from his body ſore againſt his will. There are two ſpecial Conſiderations, upon which it doth appear, that a hypocrite can never die (in this ſence) but a violent death.

Firſt, He cannot freely ſubmit to the decree of death; he cannot die in obedience as a true believer doth. He that doth not live in obedience, can never die in obedience. As Chriſt was obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſs; So Saints (in their degree) are obedient, not only all their lives, but they are obedient unto death, that is, their dying is an act of obedience. But it is impoſſible that the hypocrite, who never lived in obedience to the commandment of God, ſhould die in obedience to the decree of God.

Secondly, He hath no footing in, or Aſſurance of a better life; he never took hold of Eternal life, therefore he can never willingly let go his hold of a temporal life. No man willingly parts with what he hath, until he hath ſome evidence and aſſurance, at leaſt ſome good hope of that which is better, or which he (at leaſt) conceives to be better then what he hath. A man will not readily give up his poſſeſſion of a ſmoaky Cottage, when he ſees, if he leave it, he muſt be expoſed to all the injuries of wind and weather, of froſt and ſnow, in the open air. So then, He that hath not in him a principle of Obedience, while he lives, nor a well-grounded hope of happineſs when he dieth, cannot die willingly. And therefore, That is verified upon every wicked man in the world when he dieth, which is ſaid to the worldly rich man, (Luke 12. 20.) This night ſhall thy ſoul be required of thee; His ſoul is required, not reſigned, 'tis taken away, not given up; And though he ſay, he deſireth to be diſſolved, is none of his deſire; He may chuſe death (according to his corrupt Judgment) as the leſſer evil, but he never chuſeth it as that which leadeth to the greateſt good.

Thus we have ſeen ſome what of Job's mind in aſſerting the ſincerity of his ſoul towards God, by his hope in God when his ſoul ſhould leave his body, while he in a way of diminution puts the queſtion, What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he have gained, when God taketh away his ſoul?

VERS. 9, 15.

Will God hear his cry, when trouble cometh upon him? Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? will he alwayes call upon God?

IN theſe two verſes Job proſecutes and proves what he had aſſerted in the former verſe, that, The hypocrite hath no hope; What is the hope of the hypocrite, when God taketh away his ſoul? He that hath hope ſhall be anſwered when he prayeth, God will hear his cry. He that hath hope delighteth in God, when he ſeeth nothing but cauſes of ſorrow in the world. Hope encourageth the ſoul to ſeek unto God without ceaſing in the loweſt ebb, and darkeſt night of outward trouble. But all theſe run croſs to the hypocrite, He ſhall cry and not be heard, He hath no delight in God, nor can he hold out long in calling upon God; Therefore he hath no hope. Job's proof ariſeth two wayes; He argues, Firſt, From what God would not do; God will not hear his cry, when trouble cometh upon him, therefore he hath no hope, that's his firſt argument; Secondly, He argues from what the hypocrite would not do; and that in two particulars. Firſt, his not delighting in God; Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? The ſence of the queſtion is Negative; He will not, and therefore he hath no hope. Secondly, He argues from his not perſevering in prayer to God; Will he alwayes call upon God? He will not, and therefore he hath no hope.

Verſ. 9. Will God hear his cry?

No, He will not. The Lord hears the leaſt whiſper of a gracious ſoul, the language of his heart, his thoughts, have a ſound in the ears of God; But the cry, the loudeſt cry of an hypocrite, God will not hear! That is, he will not ſhew him favour by granting him that which he cryed for. God hears what is ſaid in prayer, whoſoever prayeth, but there are many prayers made which he doth not grant; it is no good to us to be heard, unleſs we be thus heard; in Scripture language, not to be helped is not to be heard.

Clamare eſt ardentius aut contentius implorare opem.

Will God hear his cry?] By a cry, we are to underſtand more then ordinary prayer, crying is vehement praying; crying notes earneſtneſs, or fervency in prayer. This poor man cryed, ſaith the Prophet (Pſal. 34. 6.) that is, he prayed mightily) and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles. (Exod. 14. 15.) And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Wherefore cryeſt thou unto me? that is, why doſt thou call ſo earneſtly upon me? Moſes cryed though he ſpake nothing, it was the intention of his ſpirit, not the loudneſs of his voice; it was the clamor of his heart, not of his mouth that made the cry. As in Scripture the multiplying of prayer, notes the intention of the ſpirit in it (Iſa. 1. 15.) When you ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when you make many prayers, I will not hear; your hands are full of blood. So crying out in any one prayer, ſhews utmoſt intention of the Spirit in it. Will God hear his cry? That is, will he hear when he is moſt urgent and importunate in prayer? when his ſpirit is, as it were, all on fire, or inflamed in prayer? No, he will not; God will, not only, not hear his ſloathful prayers, and his ſleepy prayers, his cold-hearted, and dead-hearted prayers, but when he ſeemeth to be moſt warm and lively in prayer, when he ſeems to be moſt hearty and preſſing in prayer, God will not hear him. This aggravates the miſery of the hypocrite exceedingly; And yet that which followeth, aggravates it much more, Will God hear his cry

When trouble comes upon him?

An hypocrite would not much care if he were not heard in times of peace, and in the affluence of outward injoyments; but this pincheth him to purpoſe, that God will not hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him; ſuch trouble as is a ſtreight, and puts him between two walls, yea that puts him (as it were) in the ſtocks, or in priſon, that puts him in little caſe; ſuch a kind of trouble, a ſtrieghtning trouble is here meant, yea and a vexing trouble. Many troubles may come upon us, and yet not put us to ſtreights, we may be in trouble, and yet ſee our way out of trouble; but that man is in a ſad condition, who being in trouble knows not which way to turn for help in the world, and while he turns himſelf to God, God will not hear him.

Verbo veniandi, videtur indicare liberam quandã poteſtatem caſtrametantis, aut adventantis exercitus ex jure Juſtiſſimi belli. Pined.

When trouble cometh.] The action or motion of a living creature is here aſcribed to trouble, trouble cometh; 'tis uſual in Scripture to ſpeak ſo; and it is an alluſion unto an adverſary or an enemy, whether a ſingle perſon, or an army. Thus it is expreſſed by Solomon (Prov. 6. 11.) So ſhall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man. The ſloathful man or ſluggard (for of him that Text ſpeaks) ſits ſtill, but poverty is upon its ſpeed, and travelleth hard to over-take him; and as his poverty is ſaid to come like a traveller, becauſe it comes ſpeedily, ſo it is ſaid to come like an armed man, becauſe it comes violently, and as to him irreſiſtably. Thus trouble cometh upon the hypocrite, it cometh like an armed man, yea it cometh like a whole army of men, it incamps round about him, and beſieges him on every ſide. As Chriſt ſpeaks of Jeruſalem (Luke 19. 43.) The dayes ſhall come upon thee, that thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee, and compaſs thee round, and keep thee in on every ſide; they ſhall put thee, as it were, into a pound; That's the Emphaſis of the word here, trouble ſhall come like an army of enemies upon the hypocrite, and then he will cry aloud to the Lord for help, but the Lord will not hear his cry. His troubles ſhall prevail upon him, and be remedileſs, becauſe his prayer doth not prevail with God, but is returned or ſent back anſwerleſs.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Trouble ſhall come upon and overcome the hypocrite.

Many are the troubles of the righteous, or upright; and the hypocrite doth not ſcape without his troubles; he meets them many times in his way, and he meets them alwayes at his end. A godly man may often meet with trouble in his way, but he never meets it at his end (Pſal. 37. 37, 38.) Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace. But the tranſgreſſors ſhall be deſtroyed together, the end of the wicked ſhall be cut off; that is, either the thing which he propoſed to himſelf as his deſign or end ſhall be cut off, or himſelf ſhall be cut off in the end. An hypocrite muſt needs meet with trouble, becauſe he is ſo ſinful, and when he meets with trouble, that muſt needs deſtroy him, becauſe he lies open, or naked to it, and hath no ſhelter againſt it; he is not under the protection of God, he hath not any one promiſe in the whole book of God to friend, when enemies and troubles come. He is not fenced and fortified as the upright are, God is a wall, even a wall of fire about his people, he is their defence and bulwark, their ſtrong tower and deliverer. They have many fortifications againſt troubles; though they are much aſſaulted, yet they are well-defended, God himſelf is their fortification, their ſtrong-hold, they are not a naked people; but an hypocrite is expoſed naked to the ſhock and ſhot of every trouble. Sin doth not only bereave us of our innocency, but of our ſafety. It doth not only cloath us with impurity, but uncloath us of power. When Aaron had made the Golden Calf, Moſes coming down from the Mount, both rebukes and queſtions him about it; And he ſaw that the people were naked, for Aaron had made them naked to their ſhame amongſt their enemies (Exod. 32. 25.) How had Aaron made them naked? not by taking their cloaths of from their bodies; for he took nothing of them towards the making of the Golden Calf, but their Golden-earings (verſ. 2, 3.) which they might well enough ſpare, and not be corporally naked: But Moſes ſaw them ſtript of the protection and favourable preſence of God, which was not only as a garment to defend them from cold and ſhame, but as an armour of proof, or as a ſtrong tower, to defend them from danger. A godly man ſinning, renders himſelf ſometimes thus naked; but a wicked man is always thus naked, he hath not a rag of a promiſe to put about him, and is therefore obnoxious to the incurſions of every evil. His ſin haſtens the coming of trouble, and his ſin leaves him unguarded when trouble comes. He that dwelleth in the ſecret place of the moſt High, ſhall abide under the ſhadow of the Almighty (Pſal. 91. 1.) and to ſhew that a man reſting in God is ſecure, be his dangers never ſo great, and his caſe never ſo deſperate; the Pſalmiſt gives aſſurance to ſuch a one (verſ. 4, 5.) He ſhall cover thee with his feathers (as which is Moſes his alluſion, Deut. 32. 11.) the Eagle fluttereth over her young, or as (which is Chriſts alluſion) the hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, ſo) under his wings ſhalt thou truſt: his truth ſhall be thy Shield and Buckler, thou ſhalt not be afraid, for the terrour by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day. But the hypocrites breaſt ſtands open like a Butt to all the terrours and arrows of the Almighty.

Now the troubles that come upon the hypocrite, are of two ſorts; Firſt, They are troubles from without; Secondly, Troubles from within, troubles of body, and troubles of mind; his conſcience, which knows what he hath done, and hath accuſed him for what he hath done, is ready to vex and trouble him for what he hath done. Conſcience having judged and condemned him, wounds and torments him, and he hath nothing either to keep off the ſtroak of it, or to heal it. Thus all ſorts of trouble invade and aſſault him, while he hath no real remedy or relief againſt any of them. For God will not hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him.

Secondly, When Job querieth, Will God hear his cry, &c. he ſuppoſeth and takes it for granted, that he will cry, when trouble comes upon him.

Hence Obſerve, Even hypocrites will pray in times of trouble.

They have the form of prayer, who neither have any power with God in prayer, nor have ever felt the power of it upon their own hearts. Heathens who know not the true God, have been known to pray, and will pray in trouble; then much more will hypocrites, who both know and profeſs his name. It is natural to pray in trouble, and therefore no marvel if they who have no grace fall on their knees, and cry out for mercy, when miſery falls upon them. God is near in the mouths of many (as the Prophet expreſſeth them, *Jer.*12.2.) yet far from their reins. They greatly deſire help from him, though they do not at all deſire him. The Prophet (*Iſa.*16.12.) ſaith of Idolatrous Moab, It ſhall come to paſs, that when it is ſeen, that Moab is weary on the high place, that he ſhall come to his Sanctuary to pray; that is, when he hath laboured in vain, by offering Sacrifices in the high place to other Idols for protection, then he ſhall apply himſelf by prayer to Chemoſh his chief Idol God, in that prophane Sanctuary built and dedicated to that dunghil deity, as his laſt refuge, yet ſtill in vain. And we read that when the ſtorm was up, thoſe Marriners being afraid, Cryed every man unto his God, (Jonah 1.5.) Theſe Marriners were heathens and lived without God in the world, yet every one of them had his god. It is natural to own a God, but to own the one God is a work of Grace. And natural men who ſeldom call upon God, are therefore by the Prophet (Jer. 10.25.) called the families, that call not upon his Name, and by the Pſalmiſt, ſuch as have not God in all their thoughts, (Pſal. 10.4.) that is, God is not at all in their thoughts; yet theſe will go to God and call upon him, when they are ſo urged with ſtorms, that they know not whither elſe to go, nor any beſide to call upon. Yea they who know God and profeſs his name, are ſometimes negligent and remiſs in prayer, till they are quickned by their own ſmart, (Iſa. 26.16.) Lord, in trouble have they viſited thee, they poured out a prayer when thy chaſtening was upon them. Grace acted little in that people till ſenſe was touched; afflictions quickned them to duty; and the rod of God upon their backs, was a means to ſtir their hearts to God. Before they prayed as if they did not pray, then they prayed as if they did nothing but pray, or had nothing to do but to pray. Lord, in trouble they have viſited thee: God had little of their company, few of their viſits, till he viſited them; he had ſcarce drops of prayer, when they had ſhowers of mercy: But when the Lords chaſtning hand was upon them, they poured out ſhowers of prayer. Now as trouble occaſions a godly man to pray much, and the ſtraits which God ſendeth him, ſend him to God with a more enlarged heart; ſo trouble will compel them to pray who ſeldom uſe to pray at all, and never delight at all to pray. When nature ſuffers, meer natural men will cry to God, the groſs hypocrite will then call upon God, much more the refined, or fine-ſpun hypocrite; They who never made God their choice, will ſometimes make him their refuge.

Thirdly, Obſerve, A wicked man will not only pray in trouble, but he will pray earneſtly.

His prayer may amount to a cry. When Moſes was in that great ſtreight, he did no more as to the outward act, he did but cry to the Lord. Hypocrites will do ſo too (1 Kings 18.28.) It is ſaid of Baals Prieſts that they cryed; They cryed loud, and cut themſelves after their manner with knives, and lancers, till the blood guſhed out upon them; ſee how vehement they were in their ſuperſtitious devotion, they cryed, O Baal, hear us, they cryed from morning until noon; an hypocrite will do all that a godly man doth, as to the outſide of it, he will pray and pray aloud, he will cry and cry aloud; ſo far as prayer is a bodily exerciſe he will go; yea ſo far as prayer is an exerciſe of the ſoul, with reſpect to bodily or ſelfiſh ends, he will go too, and that with earneſtneſs. Want of outward good, and fear of evil, will make the worſt of men beſtir themſelves. The Prophet brings in the Lord at once diſcovering and diſowning ſuch importunate ſuiters for their bellies (*Hoſ.*7.14.) They cryed and they howled, but (ſaith the Lord) they have not cryed unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds; with what then did they cry and howl, if not with their hearts? the ſame verſe reſolves us, that they cryed with their bodies, for it follows, they aſſemble themſelves for corn and for wine, and they rebel againſt me. Here's the true Character of a hypocrite; Firſt, He ſeeks God for the loaves; Secondly, He prayeth, and ſinneth; he ſeeketh the favour of God, but rebels againſt the will of God; thus he runs his round of praying and ſeeking, of ſinning and rebelling; he may be very earneſt in the two former, but is moſt earneſt in the latter.

Fourthly, Note, It is tronble chiefly, if not only, which moves a hypocrite to pray.

A day of trouble is not only the ſpecial time when an hypocrite prayeth, but it is, upon the matter, the only time. Trouble is that ſpecial time wherein a godly man prayeth; Is any one afflicted? let him pray (Jam. 5.13.) yet he prays at all times; he prays not only becauſe he hath need to pray, but becauſe he loves to pray, and finds ſweetneſs in the act as well as in the anſwer or iſſue. But a carnal heart hath no mind to the duty, but when he is goaded on by trouble, or driven by neceſſity; and then his mind is more upon the ſupply of his neceſſity, then upon the right and holy performance of the duty. A good heart prayeth in trouble: but when trouble only makes us pray, that is an argument of an evil heart (*Pſal.*32.6.) For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, in a time when thou mayeſt be found; or, in a finding time. But what means the Pſalmiſt when he ſaith, For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee; What is this, For this? I anſwer, It may refer either to the mercy already ſhewed him in the forgiveneſs of his ſin, mentioned in the former verſe, or to his protection in, and deliverance from danger, promiſed in the latter end of this; For this, ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, in a time when thou mayeſt be found: Surely in the floods of great waters they ſhall not come nigh unto him; that is, theſe floods ſhall not, theſe floods of great waters are great afflictions and tribulations, which is a frequent alluſion in Scripture (Pſal. 69.2.) I am come into deep waters (of trouble) where the floods (of ſorrow and tribulation) overflow me; and again (verſ. 15.) Let not the water-flood (that is, violent afflictions) over-flow me. When theſe floods of great waters are up and threaten to ſweep us away, then is a time, wherein the godly man pours out floods of prayers and tears to God for help; But the ſprings and ſtreams of prayer are not dried up in him in the faireſt day and warmeſt Sun-ſhine of outward peace and proſperity. He prayeth in ſickneſs, and ſo he doth in health; he prayeth in poverty, and ſo he doth in riches; He prayeth in a time of darkneſs, and ſo he doth when the candle of God ſhineth upon his head, and he waſheth his footſteps with butter. He ſeeks relief by prayer in bad times, and prayer is a refreſhing to him in the beſt times. As for the hypocrite, till trouble is upon him, God heareth not of him, he doth not pray that he may do an honour to God, and ſhew his love to God, or becauſe he rejoyceth in communion with God, but becauſe he would get off his burthen, and be at eaſe; for this he prayeth, and prayeth hard. Pharaoh prayed, and he begged others to pray for him when he was in trouble, (*Exod.*8.8.) Then Pharaoh called for Moſes and Aaron, and ſaid, Intreat the Lord, that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people, and I will let the people go, that they may do ſacrifice unto the Lord. O take away the frogs from me; they troubled him, but he ſaid not, O take away my hard heart from me; that troubled him not. And again, we have him in the ſame tune, (Chap. 10.17.) Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my ſin only this once, and intreat the Lord your God that he may take away from me this death only. O this death; Himſelf prayed, and beſought Moſes to pray alſo; but, what was it for? what moved him to pray? It was, that death might be removed, not ſin, or if he prayed that ſin might be removed, it was only as to the puniſhment of it, not as to the pollution of it. When Peter ſpake thoſe bitter words to Simon Magus, telling him he was in the Gall of bitterneſs, (Act. 8. 24.) Tnen Simon anſwered and ſaid, pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of theſe things which ye have ſpoken, come upon me. He did not beg their prayers that he might be delivered from his ſinful ſtate, from the gall of bitterneſs, and the bond of iniquity, in which Peter told him he then was, but that he might be delivered from that miſerable ſtate in which he feared ſhortly to be; pray that none of theſe things which ye have ſpoken come upon me. The heart of the hypocrite is chiefly drawn out to prayer in two caſes: Firſt, To prevent trouble threatned, as Simon Magus, O pray that none of theſe things may come upon me; Secondly, To get off, or out of trouble inflicted, as Pharoah, O pray, that theſe frogs, this death may be taken away. We muſt pray, and that earneſtly, when trouble cometh, but we muſt not defer prayer, no nor earneſt prayer till trouble cometh. A godly man looks upon trouble as the occaſion of prayer, but the hypocrite, as the cauſe of it.

Fifthly, Obſerve, God doth not regard nor anſwer the prayer of an hypocrite, no not in trouble.

As wicked men do every thing againſt the godly, ſo every thing with God, but prevail. They may pray as Jacob did in his troubles, but they ſhall not be Iſraels, Princes and prevailers with God in prayer as Jacob was; God will not hear their cry when trouble cometh, though they come to him in trouble. But ſome may ſay, how then doth the Lord anſwer his own promiſe? (Pſal. 50. 15.) Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me. And again (Iſa. 65. 24.) Before they call I will anſwer, and while they are yet ſpeaking I will hear. If the Lord hath promiſed to hear before we call, will he not hear when we call? I anſwer, God is true to his own promiſe of hearing prayer, but he never promiſed to hear the prayer of the hypocrite. He hath promiſed to hear prayer; but firſt, it is the prayer of the upright, (Prov. 15. 8.) The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight. The blind man could ſay, Now we know that God heareth not ſinners; but if any man be a worſhipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth, (Joh. 9. 31.) But ſome may ſay, doth not God hear ſinners? why, whom doth he hear then? if he hear not ſinners, he muſt hear none; for all are ſinners. I anſwer, God heareth not ſinners, that is, ſuch as delight in ſin, and live in a ſtate of ſin, eſpecially when ſuch pretend highly to holineſs and the wayes of God as moſt hypocrites do. All perſons unregenerate are ſinners in the ſence of that Scripture, and ſo God may be ſaid, not to hear any of them; but hypocrites are the worſt of ſinners, for they not only have ſin in them, and are in ſin, but live in ſin, and love their ſin, while they pretend love unto God; While they pray, they regard iniquity in their heart; and of ſuch David ſaith, God will not hear their prayer, yea he puts the caſe, not in a ſecond or third, but in his own perſon. (Pſal. 66. 18.) If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. It is poſſible for a godly man, a David, under temptation, to ſhew ſo much countenance to this or that iniquity, as may juſtly be interpreted a regarding of it in his heart; and when he doth ſo, even he may have his prayer return'd with a preſent ſlight inſtead of a grant; yet I conceive that ſuppoſition is rather put to ſhew the certainty of the thing, that God will not hear the prayer of ſuch as regard iniquity in their hearts, then to ſhew that David or any godly man may regard iniquity in his heart. As when he ſaith (Pſal. 46. 2.) We will not fear, though the earth be removed; It doth not ſuppoſe, the removing of the earth, but is a ſtrong proof, they ſhould not fear; So when David ſaith, If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. The ſuppoſition doth only give a ſtronger proof, that God will not hear their prayers, who regard iniquity in their hearts: And to do ſo is the very ſpirit of hypocriſie. The hypocrite ever regards iniquity in his heart, what profeſſious ſoever he may make, or how bitterly ſoever he may ſpeak againſt it with his mouth; though he complain againſt ſin, yet he complieth with it; though he diſclaim it in words, yet his ſoul cleaveth to and cloſeth with it, therefore God will not hear his prayer. The Lord hath not promiſed to be nigh unto them in the things they call upon him for, whoſe hearts are far from him, and falſe to him in the things which he commands and requireth of them. The promiſe runs in this tenour; The Lord is nigh to all that call npou him, to all that call upon him in truth, (Pſal. 145. 18.) And that a twofold truth; Firſt, According to the truth of his rule; Secondly, In the truth of their own hearts. The latter part of the verſe is a correction of, or gives direction about the former; As if the Pſalmiſt had ſaid, when I ſay, the Lord is nigh to all that call upon him, my meaning is, he is nigh, not to all that call upon him any how, or in any manner, but to all that call upon him in truth; and indeed others do not, truly, call upon God at all. Secondly, The Lord hath promiſed to hear prayer, but whoſe prayer? the prayer of a believer; now an hypocrite hath no faith, he hath much preſumption, but no faith; it is an eaſie matter to believe, beſide the promiſe, or without a promiſe, (as every hypocrite doth) but it is a hard matter to believe upon, or in the promiſe. And the Apoſtle concludes, (Heb. 11. 6.) that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, for he that cometh to God (in prayer) muſt believe, that God is, and that he is a rewarder of all them that diligently ſeek him. Whatſoever ye ſhall ask in prayer believing (ſaith Chriſt, Mat. 21. 22.) ye ſhall receive; and his meaning is, that without believing, we ſhall receive nothing. They who pray believing, ask according to the will of God, both for matter and manner, and are therefore heard: But they who pray preſuming, ask contrary to the will of God, either for the matter or the manner, and therefore are not heard. Thirdly, God hath promiſed to hear prayer, but whoſe prayer? the prayer of the humble, of the broken-hearted, and contrite, (Pſal. 51. 17.) He that hath not faith, hath nothing to get a mercy with, and he that hath not a broken heart, hath nothing to put a mercy in. Now the hypocrites heart is a proud and an unbroken heart, therefore his prayer is not under a promiſe to be heard. Fourthly, The Lord promiſeth to hear prayer, but whoſe prayer? it is the prayer of a willing people, or of ſuch whoſe prayer is a free-will-offering. David prayeth (Pſal. 119. 108.) Accept I beſeech thee, the free-will-offerings of my mouth; that is, thoſe ſupplications which my mouth freely offers. But the hypocrites prayer is not a free-will-offering, he prayes not becauſe he is free to the duty of prayer, but becauſe he would be freed from trouble by prayer. He prayeth only to have his turn ſerved, or to get an alms. Now that prayer which is not a free-will-offering, is not accepted of the Lord. From the induction of theſe particulars (and many more might be added) it appears, that the hypocrites prayer is unheard, and unanſwered, not becauſe God doth in the leaſt forget or fail in his promiſe of hearing prayer, but becauſe the hypocrites prayer comes not into the account and qualification of thoſe prayers which God hath promiſed to hear and anſwer. God only hears the prayer of the upright, of the believing, of the broken hearted, of the willing; the hypocrites prayer is none of theſe, and therefore is not under a promiſe to be heard. Yea the Scripture thunders againſt him, when he ſeems to thunder to heaven in prayer: David ſpeaks thus (Pſal. 18. 40, 41.) Thou haſt given me the necks of mine enemies, that I might deſtroy them that hate me; They cryed, but there was none to ſave them; and leſt we ſhould think they cryed to falſe gods, or knockt at a wrong door for help, he adds, They cryed, even to the Lord, but he anſwered them not; and what follows? Then did I beat them ſmall as the duſt before the wind: I did caſt them out as the dirt in the ſtreets, that is, notwithſtanding all their crying and praying for favour, the Lord declared his higheſt diſpleaſure againſt them, and gave them no anſwer but by giving them over to deſtruction. Further the Lord is ſo far from accepting ſuch prayers, that he hath caſt them not only as ſinful but a ſin; When he ſhall be judged, let him be condemned: and let his prayer become ſin, (Pſal. 109. 7.) The prayer of the hypocrite is ſin formally, and it is ſin in the effect; that is, in ſtead of getting any good by it, he gets hurt, and the Lord in ſtead of helping him becauſe he prayeth, puniſheth him becauſe of the ſinfu'neſs of his prayers. Thus his prayer becomes ſin to him, becauſe he receives no more reſpect from God, when he prayes, then when he ſins. And ſin doth not only mingle with his prayer (as it doth with the prayers of the holieſt) but his prayer is nothing elſe but a mixture or mingle-mangle (as we ſpeak) of many ſins. The Spirit in wonderful ſtrains of holy Eloquence proſecutes this point againſt hypocrites (Prov. 1. 27,28.) When your fear cometh as deſolation, and your deſtruction cometh as a whirl-wind; when diſtreſs and anguiſh cometh upon you: then ſhall they call upon me, but I will not anſwer; they ſhall ſeek me early, but they ſhall not find me; for that they hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the Lord. Here is calling without anſwering, and early ſeeking without finding. And hath not the Lord reaſon to take no knowledge of them calling, who hated the knowledge of him commanding; and not to deliver them from their fears, who did not chuſe his fear? Is it not juſt that when God calls to duty, and man will not anſwer by obeying him, that man ſhould call in miſery, and God not anſwer by relieving him? Again (Iſai. 1. 15.) When you ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood. (Jer. 14.12.) When they faſt, I will not hear their cry. (Ezek. 8. 18.) Though they cry in mine ears with a loud voyce, yet will I not hear them. Once more, (Mic. 2. 4.) Then ſhall they cry unto the Lord, and he will not anſwer them, he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themſelves ill in their doings. Thus in Scripture all along we find nothing but Negatives and denials upon the prayers of the wicked. They who behave themſelves ill in their doings, do in vain ask or expect good from God in the time of their ſufferings. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much (James 5. 16.) But how fervent ſoever the prayer of a wicked man is, it is neither effectual nor availing. A hypocrite may work hard in prayer, but his prayer works not.

Sixthly, The deſign of the whole verſe, being to ſhew the miſerable condition of an hypocrite upon this ſingle account, becauſe God will not hear him in his miſery, Will God hear his cry, when trouble comes upon him?

Obſerve, Not to have prayers heard in trouble, is the worſt of all troubles.

It is worſe then all the evils that take hold of us, that our prayers for the removing of evil are rejected. This is the worſt of a wicked mans bad eſtate, the Lord will not hear him when he cryes. And this is the beſt of the Saints good eſtate, that the Lord is ready to hear their cry. That which Moſes ſpake, as the priviledge and happineſs of the Jewiſh Nation in general, is true of every true Iſraelite in particular, (Deut. 4. 7.) What Nation is there ſo great, who hath God ſo nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is, in all things that we call upon him for? this was a peculiar mercy to them above all Nations, that God was nigh unto them in all things that they called unto him for; and this is the happineſs of every true Iſraelite, of every Jew in the Spirit, God is nigh unto him in all the things that he cryeth unto him for; and God is then neareſt to him when trouble is nigh at hand. It ſets the heart above all dangers, yea it makes our very danger a ſafety to us, to have an aſſurance that God will be with us, in danger, for the asking. So the Apoſtle (1 John 5. 14.) This is our confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. This is the confidence of Saints in a double notion. Firſt, It is their confidence, or they are as confident as confidence it ſelf, that God will hear them in trouble; Secondly, That God will hear them, makes them as confident as confidence it ſelf in the midſt of troubles. 'Tis reckoned a happineſs among men (and the confidence of man ariſeth high upon it) to have the ear of Princes, that whatever we ask we ſhall be heard in it by thoſe in power. To have audience and acceptance with great men, is a great priviledge among men; no man can tell what he hath got, when he hath gotten a great Kings ear; how much more is this true, when we have got the ear of God, who is the King of Kings? Davids great deſire was (Pſal. 19. 14.) Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy ſight, O Lord my ſtrength and my redeemer. When thoſe words of our mouthes which flow from the meditation of our hearts are acceptable in the ſight of God, what can we want, while we have a heart to meditate upon the fulneſs of God, or a mouth to expreſs our own wants? If a man had all that in his hand which this world could afford him, and God ſhould ſay, I will not hear thee, his all were nothing; if he had riches and honour and pleaſure, if he were a petty god upon the earth, yet if he cannot be heard in heaven, he may ſay as Haman (after the boaſt of all his greatneſs at Court, and riches at home) becauſe Mordecai the Jew ſate in the kings gate, and would not bow to him, what doth all this avail him? The meaneſt and moſt afflicted believer is better then he, becauſe God heareth him. We may quickly ſee the outſide, the end of all perfection, (Pſal. 119. 96.) that is, of all worldly perfections. But who knows what this may produce and bring forth, that God doth hear us and accept us, and is ready when we come with petitions to give an anſwer? As the Spirit of prayer is the moſt excellent gift, ſo the hearing of prayer is the moſt comfortable gift. Though we lie among the pots, yet if God hear us, all's well; then ſhall we be as the wings of a Dove covered with ſilver, and her feathers with yellow gold, (Pſal. 68. 13.) Holy deſires and prayers are the wings of the ſoul, by which we mount (as doves) and aſcend in Spirit unto God; and if the Lord hear and grant thoſe deſires and prayers, then our wings, are indeed ſilver'd and gilded over, richly laden with bleſſings and with mercies. Will God hear our cry in trouble? is at beſt a heart-troubling word. God will hear our cry in trouble, is a heart-reviving and quickning word. God will not hear our cry in trouble, is a heart-breaking, a killing word; and that's the hypocrites word. Will God hear his cry, when trouble cometh upon him? He will not.

We have ſeen in verſ. 9. what God will not do for the hypocrite; now we ſhall ſee what the hypocrite will not do in reference to God.

Verſ. 10. Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? Will he alwayes call upon God?

He will cry unto God, but will he delight himſelf in God: he will cry unto God ſometimes, but will he alwayes call upon God? He may be violent in duty, but he is not conſtant. Thus the hypocrite fails and falls ſhort.

Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty?

The word here tranſlated to delight, as alſo what it is to delight our ſelves in any perſon or thing, was opened at verſ. 26. of Chap. 22. of this Book, and therefore I paſs it here. Mr. Broughton reads the Text thus, and ſo do ſome others, not Will he, But can he delight himſelf in the Almighty? As if the ſence were, it is a thing impoſſible that he ſhould. To delight in God is one of the higheſt exerciſes of grace; and how can he do that, who hath no grace at all. The hypocrite cannot find comfort in God, when the world affords him none, as a godly man can.

Num poterit in omnipotente delectari? Vulg.

We render well, Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? As if he had ſaid, As the Almighty will not grant his requeſt, nor give him in his delight, that is, the thing which he deſired, ſo he hath no will, no mind at all to delight in the Almighty. The proper matter of delight is to have what we deſire, and to enjoy what we have. The hypocrite hath no pure deſire to have or enjoy God, but his deſire is to have and enjoy ſomewhat from God; and when once he perceives that he cannot obtain that from God which he delights in, he hath no delight at all in God. Deſire is love in motion, and delight is love at reſt. The hypocrites will doth not reſt in God, but runs out many wayes after creatures; after them he will go, and therefore he hath no will to delight in God, which is to reſt in God, when God denies him the creature, which he ſo much deſired to reſt in, as will appear further, in the Obſervations. Only, before I come at them, we may take notice of the Title by which God is here expreſſed, as not delighted in by the hypocrite. Will he delight himſelf

Præſtat ut hujuſmodi delectatio ad rē ipſam referatur & preces obtentas votaque conſequuta: nam hæc eſt propria delectationis materia, ſi cum habeas, quæ deſideraveris deſideratis perfruaris. Pined.

In the Almighty; or, upon the Almighty?

This Name of God Shaddai, imports both his power and his goodneſs. God is a full ſtore-houſe, or a moſt plentiful Spring of all good to his people, ready to conveigh and give out himſelf for the ſupply of all their needs. He is, and hath every thing which may draw out deſire,

and render him (as was ſaid of Titus Veſpatian, but is infinitely more true of God) The delights of Mankind; yet there are but few among the ſons of men, whoſe deſires and delights meet and center in God. And ſuch is the falſeneſs of the hypocrites heart, that though he ſeem to make much love to God, yet this Negative interrogation is true of him; Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty?

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, They who are godly indeed, delight in God.

Yea they delight in nothing but God, or that which carrieth the appearance, or bears the image and impreſſion of God upon it. Thus they delight in the word of God, in the works of God, whether of creation or providence, in the wayes and ordinances of God, in the ſervants and people of God, in whom David (as a type of Chriſt) ſaid (Pſal. 16.2.) is all my delight; and all becauſe in theſe perſons and in theſe things the inviſible things of God, his power and wiſdom, his holineſs and goodneſs are ſeen, and as it were, made viſible. While Moſes calls the people of Iſrael to delight in the good things of God, he teacheth them to terminate all their delight in the Lord himſelf, (*Deut.*12.7. and 18.verſes compared) And there ye ſhall eat before the Lord your God, and ye ſhall rejoyce in all that you put your hands unto, ye and your houſholds, wherein the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee. But thou muſt eat them before the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe, thou, and thy ſon, and thy daughter, and thy man-ſervant, and thy maid-ſervant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou ſhalt rejoyce before the Lord thy God in all that thou putteſt thy hand unto. As if he had ſaid, When thou ſhalt rejoyce in all that thou putteſt thy hands unto, be ſure that thy rejoycing be before the Lord, that is, in a ſence of the preſence of the Lord with thee, who hath bleſſed thee, and cauſed thee to proſper in all that thou haſt put thy hand unto. Thus Paul enjoyns the Philippians (Phil. 3.1.) Finally my brethren, rejoyce in the Lord: and (Chap. 4.4.) rejoyce in the Lord alway; and again, I ſay, rejoyce. This joy or delight in the Lord belongs to the firſt Commandment; and therefore it is called natural worſhip, (not natural, as natural is oppoſed to ſpiritual, but as natural is oppoſed to formal or inſtituted worſhip) becauſe this delight is a worſhip which we were to give unto God, conſidered in himſelf, though he had not given any direction about it, as he hath done about his external worſhip. We know not in what particular form God will be worſhipped, till he declares his own will about it; and though we ought alwayes to be willing to worſhip God, yet we muſt not give him a will-worſhip. But if we know no more of God, then that he is, we may know that we ought to worſhip him by delighting in him, for that is a natural ſequel from the knowledge of him. And ſo to fear God, to truſt upon him, to believe in him, are acts of worſhip, which the very diſcoveries of God call us unto, though God had never publiſhed a law requiring any ſuch worſhip. But how little of this pure ſpiritual worſhip hath God in the world? how few are there that delight in God? Some cannot take any delight at all, if there be but a mention of God; to diſcourſe of God, puts them into a fit of Melancholy; they muſt put God out of the company, before they can be merry or rejoyce. They like not to retain God in their knowledge, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the old Gentiles, Rom. 1.28.) and therefore the knowledge of God cannot at all be delightful to them. Yea how little of this internal and moſt ſpiritual worſhip hath God from his own people? how little are they in thinking and ſpeaking of him with delight? How ſeldom are they longing to enjoy him? how ſeldom rejoycing in the enjoyment of him? though every one, who is truly godly doth truly delight in God, yet it is to be charged upon moſt godly men, that they are not filled with thoſe delights. 'Tis rare to find Davids ſpirit, who could ſay, (Pſal. 63.1.) O God, thou art my God, early will I ſeek thee, my ſoul thirſteth for thee, my fleſh longeth for thee, to ſee thy power and thy glory, ſo as I have ſeen it in the Sanctuary. They who have ſeen and taſted how gracious the Lord is, will be calling for more ſuch ſights and taſts; and the more they have had of thoſe ſights and taſts, the more they will deſire them. What David had ſeen of God in the Sanctuary, he could not but deſire to ſee again. And how doth he promiſe himſelf all delightful ſatisfaction in God, could he but feed upon him in his thoughts, (verſ. 4, 5. of the ſame Pſalm) My ſoul ſhall be ſatisfied with marrow and fatneſs, and my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyful lips; when I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night Watches. As it is the property of a godly man to delight in God, ſo he doth promiſe, yea aſſure himſelf of more delights in God, could he but get and keep his heart more to the meditation of God.

Secondly, Obſerve, A hypocrite doth not, will not, cannot truly delight in God.

He doth not, becauſe he is carnal, and filled with the wiſdom of the fleſh, and ſo with deſires after and delights in fleſhly things. And until this fleſhly mind, with which he is vainly puft up, and which (in the very wiſdom of it) is enmity againſt God, he neither will nor can delight in God. The Lord ſaith of the hypocritical Jewes (*Iſa.*58.2.) They ſeek me daily, and delight to know my wayes, as a Nation that did righteouſneſs, &c. A hypocrite may imitate thoſe who delight in God and his wayes, but he hath no real delight in either. The delight which he hath in worldly things, is ſeldom, if at all, hearty; for (as Solomon ſpeaks, Prov. 14.13.) In laughter his heart is ſorrowful, and the end of ſuch mirth is heavineſs. As there is a worm at the root of his pleaſant gourd, which kills it, and cauſeth it to wither: ſo there is a worm, a gnawing worm at his heart oftentimes, which makes his pleaſures wither, while his gourd is green and flouriſhing. And ſurely if the hypocrites delight in the beſt of his temporal enjoyments be ſcarcely hearty, how heartleſs is his delight in ſpirituals? Till the affections are made ſpiritual, there is no affection to things that are ſpiritual. So then at beſt, the hypocrite who takes but a poor delight in any thing, takes only a hypocritical delight in the beſt things of God, and in God who is beſt of all.

Hypocrita neq; deum neq; divina habet in deliciis.

For, Firſt, he hath no hope in God, therefore no delight in God. He that is without hope, is without God; and how can he have delight in God, who is without God? The hypocrite is without any true hope at any time, and many times he is without ſo much as a ſhew or ſhadow of hope. His hope (like his goodneſs) is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. And if the hope deferred maketh the heart ſick, ſurely when hope in God is quite departed and gone, the heart cannot delight in God. There is no condition doth ſo much eſtrange the heart from God, as a hopeleſs condition, (*Jer.*18.12.) And they ſaid there is no hope, (what will they do then? even run as far from God as they can; ſo it follows in the ſame place) But we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart.

Secondly, The hypocrite hath no ſutableneſs in his heart to God, therefore no delight in God. There muſt be ſome likeneſs between the faculty and the object, elſe there can be no delight in any kind whatſoever. Now what likeneſs is there between light and darkneſs, between good and evil, between a holy God and an unholy heart, between the true, the faithful God, and a falſe-hearted hypocrite?

Thirdly, The hypocrites delight is ſo carried out to other things, the ſtreams of it are divided into ſo many channels, that he hath none to ſpare for God; his delight runs to riches, to gold and ſilver; his delight runs to pleaſure, to the fat and ſweet of the creature; his delight runs to honour, to dignities and preferments among men; he delights in friends, yea he delights in ſin and wickedneſs. All theſe ſteal away his delight from God; and put his mouth out of taſt as to taſting that the Lord is gracious, or how gracious the Lord is. As Chriſt expoſtulates the matter ſharply and chidingly with the hypocritical Jews, (John 5.44.) How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and ſeek not the honour that cometh from God only? So we may expoſtulate with the whole kind of hypocrites: How can ye delight in the Almighty, who take up your delights in the creature, and ſeek not, nor are at all ſatisfied with thoſe delights that are in and come from God only? If we delight not in God only, we delight not in God at all. As we cannot ſerve, ſo we cannot delight in God and in Mammon; for if we love the one, we will hate the other, and if we delight in the one, we ſhall deſpiſe the other. As God deſpiſeth thoſe who delight in the creature, ſo they who delight in the creature, will deſpiſe God; And if ſuch ſay they do not, yet God knows they do deſpiſe him, and doth enterpret all ſuch pleaſure taken in the creature, a contempt of himſelf. And hence Chriſt denounceth, Wo unto them that laugh now (Luke 6. 25.) That is, who laugh and rejoyce in worldly enjoyments, becauſe ſuch joy and laughter is inconſiſtent with joy in God. The creature may be the (medium or)means of our delight,but God only muſt be the object of it, or our delight may paſs through the creature, but it muſt determine in God alone.

Again, Compare the former verſe, (Will God hear his cry, when trouble cometh upon him,) with this, Will he alwayes delight himſelf in the Almighty?

Obſerve, Unleſs the hypocrite get what he asks of God he takes no delight in God.

The Pſalmiſt calls all the prayers of hypocritical perſons, flatteries (Pſal. 78. 36.) When he ſlew them they ſought him, and they returned and enquired early after God, and they remembred that God was their rock, and the high God their redeemer, (that is, they told God in prayer that he was their rock, &c.) Nevertheleſs, they did but flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongue, for their heart was not right with him. That is, they had no true love to, nor delight in God, only they would fain have got help from him, and deliverance from their troubles. A flatterer doth not delight in the perſon flattered, but in that which he hopes to obtain of him by flattery.And as their hypocriſie did break out in their departures and backſlidings from God, as ſoon as they were eaſed of their fears, ſo the hypocriſie of others breaks out in their departure from God, when they cannot get their deſires.The heart of a ſincere man is of another frame and temper; for though God delay, yea deny him an anſwer in that he prayeth for, yet he delighteth in him. He cryeth to the Lord in ſickneſs, in poverty, in ſtraits, and the Lord ſometimes lets him lie ſick, and poor, and ſtraitned, and gives him no relief; yet he delights and comforts himſelf in God, yea, God is better to him then that he asks at the hand of God, and therefore he takes pleaſure in communion with God, though God be not pleaſed to mend his condition. We may well ſuppoſe that the Prophet Habakkuk prayed hard for the keeping off that ſore judgment of famine; yet in caſe famine ſhould devour all, and ſo his prayer not granted, yet his heart towards God was the ſame, and his aſſurance ſtrong, that his enjoyment of God alone, would be as ſweet to him, as in the greateſt plenty of creature-enjoyments. (Habak. 3. 17.) Although the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the Vines: the labour of the Olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat: the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls; yet will I rejoyce in the Lord: I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. A ſincere heart can feaſt in God, while he is ſtarving in the creature; God is as good to him without the world as with it; And whatſoever good he asks of God, God is better to him then what he asks, except when he asks God himſelf. None pray purely to God, but they who can reſt ſatisfied with God, though God doth not ſatisfie their deſires in granting what they pray for.

Laſtly, We may take theſe words, Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? as a reaſon why the hypocrites cry is not heard; God doth not hear his prayer, becauſe he hath no delight in God; he would have the mercies of God, but he cares not for the God of his mercies, and ſo he hath neither.

Hence Obſerve, He that doth not delight in God, is not heard of God.

The Lord can eaſily diſtinguiſh between a flatterer and an humble petitioner, He knows who come to him for his, or becauſe they know not what to do without him; and who come to him for himſelf, and becauſe they love to be with him. (Pſal. 37. 4.) Delight thy ſelf alſo in the Lord, and he ſhall give thee the deſires of thine heart; As if David had ſaid, Would you have the deſires of your heart given in, and your prayer granted? when you ask of God, delight your ſelves in God, and you have your deſires. This the Pſalmiſt affirms, not only becauſe God in whom the ſoul delights, is more then all that we can deſire beſide, but becauſe they who truly delight in God, are in the readieſt way to receive all that they deſire beſides. Every man delights in the things he heartily asks for; how glad would they be of riches, who being poor, ask for riches? How glad would they be of health, who being ſick, pray for health? &c. But every godly man delights more in God of whom he asks, then in that which he asks of God; And therefore as God gives himſelf, ſo that which he deſires too. It is the delight of God to hear thoſe that delight in him; And though Gods delighting in us, is indeed the cauſe of his granting our deſires, yet it is our duty as well as our intereſt to delight in God, that we may have our deſires granted. When God ſees that we rejoyce more in this, that he is our God, then in all things elſe that can be given us, then is he ready to give us all things elſe. The Lord was ſo well-pleaſed with Solomons asking, when he asked a wiſe and an underſtanding heart to govern that great people, the Lord gave him not only what he asked, but what he asked not, riches and honour, (1 King. 3. 11, 12, 13.) Surely then the Lord is ſo well-pleaſed with thoſe who ask and earneſtly deſire the enjoyment of himſelf, that he cannot withhold from them any lawful enjoyment, which is good for them, and deſired by them.

Now as the hypocrite, not delighting in God, is not heard when he calls, ſo becauſe he delighteth not in God, he will not be long heard calling, as is ſhewed in the cloſe of this verſe.

Will he alwayes call upon God?

The hypocrite prayeth, but he doth not hold out or perſevere in prayer. The Original words, which we tranſlate alwayes, are, in all time, that is, in all the due times and ſeaſons of prayer; as if Job had ſaid, Will the hypocrite call upon God as often as the providences of God and his own duty call him to pray? They pray alwayes, who pray when they ought,or as often and as long as they ought. Thus the hypocrite will not alwayes call upon God; He will not take his times and ſeaſons to begin, nor will he continue in it as he ought when he hath begun. We may he ſaid to do that always, which we do as often as we are called, and which we are always ready and willing to do, though not called.

בכל־עת in omni tempore עת ſignificat tempus opportunū ſeu Idoneum ut Græcis χαιρὸς.

Hence Note, Firſt, From the Connection.

Unleſs we are in a frame to pray always, God will not hear us at all.

That is, unleſs we would always be in ſuch a frame, The holieſt man living may have his heart out of order, but he loves to have it always in order and ready for every good word and work; He would always be in a praying frame, and he actually prayeth in time of proſperity, as well as in time of adverſity, in time of peace, as well as in time of trouble, when all is well with him, as well as when he is at the worſt. Unleſs our ſpirit be for prayer at all times, we make God our refuge only, not our choice, and are as they who would make uſe of a friend, but care not at all to enjoy him. And will God hear ſuch, when he ſees he ſhould never hear of them, unleſs compelled to ask by neceſſity. It is true, That God hears his people in many caſes before they cry, he prevents prayer, yet 'tis as true, God hears not any, unleſs they pray always, unleſs they pray continually. And he that did ever pray (I do not ſay, he that ever ſaid a prayer, or made a prayer, but he that did ever pray indeed, and hath cryed Abba Father, though but once, through the Spirit of Adoption, that man cannot but (in the ſence explained) be always praying.

Secondly, From the words conſidered in themſelves,

Note, It is our duty to call upon God always.

The Text implies this clearly, other Texts ſpeak it plainly. The Lord gives a Parable (Luk. 18.) and this is the ſcope of it, (verſ. 1.) He ſpake a parable unto them, to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint. The Apoſtolical rules are, Pray always, with all prayer and ſupplication in the Spirit (Epheſ. 6. 18.) Pray without ceaſing (1 Theſ. 5. 17.) There are many urgent grounds why prayer muſt be continued,

Firſt, We cannot ſubſiſt a minute without the aſſiſtance of God; for in him we live and move, and have our being, being, (Act. 17. 28.) And as we have our life, motion, and being, ſo the comforts of our life, the guidance of our motions, and our well-being from him. Therefore we muſt alwayes pray, both to acknowledge our dependance, and to receive aſſiſtance from him.

Secondly, We are continually beſieged with evils and temptations, we have enemies about us, either viſible or inviſible, ſeen or unſeen, therefore we have need to pray continually. If we had enemies alwayes in ſight we would pray alwayes: we have unſeen enemies alwayes about us, and theſe are the moſt dangerous enemies, therefore we have more need alwayes to pray, and call in the aid of God againſt them.

Thirdly, We have work to do continually; if we know our duty, we can never be out of work; and what ever we do we are to pray for help in it, and a bleſſing upon it. We riſe early in vain, and labour in vain, unleſs the Lord be with us in all our labours.

Fourthly, We are continually uſing the creature, we uſe food and raiment for the ſupply and ſupport of our earthly tabernacle; therefore we muſt pray continually. What good can the creature do us without God? our bread cannot nouriſh us, nor our cloaths keep us warm, but by a command from him. As every creature of God is good (in it ſelf) ſo it is ſanctified (unto us) by the word of God and prayer (1 Tim. 4. 4, 5.)

Fiſthly, We are often in troubles and afflictions. Now the rule is, Is any one afflicted, let him pray (Jam. 5. 13.) and if we muſt pray as often as we are afflicted, we ſhall have cauſe to be very often praying.

Sixthly, When we are at eaſe and quiet, in health and peace, when the rock pours us out rivers of oyl, and we waſh our footſteps (as Job once did) with butter, even then we have need to pray that our proſperity hurt us not, that we looſe not God in the crowd of creature-comforts, that we kick not againſt him (as Jeſurun once did) while he makes us fat and flouriſhing.

Seventhly, We ſin continually, we ſin (as I may ſay) without ceaſing, often doing that which is ſinful, and ſin alwayes mingling it ſelf with that we do; and therefore we had need to pray continually, to mingle prayer with all we do, both for the pardon of ſin, or of what we do ſinfully, as alſo for power and grace that we may do ſo no more.

Eighthly, We ought continually to gloriſie God, therefore to pray continually; for though God may have glory by any of our actions or duties, yet the duty of prayer is that which gives him the greateſt glory, while we therein acknowledge his Allſufficiency to do what we ask, and his goodneſs in being alwayes ready to do it.

Yet this point is not ſo to be underſtood, as if we ſhould do nothing elſe but pray, as ſome have ignorantly and erroneouſly inferr'd from this, or ſuch like Scriptures; for every man hath or ought to have a calling in this world, wherein as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 7. 24.) He may abide with God; That is, both with the good leave and favour of God, as alſo in a conſtant communion with God, while he walks according to the rule, and in the duty of it. We muſt do nothing without prayer, but we may do many things beſides praying.

Thirdly, Obſerve, (which is implied in the Queſtion, Will he alwayes call upon God?)

A hypocrite will not alwayes call upon God.

You may ſee him ſet out very full of mettle; he ſets out about good duties, as ſome horſes that will ſtand no ground in a morning when they go out, but they tire after an hours riding, they will not travel all the day; ſo a hypocrite may ſet out with a great deal of mettle, but will he pray alwayes? no he will be weary of duty, and throw it up at laſt. And he throws it up upon theſe, upon either of theſe two occaſions; both which we may take notice of, from the Text.

Firſt, When he ſpeeds not in prayer, then he will throw up prayer; when he ſeeth nothing come, he cannot go on; will he continue when there is no anſwer? no appearance of an anſwer? or when God ſeems in his providence to ſpeak contrary to his prayer? will he now perſevere in calling upon God? no, he hath no deſire to duty, when he cannot get what he deſires by duty. It is with him as with ſome draft Horſes, they will draw when the load is coming, but if they feel it not coming, they trample, and will not draw: But take a horſe of a right breed, and put his traces to a tree, to a poſt, he will ſtrain and ſtrain, and die upon the place, though nothing come, before he will give it over. Thus 'tis in this caſe; a godly man though he feel not the petition come for which he asks, whether in ſpirituals or temporals (it may be he hath prayed many a year for ſuch or ſuch a mercy, and cannot get it) yet he will pray ſtill. He knows it is his duty to wait as well as to pray; And though the Lord let him wait long, yet he will pray ſtill, without limiting the Holy One of Iſrael. It ſhews a very gracious heart to be encouraged by the experience we have of the Lords anſwering prayer, to pray ſtill. But it is an argument of a more gracious heart, not to be diſcouraged from continuing in prayer, when we can get no anſwer. This ſpirit of holy courage never lodg'd in the heart of a hypocrite; if God will not do what he prayeth for, he hath done praying.

Secondly, Take the contrary, If the hypocrite ſpeed in prayer, and get what he asks, then alſo he throws up prayer, and will ask no more. If from a ſick-bed he be raiſed to health, he leaves prayer behind him (as it were) ſick a bed; He grows weak in calling upon God, when at his call, God hath given him ſtrength. And thus 'tis in any other inſtance. When he hath got what he had a mind to in prayer, he hath no more mind to pray: whereas a godly man prays after he hath ſped, as he did before; and though he fall not into thoſe troubles again, and ſo is not occaſioned to urge thoſe petitions again, which he did in troubles, yet he cannot live without prayer; becauſe he cannot live out of communion with God. The creature is as the white of an egge taſtleſs to him, unleſs he enjoy God. David ſaith (Pſal. 116. 1, 2.) I love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard my voice and my ſupplication; that is, becauſe he hath granted me that which I ſupplicated to him for: But did this grant of what he had asked, take him off from asking more? The next words ſhew us, what his reſolution was upon that grant, Becauſe he hath enclined his ear unto me, therefore I will call upon him as long as I live. As if he had ſaid, I will never give over praying, foraſmuch as I have been heard in prayer. It is reported of one who alwayes laid a net upon his table when he went to meat, to mind him of his duty, to fiſh for ſouls in his paſtoral care and office (as was pretended, of him, I ſay, it is reported) that when he had attained to high preferment, he laid aſide the uſe of his net at table, and being asked why, anſwered, that he had now got that which he had been fiſhing for. He had catcht his Fiſh, and therefore cared no more for his net. Thus the hypocrite puts away his net of prayer, when once he hath taken the fiſh, the benefit which he deſired and laboured for. In both theſe caſes we may put Jobs Queſtion, Will the hypocrite pray alwayes? If he can get nothing, he ſaith, why ſhould I wait upon God any longer? What profit is it to pray unto him? And if once he get his profit, he ſaith, what need I pray any longer, I have what I would have; and then he either grows remiſs and ſlack in duty, or layes it quite aſide. He never ſought God for himſelf, but himſelf in ſeeking God, and ſo having found what he deſired for himſelf in ſeeking God, he hath no deſire, or but a very cold one, to ſeek God any more. Therefore Si ſuper omnipotente deliciabitur invocabit deum omni tempore. Druſ. Tranſlatio.

Laſtly, Comparing the two parts of the Text (Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty, will he alwayes call upon God? I ſay, comparing theſe) together, we may for concluſion of this verſe, Obſerve, They that delight in God (and they only) will alwayes call upon God, or perſevere to the end in prayer.

The reaſon is, becauſe God is the ſame alwayes without any variableneſs or ſhadow of turning. A ſincere believer ſees he hath as much need of God, when he hath ſupplied all his preſent needs, as he had before. And he knows God is as good, as gracious, as deſireable as ever he was, though he delay or deny the grant of that which he hath deſired; ſo that whatſoever God diſpenſeth or giveth out to him, whether good or evil, bitter or ſweet, dark or light, grief or ſorrow, he ſtill keeps cloſe to God, and will alwayes be making his addreſſes and applications at the throne of Grace. God is ſweeter to him then all the mercies and bleſſings, then all the graces and comforts which he hath given him; And God is exceeding ſweet to him, though he doth not preſently give him the mercies, and the bleſſings, the exerciſe of thoſe graces, and the feeling of thoſe comforts which he hath prayed for.

To cloſe all, We have three things remarkable in theſe two verſes concerning the hypocrite. Firſt, The Hypocrite delights not in God; There's his ſin. Secondly, God hears not the cry of the Hypocrite; That's his miſery. Thirdly, The Hypocrite will not alwayes call upon God; That's both his ſin, and his miſery; It is a great ſin not to call upon God, and none are more miſerable then they who do not call upon him; for their miſery is irremoveable. From all, Job infers, that he was no hypocrite; for though God did not preſently hear him ſo as to deliver him, yet he delighted in the Almighty; and would continue praying to him, and truſting upon him, though he ſhould ſlay him.

VERS. 11, 12, 13.

I will teach you by the hand of God: that which is with the Almighty, will I not conceal.

Behold, all ye your ſelves have ſeen it, why then are ye thus altogether vain?

This is the portion of a wicked man with God, and the heritage of oppreſſors, which they ſhall receive of the Almighty.

THe two former verſes of the Context are a Preface, wherein Job perſwadeth his friends to hearken to what he ſhould further propoſe, both in this Chapter and in the next: and it referreth chiefly to two things, which are the matter of his diſcourſe in both.

Firſt, That though he had all along denied himſelf to be a wicked man becauſe afflicted, yet he did not at all deny that God doth very much afflict wicked men, and often breaks them with temporal judgments.

Secondly, That though Gods proceedings with wicked men are in many things plain and viſible, yet take them altogether, and they are above the reach of any humane underſtanding, this he chiefly inſiſts upon Chap. 28.

Verſ. 11. I will teach you by the hand of God.

ירה Jecit projecit, jaculatus fuit, per metaphoram rigavit etiã & indicavit, docuit, quod doctrina quaſi inſtillatur animis diſcentium & minutatim indatur.

The word which we render to teach, hath a threefold ſignification in Scripture.

Firſt, Properly it ſignifies to caſt, or throw a thing out of the hand, to throw a dart, or a ſtone, and to caſt a lot.

Secondly, It ſignifies to rain; and the reaſon of it is, becauſe rain is caſt out of the clouds, and (as it were) ſhot down from heaven upon the earth, to moiſten and to make it fruitful.

Thirdly, By a metaphor, and in alluſion to both the former, the word ſignifies (as we tranſlate it here) to teach: Right teaching, is a caſting or darting of leſſons and wholeſome truths into the mind. It is alſo a raining, a diſtilling, a dropping of inſtructions into the underſtanding, from whence they ſoak into the will and affections; and ſo thoſe who receive them are made fruitful in practice. When Moſes was about to make his laſt or dying Sermon to Iſrael, he inſiſts much upon this metaphor, My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain, and my ſpeech ſhall diſtil as the dew, as the ſmall rain upon the tender herbs, and as the ſhowers upon the graſs, (Deut. 32. 2.) And in Chap. 36. of this book, Elihu preferring the teachings of God above all teachings, ſaith, Who teacheth like him? namely, like God; none teacheth ſo powerfully, ſo effectually as God; yea, there's no efficacy or power in any teaching but in the teaching of God. The Hebrew is, who raineth like him? No man ever poured out ſuch rains or diſtilled ſuch dews of holy doctrine as God doth; He with a word can make that heart and the life which before was as a dry heath or barren wilderneſs, to bud or bloſſom like Eden, to ſpring like a watered garden. But though it be true which Elihu ſaid, that no man can teach or rain down like God, yet man muſt venture and do his part; He may ſay to his brother or friend, as Job here did, I will teach (or drop doctrine upon) you by the hand of God.

Hence Note, It is a duty to teach thoſe who are ignorant and out of the way.

It is a duty to learn, but it is a higher duty to teach; it is good to receive Inſtruction, but it is better to give it. David having prayed earneſtly that God would give him a new experience of his free-grace in the pardon of his ſin, promiſeth (Pſal. 51. 13.) Then will I teach tranſgreſſors thy wayes, and ſinners ſhall be converted unto thee; That is, I will do my utmoſt and take all opportunities for the converſion of ſinners. Chriſt ſaith to Peter (Luk. 22. 32) When thou art converted ſtrengthen thy brethren; ſtrengthen them by inſtruction, and ſtrengthen them with conſolation, even with thoſe comforts wherewith thou waſt comforted in thy converſion. He ſpeaks not of his firſt Converſion, Peter was converted long before from a ſtate of ſin, but he ſpeaks of his renewed converſion from a ſpecial act of ſin. When thou art converted from that ſin, from that foul ſin of denying me, then ſtrengthen thy brethren by telling them what God hath done for thy ſoul. It is the duty of all who are able and called, to teach others, but none are ſo fit for it, nor have any ſo much reaſon to do it, as they who have experienced the grace of God to themſelves in the pardon of ſin, and the grace of God in themſelves to heal their ſinfulneſs.

I will teach you by the hand of God.

Doceo vos in plaga dei fortis verſans. Jun.

There are conſiderable differences in the reading of this clauſe.

Firſt, Some thus, I teach you being under the hand of God; As if he had ſaid, I being now ſorely corrected, and chaſtned by the hand of God, am ready to reach out to you a hand of direction and inſtruction; I, in my ſorrows, and in my ſickneſſes; I, being troubled with the darkneſs of my own ſpirit, and with the hidings of the face of God, will ſhew you what light I have concerning God and his wayes. There is a great truth in this, and the Text may bear it; for indeed, as afflictions teach us, ſo they prepare us to be teachers; afflictions are inſtructions; and they who have been long afflicted, are beſt able to give inſtruction, eſpecially in the dealings of God with the afflicted: none have ſpoken ſuch leſſons, preached ſuch Sermons, as they who have been under the hand of God. Chaſtiſings make men wiſe, and ſpiritually learned, able to teach indeed. I (ſaith Job) being under the hand of God will teach you, and becauſe you ſee me under the hand of God, you may be ſure that I will teach you nothing but the truth, and in the truth or ſincerity of my heart. 'Tis no time to ſpeak flatteries and falſhoods, I am ready to die, and I will ſpeak my mind (and I hope) the mind of God, as if I were to die preſently. A dying man ſhould ſpeak none but words of weight, and his words ſhould have weight with all the living.

Prapoſitio ב notat objectum, ſc. plagam divina manu illatã. Cajet.

Secondly, The Text is rendred thus, I will teach you of the hand of God; So the prepoſition in this place notes the matter treated upon, the hand of God; That's the object about which he would teach, or concerning which he would inſtruct them. Thus Mr. Broughton reads, I will teach you of God his hand, or, of the hand of God; As if he had ſaid, the point which I will deal with you about, ſhall be the hand of God. And then the meaning is this, I will teach you of the wayes and adminiſtrations of God, how God doth order the things of this world, both toward the wicked, and toward the righteous; I will teach you, what courſe, what method God uſually keeps in theſe his diſpenſations; what we may expect he will do, what he now doth, and what he hath done. Your opinion is, that God beſtows outward good things upon thoſe he loves, and that he ſtill afflicts thoſe whom he hates. But the truth is, outward good or evil, fall indifferently from the hand of God upon the good and upon the evil, as to himſelf ſeemeth good. One of the Ancients doth not at all expreſs the word hand, but renders the Text in general terms, I will teach you what, or how God diſpoſeth of things: The hand of God is put for thoſe acts and adminiſtrations of God which are done by his hand or power. And to teach others of the hand of God, is to teach them what is in the hand or power of God, as all the afflictions and comforts of the children of men are. This reading contains alſo a clear truth, and a very uſeful one; How can our tongues be better employed then in teaching what the hand of God hath done, or what the works of God are both in creation and providence. God ſpeaks much to us by his hand, and we ought to be continually ſpeaking of the hand of God, yet I conceive this Text doth not clearly lead us to that doctrine, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

Thirdly, We tranſlate,

I will teach you by the hand of God.

In manu dei Heb. i.e. deo juvante & adminiſtrante facultatem ad dicendum. Vatabl.

And ſo the meaning of it is, Firſt, I will teach you by the help of God, or the Lord helping and aſſiſting me, the Lord giving me wiſdom to adminiſter Councel and inſtruction, I will teach you. As the hand of a man, both in Scripture and common ſpeech ſignifies the help of a man, ſo doth the hand of God (Hag. 1.1.) In the firſt day of the month came the word of the Lord by Haggai the Prophet, &c. The Text is, by the hand of Haggai the Prophet, that is, by the miniſtery, or ſervice of Haggai the Prophet, the Lord ſpake. Again (*Hag.*2.1.) In the ſeventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the Lord by the Prophet Haggai, or, by the hand of the Prophet Haggai. Now as when God doth a thing by the hand of man, it notes that God doth it by man as his Inſtrument, or that he uſeth (not that he needeth) the help of man; ſo, when man is ſaid to do any thing by the hand of God it implieth, that he doth it by the help and ſtrength, by the aid and aſſiſtance of God. The hand of God is the power of God ſtrengthning man in any duty (Iſa. 8.11.) The Lord ſpake thus to me with a ſtrong hand, (or in ſtrength of hand) that is, the Lord ſpake to me with an evidence of his power; the Lord gave me effectual ſtrength, and Inſtructed me that I ſhould not walk in the way of this People. So in the Propheſie of Ezekiel often (*Chap.*1.3. & 3.14,23. & 23.22.) The hand of the Lord was there upon him; The hand of the Lord was upon me in the Evening. The Lord laid his hand upon the Prophet to confirm and comfort him in his hard ſervice, or he laid his hand upon him, as men uſe to do upon thoſe, to whom they are about to impart ſome ſecret, or with whom they would have conference; or the hand of the Lord was upon him to carry him through the work, the hand upon him, was as much as the hand with him. The hand of the Lord is upon men ſometimes to puniſh and afflict them, and ſometimes the hand of God is upon men to aſſiſt and ſtrengthen them; ſo we are to underſtand the Prophet when he ſaid, The hand of the Lord was upon me. The ſame Prophet ſpeaks more fully (Ezek. 37.1.) The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the ſpirit of the Lord; That is, there was a mighty impreſſion upon my ſpirit, and a power from the Lord, that did help and carry me out in that ſervice. Thus here, I will teach you by the hand (or help) of God.

Hence Note, We need the help and hand of God to be with us in the teaching of others.

All our work will be in vain, all our labour loſt in teaching, unleſs we teach by the help and hand of God. That's a ſignificant ſentence, with which ſome alwayes begin their divine teachings or Sermons; Our help ſtandeth in the Name of the Lord, who hath made heaven and earth; He helpeth Miniſters to give Inſtruction, and he helpeth the people to receive Inſtruction. It is the hand of the Lord which removes all thoſe impediments and carnal reaſonings, which hinder his Miniſters from a faithful delivery of his Meſſage. And it is the hand of the Lord which caſts down all thoſe ſtrong holds and prejudices, which hinder his people from receiving and obeying his Meſſages. We do not ſo much teach by our own tongue, as by the hand of God; it is not our words, but his power that doth all; unleſs the Spirit reach at the heart, it is in vain for us to teach at the ear. The tongue cannot reach the heart. The hand of man can do nothing in common works, without the hand of God. Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the City, the Watchman waketh but in vain. It is much more ſo in ſpiritual work and watchings: ſouls are neither brought to, nor built up in their holy faith, nor effectually perſwaded to walk in holy wayes, but as the Lord perſwades them. It was a good prayer of Auſtin when he was about to ſpeak to the people in the Name of the Lord, Give me, O Lord, what I ſhall ſpeak unto thy ſervants, my fellow-ſervants. Before we adventure to teach, we ſhould pray for the hand of God: no power can take upon the ſpirit of man, but the power of the Spirit of God: it is not the power of Rhetorick, or Eloquence; it is not the power of humane reaſon and authority; none of theſe powers will do it without the power of the Spirit. Except, when the word goes out from man, a divine vertue go out from God, it works not; 'tis but an empty ſound. The weapons of our warfare, are not carnal, (that is, weak) but mighty through God (2 *Cor.*10.4.) but through man they have no might. The Spirit of God is the hand of God with us to do good; and therefore, that which is ſaid in one place (Luke 11.20.) To be done by the finger or hand of God, is ſaid in another place (*Mat.*12.28.) To be done by the Spirit of God, namely, The caſting out of Devils. And when-ever by the Miniſtery of the Word any devils, or luſts, which are the ſeed of the devil in us, are caſt out, or any grace and holy principles planted in us, we muſt ſay, the hand, the finger of God hath done it.

I will teach you by the hand of God.

Manus dei quandoque prophetiam notat, quæ venit cum robore & potentia. Druſ. Prophetiam dei. Chald.

Further, The hand of God ſignifies, not only that general aſſiſtance and ſtrength given in by God in the Miniſtery of his Prophets, but it ſignifies the Spirit of Propheſie it ſelf, or an immediate extraordinary inſpiration, whereby the holy Prophets without ſtudy or premeditation were enabled to deliver the mind of God unto the people. And ſuch kind of Prophecying may well be called, The hand of God, becauſe it came with an irreſiſtble power upon them, as the Prophet ſhews (Jer. 20.9.) Then I ſaid I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his Name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not ſtay. Thus ſome expound this phraſe in Job (I will teach you by the hand of God) that is, I will teach you by Propheſie; But we need not take it ſo ſtrictly; For as the hand of God is often put for Propheſie in Scripture, and all Propheſie came by a ſpecial power and Inſpiration of God; ſo they who teach effectually, are ſaid to teach by the hand and help of God; And therefore, when Job ſaith, I will teach you by the hand of God, his meaning may be no more, then as if he had ſaid, I will teach you by the Lords help, thoſe more ſecret doctrines and myſteries of his providence which I have learned by my own experience, or which God hath made known to me by any of his teachings. The Apoſtle Peter ſpeaking of Propheſie in a ſtrict ſence (2 *Epiſt.*1.21.) ſaith, The propheſie came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt; that is, as the hand of God was with them. And take Propheſie in a large ſence, as the Apoſtle Paul deſcribes it (1 *Cor.*14.3.) for any ſpeaking unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort, that alſo is done by the good hand of God upon us and with us. So that, if we take the hand of God, of which Job ſpeaks, either for that aſſiſtance, which all that teach with effect have from him towards the inſtruction and ſalvation of thoſe they deal with; or for that word which God gives in ſpecial by a ſpirit of Propheſie, and immediate revelation (as the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaks in his own caſe (*Gal.*1.12.) I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it but by the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, Which way ſoever, I ſay, we take the hand of God, by which Job promiſeth to teach his friends) the general ſence will be the ſame, namely, that he would teach them, according to the beſt of his light received, faithfully, and according to the beſt of his received ſtrength, powerfully.

Dicit ſe hæc accepiſſe à deo ſpeciali aliqua inſpiratione & lumine prophetico, id enim indicat per manum dei. Qui loquendi modus afflatũ vim & impetum ſignificat divinum, unde ſæpe audimus factum eſſe dei manum ſuper aliquē. Sanct.

I will teach you by the hand of God:

That which is with the Almigty, will I not Conceal.

What Job ſpake affirmatively in the former part, he holds forth negatively in this latter part of the verſe. There he ſaid, I will teach you; here he ſaith, I will not Conceal, it is in effect the ſame thing, not to Conceal a thing, or to teach it.

I will not Conceal that which is with the Almighty.

This expreſſion (with the Almighty) Imports the moſt ſecret and reſerved doctrines and truths of God. There are two Prepoſitions in the Hebrew, which are of the ſame ſignification, noting Vicinity and Intrincity, when matters are ſo inward that they live as it were within the breſt of a man, or dwell in his heart, as in their home and habitation, then they are ſaid, to be with him; So here (that which is with the Almighty) is that, which is neareſt to the Almighty, that which he hath in his heart, that which is laid up, as it were, in his very Cabinet: that which is with the Almighty, is any ſecret of the Almighty, and that Job ſeems to promiſe to unlock and declare unto them; yet we are not to conceive Job an intruder into the Ark of Gods ſecret counſels. There are ſecrets in the providence of God, as well as in the decrees of God. The mind and purpoſe of God in what he doth openly, and before the eyes of men, is often hidden from them; they underſtand not what they ſee, nor do they perceive that, which they cannot but behold. Now (ſaith Job) that which is with the Almighty, I will not conceal; that is, I will not only ſhew you the face and out-ſide of the works of God, but I hope by the hand of God working with me, to ſhew you the myſtery, the ſecret of his works, what the Lord meaneth and purpoſeth, what he aims at and intends when he afflicts the godly, and lets the wicked proſper. That which is with the Almighty is oppoſed to the hand of God in the ſecond interpretation of it, before given, as it notes things outwardly done, or the acts of providence abroad in the world. As if Job had ſaid, I will not only teach you what God doth with his hand, but I will ſhew you alſo what is in the heart of God, or thoſe things which are hidden from the world, and are only revealed (and that but rarely) to his hidden ones. Job was far from preſuming that he could reveal all that was with God, but there are many things with God, which though they are reſerves from the generality of the ſons of men, yet he reveals them to his own ſervants. The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, (Pſal. 25. 14.)

Duæ ſunt apud Hebræos præpoſitionis על apud, עם, cum quæ vicinitatem intrinſecam, adhæſionem conjunctionem & coævitatē denotant. Bold.

Again, That which is with the Almighty, may be expounded of the future rewards of good men, and puniſhments of wicked men; in oppoſition to the troubles, which the one is at preſent under, and the proſperity which the other at preſent enjoys. As if Job had ſaid, I will only ſhew you what God now doth with good and bad men, but (which will ſet all right at laſt) I will declare what God hath with him in ſtore for them both; What mercy for afflicted godly men, and what wrath for wicked men, who now are in their flouriſh. That which is with the Almighty I will not conceal.

Hence Obſerve, All things are with and before God.

They are alwayes in his Councels, he hath an Idea of what is paſt, and of what is to come; Things paſt, or to come, are as much with God as that which is preſent. A skilful Artificer in any kind hath his work with him at all times; it is with him not only when he is at work, but when he is not at work; His skill is with him, his Art is with him, and he carries the form of all in his phanſie whitherſoever he goeth, or whereſoever he is. Now, if a mortal man that is experienced in any Art, hath the ſhape of all things which concern it before him; much more hath the Infinite only wiſe All-knowing God the Idea of all adminiſtrations before him, whether good or bad.

Imago vivit in mente artificis.

Secondly, Obſerve, There is a ſecret in all the works of God.

As there is ſomewhat outward and viſibly acted, of which we may ſay, it is with man, ſo there is ſomewhat inward and intended, which is with the Almighty. There is a purpoſe, an end, a deſign in the heart of God, for which he doth any thing with his hand.

Thirdly, Obſerve, We ſhould labour to underſtand the purpoſe and mind of God in every thing which he doth either to our ſelves and others.

Every one ſees the external part of a work, whether a work of mercy, or of Judgment, but few underſtand the inſide and ſcope of it. They feel their own ſmart, or their own comfort, but that which is with God, what he means by it, or what the iſſues of it may be, they mind not. Few have learned, and therefore few can ſay with Job here, That which is with the Almighty

I will not Conceal.] I will not hide, nor wrap it up in a napkin, I will not vail it over in ſilence; and when he ſaith (I will not Conceal) he intends more then he ſpeaks; even thus much, I will openly declare it to the utmoſt of my power, ability, and opportunity, I will even proclaim that which is with God.

Non celabo, i.e. omnibus modis patefaciam, Druſ. Meioſis.

Hence Note, What we know of the mind of God we ſhould not Conceal; or, it is our duty by all means to make the mind of God known to others.

What we know of God is a Talent, and we muſt not hide our Talents; He was an evil ſervant that did ſo. Their ſin who refuſe to make known to others what themſelves know of God, is next in ſinfulneſs to theirs, who themſelves refuſe to receive the knowledge of God. And as this duty is incumbent upon all, ſo eſpecially upon the Miniſters of the Goſpel. Paul labours much to acquit himſelf in this (Acts 20. 20, 27.) Ye know how I kept back nothing that was profitable for you, but have ſhewed you and taught you publickly and from houſe to houſe. As if he had ſaid, If I had kept back any thing that was profitable unto you, I had been like him that hid his talent, an unprofitable ſervant. There are ſome things knowable, which 'tis no profit to know, to conceal theſe is our wiſdom, as not to conceal things profitable is our duty. And hence the ſame Apoſtle inſiſts further in juſtifying the faithful diſcharge of his duty in this point. (Verſ. 27.) I have not ſhunned to declare unto you the whole Councel of God. But was Paul of the Cabinet Councel? knew he the whole councel of God? Is there not a height and a depth of his Councels that none can reach? How then ſaith he, I have not ſhunned, to declare unto you all the Councel of God? The meaning is, all that of his Councel which he hath made known to me, I have made known to you: not that Paul knew all the Councels of God, no nor any Angel in heaven; And when we make others know what we our ſelves know of the Councel of God, this is the diſcharge of our duty: and ſuch a man may ſay with Paul, I have declared unto you the whole Councel of God, as to matters of faith and repentance, as to what concerneth you to believe and do. The Councels of God are of two ſorts; Firſt, What he himſelf will do; Secondly, What his will is we ſhould do; The former Councels he hath but ſparingly made known to us, but when and as far as he doth we muſt not conceal them. As he charged the Prophet in that caſe (Jer. 26. 2.) Diminiſh not a word. The latter fully. We are not to conceal the former ſo far as they are revealed in the Word, as for the latter, they being fully revealed in the Word, we muſt reveal them fully. They who fail in revealing the things of God, are of three ſorts; Firſt, Some through ignorance cannot; Secondly, There are others who through Idleneſs do not make known the things of God. A third ſort through craft and ſubtilty will not make known all that they know of God, but keep back part of it, and corrupt that which they make known, they purpoſely and induſtriouſly obſcure, yea and deprave the truths of God. We find the Apoſtle induſtriouſly acquitting himſelf of this wicked practice, (2 Cor. 2. 17.) For we are not as many who corrupt the word of God; but as of ſincerity, but as of God, in the ſight of God ſpeak we in Chriſt. Some deal with the word of God as unworthy Merchants do with wines and precious ointments, which they embaſe in their nature, that they may advance in the price, and ſo encreaſe their own profit. This have not I done ſaith Paul, I have given out the word in ſincerity, not in ſubtilty; as I have not concealed the word of God, ſo neither have I embaſed it by any falſe gloſs of mine. Take heed of all theſe concealments; it is bad enough that any through Ignorance cannot, worſe that any through Idleneſs do not, worſt that any through craft will not reveal, but obſcure and darken the truth of God; let us neither conceal what is of God, nor ſpoil it in the revealing. The Leapers coming into the Aſſyrian Camp found a great ſtore of good things, even enough to relieve the City, but having tarried ſomewhat long there, they were troubled and ſaid, (2 King. 7. 8, 9.) We do not do well; this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace; if we tarry till the morning ſome miſchief will come upon us; now therefore come that we may go and tell it to the Kings houſhold. They that have good tidings, that are acquainted with the ſtore, bounty, and fulneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, as they do well to take hold for themſelves, ſo they do not well if they withhold from others. Goodneſs is communicative, and ſo are they who are good. That which is with the Almighty I will not conceal.

Verſ. 12. Behold, all ye your ſelves have ſeen, why then are ye thus altogether vaine?

Behold! He had ſaid before, he would ſhew them what was with God: now he ſaith, ye have all ſeen.

Some expound theſe words as a Correction of what he ſpake before; as if he had ſaid, I told you I would teach you the ſecrets of God, nay truely the things I teach you, though they are the Councels of God, yet they are ſuch as you and others obſerve for truths, as well as I. And ſo Job ſeems to appeal to their own experiences; your ſelves have ſeen examples of Gods various proceedings in the World: or to their conſciences; Behold, all ye your ſelves do ſee it, that is, your conſciences bear witneſs to the truths which I am about to report unto you, your ſelves cannot but underſtand and know theſe things as well as I my ſelf. Seeing is applyed in Scripture both to the Experimental and rational part of knowledge. The heart ſeeth as well as the eye. The eye ſeeth what is open to ſenſe, the heart ſeeth what we underſtand.

Per correctionem ſuperioris ſententiæ videtur hæc adjungere. Pined.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, It is a ſtrong Conviction, to appeal to the Experiences and Conſciences of thoſe we have to do with.

When we can put it home upon our opponents, that themſelves know what we ſay, this cannot be put off. Paul ſpeakes thus (Rom. 7. 1.) Know ye not brethren (for I ſpeak to them that know the Law) that the Law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? As if he had ſaid, the point that I am about to inſtruct you in, you your ſelves know; the Principle, that I am upon is a common Principle, Know ye not Brethren? you know 'tis a truth, that the Law hath Dominion over a man as long as he leivth. The like expreſſion the Apoſtle uſeth (1 Cor. 6. 2.) Dare any of you go to Law before the unjuſt, &c. Know ye not that the Saints ſhall judge the World? I appeal to your own Conſciences, are you not clear in this thing? Do not ye know what I am about to ſay before I ſay it? To appeal either to former Experiences, or to the preſent dictates of Conſcience, and light of underſtanding, is enough to ſtop the mouth of any Gainſayer. How can they object againſt what others ſay, who cannot anſwer what themſelves (if they will but hear themſelves) ſay?

Secondly, Obſerve, The truth of the Word of God is viſible in his works.

The works of God are nothing elſe but the fulfilling, the making good of his word: therefore (ſaith Job) all ye have ſeen it. The works of men ſhould be a fulfilling of the word, of the Commands of God; all that we do, we ſhould ſee a Command or rule for it. And ſo all that God doth, or the works of God, are a fulfilling of his own word.

Firſt, The works of God in judgment are the fulfilling of his threatnings.

Secondly, The works of God in mercy, are the fulfilling of his promiſes; and ſo the word of God is viſible both in his Judgments and in his mercies.

Thirdly, (which takes in both theſe) the word of God is viſible, when his Propheſies are fulfilled, whether of Judgment or of mercy. There are ſome Propheſies that ſpeak wrath to the World, to the wicked World; and ſome Propheſies ſpeak good favour and mercy to the Church and People of God. The works of God are the fulfilling of theſe Propheſies; and ſo the truths of God are viſible in thoſe works, and dealings of God, with his foes and with his friends. We may ſee the word of God bud and bloſſom, and bring forth in all that he doth among the children of men.

Why then are you thus altogether vaine?

The words carry in them a kind of admiration; one would wonder you ſhould be thus vain, ſeeing you have obſerved theſe things with your own eyes? As if he had ſaid, Seeing what I ſay doth appear to your own Conſciences, how comes it to paſs that you heap up words and Arguments to darken it? Why do ye croſs your own obſervation? Ye have ſeen what I ſay, yet you deny what I ſay. What? are you indeed ſtrangers to your own Reaſon? If this be not a vanity, what is?

Vana vanis adjicitis. Sept. Vanè vana loquimini. Auguſt.

Why are ye thus altogether vian?] The Hebrew word is very Emphatical; why are ye vain in vanity, or, why do you vainly vanity it? Why do ye add vain things to vain? ſay the Greek Tranſlaters. Why do ye ſpeak vain things vainly, ſaith one of the Antients? Theſe are the ſeveral readings of the Text. To be vain in vanity is to be altogether vain; and to ſpeak vain things vainly, is to add one vain thing to another. Thus Job chargeth his friends with heaps of vanity, the matter was vain, and their mannaging of it was vain too; all meeting in this, that they ſhewed themſelves moſt vain. Maſter Broughtons tranſlation comes up fully to this ſence; why do ye then vaniſh in vanity? That is, (as we ſay) why are ye thus altogether vain? Double words ſhew much force of ſpeech, and a ſtrong intention in the ſpeaker. (Deut. 16. 20.) That which is altogether juſt thou ſhalt do; the Hebrew is, Juſtice, Juſtice, ſhalt thou do: we read well, thou ſhalt do that which is altogether juſt. This phraſe in Job, though it be not altogether in the ſame form, yet is full of the ſame ſence, and is therefore ſignificantly enough rendred, Why are ye thus altogether vain? Or, why do ye add vanity to vanity?

Hence Note, Firſt, To maintain an Error is altogether a vain thing.

There is nothing more vain in it ſelf then an Error or falſe opinion, either concerning God, or the wayes and dealings of God; an Error is very vanity, for it is a Doctrine of lyes, and therefore they are very vain, who maintain an Error: why are ye then thus altogether vain?

Secondly, In that he doth charge this upon them in reference to their own knowledge and experience (ye have all ſeen it to be ſo) Obſerve,

It is extreamly vain to maintain any opinion againſt the light of our own Experience or Conſcience.

They are vain enough who maintain an Error for want of light, but they are much more vain, who maintain an Error againſt light. It is very bad to oppoſe a truth when we do not ſee it, but to ſee it and oppoſe it is infinitely worſe: Yet here, I conceive, Job did not charge his friends with reſiſting that light, which they did indeed ſee, but with reſiſting that which, had they been diligent obſervers and ſtudents in Gods School of providence, they might have ſeen.

Hence Obſerve, Thirdly, We are juſtly chargeable with ſinning againſt all that knowledge and light which we might have had, as well as with ſinning againſt that knowledge which we have.

To be ignorant of what we have had means to know and ſo to act or ſpeak againſt it, is not a ſin of ignorance but of knowledge. All they will be judged in the laſt day as having been altogether vain againſt what they have ſeen, who have been vain either in opinion or practice about thoſe things which they have had light to ſee, but have neglected it.

Obſerve, Fourthly, They are vain who either depend upon that which is not, or oppoſe that which is.

The Scripure ſpeaks often of vanity, and of being vaine, in both theſe reſpects. It is ſaid of the Iſraelites who were carried into Captivity in the Reign of Hoſhea, (2 Kings 17. 15.) That they followed vanity, and became vain; that is, they truſted to that which was not, which had no being, no ſubſiſtence: they gave a Deity to that which had not ſo much as an Entity. (Jer. 2. 5.) Thus ſaith the Lord, what Iniquity have your Fathers found in me, that they have gone far from me, and walked after vanity, and are become vain?; that is, they have truſted upon Idols, or Dunghill gods, which are not. What iniquity have your fathers found in me? have I ever deceived you or wronged you that ye ſhould go far from me after vanity; from me, that am the only Being, the Fountain of all Beings, and follow after vanity, that is after things which have no Being. This is vanity and madneſs. From all ſinful dependencies, or dependencies upon ſin, we are called off (Pſal. 62. 10.) Truſt not in oppreſſion, and become not vain in Robbery: What? would he have them ſerious in Robbery? No; the meaning is this, do not truſt in a thing of nought; if you rob, oppreſs, deceive, or wrong others, you truſt to a vain thing, in a thing that is not, in a thing that will never do you good; there will be no tack, no hold in any thing got in ſuch a manner. When you think to get riches by wrong-dealing, or cloſely Circumventing others, you become vain in in Robbery. Now as the Scripture ſheweth the vanity of man in ſetting up a creature in the room of God, or an Idol in the place of Jehovah, that is, in truſting and laying hold upon that which hath no hold in it, or which is not; ſo it ſhews their vanity, who oppoſe that which is, that which hath truth and ſubſtantiality in it. Thus David (Pſal. 4. 2.) Rebukes that generation for becoming vain; O ye ſons of men, how long will ye turn my Glory into ſhame? how long will ye love vanity? What was this vanity? I conceive it was not ſo much the vain poor things of the World (though that be a truth) But how long will ye love vanity? is, how long will ye oppoſe me in my Reign and Government? how long will ye reſiſt that honour and dignity which God hath beſtowed upon me? you ſet your ſelves againſt that which God hath ſet up: this is to love vanity; you reproach and ſcorn me, you make me your Song, upon whom God hath faſtned honour and glory. David doth not ſpeak this vauntingly and boaſtingly, as Nebuchadnezzar did, Is not this great Babel that I have built for the Glory of my Majeſty? &c. But he ſpeaks it according to the truth of God in his dealings with him; How long will ye turn my Glory into ſhame, and love vanity? That is, oppoſe me and my State: and ſeek after leaſing; that is, raiſe ſlanders and falſe reports concerning me. This I underſtand to be the meaning of vanity in that place. And as David calls it a vanity to oppoſe him in his reign and power over the bodies of Men, ſo to oppoſe the power and reign of any truth over the Spirits and Conſciences of men, whether our own or others, it is a moſt vain thing, and they are become moſt vain who do it. This is vain, as to the ſinfulneſs of the act, and it is vain as to the fruitleſneſs and ineſſicacy of the act, for truth will prevail and get the upper hand, that which God hath ſet up ſhall ſtand. And as he ſaid in the Acts, If this thing be of God, take heed ye be not fighters againſt God; if it be not of God it will down, but if it be of God, be not ſo vain to fight againſt it, if you do, you will have the worſt end of the ſtaff quickly; your Arguments will be vain, and your Reaſons will be vain, yea without repentance, you will draw vanity, that is, trouble upon your own perſons. Your attempt will be vain, not only becauſe you cannot attain your end, and have that ſucceſs which you look for, but your attempt will be vain as drawing that trouble, yea and vexation upon your ſelves, which ye looked not for. And to do ſo is indeed to be altogether vain.

Fruſtra tempus conſumitis et inane obtunditis. Jun.

Verſ. 13. This is the portion of a wicked man with God, and the Heritage of oppreſſors, which they ſhall receive of the Almighty.

Now Job comes to ſpeak to the point it ſelf, having ſaid down his caution by way of Preface in theſe to verſes.

There are two general opinions concerning the ſcope of this verſe, and of the latter part of this Chapter.

Firſt, Some underſtand it as a repetition of what his friends had ſaid before, you ſay this is the Portion of the wicked, they are always afflicted, &c.

Secondly, Theſe words may be taken by way of Conceſſion; as if he had ſaid, I grant what you have aſſerted, that God puniſhes and afflicts wicked men; I ſay ſo too; there's no Controverſie between us in this point: but, this is not the whole matter, this is not the hinge of the buſineſs; this is not as one calleth it, the depth of divine Wiſdom; there is a ſecret beyond all this: God doth alſo aflict the Godly and the Righteous, he lays heavy ſtrokes upon them alſo, yea there is an appearance of wrath upon them in many divine Diſpenſations. And here's the difficulty how to unfold, how to unriddle this, that, God ſhould love a man, and yet expreſs nothing but wrath in his dealings with him; that God ſhould embrace a man in the arms of mercy, and yet daily wound him; that God ſhould ſmile upon a Soul, and yet ſhew nothing but frowns in his face toward him; how can theſe things be? I grant what you ſay, God doth afflict and vex the wicked of the World, but there is more in it; He alſo afflicts the Godly, and how to reconcile theſe two, is the knot of the Controverſie between us.

But ſome may ſay, Job ſeems to ſay and unſay; for at Chap. 21. he enlarged himſelf concerning the proſperity of the wicked, and here he ſpeaks as much concerning the miſery of the wicked, as if he were agreed with his Adverſaries.

I anſwer, Job doth not croſs what before he aſſerted, he acknowledgeth that wicked men are afflicted, yet that no man can conclude that any one is wicked becauſe afflicted, which he had often denyed, and ſtill did concerning himſelf, notwithſtanding all his afflictions; for as much as he ſtill depended upon God in the midſt and worſt of them, which the wicked cannot do. This is the Portion of the wicked.

I ſhall not ſtay upon this verſe becauſe it hath been handled in the ſubſtance of it already at large (Chap. 20. 29.) Where Zophar thus concludes his diſcourſe; This is the Portion of a wicked man from God, and the Heritage appointed to him by God Job makes up the ſame concluſion; This is the Portion of the wicked man with God, and the Heritage of Oppreſſors which they ſhall receive from the Almighty.

Yet there is a difference betwen Job and Zophar in expreſſing one and the ſame thing. Zophar ſaith, This is the Portion of a wicked man from God; that is, which God hath in ſtore, which God hath laid up by him to inflict upon him when ever he ſeeth the fitteſt ſeaſon and opportunity. Zophar ſpeaks of the Portion as given out: Job ſpeaks of it as laid up: it is with God, ſaith Job: it is from God, ſaith Zophar. This way of Job in ſpeaking his mind to this point, anſwers what he ſaid in the laſt clauſe of the former verſe; That which is with the Almighty I will not conceal. Now here he ſaith, This is the Portion of a wicked man with God. Though he ſeem to receive at preſent a fair and comfortable Portion from God, yet there is another Portion, even a Portion of Wrath, which he hath a purpoſe to give out unto him.

In the latter clauſe the ſame difference is obſervable; There Zophar ſaid, and the Heritage appointed to him by God: here Job ſaith, and the Heritage of Oppreſſors which they ſhall receive from the Almighty: the Portion is ſpoken of as given out by Zophar, and as laid up by Job: And ſo the Heritage is given out as ſpoken of by Zophar, but as to be given out by Job: This is the Heritage of Oppreſſors, which (though they have not, yet) they ſhall receive of the Almighty. The word which we render Oppreſſors, and Mr. Broughton, Tyrants, ſignifies ſuch perſons as are ſtrong, violent, terrible, powerfull, ſuch as will not bend, men that are inflexible, inexorable, ſuch as are Oppreſſors; but the Lord hath an Heritage for them, which they muſt bend to, and bow their Necks and their Backs to, this is the Heritage which they ſhall receive of the Almighty, of the Omnipotent. He uſeth that attribute in reference to Oppreſſors; they are mighty, but God is Almighty: he oppoſeth the Omnipotency of God to their potency, the ſtrength of God to their fortitude, the dread of God to their terror; they are terrible and dreadful men, there is no humane ſtrength can deal with them; yet God can deal well enough with them: There is one higher then the higheſt, and ſtronger then the ſtrongeſt of the children of men. Thus Solomon ſpeaks (Eccl. 5. 8.) If thou ſeeſt Oppreſſion of the Poor, and violent perverting of Judgment and Juſtice in a Province, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher then the higheſt regardeth, and there be higher then they. It is a marvail that any ſhould oppreſs thoſe who are already preſſed with poverty, and that they who have power to do juſtice, ſhould uſe their power only, or at all, to do injuſtice. But ſeeing the unrighteous heart of a Judge is alwayes oppoſite to righteouſneſs in judgment, marvail not at the matter, or, as we put in the Margin, at the will and purpoſe of ſuch Oppreſſors; ſuch do but according to their kind. And there is one higher then the higheſt, more mighty then the mightieſt of them, who in ſilence and patience takes notice of the wrong, and will ſet all right at laſt. Oppreſſors are high and keep all under them, none can ſtand before them; yet there is one above, infinitely above them; as they have enlarged their inheritances, by oppreſſing others with their might, ſo they ſhall receive the Heritage due to them from the Almighty.

עריץ ἀκαμπὴς, qui flecti nequit. Theod.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God hath a ſtore and Portion by him for all ſorts of men.

He hath a ſtore for the good, and a ſtore for the bad; a ſtore for the humble, and a ſtore for the proud; a ſtore for the Holy, and a ſtore for the prophane; God hath his ſtores by him, and with him: with him is the Fountain of life, with him alſo is the Fountain of death; life flows naturally from him, and death Judicially; God hath a treaſury of Wrath by him, and he hath a treaſury of Mercy. There is mercy with thee that thou mayeſt be feared, ſaith the Pſalmiſt; much more is there Wrath with God for thoſe that fear him not. This is this Portion of a wicked man with God.

Secondly, Note, The only Portion, or all the Portion of a wicked or evil man is Evil.

The Portion of a ſinner is ſorrow, and nothing but ſorrow. This is the Portion; this, and none other; this, and no Portion beſide; this is all that he ſhall have, and he ſhall not avoid or put by the having of this. For Thirdly, He ſaith, Which he ſhall receive from the Almighty.

Obſerve, The Almighty God will be too hard for the mightieſt of evil men.

He ſhall receive his Portion whether he will or no; he would not receive it, but he muſt; here is a Heritage that he hath no mind to. Moſt are forward enough to receive an Heritage, and think every year Seaven till they come to their Inheritance; but a wicked man is very loath to come to take poſſeſſion of his proper Heritage, oh he would faine have God defer it, he hath no mind to it. In the 25 of Jeremy, when the Cup is carryed about to the Nations, (it was a ſad Cup) they had no deſire to drink of it. There are Cups carried about in Nations, which the wicked are very greedy to drink at, yea and drink up. The Drunkard deſireth his Cup, and is ſorry 'tis no further to the bottom. But ſaith God, there, I will ſend a Cup that they have no thirſt to: carry a Cup of Blood to this Nation, and that Nation, and ſay unto them, drink ye and be drunk, and ſpue and fall, and never riſe more, becauſe of the Sword, which I will ſend among you, (Jer. 25.27.) But what if they refuſe to drink it? Then ſaith God (ver. 28.) I will make them drink it whether they will or no, and it ſhall be, if they refuſe to take the Cup at thy hand to drink, then ſhalt thou ſay unto them, thus ſaith the Lord of Hoaſts, ye ſhall certainly drink; As if the Lord had ſaid, I will even ſerve you in your own kind, I will powr it down your throats, as Drunkards ſometimes deal with thoſe that have no mind to drink their Cups: drink it, ſay they, or we will powr it down your throat. Certainly if the wicked refuſe the Cup of God's wrath he will powr it down their throats. Thus the Pſalmiſt deſcribes the unavoidableneſs of this Cup (Pſal. 75.8) In the hand of the Lord there is a Cup; and the Wine is Red (it is a Cup of wrath and fury) it is full of mixture, and he powreth out of the ſame: but the dregs thereof all the wicked of the Earth ſhall wring them out and drink them. God gives the wicked many commands to do his will, but they refuſe and will not; at laſt he will give out a command for their ſuffering, and they ſhall not be able to refuſe it. He will come with an irreſiſtible word of his wrath upon all thoſe who have reſiſted the word of his grace.

Again, Whereas Job ſaith, This is the Portion of a wicked man with God, and the Heritage which he ſhall receive.

Obſerve, The wrath and miſery that falls upon wicked men, both in time, and to eternity, is with God.

It is in his decrees and appointments. As all the Mercies and good things which godly men receive are with God, ſo likewiſe are all the puniſhments of the ungodly. He brings all his Adminiſtrations out of the Treaſury of his own Counſels. And that's the reaſon why they ſhall certainly receive accordingly, For the counſel of the Lord ſhall ſtand, and the thoughts of his heart to all Generations, (Pſal. 33.11.) Jeſus Chriſt himſelf did therefore undergo all thoſe ſorrows, becauſe they were with God; he received at his Fathers hand the bitter Cup, becauſe it was his determinate counſel he ſhould do ſo (Acts 2.23.) and therefore he ſaid (Heb. 10.7.) Lo I come (in the volume of thy Book it is written of me) to do thy will; to do it in this, to drink the bitter Cup. Now if Jeſus Chriſt could not avoid that Cup (though he urged to rhe utmoſt that he might be ſpared) becauſe it was with his Father, his purpoſe was that he ſhould drink it for our ſakes. Thus ſurely wicked men ſhall receive that Portion which is with God for them, and the Heritage which he hath appointed.

Laſtly, Job ſeems to ſpeak it Emphatically, Which they ſhall receive from the Almighty, ſetting the Almighty handling the oppreſſors, in oppoſition to man. As if he had ſaid, The oppreſſor was ſo mighty that he received no ſuch Heritage from men, no man could touch him, nor meddle with him, nor bring him to a reckoning. But the Almighty will reckon with him, This is the Heritage which he ſhall receive of the Almighty.

Hence Note, Though wicked men may eſcape a reckoning among men, yet they cannot eſcape a reckoning with God, the Almighty God.

Let none think themſelves diſcharged, becauſe they are freed from the hands of men, let none think themſelves ſafe, becauſe they are out of the danger of the Creature, becauſe they are ſo ſheltered and ſtrengthened, that none can approach to them to give them their Portion; for from the hand of the Almighty they ſhall receive it. The might of the mightieſt, the ſtrength of the ſtrongeſt, the wit of the wiſeſt, the highneſs of the higheſt, all theſe are nothing to the power, wiſdom, ſtrength, and highneſs of God. Wicked men often reſiſt the will of God in that which he commands them to do, they reſiſt and do it not; wicked men reſiſt the will of God much more in that which he appointeth them to ſuffer, but though they reſiſt, they muſt ſuffer it. There is pride and ſtubbornneſs enough in the heart of man, to throw off the præceptive part of the Law, but there is not power enough in the hand of any man to throw of the pœnal part of the Law; the Laws of God are not (as ſome have compared the Laws of men) like Spiders webs, which catch and hold flyes only, or ſuch like weaker creatures; but the Laws of God are like Chains of Iron, able to hold the Eagles, and the Lions, yea the Leviathans of this World, who King it over all the Children of pride. Wo to him that ſtriveth with his Maker (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 45.9.) either reſiſting his word, or his works, his directions or diſpenſations, whether towards others or himſelf; Let the potſheard (as it there follows, and the beſt of men are no better) ſtrive with the Potſheards of the Earth, that is, with men like themſelves; let them meddle with their match, and not with the Almighty; let them take heed how they enter the liſts and undertake the combate with him, with whom they cannot in the leaſt make their party good, but ſhall be broken as the Potters Veſſel with an Iron Rod. How much ſoever the oppreſſor ſtriveth, he ſhall be oppreſſed; and as he hath taken away the Heritages of others, ſo he ſhall receive his heritage of the Almighty.

Thus far Job hath ſet it down only in general, that the oppreſſor hath an Heritage to receive, but in the following part of the Chapter, he tells us, what this Heritage is which he ſhall receive. And it is a very ſad and miſerable one; If his Children be multiplyed, it is for the Sword, &c.

VERS. 14, 15, 16, 17.

If his Children be multiplied, it is for the Sword: and his Off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread.
Thoſe that remain of him ſhall be buried in death: and his Widdowes ſhall not weep.
Though he heap up Silver as the duſt, and prepare rayment as the clay:
He may prepare it, but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the Innocent ſhall divide the Silver.

IN the former Verſe Job ſpake only in general, This is the Portion of a wicked man with God, and the Heritage of oppreſſors, which they ſhall receive of the Almighty. In this context, and ſo forward to the end of the Chapter, he gives us a particular of the Portion of a wicked man, and telleth us diſtinctly what he hath reaſon to expect, as the lot of his inheritance. We may reduce his whole diſcourſe about it unto theſe two heads.

Firſt, What puniſhments ſhall be the Portion of his poſterity.

Secondly, What ſhall be his own.

The puniſhment that ſhall be the Portion of his poſterity, is deſcribed from this 14 to the 19 Verſe. And that upon his own perſon, beginning at the 19 verſe, concludes the Chapter.

The words in hand ſhew the judgments of God upon a wicked mans poſterity.

Verſ. 14. If his Children be multiplied, it is for the Sword: and his Off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread.

We have Four or Five ſeveral puniſhments aſſigned his Children in theſe words, and thoſe which follow.

Firſt, The Sword. If his Children be multiplied, it is for the Sword.

Secondly, Famin. And his Off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread. Both in the 14 Verſe.

Thirdly, The Plague; Thoſe that remain of him ſhall be buried in death, in the former part of the 15 Verſe.

Fourthly, An Ignominious Burial; his Children ſhall dye undeſired; His widdowes ſhall not weep, in the latter part of the 15th Verſe.

Fifthly, The loſs or ſpoil of all the Riches which he had prepared and heaped up for his Children. As firſt, the loſs or ſpoil of Money. (Ver.16,17.) Though he heap up Silver as the duſt; Secondly, the loſs or ſpoil of goodly Apparel, though he prepare Raiment as the Clay, he may prepare it, but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall divide the Silver. Thirdly, the loſs or ſpoil of Houſes, Ver. 18. He buildeth his Houſe as a Moth. Thus Sword and Famine, and Plague, ſweep his poſterity from the face of the Earth to an inglorious Burial; and all his ſubſtance, with the goodly furniture of his Houſes, yea Houſes and all ſhall either periſh in their own hands, or fall into the hands of ſtrangers.

If his Children be multiplied, it is for the Sword.

That's the firſt judgment; as if he had ſaid, though it be granted, that he hath many Children, yet they ſhall ſoon be cut off. Further, the word which we render multiplied, ſignifies both to multiply and magnifie; which latter ſence gives us another aggravation of that miſery which deſcends upon the Off-ſpring of the wicked man. Though his Children be many, yea though they be come very great and mighty, though as their number encreaſeth, ſo their Riches or Honors encreaſe too, yet down they ſhall. Again, ſome by his Children, underſtand not only ſuch as are Born of him, but all his confederates and aſſociates, all the friends and Allies of his Family, by whom he hoped to ſtrengthen and ſecure himſelf while he lived and his eſtate when he dyed, even all theſe ſhall be but food for the Sword, and fewel for the devouring vengeance of God. The Sword here threatned, may be taken either ſtrictly for that known famous weapon of War, and ſo by a trope (frequent in Scripture) for War it ſelf; or it may be taken for Magiſtratical power, by which offenders are puniſhed, of which the Sword is both the Inſtrument and the Emblem. Whence the Apoſtle ſaith of Rulers (Rom. 13. 3.) They bear not the Sword in vain. Or it may be underſtood of the ſharp juſtice and vengeance of God, in what kind ſoever, hewing down ſinners, (Deut. 32. 41.) If I whet my glittring Sword, and my hand take hold of Judgment, I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and reward them that hate me. Any deſtroying evil is God's Sword, and evil men are called God's Sword, becauſe they are ſo apt to deſtroy and afflict his people, Pſal. 17. 13.) Deliver my Soul from the wicked, thy Sword (or as we tranſlate) which is thy Sword. Yea and drought cauſed by the extraordinary and long continued heat of the Sun, is called the Sword (the ſame word ſignifying both Drought and the Sword; as we may ſay in the Margin of our larger Bibles (Deut. 28. 22.) So that when Job ſaith, the wicked mans Children are multiplied for the Sword; the meaning is extendible to ſhew their liableneſs to any judgment whatſoever. Yet I conceive the Sword intended by Job is ſome one or all theſe three.

רבה Multiplicatus, magnificatus,

Firſt, The Sword of the Souldier, the Martial or Military Sword, his Children ſhall dye in Battel or in open War.

Secondly, The Sword of a Murtherer; his Children ſhall dye by Bloody-minded men in ſecret.

Thirdly, The Sword of a Magiſtrate; his Children ſhall commit ſuch crimes as ſhall make them obnoxious to the Sword of ordinary Juſtice. They ſhall be ſlain by the Law. If his Children be multiplied, it is for the Sword, or, as the Seventy render it, for the ſlaughter. The Original is very conciſe. The Text in terms is only thus, if his Children be multiplied, for the Sword; We ſupply thoſe words (which more plainly make the Sword, the deſign of their Multiplication) it is for the Sword; as if it had been ſaid, his Children are deſtinated or appointed for the Sword; they are born and brought up for ſlaughter, they are (as the Prophet ſpeaks in another caſe, (Zech. 11.4.) The flock of ſlaughter. The Sword is their Portion, not to conquer with it, but to fall by it.

Notanda eſt conciſa loquutio Hebraica, in (vel ad) gladium ſupplendo ſunt, vel deſtinantur; quaſi ad gladium nati et educati.

Hence Note, Children are a bleſſing, and the more Children the more bleſſing.

(As hath been ſhewed from other paſſages of this Book) yet this ſhall not be a bleſſing to the wicked man; For, as it followeth, it is for the Sword, that his Children are multiplied or magnified, that they are many or great.

Hence Note, Secondly, The very bleſſings of a wicked man are a curſe to him.

Children are a bleſſing, a ſweet bleſſing, but Children for the Sword are a Sword upon the Father. The Prophet threatens, (Mal. 2.1, 2.) If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, I will even ſend a curſe upon you, and will curſe your bleſſings: yea, I have curſed them already, becauſe you do not lay it to heart. To lay a thing to the heart, is to think of it with greateſt earneſtneſs and ſeriouſneſs. Now ſaith the Lord by the Prophet, Though ye hear my word, or take it in at the ear, yet if ye do not ponder my word, and lay it to heart, both as to your eſteem, and for your practice, I will even curſe your bleſſings; that is, I will make thoſe things a curſe to you which in themſelves are bleſſings. It is not ſo bad not to have a bleſſing, as to have it curſed; not to have Children is an affliction, but when we have them, that the Sword or Plague ſhould take them, eſpecially the Sin-plague, or corruptions of the World, this goes deep, and is a dreadful affliction. As Chriſt ſaith, If Salt have loſt its ſavour, wherewith ſhall it be ſeaſoned? So we may ſay, if our bleſſings make us miſerable, what ſhall make us happy? How miſerable are wicked men when they ſeem to be moſt happy? Seeing there is a curſe in their bleſſings. When we ſee the faireſt cluſter of their Grapes, we cannot ſay as it is in the Prophet (Iſa. 65. 8.) Hurt it not, for there is a bleſſing in it. There is a bleſſing in ſome cluſters of Children, not only as they are bleſſed of God, but as they are bleſſed unto us; yet when wicked men have Children like cluſters of Grapes, their Wives being like a Vine upon the walls of their Houſe, yet you cannot ſay, there is a bleſſing in it, hurt it not. I know the cluſters of good men, even their Children many times prove a croſs to them; ſeveral of Davids Children were ſo to him; yet this is a ſpecial threat againſt wicked men; their cluſters have no bleſſing in them. Though a wicked man have Children and Riches, yet a curſe hangs over his head; whereas the afflictions of a godly man are ſanctified, and his evils made good unto him; when he is in want of all outward bleſſings, yet he wants not a bleſſing, becauſe he enjoyes the favourable preſence of God. Thus the Prophet triumphed in believing (Hab. 3. 17.) Although the Fig-tree ſhall not Bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, the labour of the Olive ſhall fail, and the Feild ſhall yeild no meat, the flock ſhall be cut off from the Fold, and there ſhall be no Herd in the ſtalls. Theſe are hard caſes, but is the godly man miſerable in any of theſe caſes? No; he hath a bleſſing in all, and he may notwithſtanding all, as it follows in the ſame place, rejoyce in the Lord, and joy in the God of his Salvation. When clouds and darkneſs compaſs him about here below, yet precious promiſes hang over his head, ready to drop and diſtil upon him; what different ifs and thoughs doth the Scripture put in reference to the wicked and the godly; here is and if, or a though, his Children be multiplied, and though he heap up Silver as the duſt, and Raiment as the Clay, yet he is miſerable; he is unhappy, though he have all that which he calls happineſs. A godly man hath a better ſort of ifs and thoughs; though he walk through the valley of the ſhaddow of death, yet ſhall he fear no evil, (Pſal. 23.4.) And again, (Pſal. 46.2,3.)

Therefore will not we fear, though the Earth be moved, and though the Mountains be carried into the midſt of the Sea, though the Waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the Mountains ſhake with the ſwelling thereof, &c. Here are four thoughs, each one importing trouble enough to diſquiet and fright a well ſettled man, yet the godly man is not ſtirr'd; for when theſe ſtorms are up, and theſe Seas rage, even then, as it follows at the fourth verſe of the ſame Pſalm, There is a River, the ſtreams whereof make glad the City of God; that is, the Citizens of God. Who though they may be poor, ſick, diſgraced, childleſs, yet unbleſſed or unhappy they cannot be. This firſt Obſervation runs through the whole context, and is a truth in all as well as this particular, If his Children be multiplied, it is to the Sword.

We read (2 Sam. 21. 1.) of a Famin continuing three Years together, and David enquiring of the Lord about the cauſe of that ſad diſpenſation, was anſwered, It is for Saul and for his bloody houſe, becauſe he ſlew the Gibeonites Hereupon David called the Gibeonites, and ſaid unto them, What ſhall I do for you, and wherewithal ſhall I make the Attonement, that ye may bleſs the inheritance of the Lord? And the Gibeonites ſaid unto him, we will have no Silver nor Gold of Saul, &c. And he ſaid, what you ſhall ſay, that will I do for you. And they anſwered the King, the man that conſumed us, &c. Let ſeven men of his Sons be delivered unto us, and we will hang them up unto the Lord in Gibeath of Saul: And the King ſaid I will give them. But the King ſpared Mephiboſheth the Son of Jonathan, the Son of Saul, becauſe of the Lords Oath, &c. and delivered ſeven others to be hanged. Here we ſee Jonathan a good man ſpared in the ſparing of his Son: And Saul, a man from whom God was departed, ſmitten and puniſhed in his ſeven Sons or Grandchildren deliver'd up to death. How dreadful a Tragedy is that which is ſtoried of Ahabs Sons (2 Kings 10.7.) Ahab was a wicked man, and he had many Sons who were all brought forth to the Sword, upon the receit of Jehu's Letter to the Rulers of Samaria, ſo ſaith the Holy ſtory; They took the Kings Sons, and ſlew Seventy perſons, and put their Heads in Baskets, and ſent him them to Jezreel. I ſuppoſe ſuch a Preſent in all points was never ſent to any Prince, either before or ſince unto this day. It is wonderful to hear of a mans Sons multiplying to Seventy: But to ſee them all multiplied to the Sword, and ſlain as one man in one day, is a ſtupendious Judgment of God. Take one Inſtance more, Haman multiplied Sons, He had Ten, but they were multiplied to the Sword, (Heſt. 9. 10.) The Ten Sons of Haman the Son of Hammedatha, the Enemy of the Jews, they ſlew, &c. The Prophet denounceth a dreadful threatning (Hoſ. 9. 13.) Ephraim, as I ſaw Tyrus, is planted in a pleaſant place: but Ephraim ſhall bring forth his Children to the Murderer; that is, his Children ſhall be Murdered. And hence ſome conceive, that the Prophet foreſeeing this heavy Judgment coming upon Ephraim, prayeth in the next verſe (after he had been a while at a pauſe in his own Spirit, what to ask of God for them; (v. 14.) Give them, O Lord, what wilt thou give? Give them a miſcarrying Womb that never bare, and dry Breaſts; as if he had ſaid, O Lord, let them be Barren and bring forth no Children, rather then that their Children ſhould be multiplied to the Sword, and brought forth to ſlaughter. In which ſence Chriſt himſelf ſaith, (Luk. 23. 29.) Behold the dayes are coming, in the which they ſhall ſay, Bleſſed are the Barren, and the Womb that never bare, and the Paps which never gave ſuck. This is a ſad caſe, when that which is in it ſelf a curſe, is to be reckoned among our bleſſings. Better it is to have no Children, then to have them brought forth to the Murderer, or as Job here ſpeaks, to have them multiplied to the Sword.

And his Off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread.

Such as the Sword ſhall ſpare, Famin ſhall eat up and devour; when the Text ſaith, They ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread, it may be underſtood two wayes.

Firſt, That they ſhall not have plenty; though they have bread to keep (as we ſay) Life and Soul together, yet they ſhall not have enough to live comfortably; they ſhall be pinched or pined with hunger, and though not ſtarved, yet in a ſtarving condition, or hunger-bitten; Not to have enough is a degree of Famin.

Secondly, When he ſaith, They ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread, more is intended then expreſſed; and ſo not to be ſatisfied with bread, is, to famiſh for want of bread; not to be ſatisfied with bread, is, they ſhall periſh becauſe they have no bread. Such forms of ſpeech are frequent in Scripture, (Matth. 12. 33.) Whoſoever ſpeaketh a word againſt the Son of man, it ſhall be forgiven him: but whoſoever ſpeaketh againſt the Holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven him, neither in this World, neither in the World to come; the meaning is, he ſhall be puniſhed in this World and in the World to come. The words are milder then the ſence; not to be forgiven in this World, nor in the World to come, is to be puniſhed everlaſtingly, or to be puniſhed both in this World, and in that which is to come. So, here, His Off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread, is, they ſhall be famiſhed and dye for want of bread.

In Scripture, Bread ſignifieth, firſt, any kind of good thing belonging to this life. When Chriſt directeth us to pray, (Matth. 6. 11.) Give us this day our dayly bread, we are to underſtand that all the needfull comforts of this life are asked in that one Petition.

Secondly, Bread is put, more particularly, for any kind of food, even the beſt; all things eatable come under the name of bread. Thus fleſh is bread, and greateſt dainties are bread, (2 Sam. 9. 7.) David ſaid unto Mephiboſheth, Fear not, for I will ſurely ſhew thee kindneſs for Jonathan thy Fathers ſake, and will reſtore thee all the Land of Saul thy Father, and thou ſhalt eat bread at my Table continually; that is, thou ſhalt ſit with me, and have ſuch as I have, a kingly fare, and that was more then bread, it was all manner of dainties: a Kings Table is a full Table.

Thirdly, Bread is taken properly and in kind, for the loweſt and meaneſt ſort of food only, becauſe though bread be the moſt neceſſary food, yet it is the moſt common food, which is proper for man; and a man that is kept only with bread, he is kept with the loweſt and moſt ſparing dyet. In this latter ſence we are to expound this Scripture; His Off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread, that is, they ſhall not have ſo much as the meaneſt food, they ſhall not have that which is neceſſary, they ſhall want even bread it ſelf. The Septuagint Tranſlate fully to this ſence, if eſcaping the Sword his Children come to be men, they ſhall beg, they ſhall go about the Streets from door to door begging for a cruſt: in this ſence David uſeth the word (Pſal. 37. 25.) I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not ſeen the Righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging bread; that is, I have not ſeen them deſtitute of that which is needful and neceſſary for a livelihood: though they have not dainties or abundance, yet they have food convenient, or bread enough for the ſupport of life. Job propheſieth the quite contrary of the wicked mans Off-ſpring, They ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread.

Hence Obſerve, The greateſt plenty which the wicked provide for their Children, is no bar to their Childrens poverty, nor ſhall it prevent their want.

How much ſoever a man leaves behind for his Children, if he leave not a bleſſing behind, he leaves poverty behind, his plenty will come to poverty. A little, with a bleſſing from God, is enough both for our ſelves and ours: But aboundance without a bleſſing is not enough for either. This is the meaning of Davids aſſertion (Pſal. 37. 16.) A little that a Righteous man hath, is better then the Riches of many wicked. The Righteous mans Penny is better Silver then the wicked mans is, not in it ſelf, not either as to quanity or quality; but becauſe the Righteous mans Penny, though a little one, hath a bleſſing in it to him and his, which the wicked mans hath not.

Secondly, Obſerve, Not to have that which ſatisfieth, is, if not as bad as to have nothing at all, yet next door to it.

Suppoſe a man periſh not by Famine, yet it is a very great evil not to be ſatisfied. There are two Conſiderations, wherein to have bread, and not to be ſatisfied, is a great affliction.

Firſt, To have ſo little that it will not ſatisfie nature, (which I conceive is the thing intended in this place) this is a ſore evil. We commonly ſay Nature is ſatisfied with a little, and Grace with leſs. And though we can never have ſo little, but that Grace is ſatisfied with it (for Grace is ſatisfied even when the Lord lets Nature periſh) yet many have too little to ſatisfie, that is, to ſuſtaine Nature. Some would have bread to ſatisfie their luſts, and they, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (Rom. 13. ult.) Make proviſion for the fleſh to fulfill the luſts of it. To be cut ſhort of the creature, as to the exceſs, is a mercy, but not to have bread for the neceſſity of Nature, is in it ſelf a curſe. (Levit. 26. 26.) When I have broken the ſtaffe of your bread (ſaith the Lord) Ten Women ſhall bake your bread in one Oven, and they ſhall deliver you your bread again by weight: and ye ſhall eat and not be ſatisfied. As if he had ſaid, you ſhall have Ten times leſs bread then you uſed to have; that Oven which ſerved but one womans batch before ſhall ſerve Ten; and then you ſhall eat bread, and not be ſatisfied, that is, you ſhall have leſs bread then will ſatisfie. It was the Lords charge or command to his ancient People, the Jews, concerning the Levites, as alſo the ſtranger, and the Fatherleſs, that they ſhould have bread to ſatisfaction provided for them, (Deut. 14. 29.) And the Levite, becauſe he hath no part nor inheritance with thee, and the ſtranger, and the fatherleſs, and the widdow, which are within thy gates, ſhall come, and ſhall eat, and be ſatisfied, that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doeſt. Such was the Lords care of thoſe who could leaſt care for themſelves, that they ſhould have not only enough to keep them from ſtarving, but that they ſhould have a competency, or comfortable ſubſiſtence, they ſhall eat and be ſatisfied. To eat leſs then will ſatisfie Nature, is a burden to Nature, as well as to eat more. And hence that promiſe (Pſal. 22. 26.) The meek ſhall eat and be ſatisfied. And again (Pſal. 37. 19.) They ſhall not be aſhamed in the evil time, and in the dayes of Famine they ſhall be ſatisfied.

Secondly, As to eat and not be ſatisfied, becauſe we have too little, is a great evil, ſo to have much and not be ſatisfied, is a far greater evil. This curſe is viſible upon many; they have much to eat, and yet are not ſatisfied. (Eccl. 5. 10.) He that loveth Silver, ſhall not be ſatisfied with Silver; that is, how much ſoever he hath of it, he ſhall not be ſatisfied; his inward appetite, his deſire ſhall increaſe, he ſhall have a hunger upon his Spirit worſe then the hunger of the Stomack. Solomon gives us the character of ſuch a perſon, (Eccleſ. 4. 8.) There is one alone, and there is not a ſecond, yea, he hath neither Child nor Brother, yet is there no end of all his labour, neither is his eye ſatisfied with Riches, neither ſaith he, for whom do I labour, and bereave my Soul of good? This is alſo vanity, yea, it is a ſore travel. He eates, and is never ſatisfied, who thinks he hath not enough, how much ſoever he hath more then he can eat; an unſatisfied body is a great affliction, but an unſatisfied mind is a far greater, and is at once an affliction and a ſin. Not to be ſatisfied with a little, with the leaſt Portion which God alloweth us is ſinful; and ſuch is the ſinfulneſs of many, that they are never ſatisfied, how much ſoever their Portion is. The preſent Text and point may reach this diſſatisfaction, both as it is the ſin and the puniſhment of the wicked mans poſterity: but I rather conceive that other unſatisfiedneſs here intended and threatned only as an affliction or puniſhment of the wicked mans poſterity, a want of ſufficient bread to ſatisfie them, His Off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread.

Verſ. 15. Thoſe that remain of him ſhall be Buried in death: and his widdowes ſhall not weep.

In the former verſe his poſterity were expreſſed by two words; Firſt, His Children; Secondly, His Off-ſpring. In this verſe we have a Third word for the ſame purpoſe; His Remains, or as we render, Thoſe that remain of him; yet this title may be underſtood two wayes,

Firſt, More generally for all his Children left behind him, when he goeth out of the World, or departs this life

Secondly, More eſpecially for thoſe of his Children that eſcape the two former evils, Sword and Famin.

The former verſe ſpeaks as if the Sword and Famin had ſwept them all away, and made a clear riddance of his whole family. But ſuppoſe any ſhould be left remaining after that common deſtruction and miſerable devaſtation, yet they ſhould not long eſcape the hands of death. The Scripture ſpeaks ſometimes as if all were deſtroyed when when only many are. That which moſt ſuffer, all are ſaid to ſuffer. (Jer. 44. 27, 28.) Behold, I will watch over them for evil, and not for good; and all the men of Judah that are in the Land of Egypt ſhall be conſumed, by the Sword, and by the Famin, untill there be an end of them. Here are the two conſuming evils, ſpoken of by Job, Sword and Famin; all the men of Judah ſhall be conſumed, by the Sword, and by the Famin, untill there be an end of them. Yet (it follows) A ſmall number that eſcape the Sword, ſhall return out of the Land of Egypt into the Land of Judah, &c. Where only a few eſcape a miſchief, all are ſaid to fall under it. Thus here, becauſe the moſt of the wicked mans Children ſhall fall, by the Sword, and the Famin, the Text ſpeaks as if all had fallen. But, if any be left, They Shall be buried in death.] What elſe? Should not a man be buried when he is dead? Or what doth Job mean, when he ſaith, They ſhall be buried in death? As ſoon as Sarah was dead, Abraham, though he loved her intirely, yet provided for her Burial, and thus beſpake the men of that Countrey (Gen. 23. 4.) I am a ſtranger and a ſojourner with you, give me a poſſeſſion of a Burying place with you, that I may Bury my dead out of my ſight. Why then is it ſaid here, That thoſe that remain ſhall be buried in death? There are divers Interpretations of it, which I ſhall touch upon when I have only noted, That the Septuagint read, They ſhall dye in death, which is of like force, They ſhall dye the death. That repetition of the word either way adds force to the matter ſpoken, and ſignifies not only the certainty of death, but the ſharpneſs and grievouſneſs of it. But to keep our rendering, they ſhall be buried in death.

First, Some underſtand it only thus, They ſhall be buried in the Grave, which is called, The Chamber of death, (Pro. 7. 27.) The Sepulcher is the houſe of the dead, and as it were of death it ſelf, there death keeps houſe. But I ſhall paſs this as too low and flat an Interpretation.

ἐν θανάτῳ τελευτήσει. Sept.

Secondly, Thus; They ſhall be buried in death; that is, they ſhall be forgotten as ſoon as they dye; to be ſo, is a judgment; then a man is properly and indeed buried in death, when he is forgotten as ſoon as he is dead, and no ſooner out of the World, but out of all mens mindes, unleſs to think and ſpeak of him with abhorrence. Thus to ſay a man is buried in death, is as much as to ſay, he ſhall not be remembered with credit when he is dead. Some are thus buried in life or alive, and many are thus buried in death. This is a fair Interpretation.

Thirdly, They ſhall be buried in death; that is, they ſhall be buried preſently as ſoon as they dye. They that take care of their Funeral, ſhall ſcarce tarry till the breath is out of their bodies, or the breath ſhall no ſooner be out of their bodies, but their bodies ſhall be thruſt into the Grave. Men who dye in honour, are buried with deliberation; but all men, even neareſt friends and relations ſhall be ſo weary of theſe, that they ſhall haſten, yea hurry their carkaſſes to the Earth. So to be buried in death is to be buried even while dying or before death hath made a perfect conqueſt over them; implying that all are glad to be rid of them. So Mr. Broughton ſeems to underſtand Job's Text, Tranſlating it thus; His remnant ſhall be buried as ſoon as they are dead. Which he gloſſeth thus; As contemned ſlaves preſently. According to this Interpretation, the ſence is, they ſhall be brought to the Grave without any comely attendance, and ſhall have an ignoble Burial. The dead bodies of great men are kept ſometimes a Week, ſometimes a Month, yea ſomtimes ſeveral Months above ground, that they may be buried at laſt with greater Solemnity. But theſe no ſooner dead but buried, away with them. The Particle Beth, uſed here in the Text, ſhews ſuch a ſuddenneſs of one thing done after another, as if there came no time between, much leſs any conſiderable time. So 'tis rendered in that famous Propheſie of the Kingdom of Chriſt in and with the Saints (Dan. 2. 44.) And in the dayes of thoſe thoſe Kings ſhall the God of Heaven ſet up a Kingdom, which ſhall never be deſtroyed. When he ſaith, in the dayes, we are not to underſtand it, that that Kingdom ſhall be contemporary with thoſe other Kingdoms; for though Chriſt hath a Kingdom in all Kingdoms, and a Throne among all Thrones, and a People among all People, yet the Prophet is not ſo much ſpeaking of that Kingdom of Chriſt which ſhall grow up in the dayes of thoſe Kings, as of that which ſhall be built upon their ruines. And accordingly Mr. Broughton Tranſlates that place, not in the dayes, but, preſently after the dayes of thoſe Kings ſhall the God of Heaven ſet up another Kingdom. Thus here, They ſhall be buried in death; that is, preſently after they are dead, or they ſhall be buried in obſcurity without pomp, no man regarding, ſcarce any man accompanying their carkaſſes to the Grave.

Fourthly, Others underſtand this burying in death, of the Second death, or of eternal death; ſuch are buried in death indeed, who lye under the bond of eternal death. The Godly are buried in life, and the wicked in death. But I ſhall not ſtay upon that notion; for I conceive Job is not deſcribing the wicked under eternal, but temporal evils and puniſhments.

Fifthly, We may take death here by way of ſpecialty for ſome extraordinary death, and ſo to be buried in death, is to dye of the Plague; and then we have the three Great Judgments of God met together in afflicting the poſterity of the wicked man, Sword, Famine, and the Peſtilence. The Plague or Peſtilence may juſtly be called Death, by way of Eminency, becauſe it is a diſeaſe ſo deadly. Among the Chaldeans the Peſtilence is not numbred among diſeaſes, but 'tis called Death. And ſo we find it expreſt (Revel. 6. 8.) And I looked, and behold a pale Horſe, and his name that ſate on him was death, that is, the Peſtilence, and Hell followed him, and power was given unto him, over the fourth part of the Earth, to kill with Sword, and with hunger, and with death; that is, with the Plague or Peſtilence. And they who dye of the Plague may well be ſaid to be buried in death, as to the firſt ſence given, becauſe they, as ſoon as dead, are ſuddainly carried out to Burial, leſt they ſhould infect the Air, and ſo taint the bodies of the living. And ſo ſome render Davids choice of the peſtilence (1 Sam. 24. 13.) by this General word, he choſe three dayes Death. In our language we commonly called the Peſtilence, not only The Sickneſs, as if no diſeaſe were a ſickneſs except that, but we call it alſo The Mortality, as if no ſickneſs brought death with it but that; and experience teacheth, that no diſeaſe bringeth ſuch certain death as that. How doth death ride as it were in triumph, where the Peſtilence reigneth. Other diſeaſes ſlay their Thouſands, but the Plague of Peſtilence its Ten thouſands, and therefore this may be received for the cleareſt and moſt proper expoſition of this Text, They that remain of him ſhall be buried in death, that is, the Plague (which is ſay ſome an immediate ſtroak from God) ſhall ſweep them away, after they have ſurvived and ſcrambled out of the hands of Sword, and Famin.

Obſerve, Firſt, God hath variety of judgments at his call; when he commands, Sword, and Famin, and Peſtilence, ſay, here are we.

If one miſs, the other ſhall hitt; as it is ſaid (1 Kings 19. 17.) Him that eſcapeth the Sword of Hazael, ſhall Jehu ſlay; and he that eſcapeth the Sword of Jehu, ſhall Eliſha ſlay. He that eſcapes one judgment may fall by the hand of another; let not the wicked man pleaſe himſelf, in the hopes of impunity, becauſe this or that evil, Sword, or Famin, have not diſpatcht him, for the Peſtilence quickly may. And if he eſcape all theſe, and a thouſand deaths beſides, yet the ſecond Death or Hell will take him at the laſt, unleſs he repent, return, and make his peace with God. How ſhall they eſcape, what can ſave them, who neglect the great Salvation?

Secondly, Note, The Peſtilence is a very grievous and ſore judgment, 'tis death.

This is one of the three evils, ſo often mentioned and threatned in the Prophets againſt a rebellious People; Famin, Sword, Peſtilence, are the firſt three, and in ſome ſence, Peſtilence is the firſt or worſt of the three. Is it not then a great mercy that God hath delivered us from it, that we have had ſo long a freedom from the arrow that flyeth by day, and from the Peſtilence that walketh in darkneſs? (Pſal. 91. 6.) It walketh not ſo much in natural darkneſs, or in the darkneſs of the Night, as in a Figurative darkneſs, no man knowing where it walkes, or whither it will walk, in the cleareſt light, whether to the poor mans Houſe, or to the Rich mans Houſe, whether to the dwelling of the Plebeian, or of the Prince, till it hath left its own mark, and given a deadly ſtroak. The Prophet Eliſha (2 Kings 8. 10.) ſaid to the Meſſenger that came to him from Benhadad, to know whether his Maſter ſhould recover or no, Go, ſay unto him, thou mayeſt certainly recover: howbeit, the Lord hath ſhewed me, that he ſhall ſurely dye. His meaning was, that his diſeaſe was ſuch as he might recover of, yet God had ſhewed him that he ſhould not. God can bring death in any diſeaſe, but ſome diſeaſes carry death in the very face of them. Hezekiah being ſick of the Plague (as ſome conceive, becauſe mention is made of a Malignant Ulcer or Boil, Iſa. 38. 21.) it is ſaid that Iſaiah came to him and told him, (v. 1.) Thus ſaith the Lord, ſet thine Houſe in order, for thou ſhalt ſurely dye, and not live; As if he had ſaid, thou art mark'd for death; thou art a dead man; thou art as ſure to dye of this diſeaſe, as if thou wert already dead. Thy diſeaſe is not only deadly, but death; though the Prophet knew the Lord was able to correct the Malignity of that diſeaſe, yet looking upon it in its own nature, he might ſay, thou ſhalt dye, and not live, as well as he ſaid ſo by direct order from the Lord; and he put this warning peece for death, both in the Affirmative, and in the Negative, to ſhew the undeniable ſequel of death in ſuch a caſe, unleſs the Lord (at whoſe command life and death, health and ſickneſſes are) would pleaſe to give a countermand. As the worſt of our ſpiritual diſeaſes is the Plague of the Heart, (1 Kings 8. 38.) So the worſt of outward diſeaſes is the plague of the body.

And his Widdows ſhall not weep.

The words ſeem to ſpeak only of one Husband, but of many Widdows. Which ſome ſay Job doth, becauſe the Ancients in thoſe parts had many Wives; yet we may expound it diſtributively, not collectively, His Widdows, that is, The Widdows of every one of them. And that makes the ſence more full and Emphatical; as if he ſaid, This ſhall be the temper of every one of their Widdows, one ſhall not be more tender-hearted or affectionate then another: when their Husbands dye, they ſhall all be like ſo many ſtocks or ſtones in that doleful day.

Viduas pluralitèr dicit, quod ſæpe plures uxores haberent veteres illi. Merc.

His Widdows ſhall not weep] It may be Queſtioned, why they ſhould not?

Say ſome, his Widdows ſhall not weep, for they ſhall be cut off too: his Children and Wives ſhall be ſlain together, and ſo none left to weep. But this is rather to take away the ſubject of the Queſtion, then to anſwer it. And therefore we muſt ſuppoſe his Widdows living, and enquire, why they are not weeping, there being nothing more proper for a Widdow, then tears at the remembrance of her lately deceaſed Husband.

Viduæ non plorabunt quia ſimul morientur. Coc.

We may anſwer,

Firſt, They weep not, being overcome with the greatneſs of their trouble, and terror of the judgment; to looſe a Husband any way is a great affliction, but to have a Husband ſnatcht away by ſome extraordinary death is greater. Now great afflictions ſtop the natural courſe of tears, they, as it were, dry up the Springs of ſorrow, or at leaſt hinder them from flowing forth. Light ſorrows ſpeak out, and make a noiſe in Lamentations, but vaſt ſorrows ſpend themſelves in an amazed ſilence and aſtoniſhment. Thus the Lord forbad Ezekiels mourning for the death of his Wife, the deſire of his eyes, for a ſign to the Jews that he would bring ſuch a calamity upon their moſt deſireable things, their Sons and their Daughters, as ſhould exceed mourning (Ezek. 24. 21, 22, 23.) Behold, I will prophane my Sanctuary, the excellency of your ſtrength, the deſire of your eyes, and that which your Soul pitieth; and your Sons and your Daughters whom ye have left ſhall fall by the Sword: and ye ſhall do as I have done, you ſhall not cover your lips, nor eat the bread of men, and your tires ſhall be upon your Heads, and your Shooes upon your feet (that is, ye ſhall not uſe any geſtures, nor make any ſignes of ſorrow, as it follows) ye ſhall not mourn nor weep, but ye ſhall pine away in your iniquities, and mourn one towards wards another; as if he had ſaid, your miſeries and ſufferings ſhall be ſuch as open mourning cannot expreſs, but ye ſhall conſume away in a ſtupid and deſperate ſenſleſneſs under them.

Secondly, When he ſaith, His Widdows ſhall not weep, it may note the worthleſneſs and wickedneſs of their Huſbands. Their baſeneſs was ſuch while they lived, that their neereſt relations would not beſtow a tear upon them when they were dead. It is ſaid of wicked Jehoram King of Judah (2 Chron. 21. 20.) That he dyed without being deſired; that is, none deſired that he ſhould live any longer, all were weary of him. Now they who dye undeſired, dye alſo unlamented. No man grieves for the loſs of that either perſon or thing, which he did not deſire. And when 'tis ſaid here, His Widdows ſhall not weep, the meaning is, that none ſhall; when they who are neareſt related (being one fleſh with the deceaſed) mourn not, it cannot be ſuppoſed that others ſhould.

Thirdly, Theſe words, His Widdows ſhall not weep, may ſignifie that he ſhall not have any Solemn Burial, as was touched before. Weeping and Lamentation are the moſt proper funeral Muſick; then nothing ſounds ſo well as a ſigh, nor is any thing then ſo much in ſeaſon as a tear. In Rama was there a voyce heard (Matth. 2. 18. What voyce?) Lamentation and weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her Children, and would not be comforted, (and why ſo? the reaſon is added) becauſe they were not; that is, they were not alive, but dead. But here ſaith Job, Husbands are not, and their Widdows weep not; as Wives, they had no comfort in them, and as Widdows they had no ſorrow for them.

Hence Obſerve, To dye unlamented, is a lamentable death.

It is reported among thoſe Judgments which fell upon the People of Iſrael for their ſins, eſpecially for their great ſin of unbeleif, That their Prieſts fell by the ſword, and their Widdows made no lamentation, (Pſal. 78. 64.) Which ſome expound according to the ſecond ſence given of theſe words in Job, Their Widdows were ſlain with them. Others, that they were ſo overwhelmed with grief for the fall of their Husbands, that they dyed themſelves preſently, and ſo could make no lamentation for them. Such was the caſe of Phinehas his Wife, who hearing that her Husband was ſlain, and the Ark of God taken, travel'd preſently, and having ſaid, The Glory is departed from Iſrael, ſhe her ſelf departed, (1 Sam. 4. 19, 20.) Whether upon theſe, or any other grounds, theſe Widdows made no lamentation: the ſcope of the Pſalm is the ſame, ſhewing that it is a judgment either upon ſuch perſons in ſpecial, or upon the times in general, when men dye, and lamentation is not made for them. Uſually in all places and times (Solomon ſpeaks, Eccl. 12. 5.) When man goeth to his long home, the mourners go about the ſtreets. And therefore to dye and none mourn, is to fall below the common condition of man. We read ſometimes that the Lord to ſhew his diſpleaſure, both againſt the dead, and the living, hath by ſpecial order interdicted the living from mourning for the dead. (Jer. 16. 5.) Thus ſaith the Lord, enter not into the Houſe of mourning, neither go to lament, nor bemoan them; for I have taken away my peace from this people, ſaith the Lord, even loving kindneſs and mercies: both the great and the ſmall ſhall dye in this Land; they ſhall not be buried, neither ſhall men lament for them. And again (Chap. 22. 10.) Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him, &c. There is a prohibition againſt weeping for the dead, becauſe their ſtate was better then theirs, who lived to be carried away captives. And therefore it is added (v. 11.) Weep for him that goeth away (into captivity to Babylon,) for he ſhall return no more, nor ſee his native Countrey. And at the 18 verſe, Thus ſaith the Lord concerning Jehojakim the Son of Joſiah King of Judah, they ſhall not lament for him, ſaying, ah my Brother, or ah Siſter: they ſhall not lament for him, ſaying, ah Lord, or ah his glory. Such were the expreſſions, ſuch the language of ſorrow at the Burial of great Princes; their kindred uſe then to groan out, Ah my Brother, or ah Siſter; and their Subjects in General, Ah Lord, or ah his Glory, or Magnificence, how is that ſtained! How is all his pomp, all his ſplendour laid and obſcured in the duſt? And whether we take thoſe words in that place, they ſhall not lament, as a command not to lament, or (as I conceive they are to be taken) only as declaring the event, that they ſhould not, they are of equal ſtrength as to the confirmation of the point in hand. I grant there is no reaſon at all to lament the death of good men, in reſpect of themſelves, for they gain by it, (Phil. 1. 21.) And hence our Lord Chriſt when being led away to be Crucified, a great company of People and of Women followed him, which alſo bewayled and lamented him; he turning to them ſaid, Daughters of Jeruſalem, weep not for me, but weep for your ſelves, and for your children; for behold the dayes are coming, in which they ſhall ſay, Bleſſed are the barren, &c. But though good men dying do not at all need the tears of the living, becauſe they are entred into greater good then any they had while they lived; yet it is a great argument, both of the goodneſs, uſefulneſs, and holineſs of thoſe who dye, while they lived, as alſo of the favour and reſpect of God himſelf to them, when going out of this World, they are greatly lamented, and the mourners go about the Streets while they are going to the Grave. They deſerve to be moſt lamented who need it leaſt. And they have moſt need to be lamented, who deſerve it leaſt. When widdows (unleſs ſuch as have loſt all natural affection) weep not, Husbands deſerve not. His widdows ſhall not weep.

Verſ. 16. Though he heap up Silver as the duſt, and prepare raiment as the clay.
17. He may prepare it, but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall divide the Silver.

Job proceeds further to ſhew the miſery of the wicked man in theſe two verſes.

Though he heap up Silver as the duſt.

Here are two words that expreſs aboundance of Silver in the poſſeſſion of the wicked man.

Firſt, It is heaped up. When Chriſt would ſhew what full returns charitable gifs ſhall have; he ſaith, Give, and it ſhall be given you, good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over, ſhall men give into your boſomes. (Luk. 6. 38.) The wicked mans meaſure is full of Silver; though men do not give into his boſom, yet he will get it (if he can) rather then not get it, out of the bowels of other men; and he will never leave getting and griping, vexing and oppreſſing, till he hath gotten a heap of Silver. That he heaps up Silver, is the firſt ſignification of his aboundance.

There is a ſecond word, yet more ſignificant, or which ſignifies more, Though he heap up Silver as the duſt; that is, though he heap up ſo much, that it is as common and plentiful as the duſt with him and his, of which enough and too much for the moſt part is every where to be had. The aboundance of Riches in Solomon's time is thus expreſſed, (1 Kings 10. 27.) And the King made Silver to be in Jeruſalem as Stones, and Cedars made he to be as the Sycamore Trees, that are in the Valley for aboundance. Joſeph is ſaid to gather Corn in Egypt in the ſeven Years of plenty, as the Sand of the Sea. (Gen. 41 49.) Noting the vaſt ſtore which he gathered and laid up againſt the years of Famin. To gather Corn as the Sand, to make Silver as the Stones, to heap it up as duſt, are all high ſtrains of Rhetorick, implying the ſame thing. The next words are ſpoken in a like ſtrain, and with a like intent.

And prepare raiment as the clay; or as the word is read, as a heap.

By Raiment, he means all that furniture which ſerves either barely for the neceſſity, or for the ornament of the body. As if he had ſaid, Though he hath piles of Apparel, whole Wardrobes filled with ſeveral ſorts of Raiment, yet, as it follows in the next verſe; but before I open that, I ſhall a little, conſider the oppreſſors way and ſtudy, the courſe and ſcope for his life, and of all his actions, which ſeem to be here ſet forth under theſe high and ſtrong Hyperbolies; Though he heap up Silver as the duſt, and prepare Raiment as the clay.

בחמר Sicut acervum, aliqui legunt בחמר in acervum, ſimplicior prorſus et lenior ſenſus. Bold.

Hence Note, Firſt, The work and buſineſs of a Worldly man is to gather Riches.

Such as their nature is, ſuch are their motions and deſignes, (1 Joh. 4. 5.) They are of the World: therefore ſpeak they of the World; and as their language is of the World, ſo their labour is for the World.

Secondly, Note, A little of the World will not ſerve the Worldly mans turn, he muſt have heap upon heap, if it be poſſible till it be heaped up as the duſt.

Job's ſuppoſitions may be reſolved into poſitions; they heap up wealth as duſt or clay; or as the Prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks, (Chap. 5. 8.) They join Houſe to Houſe, they lay Feild to Feild, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midſt of the Earth. They would have all to themſelves; their Spirit is full of envy at the little which others have, and it is never filled, how much ſoever themſelves have. A little doth not pleaſe, a competency is ſcarcity, they are inſatiable, they would get more when they have got moſt, and they would be richer when they are at richeſt. It is not ſinfull to have abundance, but to covet after abundance, and to project abundance, that is ſinful. The Prophet Habakkuk ſpeaks of ſuch (Chap. 2. 6.) Shall not all theſe take up a Parable againſt him, and a taunting Proverb againſt him, and ſay; wo to him that increaſeth that which is not his: how long? And to him that ladeth himſelf with thick Clay; that is, with the things of this World. The covetous are deſcribed labouring, and that in the very fire, to load themſelves with thick Clay. And the nearer they come to their Journeys end, the more would they load themſelves with it. The leſs way remains for them to go, the more proviſion they make. This diſeaſe of heaping up Riches, encreaſeth moſt when men are neareſt death. They are never ſo craving for the World, as when they are going out of the World; and when they have no appearance of need, they have the ſtrongeſt workings of deſire. They would be getting aboundance, even when they are dying, though (as Chriſt hath aſſured us (Luk. 12. 15.) The life of man doth not conſiſt in the abundance of that which he poſſeſſeth. How ſad is it that man ſhould live in the purſuit of that wherein his life doth not at all conſiſt? As all our care cannot add one Cubit to our ſtature, nor (of it ſelf) one duſt to the duſt-heap of our Riches; ſo how many heaps ſoever of this duſt we have heaped up, they cannot add one moment of time nor minute of content to our lives. And as theſe heaps of Silver and Apparrel cannot keep the Rich mans life, ſo the Rich man ſeldom keeps them while he lives. For, Though he heap up Silver as the duſt, and prepare Raiment as the Clay, yet (as it follows)

Quo minus reſtat viæ eo plus quærant viatici. Cic. de Senect.

Verſ. 17. He may prepare it, but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall divide the Silver.

In this verſe Job ſheweth us how the wicked man is diſappointed, he is not contented with what he hath, and he ſhall be diſappointed of what he hath; he may prepare the Silver and the Raiment, with an opinion that they ſhall be his for ever. As the Rich man in the Goſpel ſaid, Soul take thine eaſe, eat drink and be merry, for thou haſt goods laid up for many years.

He may prepare it, &c.] As if Job had ſaid, I grant he may proſper ſo far as to get great heaps of Silver, but he ſhall not long enjoy what he hath gotten; or thus, let him toil and vex himſelf in preparing it as much as he will; So Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Well may he prepare it, God will ſuffer him to do it. And ſo 'tis of like ſence with that of the Prophet, (Mal. 1. 4.) Whereas Edom ſaith, we are impoveriſhed, but we will return, and build the deſolate places; Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts; they ſhall build, but I will throw down, and they ſhall call them the border of wickedneſs, and the people againſt whom the Lord hath indignation for ever. The wicked man ſaith, I will heap up Silver, and prepare Rayment, I, do (ſaith God,) prepare it, and ſpare not, but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall divide the Silver,

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The ſinful cares and endeavours of a Worldly man may have much ſucceſs.

Whether that ſinfulneſs of his cares and endeavours do ariſe, either from the inordinacy of them, or from the unrighteouſneſs of them, he may prove a great getter, a great gainer in this World. Thus 'tis ſaid (Hoſ. 12. 7, 8.) He is a Merchant, the ballances of deceit are in his hand, he loveth to oppreſs; and Ephraim ſaid, yet I am become Rich, I have found me out ſubſtance. As if he had thus ſaid, and pleaſed himſelf in ſaying ſo; though I have oppreſſed others, yet I have proſpered; though I have been unjuſt, yet I have been ſucceſsful. He indeed carried it cloſely in all his labours, they could find none iniquity in him, yet it was the gain of iniquity by which he ſo proſpered.

Secondly, Obſerve, The ſucceſs of the cares and labours of Worldly men, doth not reach the end intended by them.

He may prepare it, yet not for any good to him; no, it ſhall be for anothers uſe, or rather for anothers uſe then he appointed it. What, or whoſe is that? The next words anſwer, The juſt ſhall put it on. What ſhall the juſt put on? The Raiment which the wicked man hath prepared: the juſt ſhall have the benefit, uſe, and comfort of what he hath prepared, And the innocent ſhall divide the Silver.

The former verſe ſpake of the Silver firſt, and of the Raiment laſt, this verſe ſpeaks of the Raiment firſt and of the Silver laſt. When two things are mentioned in Scripture, it is uſual in the repetition of them to begin with the laſt and ſo proceed to the firſt. The juſt ſhall put it on, &c. The Scripture ſpeaks only againſt the unjuſt man; and here the Rich man ſtands in oppoſition to the juſt; the juſt ſhall put on his Raiment, and the innocent ſhall divide the Silver. That man ſhall poſſeſs his treaſure, for whom he never intended it. The innocent ſhall divide the Silver. But ſhall they invade the mans eſtate, and pull away his goods becauſe he is a wicked man? No, but the providence of God ſhall give them a right to it. We may not without juſt cauſe given, take away the Raiment, or divide the Silver of the wickedeſt man in the World. We muſt not take it, becauſe he came unworthily by it, or is unworthy of it. We muſt not divide any mans, the worſt mans eſtate, till we can make out a good title to it.

Secondly, When it is ſaid, The innocent ſhall divide the Silver, we are to underſtand it not only of a diviſion among themſelves, but to and among the poor, they ſhall lay it out better then he laid it up. Thus Solomon concludes of ſuch a man (Pro. 28. 8.) He that by Uſury and unjuſt gain increaſeth his ſubſtance, he ſhall gather it for him that will pity the poor; that is, his Silver ſhall come into ſuch a mans hand and power, as will divide it to thoſe who have moſt need. So (Eccl. 2. 26.) God giveth to a man that is good in his ſight, wiſdom and knowledge and joy: But to the ſinner he giveth travel to gather, and to heap up, that he may give to him that is good before God. He doth not mean that the ſinner will give it to him that is good before God; for as the ſinner giveth little, if any thing of what he hath gotten, ſo he giveth leaſt of all, indeed nothing at all with his good will, or intentionally, to him that is good before God; but the meaning of the Preacher is, that God by his providence diſpoſeth the ſinners Riches into ſuch hands, as will diſtribute them to him that is good before God; that is, to the truly godly. As Job here deſcribes the right heirs of the oppreſſor, The juſt and the innocent.

He labours for himſelf, and his, no man more, no man ſo much, but neither himſelf nor his reap the benefit of his labours. Thus David ſpeaks (Pſal. 49. 10.) He ſhall leave his Riches to others; it is true of all when they dye, (for no man can carry his Riches with him out of the World) they leave their Riches to others; but it is true in a further ſence of many, they ſhall leave their Riches to others; men whom they never put in their Will, ſhall ſhare their Eſtate when they dye. (Pſa. 39. 7.) Surely every man walketh in a vain ſhaddow, he heapeth up Riches and knoweth not who ſhall gather them. He labours and gathers for one or more whom he knowes, for Wiſe and Children, ye he knowes not whether they ſhall ever enjoy what he hath gathered. The Lord by Moſes tells us what he did with the Eſtates of the Idolatrous Uncircumciſed Nations, (Pſal. 105 44.) He gave them (that is, the Jewes) the Lands of the Heathen: and they inherited the labour of the People. The Lands and Labours of thoſe wicked Nations were not for themſelves, but for them who were good before God.

Secondly, Note, It is a ſore judgment not to enjoy the fruit of our own labours.

When a man ſhall heap up Silver, and another divide it, when he ſhall gather Raiment, and another put it on, this is a cutting judgment. It is ſaid of the ſloathful man, that he Roaſts not what he took in Hunting (Pro. 12. 27.) Indeed the ſloathful man will not take the paines to hunt for it, if he have any Roaſt-meat it muſt be of other mens Hunting and Catching. But ſome are induſtrious enough, they Hunt, yet cannot eat what they have got by Hunting, but another eates it. The Lord doth make a diſtribution of their Eſtates and Portions to ſuch as they dreamt not of, and leaſt intended them to. As the Lord divides the powers of the World, and puts them out of one hand into another, (Pſal. 75. 6, 7.) Promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the South, but God is the Judge, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another. And again (Job 34. 24.) He ſhall break in peices mighty men without number, and ſet others in their ſtead. Now as God diſpoſeth of the powers of the World, and breaks them as he pleaſeth; ſo he breaks the Riches of men, and diſpoſeth them into what hands he pleaſeth. Thus 'tis ſaid in the concluſion of the Parable (Matth. 21. 41.) He will let out his Vineyard to other Husbandmen. Which is true, as of that great truſt of the Goſpel, ſo of any particular truſt; they that have had the Vineyard, ſhall not alwayes have it, if they are wicked; God will let it out to others. The juſt ſhall put on the Rayment, and the innocent ſhall divide the Silver.

Thirdly, This Scripture doth not only ſay, He may prepare it, and others, in general, may divide the Silver, but we have a ſpecial character of the perſons that ſhall divide it, They are the Innocent.

Hence Obſerve, The labours of the wicked ſhall be to the good of the Righteous.

The ſweat of the unjuſt ſhall be ſweet to the juſt, and their travel ſhall be his benefit. (Pro. 13. 22.) A good man leaveth an inheritance to his Childrens Children: and the wealth of the ſinner is laid up for the juſt. The ſinner doth not lay up his wealth with a purpoſe that the juſt ſhall have it; but the providence of God over-rules his purpoſes, and in the iſſue the ſinners wealth becomes the Portion of the juſt. This text of Solomon, as alſo thoſe toucht before in the opening of the Text, are a clear Comment upon and an expoſition of this in Job, The Innocent ſhall divide the Silver; the Silver of diſhoneſt men ſhall come into honeſt mens hands at laſt, and they ſhall make a better diſtribution and improvement of it, then ever the firſt owners or heapers of it up had a heart to do. They who having juſtly gotten, duely divide their Eſtates, ſhall hold them; but they who get them unjuſtly, or hold them baſely; ſhall have others to ſhare and divide them. He that gets honeſtly, yet keeps covetouſly, endangers his wealth to the diviſion of ſtrangers. Solomon ſpeaks this expreſly (Pro. 11. 24.) There is that ſcattereth (he doth not mean it of a prodigal ſcattering upon our luſts, but of a prudent ſcattering to good and pious uſes; a man may give ſo much to theſe that it may be ſaid he ſcattereth) and yet encreaſeth; and there is that withholdeth more then is meet, but it tendeth to poverty, that is, it tendeth to his own poverty, and may poſſibly, be a relief to the poverty of others. Now, I ſay, if he that keeps covetouſly, what he hath got honeſtly, endangers it to a diviſion among ſtrangers, how much more he that keeps covetouſly, what he hath gotten diſhoneſtly? The carnal man in gathering the Riches of this World is but like the beaſt, he hath the leaſt of it himſelf, he workes for others; he is like the Aſs or Camel that carries a great burthen of excellent things, of precious Jewels and Rich Commodities, yet never ſhares of them, but is put off with a little Hay or Provender. So in this caſe, while covetous Worldly men burthen and tire themſelves out in gathering and heaping up the things of this World, the beſt of them, the ſweet of them is enjoyed by ſuch as they ſuſpected not, much leſs wiſhed ſhould enjoy them. God provides heirs for them, and puts their wealth into hands that will make better uſe of it then ever themſelves would. This is the Portion of a wicked man: the Portion which he hath prepared, neither he nor his ſhall inherit. The juſt ſhall put on his rayment, and the innocent ſhall divide his Silver.

Greg. l. 18. Moral. c. 9.

VERS. 18, 19, 20.

He buildeth his Houſe as a Moth, and as a Booth that the Keeper maketh.

The Rich man ſhall lye down, but he ſhall not be gathered, he openeth his eyes, and he is not.

Terrors take hold on him as waters, a Tempeſt ſtealeth him away in the night.

JOB proceedeth in a further Exemplification of the miſeries falling upon and oppreſſing the wicked man. His great Riches in heaps of Money and Wardrobes of Apparel being exhauſted waſted and gone, his Houſe follows and goes too. Judgment paſſeth from his moveables to his immoveables, and they alſo prove but Moveables. Upon what family ſoever the wrath of God abideth, nothing can long abide.

Verſ. 18. He buildeth his Houſe as a Moth.

The Moth is a little inconſiderable creature, yet a harmful creature, and therefore hath its name ſutable to its nature and work, from biting or fretting.

This ſimilitude of a Moth is two wayes applyed by Interpreters.

First, To ſhew the ſinful and injurious wayes, by which the wicked man builds his Houſe. The Moth defaceth and ſpoileth the faireſt Garment to make it ſelf a Houſe or lodging. Whereſoever the Moth dwels, it is to the coſt and detriment of others.

כעש pro העש כבית
Sicut tineæ pro ſicut domum tineæ. Tineæ animalculum à mordendo et corrodendo nomen habet.

Hence Note, Wicked and ungodly men care not whom thy dammage or wrong, ſo they may Houſe and help themſelves.

They build their own Houſes with the ruine of their neighbours. They eat their Brethren (as we ſay) out of Houſe and home, out of Trade and Eſtate, that they may encreaſe their own. The Prophet deſcribes ſuch Moths, and denounceth a wo againſt them (Iſa. 5. 8.) who join Houſe to Houſe (by thruſting others out of their Houſes) that lay Feild to Feild (taking away their neighbours Feilds) till there be no place (for any honeſt man to live by them, that they may be placed alone, as Lords and Proprietaries, all others being but their Servants, Tenants, or underlings) in the midſt of the Earth. Thus another Prophet expounds it (Mic. 2. 2.) They covet Feilds, and take them by violence: and Houſes, and take them away, ſo they oppreſs a man and his Houſe, even a man and his Heritage. To buy Feilds, or to build Houſes, is not unlawful, but to invade Fields, and to build Houſes for our ſelves by pulling down other mens Houſes, or by putting them out of their Houſes: This is to build like a Moth.

Secondly, This ſimilitude of a Moth is applied to ſet forth the uncertainty and ſhort continuance of the wicked mans Houſe. The Moth makes himſelf a Houſe or Neſt in ſome goodly garment, as if it were to be his manſion for ever. And yet the Moth is ſoon diſpoſſeſſed either of theſe two wayes.

First, As the Moth by eating and fretting the Garment makes his dwelling, ſo he conſumes it, and ſpoiles his own habitation.

Corrodendo ædificat, corrodendo diruit.

Whence Note, While wicked men make themſelves Houſes by wronging others, they indeed ruine them and bring them to nought.

As he is a Moth to other mens Houſes, ſo alſo to his own; yea God himſelf will be as a Moth (that is, a ſecret and ſilent conſumption) to his Houſe, as he threatned, (Hoſ. 5. 12.) Therefore will I be unto Ephraim as a Moth; and to the Houſe of Judah as rottenneſs, I will make them rot and moulder away inſenſibly. Wo unto him that buildeth his Houſe by unrighteouſneſs, and his Chambers by wrong; that ſaith I will build me a wide Houſe, and large Chambers, and cutteth him out windows, and it is ceiled with Cedar, and painted with Vermilion; ſhalt thou reign becauſe thou cloſeſt thy ſelf with Cedar? The Interrogation denies ſtrongly, Thou ſhalt not reign, thou ſhalt not continue long in thy Houſe which thou haſt built (like a Moth) by unrighteouſneſs: thy Cedar ſhall be Moth-eaten, and thy Vermilion diſcoloured as with Worms. Sin hath raiſed many Houſes, and it will ruin all that it hath raiſed.

Secondly, If the Moth doth not ſpoil his Houſe by fretting the Garment, yet when the Garment is taken up to be aired and bruſht, the Moth is preſently bruſht off or cruſht to pieces.

Hence Note, If wicked men do not quickly waſt their own houſes, yet they are in danger to be quickly thruſt out of them.

They have no more aſſurance of holding their Houſes, then a Moth hath to dwell long in a Garment. The wicked mans houſe is of ſhort continuance; God can demoliſh the ſtrongeſt ſtones and timber as ſoon as we can cruſh a Moth. When thou (ſaith David, Pſal. 39.11.) with rebukes doeſt chaſten man for iniquity, thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a Moth. The beauty of the mind, gifts and comforts, the beauty of the body, health and ſtrength, the beauty of the houſe and ſtate, Riches and Honour, conſume at the rebukes of God; and they conſume as the Moth, they are caſt out of their dwelling as the Moth, and they are cruſht out of their life as the Moth. All men (as Eliphaz told Job, Chap. 19) dwell in houſes of clay; whoſe foundation is in the duſt, and they are cruſhed before (that is, as eaſily and as ſpeedily as) the Moth. But as ſin hath brought the weakneſs of a Moth, and of a Moths houſe upon all mens lives, perſons and eſtates, ſo much more upon the wicked who live in ſin, and both live and love to ſin. He buildeth his houſe as the Moth.

There is yet another rendering and reading of theſe words, which I ſhall but touch and paſs on.

He ſhall build his houſe as Arcturus.

The ſame word ſignifieth both a Moth, (which is one of the meaneſt Creatures on earth) and Arcturus, which is one of the moſt remarkable Stars (or Conſtellations rather, that is, knots or combinations of Stars) in Heaven; and ſo the word is rendered in the 9 Chapter of this Book, at the 9 Verſ. And then the meaning and ſence of the words is this; he (the wicked man) ſhall build a goodly Houſe, as if it were a Heavenly Pallace or Paradiſe; as if (as it is ſaid the proud Aſſyrian ſaid in his heart, Iſa. 14. 13.) He had exalted his Throne above the Sars of God, as if (as it is ſaid of Edom, Obad. 4.) He had exalted himſelf as the Eagle, and ſet his Neſt among the Stars. The ſum of all is this; He ſhall build a beautiful Houſe, like the Houſes of Heaven, a ſtrong Houſe like the Houſes of Heaven, a large Houſe, like the Houſes of Heaven, a Houſe quite out of Gun-ſhot, and the reach of danger from man, as the Houſes of Heaven are. And yet this beautiful, ſtrong, large, ſafe Houſe and State of his, ſhall ſoon decay, rot, fall, and in the iſſue, be but as a common cottage, or as it followeth in the Text,

As the Booth that the Keeper maketh.

We have here another compariſon or lively image of the ſhort and fading felicity of a wicked man For a Booth is either made only of green Boughs and Branches of Trees ſet and wrought together, to keep off the extream heat of the Sun; or it is a little ſlight Houſe of Boards ſuddenly and rudely clapt together in ſome Orchard, Garden, or open Feild, where Fruit or Cattle are in danger to be ſpoiled and taken away, in which the keeper ſhelters and ſhrouds himſelf from wind and weather, till the Fruit be gathered, or the Cattel removed, and then the Booth is removed too, and taken down, or if left ſtanding, it is not long ere it falls and drops down. When the Prophet would ſhew the deſolate condition of Zion, He ſaith (Iſa. 1. 8.) The Daughter of Sion is left as a Cottage in a Vineyard (when the Grapes are gathered) or as a Lodge in a Garden of Cucumbers, when the Fruit is taken out. And again(Iſa. 24.20.) The Earth (that is, the Glory and moſt eſtabliſhed proſſperity of the inhabitants of the earth) ſhall reel to and fro like a Drunkard, and ſhall be removed like a Cottage, or a Shepherds or Souldiers Tent. Thus Hezekiah bemoaned himſelf in his ſickneſs, as he thought, with a dying Son, (Iſa. 38. 12.) Mine age is departed and is removed from me as a Shepherds Tent. Once more, the Prophet Jeremiah lamenting the miſeries of Jeruſalem, expreſſeth it in this Language, (Lam. 2.6.) He hath violently taken away his Tabernacle, as were of a Garden, that is, as a Booth or ſorry hovel in a Garden, which the keeper ſetteth up to repoſe and ſhade himſelf in from the heat of the day and the cold of the night, while he watcheth the fruits thereof. All Tents or Booths are moveable; but the Gardeners, the Shepherds, and the Souldiers moſt of all. Thus Job derides the moſt magnificent and ſtately ſtructures, the ſtrongeſt and moſt fortified Towers of the wicked mans Worldly greatneſs and pomp; calling them or comparing them to Booths, Tents, and Countrey Cottages, made up not of Ceder-beams and Marble-pillars, but patcht and clapt up with Hurdles, Sticks, and Dirt. And in theſe contemptible terms the Lord ſpeaks, (as it is ſaid of proud Tyre the Crowning City, whoſe Merchants were Princes, whoſe Traffickers were the honourable of the Earth, Iſa. 23. 8, 9. Thus I ſay he ſpeaks) to ſtain the pride of all (ſinfull) glory, and to bring into contempt all the (wickedly) honourable of the Earth. Theſe build their Houſes as a Moth, and as a Booth that the Keeper maketh. This tranſitory and faſhion-changing ſtate of the wicked man (both as to his poſſeſſions and his perſon) is further proſecuted in the Verſe following.

סכה Umbraculū tabernaculū ex frondibus et ramis arborum non-diu durans. Tabernaculum hujuſmodi proverbiali ſpecie ſumitur pro re momentanea. Sanct.

Verſ. 19. The Rich man ſhall lye down, but he ſhall not be gathered: He openeth his eyes, and he is not.

There are three Interpretations of this Verſe, which though they have much variety conſidered apart, yet no contrariety to the ſcope of that point which Job had in hand, yea they all center in his purpoſe, to ſhew the ſuddain changes and calamities which fall upon the wicked

The Rich man ſhall lye down.

The word which we render to lye down, is applyed, Firſt, to note, living, ſettling, and inhabiting in a place, (Levit. 26. 6.) I (ſaith the Lord) will give peace in the Land, and ye ſhall lye down. and none ſhall make you afraid; that is, ye ſhall live peaceably and quietly in the Land. Secondly, it is applyed to lying down to ſleep(Ge. 19.4.) But before they lay down, the men of the City, even the men of Sodom, compaſſed the Houſe round, &c. Thirdly, to a lying down ſick or diſeaſed. Thus David deſcribes his malicious enemies pleaſing themſelves in the incurableneſs of his ſickneſs (Pſal. 41. 8.) An evil diſeaſe, ſay they, cleaveth faſt unto him, and now that he lyeth (ſick a bed, or as we ſay, upon his ſick Bed) he ſhall riſe up no more; that is, he ſhall never recover his health again. Fouthly, it is applyed to a lying down in death (2 Sam. 7. 12.) When thy dayes be fulfilled (ſaith the Lord to David by his Prophet Nathan) and thou ſhalt ſleep (or lye down, it is this word) with thy Fathers, I will ſet up thy ſeed after thee, that is, when thou dyeſt I will bring thy children to the Throne.

Here in this place, the rich mans lying down is expounded.

Firſt, Of lying down to ſleep. And then the whole Verſe is rendered in a ſuitable ſence, thus; When the Rich man lyeth down, it is not taken away, when he openeth his eyes it is not. And if he ſaid, When the Rich man goeth to Bed, to take his reſt, he ſees his Houſe and Goods ſafe, all is well about him, but when he awaketh in the Morning, or through ſome terror of the Night, he finds all is gone and himſelf left helpleſs, friendleſs. As Naomi ſaid, (Ruth. 1. 21.) I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty. So the rich man may ſay ſometimes, I lay down, I went to Bed full, my Houſe and Goods being untouched and quiet, but I roſe empty, my Riches having made themſelves wings like Eagles, are fled away. For the clearing of this ſence, is to be conſidered, that the Original Text may be rendered either, He, of a perſon, or It of a thing; ſo, it is not taken, and it is not, that is, his wealth a little before was not taken away, yet by and by, it is not; All is gone, and he is ſtript of all in a night: His Riches are ſtoln by Theeves, or conſumed by Fire before the Morning. Further, for the making out of this Tranſlation, we muſt take notice, that the ſame Hebrew word ſignifies both to Add, or Gather, as alſo to remove, or take away, becauſe that which is added or gathered to one, is commonly taken away from another. From this expoſition of the words.

Dives cubat cum nihil dum interverſum eſt: ubi oculos ſuos aperit, nihil adeſt. Jun.

Note, There is no aſſurance in any earthly inheritance.

As the life, ſo the Worldly eſtate of man (eſpecially of a wicked man (ſtands upon terms of greateſt uncertainty. The rich man(Luke 12. 19.) told his Soul that he had goods laid up for many years; but God told him he had not life enough laid up for one; Thou fool, this night thy Soul ſhall be required of thee; and as that rich fools Soul laſted not in his body one night, ſo the riches of many ſuch fools laſt not one night in their hands or houſes. God ſends out his writ of ſequeſtration, and ſaith to him, This night ſhall thy Goods, thy Gold and Silver, thy lands and Revenews be required of thee. It is beſt to make little reckoning of that, as to eſteem, of which we cannot truly make any long reckoning as to continuance.

Secondly, Others interpret theſe words, not of a ſuddain ſuprizal of his Riches by ſome unexpected yea unſuſpected judgment when he lyeth down to reſt; but of his fall into poverty in general. He ſhall lye down; that is, he ſhall fall or come down from his hight of Riches and greatneſs, and ſhall become ſo poor that he ſhall even lye in the Streets, or by the High-way ſide, no man affording him either ſo much reſpect or pity as to gather him up, that is, to receive him into his houſe, or give him lodging. He ſhall be not only poor, but forſaken and forlorn; in purſuance of which ſence the latter clauſe of the Verſe is thus rendered; He openeth his eyes, and there is none, that is, He being in this extremity, ſhall look round about him for help, but ſhall find none to relieve him. Greateſt States have greateſt Turns. They who caſt down others, ſhall fall down themſelves, and have none to help them up. How often are oppreſſors cruſhed, and they who have unjuſtly ſpoyled others of their comforts, juſtly denyed the ſmalleſt courteſie?

Thirdly, Our Tranſlators (and ſo do moſt) underſtand the words lying down, of dying, or of a lying down in death; and thoſe negative words, He ſhall not be Gathered, of his want of Burial. We find the word Gathered, applyed expreſly to the Grave (2 Kings 22. 20.) Where the Lord promiſeth that young good King Joſiah, that he ſhall not ſee the evils Propheſied againſt Jeruſalem. Behold I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou ſhalt be gathered into thy Grave in peace, &c. As to be gathered to our Fathers, or to our People, is to dye (Num. 20. 26. Num. 31. 2.) So to be gathered to the Grave is to be Buried; and we read of Gathering and Burying put together, Jer. 8. 2. Jer. 25. 33. They ſhall not be gathered nor be Buried, but ſhall be for Dung upon the face of the Earth. So that not to be gathered, implyeth not only (as ſome interpret) the want of an honourable Burial, but the want of any Burial at all. And Job, in ſpeaking thus, ſeems Prophetically to threaten the wicked Rich man, who abounded in all things while he lived, with the denial of a Grave or honeſt interment when he ſhould dye: which (as the abhorrence of nature) hath been adjudged for the puniſhment of publick Enemies and Tranſgreſſors of the Laws of Nature. And (in the Judgment of Solomon, Eccl. 6. 3.) this want of Burial is accounted and caſt up for a greater evil then Abortion or an untimely Birth. If (ſaith he) a man beget an hundred Children, and live many years, ſo that the days of his years be many, and his Soul be not filled with good, and alſo that he have no Burial, I ſay, that a untimely Birth (that is, one that is Born before his time, and dyeth before or as ſoon as born) is better then he. Maſter Broughton Tranſlateth and gloſſeth Job's text fully to this ſence. The Rich (in death) lyeth and is not taken up, that is, To be honeſtly buried, for his children ſhall be killed (ver. 14.) Amongſt the wild Arabians (ſaith he) this remaineth unto this day: and in our wild Countries. It is an Hebrew Phraſe, for one dead taken friendly to burial, or of an ſtranger into lodging; thus far He. When men are Buried, they are gathered as into a Store-houſe, and there laid up ſafe till the Great day of the Reſurrection; then the Graves ſhall be unlockt, and commanded to give up their Treaſure. Now ſeeing Job threatens this as a Plague after death upon wicked men, that they ſhall not be gathered or Buried, Obſerve, It is a mercy to have a decent Burial, and to be laid up fairly in the Grave.

As it is a very great Judgment when the bones of the dead are diſquieted and pull'd out of their Graves, (Jer. 8. 1, 2.) At that time, ſaith the Lord, they ſhall bring out the bones of the Kings of Judah, and the bones of the Princes, and the bones of the Prieſts, &c. out of their Graves, and they ſhall ſpread them before the Sun and the Moon, &c. As this (I ſay) is a very great Judgment to have Buried bones pull'd out of their Graves; ſo it is no ſmall judgment, when dead bones have not the favour of a Grave or Burial. It ſhews that a price is put upon a thing when 'tis carefully laid up. Good Garments are put into Cheſts or Wardrobes, not thrown about the Houſe. The Body is the Garment of the Soul, and therefore Death is called an uncloathing, (2 Cor. 5. 4.) And we lay up theſe Garments, our bodies, in the Wardrobe of the Grave, in aſſurance that we ſhall put them on again, and wear them (when made ſpiritual and incorruptible) for ever. As when we go to ſleep every night we put off our Garments, when we awake in the Morning we put them on again; So it is when we ſleep in death, we put off our Bodies, and when we awake in that glorious Morning at the ſound of the Arch-angels Trumpet we ſhall put them on gain.

But though Burial, or to be gathered to the Grave, be a mercy, yet it is only a common mercy; A mercy as common as the Sun which ſhineth, or the Rain which falleth indifferently upon all, whether good or bad. Yea for the moſt part, as bad men take moſt care for their worſt part, their Bodies, to feed and cloath and preſerve and pamper them, while they live; ſo when they dye, what ever becomes of their Souls, they uſually give ſtrict commands and directions about the Burial of their Bodies. When we read of the Rich mans death, it preſently followeth, and was buried (Luk. 16. 22.) But as for Lazarus the Begger, his death is mentioned, and the Burial of his Body buried in ſilence; only we find that Heaven was his Tomb, for he (that is, his Soul or Spirit) was carried by Angels into Abrahams boſome. And wicked mens bodies often have the better of the Saints as to an outward Burial; their Bodies being houſed in ſtately Monuments, while the Bodies of theſe are entombed only in the bowels of ravenous Birds and Beaſts, (Pſal. 79. 2.) The dead Bodies of thy ſervants have they given to be meat unto the Fowles of the Heaven, the fleſh of thy Saints unto the Beaſts of the Earth. That's all the Burial which many a good man hath had, how good ſoever it is to have a Burial. And the Bodies of Saints, do a great ſervice to God, when they are dead, and thus Buried. For as in giving themſelves up to a violent death, they bear a Teſtimony to all the truths of God, ſo in having their Bodies thus Buried, they increaſe the Wonder, and the Miracle of that great truth of God, The Reſurrection of the Body. For as there is a mercy to a man in being gathered to the Grave by Burial, ſo an infinite Glory will ariſe to the power and wiſdom of God, in gathering up the Bodies of his Saints out of ſuch uncouth Graves and Burials. They who lye down and are not gathered to the Grave by any, much leſs any ſolemn Burial, ſhall yet be ſolemnly gathered at the Reſurrection. But they who lying down are gathered to the Grave by Burial, are laid up for a Reſurrection. A good Reſurrection is beſt, yet to be laid up for it is good. The rich man ſhall lye down. There is no avoiding nor bribing of death by his Riches; But he ſhall not be gathered; all the Riches which he hath gathered cannot purchaſe him a Grave to be gathered to, when God hath a mind to ſcatter him. Riches avail not in a day of Wrath, either to deliver from death, or to obtain the favour of a Burial. He that hath the leaſt true grace may be aſſured that when he lyeth down in death, his Soul ſhall be gathered unto Chriſt. But he that hath the greateſt portion of Worldly riches, can have no aſſurance that when he dyeth his Body ſhall be gathered to the Grave. The rich man ſhall lye down, There is his neceſſity of dying. But he ſhall not be gathered, there is the uncertainty, at leaſt, of his Burial.

There is yet another reading of theſe words; When the Rich man ſleepeth, or lyeth down in the ſleep of death, he ſhall take nothing away with him, he ſhall open his eyes and find nothing. The Apoſtle gives us this expreſly (1 Tim. 6. 7.) Where perſwading to contentment in our preſent portion, whatſoever it is, he gives this Reaſon of it; For we brought nothing into this World, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. There is a great Emphaſis in that word, certainly, which the Apoſtle adds in the latter clauſe, implying, that while all agree and are ſufficiently convinced that we bring nothing with us into the World, yet ſome have a kind of opinion, and ſome hankering hopes grounded thereupon, that they ſhall carry ſomewhat away with them out of the World, or at leaſt, that their Riches will be ſome benefit and advantage to them in another World. And therefore (according to this Tranſlation) Job brings in the Rich man after death (it is uſual in Scripture to attribute acts of life to the dead, as Iſaiah 14. 9, 10. Hell (or the Grave) is removed for thee to meet thee at thy coming: It ſtirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the Earth; it hath raiſed up from their thrones (that is, their ſtately Tombes or Monuments where they are as it were enthroned) all the Kings of the Nations. All they ſhall ſpeak and ſay unto thee, &c. Thus he brings in the dead King ſpeaking and ſaying, &c. And thus, I ſay Job brings in the rich man here after death, opening his eyes, and looking about him, whether any of that huge maſs of riches which he once had while he lived in this world, did accompany him, or would be of any uſe to him among the dead. When man dyeth nothing goeth away with him to abide by him for ever, but what he hath got either by his faith or by his unbelief, by his holineſs or by his wickedneſs. He that believeth carrieth all the good things of Chriſt away with him as his portion for ever; and he that believeth not carrieth away the wages of ſin with him as his portion for ever. Except in this ſence, 'tis moſt certain that as we brought nothing with us into the world, ſo we ſhall carry nothing away with us when we dye and depart the world. All theſe things which are ſeen are temporal, and ſhortly will not be ſeen at all. Could the rich man being dead open his eyes, he ſhould find nothing. We read Quaſi circumſpectu num quippiam eorum quæ hic reliquit ibi præſto ſit. Janſon.

He openeth his eyes, and he is not.

Which words are interpreted by ſome, as a deſcription of the rich mans ſuddain death. As if Job had ſaid; he dyeth in the opening of an eye. And thus 'tis paralleld with that ſpeech of the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15. 52.) In the twinkling of an eye. As ſoon as his eye can open or twinkle, he is gone, and as it followeth, He is not; that is, he is not alive, or among the living. They who live not are ſpoken of as if they were not, or had no being, yea, as if they had never been.

Tam cito perit quam oculos ſuos aperit. Druſ.

There is yet another rendring of theſe words, which makes the perſon opening his eyes diſtinct or another from him that dyeth. So Mr. Broughton, One openeth his eyes, and he is gone; as if he had ſaid, when any neighbour, friend, or brother, looks for him, and would converſe with him, he is dead and gone. And thus Job ſpake at Chap. 7. concerning his own mortality and fleeting condition in this life (v. 7, 8.) O remember that my life is wind: mine eye ſhall no more ſee good: the eye of him that hath ſeen me ſhall ſee me no more. And Zophar ſpeaks the ſame of the wicked (Ch. 20. 9.) The eye alſo which ſaw him ſhall ſee him no more. So David (Pſal. 37. 36.) I have ſeen the wicked in great power, and ſpreading himſelf like a green bay tree; yet he paſſed away, and loe, he was not, yea I ſought him, but he could not be found. All which paſſages fully expreſs the ſence of this tranſlation. One openeth his eyes (to ſeek and find him out) and he is gone; there is no more to be ſeen, or had of him, only much evil is to be heard of him.

All theſe readings and ſenſings of theſe words, and of the whole verſe, though ſomewhat varying and diſſenting from one another, do yet center in this general truth (which is Jobs ſcope) that wicked men, how rich ſoever, are as ſubject to death, and the conſequents of it, as any other; and that many times, when they dye, they want thoſe common reſpects which others have: And that their riches are ſo far from being any help to them after this life, that they cannot help them to a grave or funeral when they dye. Job hath not yet done with his ſad narrative of the wicked man, but proceeds to ſhew either the dreadful manner of his departure, or rapture rather, out of this world, or ſome ſtrange violent and unexpected evils, both inward and outward, befalling or rather falling upon him in this life.

Verſ. 20. Terrors take hold on him as waters, a tempeſt ſtealeth him away in the night.

This verſe aggravates the miſery of a wicked man, whether living or dying, by a double ſimilitude.

The one taken from a deluge or inundation of Waters; the other a Tempeſt or Storm of wind.

Terrors take hold on him as waters.

Three things are to be enquired for the opening of this former part of the verſe.

Firſt, What we are to underſtand by Terrors.

Secondly, How theſe Terrors may be ſaid to take hold, or what this taking hold implyeth.

Thirdly, How they are ſaid to take hold, as waters.

For the firſt. The Original word notes the extreameſt diſturbance and hurry of the whole man, as was ſhewed at Chap. 18. verſe 11. Terror is fear to aſtoniſhment. Thus it is ſaid (Gen. 35. 5.) that, when Jacob and his family journied towards Bethel, the terrour of God (that is, a great terror, or a terror cauſed by the immediate hand of God) was upon the Cities round about them, and they did not (for they durſt not) purſue after the Sons of Jacob. And with this the Lord threatned his own people, in caſe his fear were not before their eyes to keep them from ſin (Lev. 26. 16.) I alſo will do this unto you, I will even appoint terror over you, &c. As if the Lord had ſaid, if ye will not obey me as your King in love, Terror ſhall be your King. Death, the King of terrors, is very dreadful, but it is far more dreadful to have terror for our King.

בלהות Terrores à בהל Turbari, conturbari, terreri.

Terror is taken two wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, For thoſe things which cauſe terror, or makes us greatly afraid. Thus the judgments of God are called terrors (Pſal. 73. 19.) How are they brought to deſolation, as in a moment, they are utterly conſumed with terrors, that is, with terrible Judgments. And as Judgments, ſo the laſt Judgment is called terror, becauſe it ſhall ſtrike the unbelieving and impenitent world, of men with ſo much terror (2 Cor. 5. 10.) Any great danger, any unuſual or unheard of troubles cauſe terror, and are therefore called terrors.

Secondly, Terror is taken for the effect it ſelf cauſed in the mind of man, by things either in their own nature, or in their appearances terrible. Thus Jeremy begs of the Lord (Chap. 17. 17.) Be not a terror to me in the evil day; that is, do not thou O Lord, terrifie my Spirit within, when troubles are without. It is ſaid of the Magiſtrate (Rom. 13. 3.) That he is not a terror to good works, but to the evil, that is, he doth not terrifie (if he act according to his truſt and duty) thoſe that do good works, but evil-workers.

The terrors ſpoken of and intended by Job in this Text, may be taken (as I conceive) in either ſence. Terrible judgments without and terrible fears within take hold of him.

The ſecond thing to be enquired, is, how theſe terrors take hold of the wicked man. The Hebrew word here uſed, ſignifies not barely to take, but to take by over-taking, or to take hold by a violent or forceable laying hold either upon perſons or things. It is a metaphor alluding either to an enemy purſuing his fleeing enemy, who when he hath overtaken him, taketh hold of him, and either kills him or takes him priſoner; or the metaphor refers us to the notion of Hunts-men, who follow the game to make prey of it; or laſtly, to Sergeants or Officers of Juſtice, who follow debtors and malefactors, to arreſt, attach, and apprehend them. Thus the word is uſed (Zech. 1. 6.) Did not my words take hold on your Fathers? Surely they did; if the word do not take hold of us in the rule, cauſing us to obey, it will take hold of us in the threatning, and cauſe us to ſmart for not obeying. And David complains (Pſal. 40. 12.) Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, ſo that I am not able to look up. Iniquity takes hold of the Soul three wayes. Firſt, in the power of it, overcoming man to do it; ſecondly, in the guilt of it, making man lyable, and accordingly binding him over to bear the puniſhment of what he hath done. Thirdly, in all the puniſhments which man actually beareth.

נשג In Hiphil attigit, apprehendit, aſſecutus eſt.

Thus do theſe terrors threatened in the Text, take hold of a wicked man; they take hold of him, as an enemy doth his enemy in the battel, as the Hunter doth the wild Beaſt, or as the Officer taketh hold on him that is fallen under the penalty of ſome Law. They take, firſt, a violent hold of him; ſecondly, they take a ſtrong hold of him, ſo that he cannot get looſe; thirdly, they take a reſolved hold of him, they will not looſe him, nor let him go. We ſee how they take hold of him, from the force of the word, which hath many ſimilitudes implyed in it; and that may be yet further ſeen by opening the ſimilitude which is expreſſed in the Text; and that was the Third thing propoſed for explication; how terrors are ſaid to take hold on him as waters.

Afflictions and troubles are often compared to waters in Scripture (Pſal. 32. 6. &c.) and as they are like waters in their nature, ſo (which is here meant) they are like waters in the manner of their coming. For terrors and troubles come many times, firſt, ſuddainly; ſecondly, violently; thirdly, abundantly; fourthly, ſucceſſively, one upon the neck of another. As David ſaid (1 Chron. 14. 11.) God hath broken in upon mine enemies by mine hand, like the breaking forth of waters; that is, he hath ſuddainly and violently deſtroyed them by mine hand. Heman uſeth this ſimilitude to ſet forth the way of the Lords ſending terrors upon him for his tryal, and the exerciſe of his faith and patience (Pſal. 16. 17.) Thy fierce anger goeth over me (as waves of the Sea, or mighty waters) thy terrors have cut me off; they came round about me dayly like water, they compaſſed me about together. When the Lord would ſhew how abundantly freely and continually the Rulers of the Earth ought to do Juſtice, he ſaith (Amos 5. 24.) Let Judgment run down as waters, and righteouſneſs as a mighty ſtreame.

Waters eaſily take hold becauſe they may come ſuddainly, unexpectedly, and 'tis very hard to get out of their hold, becauſe they come ſo violently, ſo abundantly, ſo continually, or ſucceſſively; and thus terrors take hold of the wicked man as waters.

Having noted many things about terrors (Chap. 18. 11.) I ſhall not ſtay upon them here, only, Note, > Firſt, They who will not ſuffer their hearts to be taken hold of by the word of God, ſhall one time or other, be laid faſt hold on, and held faſt enough by the terrors of God.

They who will not be kept in compaſs by good counſel, ſhall be compaſſed about with ſorrow. Men do but procure and haſten on miſery, while they caſt off duty.

> Secondly, Note, All the outward favours which we receive in this world, and of this world, cannot maintain our comforts, nor ſecure our inward peace.

Apprehendet eum, quaſi aqua inopia. Vulg. Sept.

How great ſoever any mans portion is in the things of this life, terror may be his portion too. Abundance of riches cannot free from poverty, much leſs from the fear of it. The moſt ſetled ſtate of bodily health cannot free from ſickneſs, nor from death, much leſs from the dread of either, leaſt of all can any one, or all theſe put together, free an evil doer from thoſe terrors and tortures which his awakened Conſcience will inflict upon him for his evil deeds. All the good things which we poſſeſs without God are not ſo much as a half-good to us; and when terrors are upon us, they can do us no good at all. When the Lord ſends his terrors into the Soul of a Godly man like waters, they overwhelme (while they continue) all his ſpiritual comforts, they bear down, and lay proſtrate all his intereſts, evidences, and experiences, about his eternal ſtate and happineſs, as we ſee exampled in the caſe of Heman in the 88. Pſalme throughout. Surely then the carnal comforts of rich men muſt needs be ſwallowed up or waſht off, when terrors from the Almighty overtake them, and take hold of them like an impetuous torrent of waters. And if this torrent of terrors be not enough to ſweep away and brown the worldly rich mans proſperity, behold a Tempeſt is at hand to take away not only His but Him, as it follows in the laſt clauſe of the verſe.

A tempeſt ſtealeth him away in the Night.

As a deluge of waters, ſo a Tempeſt ſignifieth thoſe troubles and evils which proceed from the angry diſpenſations of God. Thus the Pſalmiſt prayeth down vengeance upon the enemies of the Church (Pſal. 83. 14, 15.) As the fire burneth the wood; and as the flame ſetteth the mountains on fire; ſo perſecute them with thy Tempeſt, and make them afraid with thy Storm. All great riſing waters move violently, but the motion of ſtorms and tempeſts is nothing but violence. As whirlwinds in the South paſs through, ſo it cometh (that is, trouble and deſolation cometh) from the deſert, from a terrible Land (Iſa. 21. 1.) The Lord hath ſpecial Coaſts where Storms and Tempeſts are bred, and from thence ſent out either for the tryal of the Godly, or the puniſhment of the wicked. A Tempeſt

Stealeth him away.] It might ſeem more proper, to a Tempeſt, to ſay, It hurrieth him away; but the Lord can order things ſo, that thoſe judgments which as to their force and irreſiſtible violence are like Tempeſts, yet in regard of their ſilent and unexpected coming, ſhall be like Thieves, who as they come to ſteal, ſo they ſteal in privately and unſeen if they can, where they come. It is ſaid of Abſolom, that he ſtole the peoples hearts from David his Father by his flattering [illegible]nuations (2 Sam. 15. 1.) He did it cunningly and cloſely. The Apoſtle implyeth that the great day of Judgment ſhall ſteal upon the World very unexpectedly, while he ſaith (1 Theſ. 5. 2.) That the day of the Lord ſo cometh as a Thief (and that not as a Thief in the day, but as a Thief) in the night. This circumſtance of the time or ſeaſon is inſtanced by Job alſo in this place. A Tempeſt ſtealeth him away

In the night.] The circumſtances of an affliction do greatly encreaſe the affliction; and among circumſtances, the time of it is as conſiderable as any other. And therefore Chriſt having propheſied the ſad calamities which ſhould fall upon Jeruſalem within a few years after his aſcenſion to Heaven, counſels them to pray, that their flight might not be in the Winter, neither on the Sabboth day (Mat. 24. 20.) for either of them would be an hightning addition to all their other calamities. To thoſe two circumſtances of time, the Winter, and the Sabboth-day, we may well reckon that of the Text, as a third, The night. For the night being it ſelf (comparatively to the day) an uncomfortable time, muſt needs augment the diſcomfort of any affliction which comes upon us in it. The night or darkneſs is terrible in it ſelf, and therefore when a Tempeſt comes in the night, it muſt needs be more then ordinarily terrible. The ninth plague which God brought upon Egypt to puniſh the hardneſs of Pharoahs heart in not letting Iſrael go, was darkneſs (Exod. 10. 21.) And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, ſtretch out thine hand toward Heaven, that there may be darkneſs over the Land of Egypt, even darkneſs which may be felt. To feel darkneſs was a dreadful ſtroak, though they ſhould have felt nothing elſe; yet this was not the utmoſt of Egypts miſery; as they had felt the plague of darkneſs, ſo to wind up their calamity to the higheſt, they muſt feel their tenth and laſt plague in darkneſs (Exod. 12. 29.) And it came to paſs, that at midnight the Lord ſmote all the firſt-born in the Land of Egypt, from the firſt-born of Pharoah that ſat on his Throne, &c. And then we read in the next verſe, There was a great cry in Egypt. To have had any of their Children ſmitten had been a great plague, but to have their firſt-born ſmitten was a greater, and to have all their firſt-born ſmitten was a greater then that, and yet we are not at the greateſt greatneſs of their plague, till we come to the time of it, in the night, yea at midnight, which is the deadeſt and darkeſt time of the night. And to put a terror upon that ſlaughter of the Aſſyrians encamping againſt Jeruſalem, it is ſaid (2 Kings 19. 35.) And it came to paſs that night, that the Angel of the Lord went out and ſmote in the Camp of the Aſſyrians an hundred fourſcore and five thouſand, &c. The Prophet Iſaiah puts the Emphaſis of vengeance upon this circumſtance twice in one verſe (Iſa. 15. 1.) The burden of Moab, becauſe in the night Ar of Moab is laid waſte and brought to ſilence, becauſe in the night Kir of Moab is laid waſte and brought to ſilence. And again (Dan. 5. 30.) In that night was Belſhazzar the King of the Caldeans ſlain. All theſe (like the wicked man in the Text) were ſtoln away by a Tempeſt of divine wrath in the night. By how much the time is darker, by ſo much is the Tempeſt ſorer that falls upon diſtreſſed man.

Thus if we take the word Night ſtrictly and properly, it may note a threefold aggravation of this miſerably deſtroying Tempeſt upon the wicked man.

Firſt, That it came when himſelf was aſleep, and dreamt not of any, much leſs of ſo great a miſchief.

Secondly, That it came when he could not ſee a way, nor readily find any means to help himſelf, as, poſſibly, in the day he might.

Thirdly, That it came, when, it may be well ſuppoſed, that his friends and neighbours were aſleep too, and could not come to help him.

Again, If we take the night, improperly for any time of trouble or diſtreſs, which doth as it were benight a man, and leaves him without any light of knowledge or counſel what to do, or which way to turn himſelf, this alſo is a great if not a greater hightning of his affliction then the former. Of all nights day-night is the worſt; what's the light of the air to us, when the eye of the mind, the underſtanding is darkned, yea darkneſs it ſelf? A Tempeſt ſtealeth him away in the night.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The providential works of God in puniſhing ſinners, bear the image of his moſt dreadful works in nature.

The flames of a devouring fire, a deluge of overflowing waters, Thunder and Lightning, Storms and Tempeſts, which carry all before them, are but glaſſes in which we ſee what God will do with and upon the wicked in the fierceneſs of his anger. The beſt things in nature are but ſhadows of the favourable, and the worſt, of the wrathful preſence of God.

Obſerve, Secondly, Wicked men are alwayes ſurprized or taken unawares by the judgments of God.

That evil which comes upon them as fiercely as a Tempeſt, doth yet ſteal them away unexpectedly, like a Thief. Chriſt ſaith in the Goſpel (Mat. 24.43.) Know this, that if the good man of the houſe had known in what watch the Thief would come, he would have watched, and not ſuffered his houſe to be broken up. Thieves alwayes come before they are ſent for, and uſually before they are looked for. The Judgments of God never come till they are ſent for (by the ſins of men) nor till they are ſent by the juſtice of God, but they alwayes come upon carnal men before they are looked for. Though they are often forewarned, yet they are never fore-armed, and how near ſoever the evil day is brought to them by the threatnings of the word of truth, they put it far from themſelves, by the promiſes and flatteries of their own falſe hearts. The old world was told of a flood a hundred and twenty years before it came, and yet that Tempeſt ſtole the old world away like a Thief in the night; they made no Arkes for themſelves, but thoſe of their own vain confidences, nor did they repair to the Ark which Noah made. And as it was in the days of Noah, and both was and will be in thoſe ſpecial dayes of the Son of man (Luk. 17.26.) ſo it hath been, and ſtill is, in the dayes of the vengeance of God; men are ſecure, they eat, they drink, they marry, they are given in marriage, till the flood cometh and deſtroyeth, till the Tempeſt cometh and ſcattereth them all. They who have a mind to continue in ſin, cannot mind enſuing troubles; and chooſe rather to leave themſelves to utmoſt hazzard when they come, then trouble themſelves with the thought and uſe of thoſe means, which might prevent their coming. Though they have ſome fear, yet they have an over-ballancing hope, or preſumption rather, that the Tempeſt will not come, or if it doth, that it will quickly blow over; and it muſt needs be, that all thoſe evils ſhould ſteal upon us, or ſteal us away when they come, which we preſume will never come.

Thirdly, Obſerve, God knoweth how to, and will ſo time and circumſtantiate the judgments which come upon wicked men, as ſhall make them moſt troubleſome and grievous to be born.

Every thing (ſaith Solomon) is beautiful in its ſeaſon, and there are many ſeaſons which make things very dreadful; ſo doth the night (in either of the notions opened) a Storm or Tempeſt. Let us take heed, leaſt while we add provoking aggravations to our ſins from the times and ſeaſons wherein we commit them, that we do not provoke the Lord to add preſſing aggravations to our troubles from the time and ſeaſon in which he ſends them. If we ſin in the day time, that is, in natural or moral, but eſpecially in ſpiritual or Goſpel light, no marvail if the Lord command a Tempeſt to go forth and ſteal us away in the night. Is it not equal that the judgments of God ſhould ſteal thoſe away as in the night, who ſteal away from the will and wayes of God in the day? in the cleareſt dayes of Goſpel light, or when Goſpel light hath made the cleareſt day? If men turn day into night morally, the Lord can ſoon turn their day into night judicially, commanding their Sun to ſet at Noon. And then either night ſhall ſteal upon them, or a Tempeſt ſhall ſteal them away in the night; yea, as as it follows in the next verſe, Hurl them out of their place.

VERS. 21, 22, 23.

The Eaſt-wind carrieth him away, and he departeth: and as a ſtorm hurleth him out of his place.

For God ſhall caſt upon him, and not ſpare: he would fain flee out of his hand.

Men ſhall clap their hands at him, and ſhall hiſs him out of his place.

JOB is ſtill deſcribing the ſad concluſion of the wicked man. In the former verſe we read of a Tempeſt ſtealing him away in the night; and here, of an Eaſt-wind that carrieth him away. Some ſuppoſe that by the former is meant a Tempeſt at Sea, and by this a Storm at Land; ſo that he is diſtreſt, both by Sea and by Land. But we need not ſtand upon ſuch niceties.

The Eaſt-wind carrieth him away.

The Eaſt-wind, or a wind out of the Eaſt; the Scriptures ſpeaks often of this Eaſt-wind, and there are two things which are moſt conſiderable in it; firſt, that it is a very fierce and violent wind; ſecondly, that it is a parching, drying, withering wind. This wind is famous in Scripture, and great things have been done by it. (Exod. 10.13.) Moſes ſtretched forth his Rod over the Land of Egypt, and the Lord brought an Eaſt-wind upon the Land, all the day and all the night; and when it was morning the Eaſt-wind brought the Locuſts. And in Chap. 14. verſe 21. Moſes ſtretcht out his hand over the Sea, and the Lord cauſed the Sea to go back by a ſtrong Eaſt-wind all the night, and made the Sea dry, and the waters were divided. An Eaſt-wind brought that plague of the Locuſts upon Egypt, and a ſtrong Eaſt-wind divided the Sea for the Iſraelites, in mercy to them, and in judgment to the Egyptians. We read of the ſtrength of this wind (Acts 27.14.) where that dreadful Sea-ſtorm is thus deſcribed, But not long after there aroſe againſt it a tempeſtuous wind, called Euroclydon; ſo called of the Eaſt from whence it bloweth. Yet Naturaliſts tell us that Euroclydon doth not ſignifie any particular wind, but any tempeſtuous wind, or guſt, becauſe ſuch windes uſually come out of the Eaſt. In the fourth of Jon. (v. 6,7,8.) we read of the troubleſome vehemency of the Eaſtwind; Jonah had a very pleaſant gourd, which the Lord gave him as a ſhelter and ſhadow againſt the heat. But the Lord prepared a worm when the morning roſe the next day, and it ſmote the gourd that it withered, and it came to paſs when the Sun did ariſe, that God prepared a vehement Eaſt-wind, which beat upon the head of Jonah that he fainted, and wiſhed in himſelf to dye. As God prepared the Gourd to comfort Jonah, ſo he prepared a vehement Eaſt-wind to vex Jonah; and the Eaſtwind vexed him more then the Gourd comforted him. It is ſaid of Ephraim (Hoſ. 13.15.) Though he be fruitful among his brethren, an Eaſt-wind ſhall come, the wind of the Lord ſhall come up from the Wilderneſs, and his Spring ſhall become dry. We are not to take the Eaſt-wind in the Prophet properly, but metaphorically, and ſo the Eaſt-wind notes any evil or affliction, which as a vehement and fierce wind beats upon us, and diſturbs us. Afflictions are compared to water, and afflictions are compared to wind; any thing which hath any trouble and annoyance, any thing which hath force and violence in it, may bear a ſimilitude to affliction; and ſo the Eaſt-wind, wherein all theſe concur, doth fully bear a proportion of likeneſs with affliction, or any judgment ſent out by God againſt ſinful man.

קדים Per illipſin pro רוח תרים quaſi anterior et prior, utpote qui à priori et anteriori mundi parte ſpiret. Piſc.

The Eaſt-wind carrieth him away.

The word here uſed ſignifieth to lift or take up aloft in the air; ſtrong winds have a mighty force, they ſometimes overthrow lofty Towers to the ground, and ſometimes pull up high grown Trees by the Roots, and make heavy Bodyes move, yea mount into the air. The wicked man, of whom Job diſcourſeth, ſeemed to be well rooted like a Tree, and foundation'd like a Tower in the Earth, yet here is a wind that pulls him up, that blows him down, and carrieth him away.

נשא Tollet efferet ſublimem, ſublatum expellet.

But whither doth it carry him? I anſwer, it carries him into a miſerable condition, that is the general; and we may ſpecificate or put it into what particulars we will. As, firſt, it carrieth him (poſſibly) into a land of captivity and bodily bondage ; ſecondly, it carrieth him into a land of ſcarcity and bodily want; thirdly, it carrieth him into diſgrace and infamy, his name ſhall be remembered no more with honour; fourthly, it carrieth him to his chamber, and there to his ſick-bed; fifthly, it carrieth him to his death-bed, and to his grave, yea without repentance and faith in Chriſt, it carrieth him to hell, and leaves him under chains of everlaſting darkneſs. Theſe are all lamentable removes, and the laſt is the moſt lamentable of all. The Eaſt wind of affliction and trouble, carrieth the wicked man away into ſome of theſe ſad coaſts and lands of darkneſs. Thus it is ſaid of Iſrael in the firſt of Hoſea (verſ. 6.) I will not have mercy upon the houſe of Iſrael, but I will utterly carry or take him away; that is, I will take him from all his comforts and injoyments, I will ſtrip and divorce him from all his poſſeſſions and relations. The Eaſt-wind carrieth him away.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The Judgments of God are irreſiſtible.

Afflictions prevail like an Eaſt-wind, man cannot withſtand them, either by any power of his own, nor by any power of his friends and confederates; no power can ſtay or hold him in his place, whom the anger of God, or an angry God bloweth upon. When once the diſpleaſure of God goeth out againſt him, there is no abiding for him. How well ſoever any man is founded, though founded as a Rock; how well ſoever any man is rooted, though rooted like the Oake, yet up he muſt, he muſt be gone when this Eaſt-wind comes. How much more is this true of wicked men, of whom David ſaith, that they are chaff, and as the duſt before the wind, which the leaſt puff carrieth away and ſcattereth. The Prophet (Iſa. 41. 16.) tells us, that the greateſt powers of the world, even mountains ſhall be threſhed and fanned in the day of the Lords anger, Behold I will make thee a new ſharp threſhing inſtrument, having teeth, and thou ſhalt threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall, and make the hills as chaff. The great men of the world, are like mountains and hills, yet they ſhall be beaten and threſhed, they ſhall become as chaff, they ſhall be fann'd, and the wind ſhall carry them away, and the whirlwind ſhall ſcatter them. Becauſe whole mountains ſeem too big to be carried away by the wind, therefore God threſheth and beats them to pieces, he makes them like chaff, which the wind eaſily diſperſeth and bloweth away. The next words ſhew the effect and energie of the judgment, it ſhall carry him away.

And he departeth] The word is, he goeth; the wind comes, and he goeth or departeth ; how doth he depart ? We commonly ſay, a man (in that caſe) playes loath to depart; he departs, but not willingly, or he departs whether he will or no. Thus he departs; and whence doth he depart ? he departs out of his beloved ſtate and warm ſeat, out of his riches, pleaſures and honours, which he hath adored, and upon which he hath ſo much doated ; he departs from all his pleaſant things, even from the deſire of his eyes, and from the joy of his heart ; he thought himſelf in a paradiſe, but it was a fools paradiſe ; he departs from his delight, from his goodly Eden, from all theſe he muſt depart, and from his life too. There is nothing in this world but may quickly depart from us, and if it doth not, we may quickly depart from all that we have in this world. And as for the wicked man, an Eaſt-wind is prepared to carry him away, and he departeth. Old Simeon ſaid (Luke 2. 26.) Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace; the death of Saints is a departing, and we uſually ſay of any man when he dyeth, he is departed; they who dye, depart from their Earthly All, what or how great ſoever it is ; yet I take this departure in the Text, with which the wicked man is threatned, for his departure from all the good things of this life, rather then for his departure from life it ſelf. Suppoſe, his life is continued, yet his life ſhall be a kind of death to him, and he ſhall be as a dead man while he lives.

Hence Obſerve, Wicked men often depart from the comforts of this life, before they depart this life.

They live to ſee themſelves miſerable, and that is a miſerable life, a life more miſerable then death in the nature of it, though not in the conſequents of it. How unhappy are they who outlive all that which they account and call their happineſs. The next words clear this further.

And as a ſtorm hurleth him out of his place.

Ventilabit eum de loco ſuo, vel turbinabit, i. e. turbinis in morem abripiat et abducet. Merc.

Or, as others render more ſtrictly to the letter, and elegancy of the Original, And ſtormeth him out of his place ; that is, the Eaſt wind of trouble, like an impetuous ſtorm, hurleth him out of his place. The word Hurleth, notes violence ; he is driven out by force ; he that is hurled or ſtormed out of his place, would willingly have ſtayed there.

It may be queſtioned, what the place is, out of which he is hurled ?

I anſwer ; we may take it firſt properly for the place of his dwelling, the ſtorm hurleth him out of houſe and home ; ſecondly, for the place of his trading dealing and gaining, from his place of profit, from his ſhop or office ; thirdly, from the place of his authority, he is hurled out of his ruling and governing place, out of the bounds of his dominion and juriſdiction ; ſuch ſtorms and tempeſts doth God raiſe againſt and rain upon wicked men, whether in a private or publick capacity, that whether their place, be a place of pleaſure, or a place of profit, or a place of honour, they are (to their grief) removed out of it.

Hence Obſerve, The Lord breaks out upon ſome wicked men, with great violence and with fury.

He hurleth, he ſtormeth them out of their place. A City, or a Fort, that is ſtrongly beſieged, and will not yield, is at laſt ſtormed ; thus the Lord ſtorms the Forts, the ſtrong places of the mighty of the world with fury, and ſuch are ſaid to be full of the fury of the Lord (Iſa. 51. 20.) Moſes treating of the mortality of man (Pſal. 90. 5.) ſhews that beſides the general neceſſity of dying, under which all men are, God ſends ſome violent judgments which riſe like a mighty inundation, and bear down all before them, or take all away with them ; Thou carrieſt them away as with a flood; and as death comes upon many as a flood, ſo do the calamities of this life. But among all the Texts that I meet with in the book of God which ſhews the violence which the Lord in Judgment uſeth againſt evil men, read (Iſa. 22. 18.) Behold the Lord will carry thee away with a mighty captivity, or captivating he will captivate thee (as if he had ſaid, they ſhall carry thee away at pleaſure) and (as it follows) will ſurely cover thee, he will ſurely violently turn and toſs thee like a Ball, into a large Country, there ſhalt thou dye, and there the Chariot of thy glory ſhall be the ſhame of thy Lords houſe. What a (congeries or) heap of words are here ? He will ſurely violently turn and toſs thee like a Ball into a large Country. The ſtrictneſs of the Hebrew is hardly to be expreſſed with any good congruity in our language , in toſſing he will toſs thee with a toſſing , ſo we may read it word for word ; as if the Spirit of God did even ſtrive for Rhetorick to ſhew how this great man ſhould be toſſed; he ſaith not barely he ſhall be toſſed, but ſurely, violently, in toſſing he ſhall be toſſed, and that with a toſſing. God would hurl him out of his place, as a man hurls a Ball, which is eaſily done, and yet violently done. Men who are like great mountains in the opinion and eſtimation of men, are but like Stool-balls or Tennis-balls in the hand of God. And he hurleth them like a Ball in a large Country; not only like a Ball in a narrow Room, but like a Ball that hath ſcope enough; he toſſeth them far and near, through all kind of evils and calamities ; A ſtorm hurleth him out of his place.

Convolvendo convolvet te convolutione ſicut pilam, i. e. per omnia malorum et calamitatum genera rotabitur.

Secondly, As the place out of which he is hurled may be conceived to be a place of ſtrength, wherein the wicked man thought himſelf ſafe and ſure, out of the danger of Storms and Gunſhot, Obſerve, There is no place ſo ſtrongly fortified, which can ſecure ſinners againſt the wrath of the Lord.

He will ſtorm them out of all their Refuges, yea pull them by the ears out of their Sanctuary. The Aſſyrian thought himſelf ſafe in his place, but God fetcht him out, (Iſa. 14. 13, 14, 15.) Thou haſt ſaid in thy heart, I will aſcend to Heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God, I will ſit alſo upon the mount of the Congregation in the ſides of the North; I will aſcend above the heights of the Clouds, I will be like the moſt High. What is the meaning of all this boaſt? We cannot imagine the Aſſyrian ſo mad, as to think that he could build himſelf a houſe in the Heavens, or keep his Court among the Stars. His meaning is only this; he hoped to ſettle himſelf here upon Earth ſo ſtrongly, that he ſhould be as ſafe and free from the reach of danger, as if he had a place among the Stars. Many who oppoſe Heaven, believe themſelves as much above oppoſition, as if they were planted in the Heavens. But what follows (v. 15.) Yet thou ſhalt be brought down to Hell, to the ſides of the Pit; there is Hell oppoſed to Heaven, Hell ſignifies the loweſt and worſt condition, as Heaven the higheſt and the beſt. The Aſſyrians Heaven could not ſecure him againſt this Hell; the Heaven that God will give the Saints ſhall ſecure them for ever againſt Hell; but the Heaven which wicked men make to themſelves, cannot ſecure them againſt this or that Hell; a worldly Heaven cannot ſecure us againſt a worldly Hell (Jer. 22.15.) Shalt thou reign becauſe thou cloſeſt thy ſelf in Cedar? did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment, and juſtice, and then it was well with him? Hear how the Lord ſpeaks to him in the 13. verſe, Woe unto him that buildeth his houſe by unrighteouſneſs, and his Chambers by wrong, that uſeth his neighbours wiſe without wages, and giveth him not for his work; that ſaith, I will build me a wide houſe, and large Chambers, and cutteth him out windows, and it is ceiled with Cedar, and painted with Vermilion. Doſt thou think thy ſelf ſafe, becauſe thou haſt a great houſe? No, ſaith the Lord, I will put thee out of thy place, though thou cloſeſt thy ſelf with Cedar. Now, Babylon (Rev. 18.7,8.) ſaith in her heart, I ſit as a Queen, and am no widdow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow. But what ſaith God in his Word? it follows; Therefore her plagues ſhall come upon her in one day. I remember the Story of Alexander, who marcht with his Army to the Sogdian Rock, in which ſome were ſo confident of ſafety againſt his victorious forces, that when Alexander ſate down before the Rock, thoſe within ſcorned him, and asked him whether his Souldiers had wings, or could fly? if not, they thought it impoſſible that they ſhould come there; but Alexander made them underſtand that his Souldiers had wings, for they ſtorm'd and took the place ſoon after. Much more may the Lord ſay to thoſe who have greateſt ſtrength and power, to thoſe who are ſo high that none but the fowls of the air can come at them, I have winged Meſſengers that can ſoon ſcale and advance to the top of your Rock, and hurl you out of your place; as there is no ſtrength without the Lord, ſo there is no ſtrength againſt the Lord, as appears yet more fully in the next verſe.

Verſ. 22. For God ſhall caſt upon him, and not ſpare: he would fain flee out of his hand.

The word God is not expreſt in the Hebrew, therefore we put it in a different character, the Text is only, He ſhall caſt upon him, &c. But we may eaſily ſuppoſe who is the Author or efficient cauſe of theſe evils following and falling upon the evil man; the Eaſt-wind is in the hand of the Lord, he holdeth that metaphorical wind in his firſt, as well as the natural, both are alike in his power. Even things not only without reaſon but without ſenſe obey him, and are at his call; God ſhall caſt upon him, yet

Others underſtand the Eaſt-wind ſpoken of before; that, having carried him away, ſhall caſt upon him, and not ſpare, the Storm ſhall pour ſorrow enough upon him; but rather as we, God ſhall caſt upon him. The word which we render, to caſt, hath a ſpecial reference to the caſting of Darts from an high place upon thoſe which are below. The word is uſed (Pſ. 147.17.) He caſteth forth his Ice like morſels, who can ſtand before his cold? and again (Lam. 2.1.) How hath the Lord covered the daughters of Sion with a Cloud in his anger, and caſt down from Heaven unto the Earth, the beauty of Sion. The Lord ſometimes caſteth down the beauty of Sion to the Earth, and he will for ever caſt down the beauty of Babylon, and the ſupporters of Babylon to the ground. If judgment begin at the houſe of God (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Pet. 4.17,18.) what will the end of them be that obey not the Goſpel of God? and if the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and ſinner appear? certainly

God ſhall caſt upon him, and not ſpare.

But what ſhall be caſt upon him?

Firſt, In general (as was ſhewed from the former words) any thing which may afflict or trouble, vex, or moleſt him, conceive what you will, ſit down and imagine what evil you can, God ſhall caſt that upon him, as a Dart, as a ſhower of Darts and Stones from on high upon him.

Secondly, Thus, God ſhall caſt that upon him which he hath deſerved, and that is bad enough.

Thirdly, God ſhall caſt the Storm before ſpoken of upon him.

Fourthly, God ſhall caſt himſelf upon him, he ſhall ruſh upon him, and ſo cruſh him to pieces; God himſelf falls upon wicked men in all ſuch troubles as are beyond the power of men; as God offers himſelf into the arms and boſomes of his people in mercy to comfort them, ſo he throws himſelf upon the backs of his enemies in wrath, like a mighty milſtone, or as a mountain of milſtones, to cruſh and break them; God himſelf, like a terrible Tempeſt overwhelming them: As it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, ſo it is a fearful thing when the hand of the living God falleth upon us, or rather both theſe are one and the ſame fearful thing. God doth eminently appear in ſome revenges upon men, and they are forced to confeſs, the finger, the hand of God is upon them. God himſelf in wrath is the portion of the wicked, as himſelf is the portion of his people in love. And as of all mercies and priviledges, this is the greateſt, that the merciful God himſelf is the portion of his people, ſo this is the greateſt miſery, that the wrathful and angry God will be the portion of the wicked. God himſelf appears againſt them, and will (as it were) do them miſchief in perſon. For as God expreſſes himſelf not only doing favours by the hand of Meſſengers and inſtruments, but as doing offices of love in perſon to his people; ſo he will execute wrath and vengeance in perſon upon his enemies. It is ſaid (Gen. 19.24.) Then the Lord rained upon Sodome and upon Gomorrah, brimſtone and fire from the Lord out of Heaven. And he overthrew thoſe Cities, &c. Thus as Chriſt ſpeaks of himſelf in the Goſpel (Mat. 21.44.) Whoſoever ſhall fall upon this Stone ſhall be broken: but upon whom this Stone falls, it will grind him to powder. Chriſt himſelf falls upon unbelievers and deſpiſers of the Goſpel, as a moſt burdenſome Stone. He doth not only ſend deſtruction upon them, but is deſtruction to them; or (as the Apoſtle gives it, 2 Theſ. 1.9.) They ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; that is, deſtruction ſhall come forth immediately from the preſence and glorious power of God upon them, and that without any meaſure or mitigation, as it follows, in Jobs Text, He ſhall caſt upon him,

Ruet in eũ deus ultor. Bez.

And not ſpare.] Sparing may be conſidered in two things; firſt, as to the degree; ſecondly, as to the continuance of an affliction. So that to ſay, He ſhall caſt upon him, and not ſpare, imports thus much, he ſhall be puniſhed to the utmoſt, and alwayes. There is a ſparing mercy of God (of which read the notes upon Chap. 16. 13.) but the wicked ſhall not partake of this ſparing mercy in the day of the Lords fierce anger.

Hence Note, Wicked men ſhall have Judgment without mercy.

It is an argument of greater anger, when then the Lord ſaith, I will not ſpare, then when he ſaith, I will ſmite; when he ſmites he may ſpare, but where he doth not ſpare, he doth nothing but ſmite. And thus he will deal at laſt with ungodly men; he ſpares them long, but he will not ever ſpare. His Spirit will not alwayes ſtrive (as he ſaith of the old world, Gen. 6. 3.) nor be kept (as ſome expound that Text) like a Sword in the ſheath. A time is coming when God will know no pity nor compaſſion toward them, he will forget to be gracious. This is a temptation ſometimes upon the Godly themſelves, and it is a truth towards the wicked. God will forget to be gracious, and ſhut up his loving kindneſs in everlaſting diſpleaſure. He that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them, will ſhew them no favour (Iſa. 27.11.) The wicked are they who have not ſpared to ſin, they have not ſpared to do evil, but have done it as they could, with all their might; they have ſinned greedily, they have drunk iniquity as water, as the fiſh, or as a Behemoth drinks water, pleaſantly, aboundantly. Now when God comes to deal with them in a way of Judgment, he will caſt upon them and not ſpare.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly, God will deal with wicked men, by way of retaliation; as they have done themſelves, and dealt with others, ſo he will do to and deal with them.

Cruel men have not ſpared to oppreſs others, now God will not ſpare them; they have been bloody, and would ſhew no mercy, therefore they ſhall have judgment without mercy (*Jam.*2.13.) and blood to drink, till they are drunken and fall, and never riſe any more. They have been wanton and luſtful, they would not forbear any forbidden pleaſure; ſtoln waters were ſweet to them, and (ſinful) bread (or bread gotten by ſin,) eaten in ſecret was pleaſant to them. Now the Lord will feed them with gall and wormwood, and give them the wine of aſtoniſhment (in great plenty) to drink; he will prepare for them the bread of adverſity and the waters of affliction to the full. It is not only an act of righteouſneſs to others, but of reſpect to our ſelves, to do to others as we our ſelves would have done to us; for one time or other, God will do to all men who do evil to others, and continue to do it, as they have done to others. He will caſt upon them, and not ſpare.

He would fain flee out of his hand.

The Hebrew Elegancy is, in fleeing he fleeth, that is, he fleeth apace; he needs neither whip nor ſpur to avoid danger, who would not be provoked by both and more to come on in duty. The wicked man being under theſe preſſures, or in this ſtorm, would get out of it with all his heart, He would fain flee out of his hand. Whoſe hand? out of the hand of God, or from his ſevere and deſtroying Judgments. Such Judgments are frequently in Scripture expreſt by the hand of God (Exod. 9. 3.) Behold the hand of the Lord is upon thy Cattel, which is in the field, upon the Horſes, upon the Aſſes, upon the Camels, upon the Oxen, and upon the Sheep, there ſhall be a very grievous murrain. And in the 24. Chapter of the ſame Book (v. 11.) it is ſaid, And upon the Nobles of the Children of Iſrael, he laid not his hand (that is, he did not hurt nor ſmite them) alſo they ſaw God, and did eat and drink. When the Text ſaith, the wicked man would fain flee out of his hand, it implyeth two things; firſt, that the hand of God is very terrible to him; ſecondly, that he hath ſtrong deſires, and uſeth his utmoſt endeavours (though both in vain) to get out of his hand.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, It is a fearful thing to fall into the hand of God.

That is the Apoſtles expreſs doctrine (*Heb.*10 31.) It is the joy of Godly men that they are in the hand of God, but it is the lot of wicked men to fall into the hand of an angry God. Godly men deſire rather to fall into the hand of God when he is angry (becauſe even then towards them there is mercy with him) then into the hand of angry men, with whom there is no mercy, or their very mercies are cruel. Holy David made it his election to fall into the hands of God, when to chaſten his vain-glorious pride, and carnal confidence, he was offered that ſad choice of Sword, Famine, or Peſtilence (2 *Sam.*24.) He choſe rather to be under an immediate then mediate Judgment (for though they are alſo in the hand of God, that are under his mediate Judgments, yet they ſeem more in the hand of God who are under his immediate Judgments) but when men have abuſed mercy, when they have gone on in their ſins, till God cometh to execute vengeance, then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of God. Saints commend themſelves into the hand of God in times of danger, and at the hour of death; Into thy hand, O Lord, I commit my Spirit, is the voice of a believer (Pſal. 31. 5.) but how dreadful is it for them to fall into the hand of God, who never committed themſelves into his hand! How dreadful is it for them to fall into the hand of God, who have lifted up the heel againſt God, and have gone on ſinning with a high hand! Some are ſo wilfully blind, that they will not ſee the hand of God when it is lifted up in his moſt marvellous providential diſpenſations in the world; the Prophet complains of ſuch (Iſa. 26.11.) Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not ſee; but they who will not ſee the hand of God lifted up, that they may give him the glory of what he hath done, ſhall feel themſelves falling into the hand of God, by the greatneſs of their own ſufferings.

Secondly, Obſerve, Wicked men perceiving themſelves fallen into the hand of God, will do their utmoſt to get out of it.

There is a natural inſtinct in every living thing to get out of harms way; when a Storm is up, all the Beaſts of the field look for ſhelter, and haſten to their covert, if they have any. And thus wicked men uſe all means, all endeavours, they plot and contrive to diſintangle and diſingage themſelves from thoſe miſeries by which the hand of God hath laid hold on them. They would fain flee, yea fly out of his hand. They give all diligence to avoid the evils of puniſhment, though they gave no diligence at all to avoid the evil of ſin. They are leaden-heel'd and ſlow-paced in doing what God enjoyns them, but they would be light-footed, yea even winged to eſcape what he inflicts upon them. They make no haſt to keep the Commandment, there they will not ſo much as go, but they make all haſt to free themſelves from the penalty, then they run. Poſſibly they will not ſtir while judgments are only threatned, but when once they ſee them executed, then they beſtir themſelves (as we ſay) to purpoſe, though indeed to little purpoſe. For Thirdly, Note, The wicked labour in vain to eſcape the hand of God.

They would eſcape, but they cannot; as many ſhall ſeek to enter in at the ſtrait gate which leads Heaven-ward, ſo all will ſeek at laſt to eſcape the wide gate which leads to deſtruction, whether temporal or eternal, yet they ſhall not be able.

Some render this latter part of the verſe, thus; He fleeth clean away from his place; whereas, we ſay, out of his hand, they ſay, out of his place; and ſo the Hebrew word is tranſlated (Deut. 23. 12. *Iſa.*56.5.) according to which reading the meaning is this, he runneth clean away; there is a Storm upon him, he cannot abide to be where he was, he runs for it, he fleeth his Country, you need not baniſh him, he baniſheth himſelf, and becomes (though againſt his will) a willing exile. But I paſs this.

Verſ. 23. Men ſhall clap their hands at him, and ſhall hiſs him out of his place.

Theſe are the concluding words or Epiphonema of the whole Chapter and ſad Story of the wicked man; Men ſhall clap their hands at him; he doth not ſay what ſort of men, or how many men, but men, that is, men univerſally, or men generally ſhall do it, or they that uſe to clap hands upon any occaſion ſhall readily clap their hands at him. As it is ſaid (Job 3. 8.) Let them curſe it, that curſe the day, who are ready to raiſe up their mourning, that is, let them that uſe to curſe the day, curſe it. So here. Men ſhall clap their hands at him, that is, all they who uſe to clap hands at ſuch events, ſhall clap their hands at this mans fall. But what is the meaning of this, what doth the clapping of hands ſpeak? I anſwer, it ſpeaks diſgrace to the perſons, and Inſultation at the fall of wicked men. The enemies of Jeruſalem are deſcribed doing thus, when ſhe lay in the duſt (*Lam.*2.15.) All that paſſed by clapt their hands at her. And in the Propheſie of Ezekiel (Chap.25.6.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, becauſe thou haſt clapped thine hands, and ſtamped with the feet, and rejoyced in heart, with all thy deſpight againſt the Land of Iſrael; behold therefore I will ſtretch out my hand upon thee, &c. Clapping of hands is joyned with joy and rejoycing at the ruine of others. Again, to clap the hand doth often ſignifie applauſe, which is not only a conſent to or contentation with what is acted or ſpoken, but an high approbation of it, and ſo it may be expounded here; as if when men ſhould ſee thoſe Tyrants caſt down, they ſhould ſay, It is very well done, they have but their due, and ſo give their plaudity to it; clapping of hands is uſed chiefly at Interludes or Stage-plays, where men the Actors do their parts with a Grace, and hit the humors of thoſe they perſonate to the life, both in ſpeech and geſture, then the ſpectators give their plaudite by clapping hands. Such a plaudite or applauſe is often given at the real downfall and moſt tragical concluſion of wicked men, eſpecially of thoſe whoſe power hath been uſed for the oppreſſion of other men.

Further, as the clapping of hands is a ſign of rejoycing and applauſe, ſo alſo of ſcorn and contempt, and this I conceive moſt proper to this Text, if we conſider the next and laſt words of this verſe and Chapter. Men ſhall clap their hands, and ſhall hiſs him out of his place. Hiſſing in Scripture is uſed two wayes; firſt, there is an hiſſing to, which is to call another to us; ſecondly, there is an hiſſing at, which is the deriding of another. We read of the former in the Propheſie of Iſaiah (Chap. 5. 26) And he will lift up an Enſign to the Nations from far, and he will hiſs even from the end of the Earth. And again in Chap. 7. of the ſame Propheſie (v. 18.) And it ſhall come to paſs, that in that day, the Lord ſhall hiſs for the flie that is in the uttermoſt part of the River of Egypt, and for the Bee that is in the Land of Aſſyria. God ſhall hiſs for the Flie and Bee, he ſhall call to them, and they ſhall come. We many times give a hiſs to a friend or a ſervant to come to us, when we would ſpeak with them or employ them. Of that ſecond ſort of hiſſing, that of deriſion or deteſtation, we read (1 King. 9. 8.) where after Solomons prayer at the dedication of the Temple, the Lord tells him, what bleſſings ſhould be upon him and the whole people of Iſrael, if he walked in integrity, and uprightneſs, as David his father had done before him; But (ſaith the Lord) if you ſhall at all turn from following me, you or your Children, to ſerve other Gods, then will I cut off Iſrael out of the Land which I have given them, and at this houſe which is high, every one that paſſeth by it, ſhall be aſtoniſhed, and ſhall hiſs, and they ſhall ſay, why hath the Lord done thus unto this Land, and unto this houſe? Great Judgments upon the Church cauſe aſtoniſhment in all beholders, and they cauſe hiſſing with ſcorn, in malignant enemies. We find this threatning propheſie in part fulfilled, as good King Hezekiah reports it in his ſpeech to the Levites at the beginning of his reformation (2 Chron. 29. 8.) Our fathers have treſpaſſed, &c. Wherefore the wrath of the Lord was upon Judah and Jeruſalem; and he hath delivered them to trouble, to aſtoniſhment, and to hiſſing, as you ſee with your eyes. And as we find the renuing of the threatning, under this term (Jer. 25. 9.) ſo the fulfilling of it to the utmoſt, is dolefully acknowledged by the ſame Prophet (Lam. 2. 15.) All they that paſs by thee, clap their hands at thee, they hiſs and wag their head at the daughter of Jeruſalem, ſaying, is this the City that men call the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole Earth? And as this was the fate of Jeruſalem for walking contrary to the knowledge which they had of God; ſo of Nineveh which knew not God. (Zeph. 2. 15.) This is the rejoycing City that dwelt carleſly, that ſaid in her heart, I am, and there is none beſide me? How is ſhe become a deſolation, a place for Beaſts to lye down in? every one that paſſeth by ſhall hiſs and wag his hand.

They ſhall hiſs him out of his place.

What place? his place was ſpoken of before; there it was ſaid, God ſhall hurl him out of his place; here it is ſaid, they ſhall hiſs him out of his place; in both verſes his place is the ſame; Men ſhall hiſs him out of his place, that is, out of his dwelling, out of his office, out of his dignity and authority, yea (as ſome underſtand and extend the ſence) they ſhall hiſs him out of the world; when he dyes, inſtead of mourners he ſhall have hiſſers; let him go, who cares for him; he never did good while he lived, and he hath not a good word when he dyeth.

Some refer the place, not to the man that is hiſſed, but to the hiſſers; Men ſhall hiſs him out of his place; that is, every man out of the place where he lives ſhall hiſs at him; every man at his own door ſhall ſtand rejoycing, deriding, and pointing at him, and ſay as it is in the Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 52. 7.) Loe this is the man that made not God his ſtrength, but truſted in the aboundance of his Riches, and ſtrengthned himſelf in his wickedneſs! He ſhall be wondered at, and hooted as an Owle among the Birds. As he was once a wonder of proſperity, ſo he ſhall be a wonder of miſery: All ſhall wonder at him, but none ſhall pity him; every man in his place ſhall hiſs at him, or, Men ſhall hiſs him out of his place.

Hence Obſerve, The fall of wicked men is the rejoycing of all men.

It is the rejoycing both of good and bad, yet with a difference; for as the proſperity of good men is matter of joy both to good and bad men upon ſeveral accounts, ſo likewiſe is the fall and affliction of the wicked (Prov. 11. 10) When it goeth well with the righteous, the City rejoyceth; that is, all the inhabitants of the City, though not every man of all ſorts, yet ſome men of all ſorts, degrees, and qualities, whether civil or moral, are glad of it. All ſorts of men are the better for a good man, much more for a good Magiſtrate, therefore all ſorts rejoyce when it goeth well with the righteous, but when the wicked periſheth there is ſhouting. He doth not ſay by whom or who ſhall ſhout when the wicked periſh, but as the nature of the thing, ſo experience teacheth us, that men of all ſorts, even ſome bad as well as all good men ſhout for joy when the wicked periſh, eſpecially ſuch wicked men as having been in publick place and power, have exerciſed their power to the oppreſſion and vexation of the people. Their ruine is a publick joy, whoſe riſing hath cauſed a publick ſorrow.

But may we clap hands, and hiſs at the downfall of the wicked? may we rejoyce at their ruine? I anſwer, this Text ſpeaks only as to the matter of fact, what is uſually done, not what ought to be done. Yet in anſwer, the Caſe we may ſay, it is lawful to rejoyce at the downfal of ſuch, ſo we do not rejoyce unlawfully at it, as moſt do. All men rejoyce at ſuch times; wicked and prophane men rejoyce prophanely and wickedly; but when Saints rejoyce, and hiſs, they do it holily or ſpiritually. To rejoyce ſo at the calamity of the wicked, is not only permitted but commanded. When the fall of Babylon is propheſied (Rev. 18.) we find indeed (v. 11.) that, The Merchants of the Earth ſhall weep and mourn over her, for no man buyeth their Merchandiſe any more. And again (v. 15.) The Merchants of theſe things which were made rich by her, ſhall ſtand afar off, for fear of her torment, weeping and wailing, and ſaying, Alas, Alas, that great City, &c. But (v. 20.) order is given, Rejoyce over her thou Heaven, and the holy Apoſtles and Prophets, for God hath avenged you on her. We muſt not, we may not rejoyce at the downfal of Babylon, or of any Babyloniſh Spirits in the pride of our hearts, nor with carnal affections, for ſelfiſh ends and intereſts: Nor are we to do it with cruel and revengful affections, as being glad at the deſtruction of men, and glutting our ſelves with their blood. Thus to waſh our feet in the blood of the wicked (which yet, the Pſalmiſt ſaith, the righteous ſhall do when they ſee the vengeance, Pſal. 58. 10.) were indeed to defile and pollute our own Souls. But there is a rejoycing at the ſight of the vengeance, which is a waſhing of our feet (ſpiritually) in the blood of the ungodly; for if thereby we are made more wary of our own goings, and are careful to walk more holily; if when we ſee the wrath of God breaking out againſt the ungodly, we take heed to our wayes, and keep in paths of righteouſneſs, then we waſh our feet in the blood of the ungodly. And doubtleſs we may receive much good by obſerving the dealings of God with them that are evil. When the Apoſtle had ſhewed, that with many of the Iſraelites God was not well pleaſed (that is, he was highly diſpleaſed with them) for they were overthrown in the wilderneſs (1 Cor. 10. 6.) He adds (v. 6.) Now theſe things were our examples (they were our examples not for imitation but for caution, as it follows in the ſame verſe) to the intent we ſhould not luſt after evil things, as they alſo luſted; neither be Idolaters, as were ſome of them; neither commit fornication, as ſome of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thouſand; neither tempt Chriſt, as ſome of them alſo tempted, and were deſtroyed of Serpents, &c. He cloſeth the report of their ſinning and ſuffering, with a repetition of the former uſe (v. 11.) Now all theſe things haped unto them for examples, and are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. To receive warning, not to walk in thoſe Soul defiling wayes, in which we ſee, hear, or read, that any have fallen and periſhed, is a bleſſed way of waſhing our feet in the blood of the ungodly. And unleſs our rejoycing at the fall of any wicked men, be improved as a means to preſerve us in our ſtanding, our rejoycing is not good. Further,

We may ſtate the caſe of rejoycing at the downfal of the wicked in theſe particulars.

Firſt, We may rejoyce, as there is a mercy in it to the people of God, or as a block and Impediment in the way of their peace and proſperity is removed; for in every judgment upon wicked men, there is mercy to good men, either to the Church of God in general, or to this and that good good man in ſpecial. That the Babyloniſh great Mountains which oppoſe Mount Sion, and darken the glory of it, are level'd and become plaines, or quite removed, is matter of rejoycing to Sion, and ſhould make the daughters of Jeruſalem glad.

Secondly, We may rejoyce, becauſe the ruine of ſuch contrary-minded men declares the righteouſneſs of God, or becauſe ſuch Judgments of God evidently ſhew forth the Juſtice of God; for as the laſt Judgment will be the great day of the declaration of the righteous Judgment of God, ſo theſe leſſer and nearer Judgments declare it alſo. And as it well becomes all men to rejoyce in the mercy of God to themſelves, ſo it is not at all uncomely for them to rejoyce in the manifeſtations of his Juſtice upon others.

Thirdly, We may rejoyce and clap our hands for joy, when the wicked are hurled and hiſſed out of their places, as this diſpenſation ſets a ſeal to the truth of God; and that two wayes.

Firſt, In reference to his threatnings of deſtruction to the wicked, which are fulfilled and made good by ſuch judgments. There is nothing doth more honour God then his truth, and as he is to be honoured in believing the truth of his threatnings even while wicked men are in their greateſt hight and flouriſh, ſo he is to be honoured for the truth of his threatnings by our rejoycing when we ſee wicked men laid low and wither; for then his truth is not only ſure, but clear and viſible.

Secondly, In reference to his promiſe of anſwering the prayer of his own people, to which even thoſe judgments are oftentimes, if not alwayes a return. Some or other of the Saints are digging continually by prayer at the root of thoſe ungodly men who are publick enemies, either for their converſion, that they may no more have a mind to do miſchief, or for their confuſion, that they may no more be able to do it. Now every anſwer and return of prayer, as it calls us to bleſs and praiſe God, ſo to rejoyce and take comfort our ſelves in the truth of God. See more of this point in the obſervations upon the Nineteenth verſe of the Twenty-ſecond Chapter.

Good men meet with many troubles in this life; but as when they fall they have no aſſurance to riſe again, upon which ground the enemy is wiſht not to rejoyce at their fall (Eic. 7.8.) ſo they find many that mourn with them, and none rejoycing at their troubles, but they whoſe compaſſions and tears are not worth the owning. But the miſery of the wicked when they fall is double; firſt, becauſe they ſhall riſe up to proſperity no more; ſecondly, becauſe there is ſo univerſal a rejoycing at their adverſity. None grieve their griefs, nor are any truly affected with their ſorrow; it is ſome eaſe to thoſe that are afflicted, that they are pitied, but to be juſtly hiſſed and laughed at when afflicted, is more painful and afflictive, then the affliction it ſelf. How ſad is their condition, whoſe ſadneſs makes others merry, and who inſtead of being lamented are derided. It is ſaid of ſome bad Kings, that they dyed not being deſired; what is it then to dye ſcorned? what is it to go jeared out of the world, whether by a natural or a violent death? we ſay truly, none are more miſerable then they who do not commiſerate their own miſeries (and that's a common caſe in reſpect of ſpiritually miſeries, which alſo have a tendency to eternal) we may ſay alſo that none are more miſerable then they who have none to commiſerate their miſeries. And ſurely none are ſo uſed by all ſorts of men, but they, who have been grievous, and are odious to all. None but they who are lookt at as wolves to the flock, unfit to converſe with men, or as enemies to mankind, are ſo uſed; ſuch are the wicked, and that's the caſe of the wicked man in the Text in reſpect of temporal miſeries, Men ſhall clap their hands at him, and hiſs him out of his place.

Laſtly, The actions of this whole verſe, are by ſome referred to God himſelf, we ſay, Men ſhall clap their hands at him, &c. The word men, is not expreſt in the Original Text, only we ſupply it ſo; but others ſupply it thus; God ſhall clap his hand at him, and hiſs him out of his place; As if he had ſaid, God himſelf is glad to be rid of him. Thus the Scripture ſpeaks of God, after the manner of men; becauſe men ſignifie their contentment and their joy when they are eaſed of burdenſome Tyrants and Oppreſſors, by hiſſing and clapping their hands at them, therefore God is ſaid to do ſo too. So that according to this reading, we have here the juſtice of God (as it were) riding in triumph, and crying victory over the wicked. Julian the Apoſtate was forced to cry the victory of Chriſt againſt himſelf, in the indignation of his Spirit, when he was wounded and ready to dye, throwing up his blood in the air, and ſaying, O Galilean, thou haſt overcome, thus he did as it were ſing Chriſts victory over him. And at laſt God himſelf will ſing victory over all his enemies, he will laugh at them, and clap his hands, while his juſtice makes them the ſpectacles of his wrathful diſpleaſure both to Angels and men.

Explodet eũ manibus ſ is deus, ſc. humanitus dictum. Jun.

Hence Note, As men, ſo God himſelf doth rejoyce at the downfal of evil men.

We read (Deut. 28.60, 61, 62.) How the Lord by Moſes tells his own people, that if they would not obey his voice, he would cauſe the diſeaſes of Egypt to cleave unto them, alſo every ſickneſs and every plague which is not written in the book of the Law, them would the Lord bring upon them till they ſhould be deſtroyed. But how would the Lord be affected towards them in theſe calamities? would he pity them? would his bowels be moved, and his compaſſions kindled towards them? nothing leſs; for it follows (v. 63.) And it ſhall come to paſs, that as the Lord rejoyced over you, to do you good, and to multiply you: ſo the Lord will rejoyce over you, to deſtroy you, and to bring you to nought: and ye ſhall be plucked off the Land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it. Thus the Lord ſpeaks to his own people, that he will rejoyce to deſtroy them, and as it were triumph over them in their ruines, when they ſhall rebel againſt him. And again (Ezek. 5. 13.) Thus will thine anger be accompliſhed, and I will cauſe my fury to reſt upon you; that is, my fury ſhall not come upon you, once only, or for a while, but it ſhall remain or abide upon you. What follows? And I will be comforted; as if he had ſaid, it is to me a pleaſant thing, the very joy of my heart, to make my fury to reſt upon you, for in doing it I will be comforted. Now when we ſee the Lord threatning the wicked among his own people, not only with deſtruction, but with his own rejoycing at it; How much more will he do this at the deſtruction of profeſſed enemies? Solomon repreſents wiſdome doing this (Pro. 1.25.) Ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, and would none of my reproof: I alſo will laugh at your calamitie, and mock when your fear cometh, when your fear cometh as a deſolation, and your deſtruction cometh as a whirlwind: When diſtreſs and anguiſh cometh upon you. They who ſet the Lords counſel at nought, ſhall themſelves be dealt with as a thing of nought, they ſhall be deſpiſed and laughed at. How light are they in the eſteem of God, who do not weigh his counſel? Nothing ſhews man to be of leſs worth, then his judging the word of God to be little worth. Their miſery is moſt miſerable whom God doth not pity; how much more when God ſeems to rejoyce at it: when God laughs at the calamity of a perſon or people, then, as the meaſure of their ſin, ſo the meaſure of their calamity is full. Then man hath greateſt cauſe to mourn, when God laughs at him. For when God rejoyceth to do us good, then our good ſhould moſt rejoyce and pleaſe us; ſo when God rejoyceth at the evils which he brings upon us, when he at once wounds and laughs, then we have the greateſt cauſe to mourn. O how hath he reaſon to weep for ever, at whoſe weeping God laughs! what cauſe of mourning have they at whoſe mourning God is ſaid to mock? This is the portion of evil men from the Lord, He will clap his hands at them, and hiſs them out of their place.

Ridere dei eſt nolle humana afflictioni miſereri. Greg. Moral. l. 9: c. 15.

Thus Job hath laid down the firſt part of his anſwer, concerning the dealing of God with wicked men; whom he ſometimes openly proſecutes and afflicts to the eye and view of all men. He proceeds in the 28. Chapter to ſpeak of thoſe hidden and ſecret wayes of Gods dealing with them, that lye under the ordinary road, and are almoſt to all men, and altogether to the moſt of men inviſible.

CHAP. XXVIII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

Surely there is a vein for the Silver, and a place for the Gold, where they fine it.
Iron is taken out of the Earth, and Braſs is molten out of the Stone.
He ſetteth an end to darkneſs, and ſearcheth out all perfection: The Stones of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death.
The Flood breaketh out from the inhabitant; even the waters forgotten of the foot: they are dryed up, they are gone away from men.
As for the Earth, out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up as it were fire.
The Stones of it are the place of Saphirs: and it hath duſt of Gold.
There is a path which no fool knoweth, and which the Vultures eye hath not ſeen.
The Lions whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce Lion paſſed by it.
He putteth forth his hand upon the Rock, he overturneth the Mountains by the Roots.
He cutteth out Rivers among the Rocks, and his eye ſeeth every pretious thing.
He bindeth up the floods from overflowing, and the thing that is hid, bringeth he forth to light.

THIS is a long Text, but I purpoſe only a brief diſcuſſion of it; the whole being of one tenour and tendency, of one concernment and matter. To clear which I ſhall firſt ſet out the ſtate of the Chapter in general, and then give an explication of the parts.

The general ſcope which Job drives at in this Chapter, is to convince his friends that they had ſpoken raſhly, and that their opinion about the dealings of God with him was unwarrantable. The argument by which he proves it is carried quite through the Chapter; and 'tis this.

The wiſdome of God is unſearchable, and therefore unknown to man; but ye ſpeak of the wiſdome of God, as if ye were at the bottome of it, or had ſearched and ſifted it to the bran: And therefore this is enough to prove that ye are raſh in Judgment, ſeeing you judge and conclude concerning the adminiſtrations of God, as if the line of a humane underſtanding, could fully reach and ſearch them out. It is impoſſible to find out the wiſdome of God in his works to perfection; though we may find it out ſufficiently for our inſtruction. As to neglect the works of God is very ſinful, ſo alſo to be curious in our enquiries, or confident in our determinations about them. Man indeed is able to ſee much of, and do much within the ſphear of nature, he can find out the Silver-vein, &c. But there is a vein of wiſdome which lyeth too deep for his finding, nor is he with his beſt abilities able to meet with it. Thus Job concludes (v. 12.) Where is the place of wiſdome? As if he had ſaid, no man knows where it is. This is the true band of connexion between this and the fore-going Chapters; the right Axletree upon which this large diſpute between Job and his friends is turned, and in which thoſe many ſpoakes or rayes of argumentation on both ſides are terminated and do center.

For Job having in his former diſcourſe poſitively aſſerted, that God ſometimes, in this world, puniſheth the ungodly ſeverely; firſt, to declare his hatred of and juſtice againſt ſin. Secondly, to deter others from ſin, eſpecially from injuſtice; he now foreſtals or labours to prevent an objection, and to anſwer it.

For ſome might ſay; You grant indeed that God doth ſometimes puniſh wicked men in this world: but why doth not God alwayes puniſh them? Why do they proſper at any time? And why doth the Lord ſo often afflict the godly? Why are they not alwayes in a peaceable condition? Why are they ſo ſorely ſmitten, and left in darkneſs? As if God would either give the world occaſion to believe that they are wicked, or diſcourage and diſhearten them in the way of Godlineſs: why doth the Lord deal thus?

Job in anſwer to this Quere or Objection, enters upon a diſcourſe of the ſecret and wonderful wiſdome of God, which is ſuch as lyeth beyond the apprehenſion and reach of the wiſeſt of the Children of men. For the clearer demonſtration whereof, firſt, he tells us, what admirable things God hath given man wiſdome to ſearch for, and attain unto; And this from the beginning of the Chapter to the end of the eleventh verſe: in which diſcourſe he ſetteth forth the extream labour and curious skill of man in finding out and fetching up the precious minerals of the Earth. And he inſtanceth in Silver, and in Gold, in Braſs and Iron, all which are laid up in the ſecret cloſets and bowels of the Earth; yet mans induſtrious ingenuity digs unto them and brings them forth. And by his art works them up to that perfection, wherein we ſee and uſe them. Theſe four minerals or ſorts of metal we have in the two former verſes; Silver and Gold, are the King and Queen of metals; Braſs and Iron are as Servants to the manifold occaſions of this life. Job having ſpecifyed theſe, proſecuteth the difficulty and laboriouſneſs of ſeeking for and attaining them, as alſo the skill of man in working and perfecting them, quite thorow this whole context. And he inſtanceth in theſe metals, as alſo in the art and skill that is exerciſed about them, becauſe theſe are as great a tryal and exerciſe of the wiſdome of man as any that is known. The wiſdome of man in diſcovering the Heavens by obſervation, and the Seas by navigation, is great, yet inferior to and below, at beſt (ſay ſome very learned men) but equal unto this. There being nothing in this viſible world wherein man gives an higher evidence of his skill and activity, then in drawing out and working theſe things, which according to the method of nature, or rather the appointment of the God of nature, are placed loweſt.

Therefore Job doth properly fix upon this particular, to demonſtrate that the wiſdome of man may go very far, or how far it may go in naturals, and that yet he is a very dullard at, or very far from finding out the ſecrets of providence; as appears in the ſecond part of the Chapter, where he treats of the deep and unſearchable wiſdome of God in his various dealings with men, whether good or bad, whether in afflicting or in proſpering them; which he affirms to be ſuch, that man can neither conceive nor reveal it. Where is the place of wiſdome? Men can find out Gold and Silver, and Iron and Braſs, men will venture through all difficulties and dangers, but they will get theſe for their uſe and enrichment, but where is the place of wiſdome? where ſhall man find that wiſdome which is the ſecret of God, or wiſdome to diſcover the ſecrets of God? which point he purſues from the Eleventh verſe excluſively to the end of the Twenty-ſeventh Chapter. And upon this he ſeems to infer (as the moſt natural inference that can be made from it) that, foraſmuch as the wiſdome of God in his providences toward man, is ſuch a ſecret, therefore no man ought to conclude either concerning the ſpiritual or eternal eſtate of any man, from the changes which he hath in his temporal eſtate ; or that the outward diſpenſations of God declare no man to be either holy or prophane, a Believer or an Infidel. We muſt judge of men according to their own works and wayes, or manner of life, not according to their preſent rewards, or the awards of God towards them in the things of this life.

The ſumm of all may be gathered into this concluſion ; The wiſdome by which God diſpenſeth the things of this world, and dealeth out portions to ſeveral men of good or evil, of proſperity or adverſity, is a greater ſecret, then the moſt ſecret veins of Silver, or the moſt hidden places of Gold. Mr. Broughton gives his gloſs upon the Text fully to this ſence; God (ſaith he) is marveilous in his works made known : but unſearchable for mans lot. And again in his Dialogue he ſpeaks thus ; God openeth exceeding ſecrets of his work in the Earth, but none of them hath any reſemblance of his dealing in his ſecret counſels for men, caſt off, or ſpared: But each one ſhould fear him, and labour to eſchew evil. And hence when Job had diſcourſed of this wiſdome of God, which none can reach ; leaſt any ſhould ſay, what ! cannot the wiſdome of God be found ? are all men ſtrangers to it, and ignorant of it ? He anſwers, no ; what if in this point we are not able to make any determination about his wiſdome ; yet there is no need to ſay, that we are therefore to be numbered among the unwiſe or ignorant : For (ſaith he) I will tell you wherein and how we may ſhew our ſelves wiſe enough, and attain true wiſdome enough, though we are never able to dive into theſe ſecrets of wiſdome. As God often reproves the Sons of men for want of wiſdome, ſo he as often teacheth them how they may be wiſe, or in what their wiſdome doth conſiſt. But, how or what is that ? we have both the how and what expreſly ſet down at the 28. or laſt verſe of this Chapter. And unto man he ſaid, behold the fear of the Lord that is wiſdome, and to depart from evil is underſtanding. As if he had ſaid, Do not think that ye are to be caſt among Fools or Idiots, becauſe I diſcourſe of a wiſdome that ye are not able to fathome ; I will inform you, how ye may be wiſe, and what is wiſdome in the account of God, and of all good men, even to fear the Lord, and to depart from evil. Behold, the fear of the Lord that is wiſdome, and to depart from evil is underſtanding. They that ſeek and find this wiſdome, are not only wiſer then they that find out the veins of Gold and Silver, but wiſer then they (if there were any ſuch) that have all the ſecrets of Gods dealings with the Children of men revealed to them. So then, in this Chapter, Job gives us the knowledg of a threefold wiſdome.

Firſt, He ſpeaks of that wiſdome which is converſant in finding out the hidden things of nature ; and this is given to all ſorts of men, good and bad, holy and prophane ; the worſt of men have had wiſdome enough to lead them to the veins of Silver, and the place of Gold, to the mines of Iron and of Braſs, &c. This is a common wiſdome, or a wiſdome beſtowed upon mankind in common.

Secondly, From the 12. to the laſt verſe of the Chapter, Job treats of wiſdome which conſiſts in the ſecret adminiſtrations of divine providence. And though the Lord be pleaſed ſometimes to diſcover part of it, to this or that particular man, in this or that time ; yet no man is maſter of it: This lodgeth only in the breaſt of God, and is lockt up among his cabinet counſels. Man knows it not, till he reveals it, and he reveals it to the knowledg of very few. When David was ſore ſtumbled about Gods adminiſtrations towards wicked men in proſperity, he confeſſeth (Pſ. 73. 16.) When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me, or (as the Hebrew Text hath it in ſtrictneſs) it was labour in mine eyes, that is, I found it a matter of ſuch hard labour, that all my labour in attempting it, was loſt labour, or labour in vain ; Until (verſ. 17.) I went into the Sanctuary of God, then underſtood I their end ; as if he had ſaid, I could never profit in this learning while I ſtaid in the School of nature, and was under the Tutorage of humane Reaſon ; only the Sanctuary, that is, the word and Spirit in waiting upon God, taught me this ſecret, that conſidering the end of wicked men, all their preſent proſperity is rather to be pitied then envyed. This ſecond ſort of wiſdome is laid up with God, and made known by him alone, according to his own good pleaſure.

Thirdly, Job concludes the Chapter with a diſcovery of ſaving wiſdome, which conſiſts in the true knowledg and holy fear of God, or in departing from and avoiding all manner of ſinful evil. This wiſdome is peculiar to Saints. And as it is peculiar to the Saints only, ſo it is common to all the Saints. To fear the Lord, and to depart from evil, is that Spirit and life of holineſs which runs through the veins of every true believer. Thus far concerning the ſcope and method of the Chapter ; I ſhall now proceed to particulars.

Verſ. 1. Surely there is a vein for the Silver, and a place for the Gold, where they fine it.

The Hebrew word which we render Surely, is properly a cauſal particle, and ſo ſome take it in this Text, giving the ſence of the whole thus ; Becauſe Silver hath its veins, and Gold a certain known place, where it may be had, therefore many enquire after theſe things, and find them : But becauſe the place of wiſdome is uncertain, therefore few or none ſet themſelves to the ſearch of it. Yet becauſe the words following do not carry in them a reaſon of what is ſpoken before, but contain a new matter ; therefore we tranſlate not (by way of inference) for, but (by way of affirmation) Surely there is a vein for the Silver. A mine of Silver is called a vein, by an elegant alluſion to the Body of a man, where the blood runs in ſeveral veins, as in ſo many channels. Thus in the great Body of the Earth, there are, as it were, certain veins in which the Silver and other precious minerals run as the blood doth in the veins of the Body. The Hebrew word properly ſignifies a coming forth, and ſo Mr. Broughton renders it, Now there is an iſſue for Silver. This others conceive to be an alluſion to plants, eſpecially to vines, which iſſue and ſhoot forth their branches and boughs. For as a Tree grows from its Root, and is divided into ſeveral branches ; ſo Silver is generated of ſutable vapours, as the ſeed of it, and ſo diſperſeth it ſelf, as it were, into many ſprigs and boughs, through the ſecret pores and paſſages of the Earth. And hence (as if Silver were to be numbered among Vegetatives or plants) ſome learned Naturaliſts affirm, that minerals grow and ſhoot forth their branches as a Tree, or rather as a Tree ſhooteth out its Roots in the Earth. In what manner minerals may be ſaid to be generated, and ſo (improperly) to grow, is matter of diſcourſe among natural Philoſophers, to whom I refer the Reader that delights in ſuch kind of ſpeculations.

Metalla dicuntur quaſi ramificare. Bold.

מוצא Exitum egreſſum ſignificat ; hoc vocabulum ſolet uſurpari de naſcentibus terræ. De generatione metallorum legẽdus eſt. Plinius lib. 33. et. 34.

Again, Man by his wiſdome in ſearching for Silver, goes not only to the veins or ſtreams, but to the well-head ; for as a fountain is the head from which the water bubbles up and flows into ſtreams and channels for the uſe of man and Beaſt, ſo Silver hath its fountain, and thoſe ſeveral veins are as rivulets or cuts into which it is divided. And this may be underſtood two wayes.

Firſt, In reference to thoſe natural ſubterranean pores or cavities, in which the Silver is bred and nouriſhed.

Secondly, In reference to thoſe artificial ſubterranean paſſages, by which, when once the vein is found, the Silver is extracted and fetched up out of the Earth. For as there is a way in nature whereby the Ore of Silver ſpreadeth it ſelf under the Earth, ſo there is a way made by Art, through which Silver is brought out of the Earth. But I ſhall not ſtay upon theſe things, which belong properly to Naturaliſts and Mineraliſts ; it is enough for my purpoſe to know that There is a vein for the Silver, though we labour not to know all the curioſities and myſteries of art and nature about it. Only take notice that the word in the Hebrew which we render Silver, leads us into a moral (and that a very uſeful) conſideration about it. As Adam gave names to the Beaſts, or living Creatures, ſutable to their conditions and qualifications, ſo that we may read and learn much of their nature in their names : So the Spirit of God hath put a name upon Silver, which as it notes the excellency and uſefulneſs of it, ſo the aptneſs of man to be enſnared by it. The deſires of man commonly lead him into ſnares. And to ſhew how much man would deſire, long and luſt after Silver, it is expreſſed by a word which ſignifies to deſire, or to have the heart and affections vehemently carried out to or upon any ſubject. As if God would inform man that Silver hath in it a very attractive power to ſtir up and draw out our affections after it. Many things in nature cannot ſpeak, which yet have a mighty perſwaſion in their nature. Silver is ſilent, and ſpeechleſs; yet what an Orator is Silver? How doth it move paſſions in the mind of men? And as where one vein of Silver is found in the Earth, another is not far off; ſo where one deſire of Silver riſeth in the earthly mind of man, another and another, a third, yea a thouſand deſires of Silver are ready to ariſe. This God (I ſuppoſe) would have us underſtand from the word with which himſelf hath cloathed it.

כסף A concupiſcendo et deſiderando dictum. Ubicumque una vena argenti inventa eſt; non procul invenitur alia. Plin.

Again, as this informs us, ſo it warns us to take heed leſt our hearts be melted and run out in deſires after Silver. We have but need to check and moderate our deſires after that which is ſo great and ſo dangerous an incentive of deſire; eſpecially while we remember, that as it is ſtrong to ſtir deſires, ſo it is very weak, yea altogether unable to ſatisfie them. Hence Solomon hath concluded (Eccl. 5. 10.) He that loveth Silver (and what is deſire but love in motion?) ſhall not be ſatisfied with it. Covetous men are compared to a Lion attending upon the poor to oppreſs them (Pſal. 17. 11, 12.) They have now compaſſed us in our ſteps, they have ſet their eyes bowing down to the Earth, like as a Lion that is greedy (or deſirous) of his prey, or as we put in the margin of our Bibles, The likeneſs of him, that is, of every one of them, is as a Lion that deſireth to ravin. It is this word, as a Lion watcheth for a fleſh prey, ſo a covetous cruel man watcheth for a Silver prey, though he tear it out of the bowels of the poor. Mans natural affection unto Silver is a perturbation; He diſquiets and puts himſelf to trouble to get it, and ſo he may get it he cares not whom he troubles and diſquiets, no nor whom he deſtroys and ruins. As men are more eaſily overcome by Silver, then by Iron weapons (as it was adviſed of old, Fight with Silver weapons, and you win the day of all. Silver hath made more Conqueſts then Iron, that's the Victor, which hath led even Conquerors in triumph; now, I ſay, as men are ſooner overcome by Silver then Iron weapons) ſo they who are once overcome with the deſire of Silver, will make bloody work with Iron weapons, rather then not attain their deſire. There is a vein for the Silver,

Argenteis haſtis pugna et omnia vinces.

And a place for the Gold where they fine it.

Theſe two ſorts of mettal are ſet down ſo ſtrictly, as alſo the other two which follow, that they ſhew themſelves not only vain but ridiculous, who tell us that Silver may become Gold, Iron Braſs, or that the more imperfect of theſe mettals may be wrought up to that which is more perfect by Art or Chymiſtry; Iron to Braſs, and Braſs to Silver, and Silver to Gold. Againſt which aſſertion ſome of the learned have concluded ſo peremptorily, that they have not doubted to ſay, that it may as well or with as good reaſon be maintained, that any inferior Creature may be perfected into a ſuperior, or that a meerly animal or ſenſitive Creature, may be perfected into a rational, as that an inferior mettal may be hightned into its ſuperior.

And as theſe metals are diſtinguiſhed by their matter and form, ſo alſo by their place; There is a place for the Gold; every body hath its place, Gold hath a proper and diſtinct place from Silver. 'Tis rare to find them together, or neighbouring one with another. The place of Gold, may be conſidered, firſt more generally, for the Gold Country, or the Gold Coaſt. Thus Moſes deſcribing the River of Paradiſe, which from thence was parted and became into four heads, The name of the firſt is Piſon: That is it, which compaſſeth the whole Land of Havilah, where there is Gold, and the Gold of the Land is good (Gen. 2. 10, 11.) It is not my purpoſe at all to debate that Geographical Queſtion, where the Land of Havilah is? or which is the Land of Havilah; all that I note about it is, that it was a Land Famous for Gold; ſo alſo was Ophir, whereſoever it was, as is clear in the Hiſtory of Solomons Reign, as alſo from many other Texts of Scripture, mentioning, yea commending the Gold of Ophir. Thus at this day Barbarie in Africa, and Peru in America (beſides many other) are famous places, or Countryes for Gold. Secondly, The place of Gold may be conſidered more ſtrictly for ſome ſpecial part of thoſe Countryes; for as all Countryes are not the place of Gold, ſo neither is every place of any Country; the Gold is found in this or that Rock, in this or that Mountain, upon theſe or thoſe Sands. Sometimes a Rock, ſometimes a River is the place of Gold, which is therefore ſaid to have golden Sands, becauſe graines of Gold are found among its Sands. Thus Gold hath its general and ſpecial place.

There is a place for the Gold.

The Hebrew word here uſed for Gold, implyeth its ſhining beauty ſplendor and flavour. And hence it is applyed alſo to the pureſt Oyl, which caſteth a colour like Gold. The beauty of Gold is a very great attractive; Silver (as was toucht before) calls out deſire; and ſo doth the beauty of Gold much more. And therefore while the Apoſtle reduceth all that is in the world to a threefo'd luſt (1 Joh. 2. 16.) The luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life; he by the luſt of the eyes meaneth Riches, becauſe, they conſiſting chiefly in Gold or Silver, the eye is ſo eaſily taken with their beauty, and the luſt of covetouſneſs ſo quickly enflamed by them. This was Achans ſnare and confeſſion (Joſh. 7. 21.) When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh Garment, and two hundred ſhekels of Silver, and a wedg of Gold of fifty ſhekles weight; what then? Then I coveted them, and took them, &c. His eye affected, or rather infected his heart, he no ſooner ſaw the Silver and the Gold, but he was intangled with their beauty. Though (as we ſay) all is not Gold that gliſters, yet all Gold is gliſtering; and the gliſtering of it is not only pleaſing, but bewitching.

זהב A quibuſdã ſumitur pro auro infecto et rudi, i.e. nondum elaborato ſed defæcatiſſimo, et nomẽ habet à ſplendore. et flavore.

Again, The Original word by which Gold is here expreſſed ſignifies properly that Gold which is yet undefecated, or not refined by the art and labour of man. And therefore Job ſpeaks here exactly, There is a place for the Gold

Where they fine it.] Mr. Broughton renders, A place for Golds refining, our tranſlation ſeems to ſpeak of the Gold-finers work-houſe and furnace, which is the place where they refine it. Yet others conceive that Job is not here ſpeaking of the artificial place where the Gold is refined, but of the natural place from which the Gold is taken, that it may be refined; and therefore, thoſe Authors do not render the Text, as we, There is a place for the Gold, where they fine it. But, There is a place for the Gold whence they fine it. That is, there is a place from whence they take it to fine or refine it. The word notes the melting, and ſo the purging of metals. Gold is fined when the droſs and impure parts of it are ſeperated by fire. The fining pot (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 17. 3.) is for Silver, and the furnace for Gold, but the Lord tryeth the hearts. The art of refining metals is ſeveral times alluded to in Scripture, to ſhew the power of the Spirit immediately, or the word and rod through the power of the Spirit, to purifie both heart and life from the droſs of ſinful corruptions.

The Hebrew Text is very conciſe, being ſtrictly read thus; A place for the Gold they fine. And hence, as we ſupply the word, where, and others the word, whence, ſo a third ſupply the relative word, which, rendring the clauſe thus; There is a place for the Gold which they fine; implying that the Gold is not taken out of the Earth, or found upon the Earth pure, but droſs; ſo that when 'tis got out of its place, there's more work to be done with it: God having given man wiſdome and skill not only to find Gold, but to fine and purifie it. Gold hath little beauty as it is taken immediately from the Earth, 'tis then beautiful when the Earth or droſs is taken out of it. And how much or how often ſoever Gold is fined in the fire, it looſeth nothing but its droſs. There is a place for the Gold, where they fine it.

Job having ſpoken of Silver and Gold, proceeds to ſpeak of Iron and Braſs.

Verſ. 2. Iron is taken out of the Earth, and Braſs is molten out of the Stone.

Theſe are baſer metals, yet God hath laid up theſe in the ſame great ſtore houſe of nature, the Earth. Iron is taken out of the Earth, or, out of the duſt. Though Iron be a metal inferior to Gold and Silver, yet Iron is a very uſeful metal, and, in regard of its uſefulneſs, no way inferior to Gold or Silver. And herein we ſee the good providence of God, that Iron which is a metal of ſuch common uſe, is to be found ſo commonly. As every Country needs Iron for their their uſe, ſo every Country hath or may get Iron, though ſome know not the uſe of it. Thoſe metals which are moſt neceſſary, and are moſt imployed in the ſervice of man, are moſt eaſily attained by man. Whereas mines of Silver and the place of Gold, are found rarely, and attained hardly. The Naturaliſt alſo takes notice of the Earths univerſal production of Iron, in anſwer to that univerſal uſe of it, in Tillage and Architecture, and even in all the affairs both of Peace and War. Iron (as ſome have called it) is the beſt and worſt inſtrument of life. For by this we till the ground, cut Timber, hew Stones, and raiſe Fabricks, we can ſcarce do any thing with out Iron. 'Tis alſo put to many other, though neceſſary, yet ſad uſes. Thoſe killing inſtruments, Swords and Spears are made of Iron, which are often imbrued in the blood of the ſlain, and devour the fleſh of whole Nations. Iron is inſtrumental to the cruelty, wrath, and rage of man, as well as to the induſtry and labours of man. Iron is taken out of the Earth, ſo are Silver and Gold too; yet it is not ſaid of Silver or Gold, that they are taken out of the Earth; 'tis only ſaid, There a is vein for the Silver, and a place for the Gold. But when he comes to Iron he ſaith, Iron is taken out of the Earth. The reaſon may be, becauſe Iron is not ſo much refined in nature, but looks more like Earth then Silver and Gold. Again, when he ſaith, Iron is taken out of the Earth, it may imply that Iron is found nearer the ſurface of the Earth then Silver is.

Plinius l. 34 c. 14. Ferrum licet Metallorum pretio ultimum, neceſſitate tamen primum.

Lapis fuſus æs. Heb. i.e. nihil aliud eſt æs quam lapis igne liquatus. Æs fit ex lapide æroſo, quem vocant Cadmiam. Plin. l. 24. c. 1. Æs eſt velati lapidi incorporatū Hebræi etiā ſub hoc cōplectantur Chalibem. Merc.

And Braſs is molten out of the Stone.

Or according to the Hebrew, Braſs is a molten Stone. There is a Stone which is the Ore of Braſs, or the Ore of Braſs is a Stone, which being melted or molten becomes Braſs; Braſs is molten out of the Stone; that is, the Stone being molten, then it appears to be Braſs, or then the Braſs appears. Braſs is incorporated or concorporated with the Stone, and is therefore ſaid to molten out of the Stone. There are other metals beſides theſe four mentioned by Job, Tin, and Steel, and Copper, but theſe three or any other are a kin to or may be reckoned under ſome of thoſe four, or thoſe four are ſet down ſynechochically to comprehend all other metals.

From theſe two verſes in general Obſerve,

The art of finding out, melting, fining, and refining metals, hath been very ancient.

When Moſes had ſaid (Gen. 2. 21.) there is Gold in the Land of Havilah, it ſhews, that then they ſought for Gold. And when he adds (verſ. 12.) The Gold of that Land is good; it argues that then they had the skill of trying, and ſo of diſtinguiſhing which Gold was beſt. We read of Tubal-Cain (Gen. 4. 22.) Who was an inſtructer of every Artificer in Braſs and Iron. The word which we render in that Text, an Inſtructer, ſignifies properly a whetter, which doth imply either the dulneſs of mens capacity about thoſe inventions, till they were whetted by a Maſter in thoſe Arts; or that Tubal-Cain, did whet and ſtir up their affections to the practice of thoſe hard and laborious Arts. And ſome of the learned conceive that the Heathens alluded to this name Tubal-Caen, in the name Vulcan, whom they ſet up as their God of Smiths, and Metal-men, or as their Maſter Smith.

Again, From Jobs ſcope in mentioning theſe Minerals, namely, to ſhew that God hath beſtowed wiſdome upon many men to find them out, how ſecretly ſoever laid up in the Earth, as alſo all the ſecrets about them; and that yet he hath not beſtowed ſuch wiſdome upon any man, as doth enable him to find out all the ſecrets of his providence, or to ſee to the bottome of all his dealings with the Children of men, Obſerve, Firſt, The wiſdome by which man finds out the hidden things of nature, is a gift beſtowed upon him by God.

Though natural men, that is, men unregenerate and unrenewed by grace, may have abilities for that work; yet they have it not by nature. Gold and Silver, Iron and Braſs, had lain in the bowels and boſome of the Earth undrawn out to this day, if God had not taught man how to ſearch and fetcht them out. And therefore when it is ſaid of Tubal-Cain, that he was the inſtructer of thoſe that wrought in Iron and Braſs, we muſt underſtand him to be Gods Scholler, though a Maſter or Inſtructer to men. Arts and Sciences are not meer humane inventions; they are alſo (in their degree) gifts of God. Moſes ſpeaks expreſly, that they who were fitted to work in Gold and Purple, &c. for the Tabernacle, received their wiſdome from the Lord, (Exod. 36. 1.) Then wrought Bezaleel and Aholiah, and every wiſe-hearted man in whom the Lord put wiſdome and underſtanding to know how to work all manner of work for the ſervice of the Sanctuary. As every ſpiritual, ſo every artificial and civil good gift comes from above. It is God who inſtructeth the Warrier how to fight; He teacheth my hands to War, and my fingers to fight, ſaid David (Pſal. 144. 1.) yea, it is God who teacheth the Husbandman to mannage the Earth, to ſow his ſeed, and threſh it out. And if the wiſdome by which man doth thoſe works of nature, which lye above ground, is of God, much more the wiſdome by which he doth works of nature which lye under ground is of God. We have a remarkable place for the former (Iſa. 28.) which Scripture though it reach further, and hath a very ſpiritual meaning and application in the Prophets ſence; yet there is a truth, in the outſide and plain letter of it, as to the preſent point (verſ. 24.) Doth the plow-man plow all day to ſow? doth he open and break the clods of the ground? when he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not caſt abroad the fitches, and ſcatter the cummin, and caſt in the principal wheat, and the appointed barly and the rie in their place? for his God doth inſtruct him to diſcretion, and doth teach him, &c. We might think man able of himſelf to plow and till the Earth; yet the Prophet telleth us, that man cannot plow the Earth, but by a divine teaching: Yea the Prophet proceeds to ſhew that the skill of man in threſhing out the corn, is alſo from the Lord (verſ. 27, 28, 29,) For the fitches are not threſhed with a threſhing inſtrument, neither is a cart-wheel turned about upon the cummin: But the fitches are beaten out with a Staff, and the cummin with a Rod. Bread-corn is bruiſed; becauſe he will not alwayes be threſhing it, nor break it with the wheel of his cart, nor bruiſe it with his horſemen. This alſo cometh forth from the Lord of Hoſts, which is wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working. As if he had ſaid, not only is that wiſdome by which man tilleth his Land, and caſteth in his ſeed, ſutably to the nature of it, from the Lord; but even that wiſdome by which man is directed to threſh out his corn with proper inſtruments, cometh alſo from the Lord, who is wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working. Though threſhing corn, be not a wonderful work, yet the Lord who works wonders, hath his hand in this work. Now if this inferior act of wiſdome be the gift of God, if man muſt be inſtructed from on high to bring about theſe lower works, how much more doth man need a divine teaching in ſpiritual and ſupernatural works? How ſhall man break and plow up his own heart, how ſhall he ſow to himſelf in righteouſneſs without the teaching of God? How ſhall he find out that Gold and Silver that lies in the bowels of the Scriptures? how ſhall he dig thoſe Mines, unleſs God teach him? Though the word of God be all Silver and Gold, without any droſs, yet there is a vein for the Silver there, which requires holy wiſdome to find it out. And though the word of God be all Silver and Gold in it ſelf, yet by our miſunderſtandings we may make it but droſs to us, or build hay and ſtubble, light and unprofitable doctrines upon it, unleſs we are taught of God (who is wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working) how to work up our underſtandings in the truth of it, and our lives to the obedience of it,

Note, Secondly, The natural wiſdome which God gives to mankind in common, is ſufficient to find out the moſt ſecret things in nature.

Natural things are level to natural wiſdome, and the proper ſphere of its activity. He that is reprobate to every good work, or is a very bungler at it, may yet be ready-hearted, and ready-handed to, and go through ſtitch with all theſe works. He may maſter all the myſteries of them by the ſtrength of his underſtanding, and all the difficulties of them by the ſtrength of his arm.

Thirdly, Job having aſſerted mans ability to find out the veins of Silver, and the place of Gold, yet denieth his ability to reach the depth of divine Adminiſtrations.

Hence Note, They who have the greateſt natural parts and accompliſhments, cannot diſcern the ſecret wiſdom of God, or the ſecrets of his wiſdom.

This is the principal theam or ſubject of the whole Chapter. God hath ſome riddles in his works of providence which the beſt-ſighted among the ſons of men cannot ſee into nor reſolve. They cannot give the whole reaſon why active and able men for publick good, are taken away by death in their prime and flouriſhing age, while many dull-heads and droans live to old age and wither upon the ſtalk. They cannot give a reaſon, why God makes ſuch changes in the viſible face of things. Why he afflicts the godly, and lets the wicked proſper, is more then a David or a Jeremy can give an account of, till ſpecially taught and inſtructed by God himſelf. And hence it is, that the hearts of moſt are ſo unquiet and uncompoſed, and their ſpirits ſo full of boilings and tumblings up and down. They who can neither ſee the reaſon of Gods dealings, nor ſubmit purely to his will in them, muſt needs be full of troubled and tempeſtuous thoughts about them. As there are ſome who ſhut their own eyes, and will not ſee the meaning of thoſe providential works of God, which are written as with a beam of the Sun; ſo there are ſome providential works of God written in ſuch dark and illegible characters, that they who are good and do their beſt to ſee and ſpell out the meaning of them, cannot: much leſs can they who are not only men of an evil mind, but men who have no mind to ſeek and find out the mind of God, leaſt of all to honour him, in his works. And as the providences and diſpenſations of God in civil things are full of parables, which the Natural man hath neither eyes to ſee, nor a heart to underſtand, ſo he is much more eyeleſs to ſee and heartleſs to underſtand the dealings of God in ſpiritual things, the myſteries of faith, the ſecrets of grace, and the workings of the Spirit. Theſe are riddles and parables which he underſtands no more, then the beaſts of the field, or the ſtones of the ſtreet (1 Cor. 2. 14.) The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſs unto him: neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. He neither doth nor can diſcern them; That is, as he at preſent doth not diſcern them by his natural underſtanding; ſo, while his underſtanding remains natural, (how much ſoever otherwiſe improved by ſtudy or experience) he cannot; yea, they who are moſt wiſe and Eagle-eyed in the things of nature, are uſually moſt dim-ſighted as to the things of God. And we may give a fourfold account why they are ſo.

Firſt, God judicially hides the myſteries of heavenly wiſdom from worldly wiſe men (Mat. 11. 25.) I thank thee (ſaith Chriſt) O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto babes. Even ſo Father for it ſeemed good in thy ſight. The Father doth not hide theſe things by putting darkneſs into the wiſe and prudent, but by leaving them to their own darkneſs, or by denying them his own light. And Chriſt reſolves this into his Fathers will and pleaſure. There needs no other reaſon but his will, who that he may do what he will, is the greateſt reaſon, becauſe he can will nothing but what is juſt. From this righteous and ſovereign will of God it is, that the prudent, both in natural things, ſuch as gold and ſilver, and in civil things, ſuch as are commerce or government, ſee nothing at all of Chriſt. How many are there who think they can turn the world about by the engine of their brain or wit, who have not wit nor brains enough to turn one ſtone, or to diſcern the firſt principles and rudiments of Goſpel truths. Ye ſee your calling, Brethren, (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 1. 26.) How that not many wiſe men after the fleſh (that is, in morals and politicks) not many mighty, not many noble are called; (that is, they are not effectually and ſavingly called (though perhaps often called upon to the knowledge and acknowledgment of the truth) But God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world (that is, he hath both choſen and called them) to confound the wiſe, and God hath choſen the weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty, &c. Here is one reaſon, It is Gods way and will it ſhould be ſo, and what is man that he ſhould reply to God! Yet

Secondly, There is a reaſon alſo in themſelves; for theſe wiſe men are ſo taken, and taken up with natural things, ſo drunken, yea beſotted with the profits and concernments of this world, that they do not mind the things of the Spirit. He that inquireth much into the veins of ſilver, is ſlow to make enquiries after the veins of truth. And he that ſets his eye upon the place of Gold, is ſo bedazl'd with the ſplendour of it, that he cannot behold thoſe things which are of a purer and higher nature. Yea he who is much in and hath got much of theſe earthly treaſures, thinks he hath enough, and therefore purſues no further. His ſilver veins have filled him, and the place of gold hath taken up all the room of his heart: He hath now no place left for God, or the things of God, The full ſoul loatheth the Honey-comb, and as God fills the hungry, but ſends the rich (that is, the ſpiritually rich in their own conceit) empty away; So they who are full of temporal riches, are uſually inſenſible of any ſpiritual emptineſs, and ſo neglect thoſe wayes and means, by which alone they may be filled. They who are poor in ſpirit, deſire nothing more then ſpiritual riches; but they who are pooreſt in ſpirituals, care leaſt for the riches of the Spirit.

Thirdly, They who are wiſeſt and buſieſt about natural things, have not only ſlow and dull deſires after, but deſpiſing and contemptuous thoughts of the things of grace. The Grecians were great Philoſophers, lovers of, and ſtudious to find out all the rarities of nature. Now theſe (as the Apoſtle chargeth them, 1 Cor. 1. 23.) counted and called the Goſpel, or the preaching of Chriſt crucified, fooliſhneſs, and ſo became the chief of fools. They could pierce into the darkeſt reſerves and cloſets of Nature, but could not ſee the cleareſt manifeſtations and ſhinings of Grace. It was pride in their own wiſdom, which would not ſuffer them to ſee the excellency of the wiſdom of God, and it was their puniſhment that they ſhould not. It was the anſwer of a wiſe man in the Law, who hearing another oppoſing the ſentence of the Court, told him, It was Law; to which the perſon diſſatisfied replyed, If it were Law I could underſtand it, For Law is reaſon, and I underſtand reaſon. But (ſaid he) The Law is the quinteſſence of reaſon, and that doth not come under every mans cap. So ſay I, the Goſpel is reaſon, but it is the higheſt reaſon, and as the underſtanding of it comes uuder but a few mens caps, in compariſon of the huge multitudes and many millions of mankind, ſo they uſually are furtheſt from the underſtanding of it, who priding themſelves in the underſtanding of thoſe things which lie furtheſt off and deepeſt in Nature, deſpiſe the ſimplicity, and (as they apprehend it) the ſhallowneſs of the wayes of Grace.

Fourthly, They that ſee moſt in worldly things, are uſually blinded by the god of this world (2 Cor. 4. 4.) But if our Goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, who is the Image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them. The god of this world is no other (in the Apoſtles ſence there intended) but the Devil. He doth not call him, the god of the world, but the god of this world, namely, of that world, which as the Apoſtle John deſcribes it, lyeth in wickedneſs, or in that wicked one (1 John 5. 19.) For as he uſurpeth the ſovereignty of God in commanding the wicked; ſo they give him the honour of God in worſhipping him, either directly or indirectly, and in obeying his commands. Now, I ſay, The god of this world, that is, the Devil, will hold men a candle, or clear their eye-ſight, while they are poring after and working for the treaſures of this world, gold and ſilver, whether under ground by digging and mining, or above ground in trading, buying, and ſelling; To theſe, I ſay, the Devil will hold a candle, and help them on all he can: But when he ſees any looking after Chriſt, the true treaſure hid in the field, when he hears any counſelled and invited by Chriſt, as the Church of Laodicea was, To buy of him gold tried in the fire, that they may be rich, (Rev. 3. 18.) then he beſtirs himſelf all he can to throw the white and yellow duſt of the earth in their eyes, and utterly blind them, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel ſhould ſhine unto them, or (neerer the Greek text) leſt the light of the Goſpel of the glory of Chriſt ſhould irradiate them. The Sun caſteth his beams upon the blind, but they receive not the light of it; nor do they the light of the Goſpel, (though ſhining upon them) whom the god of this world hath blinded with the hopes and deſires, with the poſſeſſions and enjoyments of this world. So much from the general ſcope of this context.

I ſhall now give ſome more particular Obſervations from theſe two verſes; Surely there is a vein for the ſilver, and a place for the Gold, &c.

Hence Note, Firſt, God hath given every creature a ſpecial place, and methodiz'd them all in a ſingular order.

No one place hath all, or all are not to be had in every place. Silver hath a vein by it ſelf, and gold hath a place for it ſelf. That earth which yields iron, yields not braſs, and the ſtone out of which braſs is molten, makes no iron. The wiſdom of God hath ſetled the courſe of nature ſo, as may beſt advance a mutual intercourſe among men. Deborah ſaid in her ſong (Judg. 5.20.) The ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera. The ſtars are in order. And as the ſtars of heaven are in order, ſo there is an order among the ſtones and minerals of the earth, yea among all things upon and under the earth.

There is a vein for the ſilver.

What is a vein? 'tis but a ſmall particle to the whole body of the earth.

Hence Note, Secondly, God hath given us the creature in a due proportion to our need and uſe.

We have vaſt quantities of graſs and corn, of trees and ſtones, of beaſts feeding on the earth, of fowls flying in the air, of fiſhes ſwimming in the Sea, becauſe theſe are neceſſary for the ſupport of life. But gold and ſilver being only acceſſaries and ornaments of life, are rarely found, and where they are, 'tis but here a little and there a little. There is but a vein for the ſilver, and a place for the gold.

Where they fine it.

Hence Note, Thirdly, Art perfects Nature.

Trees and plants are much advanced in their vertues and fruitfulneſs by the art of man, and ſo are beaſts and birds, and ſo are the natural parts of man by culture and education. Gold and ſilver have an attractive beauty when purified; But while they lie in the earth, they are dark and dusky; we can ſcarce diſtinguiſh them from the earth where they lie, till the skill of man hath wrought them up to their proper perfections. The wiſdom of God hath made all things for man's uſe, and he hath given man wiſdom to fit them for uſe. If all things were fit for uſe as they come immediately out of the hand of God, man would looſe, as a great part of his honour, ſo of his imployment. All thoſe callings, crafts and trades, which are the exerciſe of man's natural ſtrength and gifts, and the prevention of that peſt of his morals, Idleneſs, are but ſo many wayes found out for the melioration, or bettering of the works of nature. The earth with the influences of heaven brings forth gold by Gods appointment; and God hath appointed and inſtructed man to fine or refine and purifie it. Where nature ends, art begins, and when nature hath done her beſt, art can do better.

Fourthly, Note, Thoſe things which have only a natnral worth and excellency in them, cannot be attained without much labour.

We muſt dig for the veins of ſilver, and ſearch for the place of gold; yea, what toiling is there for the Iron and for the Braſs, though much below the former two in worth and excellency. There is nothing in nature that hath any uſefulneſs, or preciousneſs in it, but coſts a great deal of pains before we can enjoy it. How much more doth Goſpel-grace (which is infinitely better then gold and ſilver) require labour and pains! If thou (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 2. 4, 5. ſpeaking of ſpiritual wiſdom) ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her as for hid treaſures, then ſhalt thou underſtand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. Silver is ſought with ſo much diligence, that to ſeek a thing as ſilver, is a proverbial ſpeech for diligent ſeeking. We are eaſily perſwaded to labour hard for ſilver, but how hardly are we perſwaded to labour, beyond our eaſe, for wiſdom.

Hence, Obſerve, Fifthly, Man is willing and ready to undertake any labour, to run through any difficulties to attain the precious things of the earth.

If the men of the world do but hear where the rich veins of ſilver, or the place for gold is to be found, in any part, the furtheſt part of the world, they will ſail through a thouſand deaths and dangers to come to it. Whether will not the deſire of gold and ſilver carry the ſons of men? What undertaking is there ſo hazzardous (that I ſay not wicked and unrighteous) which man's hunger after gold, will not put, yea, force him upon? What ſtone-walls, yea, what laws and promiſes, oaths and covenants hath not this hunger broken through? O when ſhall we ſee the ſpirits of men drawn out to undertake ſuch voyages, ſuch long voyages, to find out that which is better then ſilver! And to ſeek that, unto which gold is but droſs! When ſhall we ſee ſuch travels undertaken for the precious things of heaven! What a ſin and ſhame is it, that the moſt of men are ſo far from undertaking far travels to find them, that they will ſcarce ſtep over the threſhold to receive them when they are offered at their own doors. But as Chriſt ſaid of that generation, ſo we may ſay of this. The Queen of the South ſhall riſe up in Judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them, for ſhe came from the uttermoſt parts of the earth, to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, and behold a greater then Solomon is here (Luk. 11.31.) That Queen made a long journey to Solomon's Court, becauſe it was the place of wiſdom; But many men of this generation are loah to take the ſhorteſt journey to the poſts of wiſdom, or to the place where his wiſdom may be heard and had, who is greater then Solomon. God who at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in times paſt unto the fathers by the Prophets, hath in theſe laſt dayes ſpoken unto us by his Son, (Heb. 1.1, 2.) The Son of God ſpake to us in perſon when he was on earth, and he ſtill ſpeaks to us from heaven, by his Word and Spirit in the Goſpel; and he ſpeaks to us of that which is infinitely more deſireable then gold and ſilver, after which there is ſo much ſearching, even the unſearchable riches of grace, and yet how few regard or look after him, or what he makes report to them of Quid non mortalia pectora cogit Auri ſacra fames. Hor.

Sixthly, Obſerve, Thoſe things are moſt valuable by men, which are rare and hard to come by.

Iron and braſs, but eſpecially gold and ſilver are ſo, and for that reaſon have a higher eſtimation among men, then their native excellency and uſefulneſs (though that be very great) would raiſe them to. It is ſaid that in the dayes of Solomon, Silver was nothing accounted of (1 King. 10. 21.) Not that the ſilver of thoſe dayes had loſt any of its native vertue or value, but the exceeding plenty and commonneſs of it, not only brought down the account of it, but made it (as that text ſpeaks) of no account. It is ſaid (1 Sam. 3. 1.) The word of the Lord was precious in thoſe dayes. But is the word of the Lord leſs precious at one time then at another? It is not in regard of its intrinſecal worth, yet at ſometimes it is of a higher rate, and comes to a better market among men. When is that? even when it is rarely had and heard; For ſo it follows in that place of Samuel, There was no open viſion. The beſt things are more valued by the want and ſcarſity of them, then by the vertue and enjoyment of them. Gold is the king of metals; as the Sun in the heavens, ſo is gold upon the earth. There are many conſiderations (to touch that only by the way) which raiſe and heighten the excellency of it; Firſt, It looſeth not by the fire how long ſoever boiled there. Secondly, Gold is medicinal, 'tis a great cordial, Phyſicians commend and appoint the uſe of it, as a reſtorative to nature. Thirdly, (which advanceth the value of it beyond all this) The gifts and graces of the Spirit are ſhadowed out by it. The golden oyl (which was emptied through the two golden pipes (Zech. 4.12.) what was it, but the wiſdom and grace of God, flowing from Chriſt into all his members? Grace wrought in us, eſpecially as working in us, is at once compared, to and preferr'd before gold (1 Pet. 1.7.) That the trial of your faith, being much more precious then of gold that periſheth, &c. Gold is pure, ſo, is grace; gold is reſplendent and beautiful, ſo is grace; gold is laſting and durable, ſo is grace. For though the Apoſtle Peter reckons gold among corruptible things, compared with the blood of Chriſt, yet

Gold in it ſelf is freeſt from corruption, and is reckoned among thoſe things which corrupt not. Fourthly, Chriſt himſelf was typed by Gold. The Mercy-ſeat or propitiatory of Gold, was an illuſtrious type of Chriſt. (Exod. 25.17.) And thou ſhalt make a mercy ſeat of pure Gold, &c. And thus Chriſt is deſcribed by the Spouſe (Cant. 5.11.) His head is as the moſt fine Gold, &c. Solomons Temple was lined with Gold, figuring the purity of Chriſt; and the new Jeruſalem is of pure Gold, (Rev. 21. 18.) All theſe Scripture alluſions are high commendations of Gold. That is the beſt of things to which the beſt things are compared; yet that which makes Gold of ſuch eſteem among men, is the rareneſs and difficulty of obtaining it, as well as the goodneſs and excellency of it. Yea in ſome places glaſs-beads and childiſh bables are valued more then Gold, becauſe they are more rare, and harder to come by then Gold.

Seventhly, By way of caution from the uſual event of what is ſpoken of in this Text, > Obſerve, Thoſe things which are excellent in themſelves, prove often hurtful to man.

Gold and Silver are the moſt pure and precious things in Natures treaſury, yet they often prove the greateſt debaſers and defilers of man. I can tell you of Gold and Silver, (the word and ordinances of God) which as they are pure in their own Nature, ſo they purifie us, in the uſe of them; and the more we uſe them, the more they purifie us. And though to thoſe who are pure (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Tit. 1. 15.) all things (even Gold and Silver) are pure, while they receive and uſe them purely; yet they who are pure are in danger of defilement by the uſe of theſe things, becauſe through remaining impurity, their affections are apt to run out inordinately after them, or to be taken with them, (that is, to take them into their hearts, where Chriſt alone ſhould be) while they take them into their hands. Gold hath a kind of incorruptibility in it, yet how doth it corrupt the mind of man! To deſire Gold is ſinful, though to have it be not; unleſs we deſire Spiritual good things as well as have them, the having of them doth us no good; but worldly things are good only to thoſe who have them without deſiring them. The old Poet called the deſire of Gold Sacred, by the figure of contrary ſpeaking. His meaning was that the deſire of God is a moſt wicked deſire; and experience hath taught us, that it hath cauſed many to do wickedly. While Gold ſpeaks, all other things are ſpeechleſs. The unjuſt Judge hears not the cry of the poor, nor the voyce of the Law, if once Gold and Silver ſound in his ears. The Natural Hiſtorian diſcourſeth elegantly to this point, Silver is bright, but it makes black lines upon the body; and Silver preſſed upon the heart by the love of it, draws blacker lines upon the Soul, and renders it foul and filthy. Yea Gold and Silver, which will purchaſe mans corporal liberty, do yet enthral and make him a ſpiritual Slave. Some of the Ancients were wont to make Chains of Gold to bind their Malefactors, as we make them of Iron. And now golden Chains hold more in bondage then Iron ones do. How many are Priſoners to Gold, and are led Captive by Silver! The luxury, pride, and vanity of men, ſhew that they are bound in theſe chains. Tertullian tells the Women of his time, who prided themſelves in golden Chains, that they had been uſed in ſome places for bonds, not for ornament. And another, of thoſe elder times, reproving the vanity of that Sex, in putting ſo many ornaments of Gold upon their apparel, ſaith, They darken their native beauty by over-ſhadowing it with Gold; nor do they underſtand how great a fault they admit themſelves guilty of, while they bind themſelves (like evil doers) with innumerable Chains. And as Chains of Gold are to moſt that wear them, their bondage rather then their ornament, ſo many who wear no Gold Chains, are yet held in Chains by Gold.

Non ſine cauſa lineas ex argento nigras produci pluriq; mirantur. Plin. Qui argenti candorem amant nigreſcunt animo. Iſtæ veram pulchritudinem obſcurant, nec intelligunt quantum inſe delictum admittunt, ſe innumerabilibus vinculis aligantes. Clem: Alex: lib. 2. Pœdag. c. 12.

Thus pure Gold makes all its poſſeſſors both ſlaves and droſs, whoſe heares are enſnared with the love of it, or a delight in it. Gold put in the place of God, turns men to droſs, and ſets them below the beaſts that periſh. For as our righteouſneſs (which is more pure then Gold and Silver) if we over-value it, or look to be accepted for it, then it becomes meer droſs and filthy in the ſight of God; ſo do we, ſo do our perſons, when Gold and Silver ſteal away our hearts from God. And though I am not of opinion with that Philoſopher, that the life of man muſt needs have been innocent, happy, and contentfull, if he had deſired nothing but what grows above ground: yet I am fully of opinion, that the deſire of thoſe things which God and Nature have hidden underground, hath rendered the life of man much ſtained with guilt, unhappy, and troubleſome.

Quam innocens, quam beata, imo vero et delicata eſſet vita ſi nihil aliud quam ſupra terras concupiſceret. Plin. in proœm. l. 33.

Further, take notice, that theſe four Metals, Gold, Silver, Braſs, and Iron, are made uſe of by the Spirit of God, to ſignifie the four great Monarchyes of the World (Dan. 2. 32, 33.) Nebuchadnezzar ſaw in his dream an Image, whoſe head was of pure Gold, (repreſenting the Babyloniſh Monarchy) The breaſt and arms of Silver, (ſhadowing the Percian) The belly and thighs of Braſs, (noting the Grecian) And the legs of Iron, and the feet part Iron and part Clay, implying the Roman Monarchy in the ſeveral diviſions of it. 'Tis an honour to theſe Metals that God in them hath ſhaddow out the beginning and progreſs of all worldly Governments, till himſelf ſhall ſet up a Kingdom or a Government which ſhall never have an end.

Laſtly, As theſe four Metals are made uſe of in that Scripture, to ſet forth the ſtate and changes of the Kingdoms of this World; ſo other Scriptures make uſe of theſe four Metals, to ſhew the pureſt renovations and reformations of the Church of God. (Iſa. 60. 17.) For braſs I will bring Gold, and for Iron I will bring Silver, and for Wood Braſs, and for Stones Iron. At laſt we ſhall have Gold for Braſs, and Silver for Iron, and Braſs for Wood, and Iron for Stones. This will be an happy change; for thoſe adminiſtrations which were but as Stones, we ſhall have Iron, which is better then Stones; and for thoſe which were but as Wood, we ſhall have Braſs, which is better then Wood; and for thoſe which were but as Iron, we ſhall have Silver, which is better then Iron; and for thoſe which were as Braſs, we ſhall have Gold, which is better then Braſs, even the beſt of all Metals. And when this ſhall be fulfilled, I (ſaith the Lord) will make thine Officers peace, and thine exactors righteouſneſs. Nor is it to be forgotten, That, the old Poets have diſtributed the whole life of the World into four Ages, and deſcribed them by theſe four Metals. The Golden Age was with them the firſt, and the Silver Age was ſecond, the Brazen Age third, and the Iron Age they make the laſt and worſt Age of the World. But the Scripture ſaith there ſhall be a Golden Age in the laſt Age, or towards the latter end of the laſt Age of this World (Iſa. 1.25.) I will purely purge away thy droſs, and take away thy Tin, and I will reſtore thy Judges as at the firſt, and thy Counſellers as at the beginning, &c. Thus the Golden Age ſhall come about again; things ſhall be reſtored as at the firſt, as at the beginning, when the World was in its Virginity, and had not received the leaſt defilement from the luſts and paſſions, from the wrath and unrighteouſneſs of men. After we have been under Braſs and Iron, after we have been under hard bondage, we ſhall come to a bleſſed, to a Silver, and Golden liberty, peace and purity. The Lord, at laſt, will furniſh the Nations of the Earth with ſuch Rulers and Officers, with Rulers and Officers annointed with ſuch a Spirit of juſtice and judgment, of wiſdom and underſtanding, with ſuch a Spirit of faithfulneſs, and of the fear of the Lord, that they ſhall be to us, as Chriſt himſelf, equally and impartially diſpencing both rewards and puniſhments, maintaining the right and ſeeking the peace and proſperity of all that are ſubject to them. And when we ſee this come to paſs, The ſeventh Angel (as 'tis propheſied Rev. 11. 15.) will ſound his Trumpet, and we ſhall hear great voices in Heaven (the Church of God) ſaying, The Kingdoms of this World are become the Kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Chriſt, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever. This Golden Age is the Faith and patience of the Saints, or that, which they through faith, are perſwaded will come, and through patience will waite for, keeping the way of God till it cometh.

Job having aſſerted that there is a vein for the Silver, and a place for Gold, that the Earth yeelds Iron, and that there is a Stone out of which Braſs is molten; proceeds to ſhew the induſtrious ingenuity of man in ſearching out and getting theſe and ſeveral other hidden treaſures.

Verſ. 3. He ſetteth an end to darkneſs.

It is here queſtioned who is the antecedent of this, He

Malo ad Dominum et hoc et verba omnia referre, qui hom̄ inventionem homini concedat, etſi alioqui difficillimam. Merc:

ſetteth, who is that? Some underſtand it of God; He, that is, God ſetteth an end to darkneſs. Others, of man, or of the Miner who deals with Minerals; we may reconcile both opinions, and conclude, that God through the wiſdom and power which he hath given unto man, ſets an end to that darkneſs which covered theſe Subterranean riches from the open light.

He ſetteth an end to darkneſs.

What! that there ſhould be no darkneſs at all? Is there not a perpetual and reciprocal intercourſe of darkneſs and light, night and day? How is it ſaid then that he ſets an end to darkneſs? The meaning is, either,

Firſt, That the Miner digging down into the bowels of the Earth for Metal, meets with darkneſs, and nothing but darkneſs, yet by bringing in light, either the natural light of the Sun and Air, or the artificial light of Lamps and Candles, he ſets an end to darkneſs, where there was nothing but darkneſs, till he let in the light.

Secondly, He may be ſaid to ſet an end to darkneſs, by bringing thoſe Metals and precious things up into the light, which till then lay hidden in the bowels of the Earth. The Artiſt delivers theſe Priſoners of darkneſs, and ſhews them in the open Sun. Thus he puts an end to darkneſs. It is the honour of man, that he by his wiſdom and diligence ſets an end to much darkneſs, to the darkneſs of many things, that no eye ſaw before. And it is the glory of God that he will at laſt ſet an end to all darkneſs, to all the darkneſs of trouble and ſorrow, in which his own people are often wrapped, as alſo to all the darkneſs of the counſels and wayes and wickedneſſes of the moſt reſerved and cloſeſt Politicians, of whom the Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 29. 15.) They ſeek deep to hide their counſel from the Lord, and their works is in the dark, and they ſay, who ſeeth us? And who knoweth us? That is, ſurely none doth. Of all theſe dark works and workers in the dark, the Apoſtle hath warned us (1 Cor. 4. 5.) To judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the councels of the heart: and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God. There is nothing hid but it ſhall be ſeen, God will make thorough lights in the World: he will make thorough lights in the councels and actions of men. Man puts an end to the darkneſs of many things, both natural, civil, and ſpiritual; but God will put an end to the darkneſs of all things. 'Tis his glory and his alone to do it, to ſet an end to all darkneſs.

In tenebris latentia Metalla lucem aſpicere facit, in lucem ea producit. Druſ.

And ſearcheth out all perfection.

Mr. Broughton renders, He ſearcheth out the uſe of all things: The perfection of a thing is the uſe or uſefulneſs of it; and ſo to ſearch out the true and proper uſe of a thing, is to ſearch out the perfection of it. We may expound the words two wayes.

Firſt, He ſearcheth out the moſt perfect Metals and precious Gemms.

Secondly, He ſearcheth out the perfection of Metals and precious Gemms. This is the natural mans purpoſe and deſign in all his ſearches, He would ſearch out all perfection, or the perfection of all, nor is he ſatisfied till he find it.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, There is a perfection in every creature according to its ſtate and kind.

There is a perfection in Gold and Silver, in Braſs and Iron, in Stones and Trees; there is a perfection in all Natural things: as man, ſo every thing elſe was created in a Natural perfection. And though that Original perfection of the Creature be much ſtained and abated by the ſin of man; yet there is ſomewhat of perfection remaining in every thing; the beſt of every thing according to its kind, is the perfection of it.

Secondly, Note, Man may attain to and comprehend the perfection of the creature.

He may compaſs that perfection. David ſaith (Pſal. 119. 69.) I have ſeen an end of all perfection, but thy commandment is exceeding broad. The end of a thing may be taken two wayes; either firſt for the beſt and utmoſt worth of it; or Secondly, for the laſt, or period of it. David had not ſeen the end of all perfections in the latter ſence, he did not ſee the laſt man born (as we ſay) nor the period of the World; that hath continued many Ages ſince; but he ſaw the end of all perfection in the formerſence, he ſaw the beſt and utmoſt worth of every thing. As if he had ſaid; I have ſeen or known both by Faith and experience the beſt of the creature, and have gone to the outſide of it; I know the beſt of riches, and the beſt of honour, and the beſt of pleaſure; I have ſeen the utmoſt that the perfection of theſe things can yield or give out; I have had them in their hight and prime: the ſweet and great things of the World, the pleaſures and honours of it, have made ſute to me that I would entertain them, and I have ſeen what they are, and what they are able to do for me, or any elſe, that hath a mind to make a trial of them. As a gracious heart in the enjoyment of temporal things, ſpiritually ſeeth their utmoſt perfection, what they can make and amount to: So an Artiſt may find out the natural perfection of things, and improve them to the utmoſt ſtretch and extenſion of their vertue and value. It is far more difficult to find the perfection of civil things in a ſpiritual way, then of natural things in an Artificial way. Reaſon and ſtudy may reach the latter, but Grace only and a principle of divine light can reach and diſcern the former. Zophar ſaith (Chap. 11. 7.) Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Man by ſearching may find out many of the perfections of God, but no man can find out God to perfection; yea though man may find out the perfections of many creatures, yet no man (ſince Adam in his created perfection) could ever find out the creature to perfection.

Thirdly, Note, The perfection even of Natural things, is not to be found without pains and ſearching.

When a man hath got the rich Metals, and the precious ſtones by ſearching, he muſt make another ſearch, before he can find out their perfection; when he hath ſearched for them, he muſt alſo ſearch into them. Philoſophers have been called the Secretaries of Nature, becauſe they were ſo intimately acquainted with the ſecrets of Nature. But they attained this honour with a great deal of ſtudy and pains. Now if Natural things cannot be found out in their perfections without much pains, much more muſt we ſearch painfully for ſpiritual things, before we attain any of their perfections. O with what ſtudy and pains, with what prayers and tears ſhould we ſearch the Mines of Scripture, to find out Chriſt there, who is the perfection of all things, together with the precious things of divine wiſdom and knowledge laid up in them, or, rather in him! That, God gives the knowledge of Goſpel myſteries, and leads us by his Spirit into all truth, muſt not abate, much leſs take off our ſtudy, for the finding of them out. If the perfection of Natural things cannot be attained without travel, then much leſs can the perfection of ſpiritual things.

Fourthly, Obſerve, We are never ſatisfied till we find out the beſt of Natural things.

Man doth not reſt in this or that degree of attainment, he would be at the top of all. He never ſtops his inquiry, till he is advanced as far as he can go. This again reproves many in their eaſineſs to be ſatisfied about Spirituals. A little ſerves the turn with moſt, many are at the end of their ſearch, before they come to the beginning, much leſs to the perfection of holy knowledge; they can ſtay in the ſhell and outſide of Soul-ſaving truths, whom nothing contents but an arrival at the kernel and marrow, at the hight and perfection of naturals.

Job proceeds,

The ſtones of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death.

That is, as man ſearcheth out all perfection, ſo he alſo ſearcheth out, The ſtones of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death. This ſeems to be a very prodigious ſearch. To ſearch ſtones of light, and the wayes of life, is a noble ſearch, may ſome ſay; but how uncouth a work is this, to ſearch ſtones of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death? To clear this, I ſhall inquire what he means by the ſtones of darkneſs.

First, By theſe ſtones, ſome underſtand precious ſtones or Gemms, which though they are in their nature and quality ſtones of light, (All Gems or precious ſtones have light in them, and the more light they have, the more precious they are) yet he calls them ſtones of darkneſs becauſe becauſe they lye naturally bedded in the dark and unſeen, either in the bowels of the earth, or in the bottom of the Sea. Thoſe ſtones which ſparkle with the moſt reſplendent rayes of light, were once in this darkneſs, and may therefore, not improperly, be called ſtones of darkneſs.

Secondly, By ſtones of darkneſs, we may rather underſtand common ſtones which he findes out or meets with in digging for Silver, and ſearching for Gold. The Miner muſt follow the veins of precious Metal through Rocks and Mountains, theſe alſo are ſtones of darkneſs, obſcure ſtones, or ſtones lying in obſcurity; whereas others lye in the light, or upon the ſurface of the earth.

But what is meant by ſtones of the ſhadow of death? That's a ſecond Query.

I anſwer, Thoſe Miners for Silver and Searchers for Gold, that they may be ſure to come to the perfection of all things, will not only venture to make way through the ſtones that lye in the dark, but that lye in the ſhadow of death, and he calls them ſtones of the ſhadow of death.

Firſt, becauſe under the earth there is not only darkneſs, but a kind of deadly ſhade: a man, as it were, in a Tomb, or Grave, when he is under the ground.

Secondly, Becauſe darkneſs under ground is ſo terrible, that it is enough even to affright a man to death.

Thirdly, Becauſe in thoſe dark places, dampes often prove deadly; many have been ſuffocated or choaked in under-ground workings, and therefore the darkneſs there is a ſhadow of death. All theſe expreſſions laid together, ſhew what difficult and dangerous work muſt be undergone to come at thoſe treaſures which are lockt up in the bowels of the earth. He ſearcheth out all perfection, the ſtones of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death.

Hence Note, Man will venture through all hardſhips and dangers, to obtain the riches and precious things of the earth.

Heu, quis primus fuit ille, Auri qui pondera tecti, Gemmaſq; latere volent eſpretioſa pericula fodit? Boet. lib.2. de conſol.

See how he workes and toyls through darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death; and he will have it, though he dye for it. One of the Ancients ſpeaking of thoſe ſtrange adventures for Gold and Silver, breakes out into a vehement paſſion; O who was it that firſt taught man to dig out the Gold and Silver, which was willing to lye hid, theſe are very precious things indeed, but perillous, or they are precious perills. Many have not only ventured, but loſt their lives to gain them. Men are ſo ſet upon the having of riches, that they refuſe no labour nor danger, but do even offer violence both to Nature and themſelves at once. They are not deterred with the depth and darkneſs of the place where theſe things lye, nor will they give over to ſearch thoſe treaſures which are kept not only in the boſome of the earth, but in the very boſome of death it ſelf.

Job ſtill purſues with admirable elegancy and propriety of language, his deſcription of the unwearied pains and bold adventures of men to enrich themſelves with the ſpoils of the innocent earth. I ſhall give but brief touches for the explication of each particular.

Verſ. 4. The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant, even the waters forgotten of the foot, they are dryed up, they are gone away from men.

In this Verſe we have an accident very uſual to thoſe who are engaged in works under ground, The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant. The word notes a violent breaking, like the breaking forth of great waters, which are ready to overwhelm and ſwallow up all. There are various conceptions, and accordingly various tranſlations of this Text.

Firſt, Mr. Broughton renders it thus; A ſtream breaketh from his ſpring; As if he had ſaid, while theſe men are digging in the earth after Silver they meet with a ſpring, which is no ſooner opened, but the water guſheth out like a flood upon the workmen. Springs are the Original of ſtreams, and upon the opening of the earth the ſtream flowes out from its ſpring.

Dimiſſo accola, i.e. alveo ſuo ordinario, qui accolebatur præceps in cuniculos metallicos exundat. Jun.

Secondly, Others expound and read the words, as making the flood it ſelf to be the inhabitant, forced out of its ancient dwelling by theſe new gueſts greedily coveting Silver and Gold. The flood breaks out from that place where it did formerly inhabit or dwell, or from that Subterranean channel in which it abode, and through which it was conveighed. Water may be ſaid to dwell in or inhabit the place of its abode; and thus the words are to be underſtood by a Synechdoche of the thing containing, for that which doth contain it, or of the inhabitant for the place inhabited; The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant, that is, from the ſpring, or under-ground channel, which it did inhabit. And ſo the meaning is this, while the Miner is at work, and labours in the earth to make his paſſage to his precious treaſure and rich Gemms, by and by he comes neer to ſome ſpring of water (for there are under-ground waters as well as above-ground waters, he comes neer a ſpring) and touching upon it, the water guſheth out immediately and forcibly. This experiment is very frequent among thoſe that work in Mines, whether of Silver, or Braſs, or Iron, &c.

Cum diſcedit ab eo loco ubi accolebatur, deferens nimirum alveum ſuum perrupturam fundi illius per quam dilabitur ſubterram. Piſcat.

Ab accola q.d. ex eo loco ubi erant accolæ; et qui eum locum habitarant, ita erumpit torrens ut non ſit accola, ut inde pellantur et eſſe deſinent accolæ. Merc.

Thirdly, The Text is well rendred, The flood breaketh out, that there is no inhabitant, or, that there is no abiding. The meaning is, that when they are at work in the Mines, the flood breaking out they can abide there no longer, the labourers are put from their place and work, every man ſhifts for himſelf and gets away as faſt as he can, when he ſeeth the danger. The Silver and precious things they would faine have, but the water riſing up againſt them, as it were to defend the treaſure againſt theſe invaders, they ſee there's no preſent contending, and ſo give it over for that time. They who continue long working under-ground, may be reckoned as dwellers there. And when they are forced to remove and quit their habitation, becauſe of the breaking forth of theſe waters, we may ſay, there is no inhabitant. But what waters are theſe?

Even the waters forgotten of the foot.

Thoſe words, (even the waters) are not in the Hebrew, as you may ſee in your Bibles, they being put in a different character, but waters are compriſed in the flood. We read, even the waters forgotten of the foot; the Hebrew is only thus; The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant, forgotten of the foot. Why doth he ſay, forgotten of the foot? Hath the foot a memory, or how can the foot be ſaid to forget? I anſwer, this is ſpoken improperly, or metaphorically. And thus forgetfulneſs is aſcribed both to the foot and hand. David ſaith (Pſal. 137. 5.) Bet my right hand forget her cunning. Here Job ſaith, Even the waters forgotten of the foot, the meaning is only this, they are ſuch waters as the foot of man or beaſt hath no acquaintance with, or ſuch as the foot had never any experience of. This forgetfulneſs of the foot, is nothing elſe but the ignorance or in experience of men, who walk upon their feet. Mr. Broughton renders, Unkenned of any foot; that is, of any man moving on his feet. Some waters are made by the foot; and many are paſſable by men on foot. Of the former Moſes ſpeaks, (Deut. 11. 10.) The Land whither thou goeſt in to poſſeſs it, is not as the Land of Egypt, from from whence ye came out, where thou ſowedſt thy ſeed, and wateredſt it with thy foot, as a Garden of Herbs; that is, thou diſt but dig channels from the River Nilus with thy foot, when thou waſt in Egypt, and ſo (that being a flat Countrey) the Land was watered. With ſuch waters the foot is well acquainted, or they are waters remembred by the foot. Thus alſo a River that a man may eaſily paſs over, may be called a River remembred by the foot, by the feet of cattle, and by the feet of men which have often paſſed through it. But Subterranean waters are ſuch as the foot never paſſed through, and are therefore as far from the knowledge of man as thoſe things which are utterly forgotten. So that this is a deſcription of under-ground waters, breaking forth, and driving thoſe away who were at work for the precious Mines. For as thoſe Rivers which, running in ſight upon the face of the earth, are yet ſo deep that no man can or ever could wade over them, (ſuch was that River made by the waters of the Sanctuary, through which the Prophet at firſt was brought in viſion, and the waters were to the Angles, and at the ſecond time, they were to the Knees, at the third to the Loyns, but afterward it was a River that he could not paſs over, for the waters were riſen, waters to ſwim in, a River that could not be paſſed over

Torrentes non ex eorũ numero qui regiones alluant, ſed ſubterranei et pedibus hominũ prorſus ignoti. Bez.

Torrens tam profundus ut nullus pes eũ novit ſeu expertus ſit, i.e. tranſiverit aut tranſire poſſit: Piſc.

(Ezek.47.3,4,5.) Now, I ſay, as any ſuch waters above ground, ſo all waters under-ground, may be called waters forgotten of the foot, being ſuch as the foot of man never trod in, or ſuch as men did not think their feet ſhould have met with in thoſe places. But what do they in this caſe? Is the work utterly loſt for ever? No; they may be hindred for a time, but the latter part of the Verſe ſhews us what they do to remove and remedy this obſtruction.

They are dryed up, they are gone away from men.

The Hebrew word which we tranſlate dryed up, may bear relation to two roots; whereof the one ſignifies, to leſſen, attenuate, or diminiſh; Thus, the waters are diminiſhed: The other, to draw or dry up. Now, waters are drawn and dryed up two wayes; Firſt, In a natural way, by the heat of the Sun (the Sun is the great water-drawer or water-dryer) Secondly, In an Artificial way, by Pumpes and Buckets. So the word is uſed (Exod. 2. 19.) An Egyptian drew water enough for us, &c. The drawing or drying up of water here intended is Artificial; for the Sun beams have no ſuch attractive power upon the waters under-ground. But they who labour in Mines have Engines to draw away theſe waters, and then (as we render) they are gone away from men. Yet ſome tranſlate, more clearly to the fence already given, they are gone away by men, or, they are drawn out by the the labour of man, they are gone. Workmen by their pains and skill deliver themſelves from theſe waters, and ſo enter their Mines again; this is a very common accident among theſe undertakers: waters break in upon them, and they by many hands, or by the main ſtrength of a multitude of men draw them clean away. So that theſe words are a deſcription of the Miners labour to recover their work, when the waters have overflowed it, or flowed in upon it; for though the waters flow in ſo faſt, that the workmen are forced to leave or quit the place; yet God doth furniſh them with wiſdom to conveigh away thoſe waters, by Pumpes, Buckets, and ſuch like Engines, prepared for the purpoſe.

Exhauriuntur mortalis opera abſcedunt. Jun. Tranſl. Erumpit torrens ab incola, et (aquæ) oblivioni traditæ a pede exhauriuntur, et præ hominibus (i. e. multitudine hominum) ſummoventur. Bold.

Hence Note, Great works and undertakings often meet with many difficulties and unexpected impediments.

The Miners are overflowed with waters. What important buſineſſes of this World is there, but a flood may break in upon it? And the more important any buſineſs is, the more will floods break in upon it. And this appears moſt when our buſineſs is Heaven-ward, and our work in Spirituals, then if ever the great waters ariſe and threaten to ſwallow us up: Satan will caſt forth a flood to hinder us when we are digging in the Spiritual Mines. When the woman (Rev. 12. 13.) had brought forth the Man-child, and was fled into the Wilderneſs for ſafety, Then the Serpent (Ver. 15.) caſt out of his mouth waters as a flood, after the woman, that he might cauſe her to be carried away of the flood; that is, he ſtirred up People and Nations like a flood to perſecute and afflict the Church, even in her Wilderneſs condition. And when ever any particular Believer hath brought forth, or is about to bring forth a Man-child, ſome notable things for Chriſt, or according to the mind of Chriſt, then preſently Satan caſts out, or cauſeth ſome flood or other to break out upon him. When Joſhua ſtood before the Lord to move in the behalf of the people, Sathan was at his right hand to hinder him, (Zech. 2. 1.) And he cauſed the flood of that peoples ſins to break forth upon him. When we are about any Spiritual work, the fleſh hinders, a flood of corruption breaks out. Paul found it ſo (Rom. 7.) When I would do good, evil is preſent with me. And if the flood of corruption within be ſtopt, then a flood of temptations from the World comes in and hinders us. The wiſdom of the World layeth blocks in our way, telling us that the Cuſtomes and examples of men lead another way: and why ſhould we be ſingular, or ſet our ſelves up as a mark for envy and malice to ſhoot at? When we attempt what is good and honourable, it is beſt for us to expect, and accordingly to prepare for oppoſition. The Apoſtle Peter (1 Ep. 3. 13.) had no ſooner ſaid, And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But, he adds (Ver. 14.) by way of correction, And if ye be perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, happy are ye. As if he had ſaid, do good, keep cloſe to duty, and none can really hurt you; and you may hope that God will either ſo mollifie the hearts of evil men, that they ſhall have no mind, or ſo abate their power, that they ſhall have no opportunity to harm you; yet do not build upon this, but I will tell you what you may build upon, that let men oppoſe and perſecute you as much as they will while ye do good, ye are happy.

Secondly, Obſerve, The men of the World will not give over their work, though they meet with impediments, but endeavour ſtrongly to remove them.

And why ſhould not we do ſo in Spirituals? The Children of the World are wiſer in their generation then the Children of light. We are ready to let go our work, if we meet with trouble in it. Shall Miners recover their work out of the hands of the flood, and ſhall not we recover our work out of the hand of temptation? Let us remove it, and to work again. It is ſaid of that man of ſin (2 Theſ. 2. 7.) The myſtery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. So while we are at work in the myſtery of godlineſs, we often meet with ſomwhat that lets, and that will let till it be taken out of the way. Our work then muſt be to remove the hinderances of our work. Learn wiſdom of the Miners, if the floods break in upon you, out with them again.

Verſ. 5. As for the Earth, out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up as it were fire.

In the former Verſes Job ſhewed what man gets below out of the bowels of the Earth, and what ado he makes to get it. Here at the beginning of this Verſe, Job tells us what man gets above, or what grows for mans uſe upon the ſurface of the Earth.

As for the Earth, out of it comes bread.

By bread, he means Corn or Grain of all ſorts, of which bread is made; bread is an Artificial thing; Corn is natural; the Earth gives forth only that which is natural, the Art of man fits it for his uſe. Man knowes how to till the Earth that it may yield him Corn, and when he hath gotten Corn, he is inſtructed how to make it up in bread. Thus we ſee, that as man hath skill to work below in the bowels of the Earth, ſo upon the ſurface of the Earth; out of the bowels of the Earth he gets Gold and Silver, with other precious things: and upon the face of the Earth he gets his bread. As the Earth is the common parent of all mankind (all men having their Original from it) ſo the Earth is the common parent of all thoſe good things, both ornamental and neceſſary, which concern the natural both being and wel-being of man.

Out of the Earth comes bread.

And by bread we are to underſtand not only that part of our food, which is oppoſed to drink and fleſh, but our whole food; and not our food only, but our cloathing comes under the Notion of bread in Scripture-language; eſpecially, we muſt take it ſo in our Saviours directory for prayer about temporal things (Mat. 6. 11.) Give us this day our dayly bread. And in this latitude, we may interpret Job while he ſaith, As for the earth, out of it comes bread.

And under it is turned up as it were fire.

Or as others read, It takes fire underneath. We may expound this two wayes.

Firſt, That the Earth which hath Corn growing upon the ſourd of it, hath fire underneath, that is, Mines of Coals and Brimſtone; which are called fire, becauſe they are fewel o fire, or materials for fire; though they are not fire formally, yet they are vertually; they quickly take fire, and make fires. That which is uſed continually to make fire, as Coals are, and that which is ſo apt to conceive or take fire, as Brimſtone is, may not unfitly be called fire.

Secondly, By the fire we may underſtand thoſe Metals before ſpoken of, Gold, Silver, Braſs, and Iron, as alſo precious Stones. All or any of theſe may be called fire; Firſt, Becauſe of their brightneſs; they all, being burniſhed, caſt a flame like fire. Secondly, Becauſe they are refined by the fire; they have a kind of fire in them, being ſo pure and ſplendid, and they are caſt into the fire, that they may be purified. But I rather take it in the former ſence, that Job here deſcribes a further uſe of the Earth, that there is not only Gold and Silver in the bowels of it, but Coals and ſuch things as are for firing; they alſo being of great uſe for the life and comfort of man. Thus Mr. Broughton tranſlates, A ground out of which groweth food, is underneath changed as fire.

Terra quondam fertilis tritici, ſucceſſu temporis ſterilis redditur ut ſubter eam ignis et ſeminaria quædā ſulphuris eſſe videantur. Merc.

Further, Some interpret theſe words, as if here were intimated a wonderful work of providence in changing the Nature of the ground, ſo as that which before brought forth bread, becomes barren, and is turned, as it were into Fire and Brimſtone. Hiſtorians make ſome ſuch reports of the Country where Sodome and Gomorrah once ſtood, which though it was in thoſe times (as Moſes calls it, Gen. 13. 10.) like Eden, or the Garden of God, yet now the ſoyl is not only unfruitful, but ſulphurous. And thus the Lord threatned preſumptuous ſinners (*Deut.*29.23.) Their whole Land is Brimſtone and Salt, it is not ſowen, nor beareth, nor any Graſs groweth therein; like the overthrow of Sodome, and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, which the Lord overthrew in his anger and in his wrath. But I ſhall not ſtay upon that. The ſixth Verſe is of the ſame tendency.

Verſ. 6. The Stones are the place of Saphirs: and it hath duſt of Gold.

Thus Job deſcribes the furniture of the Earth, Corn growes above, Cole-ſtones and fewel for the fire, underneath, yea not only thoſe with other common, but many precious ſtones.

The Stones of it are the place of Saphirs.

The Saphir being one of the choiceſt ſtones, is here named for the reſt. We have the Saphir mentioned again (Ver. 16.) It (that is, wiſdom) cannot be valued with the Gold of Ophir, with the precious Onix, or the Saphir. The excellency of this ſtone may be collected from the deſcription of that viſion (Exod. 24. 10.) Then went up Moſes and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and Seventy of the Elders of Iſrael, and they ſaw the God of Iſrael, (not that God was viſible in himſelf, but only in thoſe viſional appearances and manifeſtations of his glory) and there was under his feet, as it were a paved work of a Saphir Stone, and as it were the body of Heaven in his clearneſs. How appoſitely doth Moſes joyn the Saphire ſtone, and the body of Heaven in his clearneſs? As implying (which is its natural beauty) that the Saphire ſtone is diaphanous and clear, or in colour like the body of Heaven. Again, that myſtical viſion of the Cherubims and Wheels, is concluded with the appearance of Chriſt upon a glorious Throne (*Ezek.*1.26.) Above the Firmament that was over their heads, was the likeneſs of a Throne, as the appearance of a Saphir ſtone, &c. Solomon had a Throne of Ivory overlaid with Gold, (2 *Chron.*9.17.) But there was never any Prince had a Throne of Saphir to ſit upon, much leſs, as it were a paved work of a Saphir ſtone under his feet to tread upon: This is peculiar to the King of Kings alone. The Saphir is applyed by the Spouſe to ſet forth the gracious, ſweet, pure and tender affections and compaſſions of Chriſt toward her ſelf, the Church. (Cant. 5.14.) His hands are as Gold-rings ſet with Berril: his Belly is as bright Ivory overlaid with Saphirs. When the Prophet Jeremy would deſcribe the exceeding beauty and comelineſs of the Nazarites in Jeruſalem, before the Famin had withered and ſtained them, He ſaith (*Lam.*4.7.) as ſome read it, Their Faces were Saphirine, or as we, They were more ruddy in body then Rubies, their polliſhing was of Saphir. The Saphir is a ſtone ſo full of a Heaven-like beauty, that it doth not only pleaſe, but delight and recreate the beholder. Nor doth any thing, as Naturaliſts affirm, ſo much refreſh the eye as the Smarage and the Saphir. There is a tradition among the Jewiſh Rabbins, to which ſome Chriſtians Writers conſent, that when the Lord wrote the Law, he Wrote it in Saphir ſtone, or that the two Tables were two great Saphirs. Lapidaries ſay, the Saphir is a tranſparent ſtone of a cerulean or sky colour, precious and pleaſant to the eye; and they place it in the fifth order and and degree, among the moſt noble Gems. Neither is it pleaſant only, but Medicinal: ſome report it, a great reſiſter of Poyſon; yea that it hath a great influence upon the mind, and removeth ſadneſs and melancholly, that it is a preſervative of chaſtity, beſides many other vertues, by ſome ſuperſtitiouſly, by others ſomewhat hyperbolically aſcribed to it, which I willingly omit and paſs by; it may ſuffice for my purpoſe to have ſhewed what the Saphir is, of which Job ſpeaks in this Text, The ſtones of it are the place of Saphirs; that is, the place of Saphirs, thoſe moſt precious ſtones, is among common and ordinary ſtones.

Cardan. de lapid. lib. 7. Epiphan. tract. de duodecim Gemmis.

And it hath the duſt of Gold.

Saphirus non niſi in terra quæ ſit Auri-ferax invenitur.

That is, Gold is found among the duſt and mould of the Earth. The Saphir is congenial to the Gold, and is only found in thoſe Countreys where Gold is found. And therefore when Job had named the Saphir, he adds, the duſt of Gold, or that there is Gold in that duſt. Hence ſome allegorizing this Text to a myſtical ſence, have ſaid that the heart filled with Heavenly deſires, is fitly ſhadowed by the Earth, in which Saphirs are formed and found; and that the mind which is enriched with ſuch deſires, is full of Spiritual Gold. As for the proper and natural Gold, that hath been ſpoken of at the firſt Verſe of this Chapter. And therefore I ſhall here only make one general reference, by way of Obſervation from this Verſe.

That, We ought to admire the wiſdom of God, who hath made the ſame Earth to yield ſuch varieties, to yield ſupplies; Firſt, For neceſſity, bread and fire; Secondly, For Ornament, Saphirs and Gold. Though no one Earth yields all things, yet one Earth may yield many things, and the whole Earth yields all things required to the ſervice, or for the comfort of man.

Job having ſhewed that the Earth is ſtored and even burdened with theſe rich commodities; proſecutes the ſame matter, yet upon another conſideration in the following context.

Verſ. 7. There is a path which no Fowl knoweth, and which the Vultures eye hath not ſeen.

8. The Lions whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce Lion paſt by it.

In theſe two Verſes Job deſcribes the ſecreſie of thoſe places, where the Gold and Gems, with all precious Minerals, are to be found. And he doth it by affirming that the wayes leading to them are far removed out of the ſight and tread of thoſe Creatures which have the moſt piercing eyes, and the moſt ſearching Spirits, commonly frequenting the darkeſt Caves and deepeſt Valleys of the Earth for prey.

There is a path.] That is, a path by which men ſeek for Gold, and are led down to the veins of Silver.

Vox עיט propriè denotat avem voracem.

Which no Fowl knoweth.] That is, no Fowl ever was there. The word tranſlated Fowl, ſignifieth, a ravening Fowl. Such fowls fly ſwiftly, and watch every place narrowly where their food is to be had; yet (ſaith Job) the paths which led to theſe treaſures are ſuch as the moſt ravening Fowls in all their flights were never acquainted with. There is a path which no Fowl knoweth,

And which the Vultures eye hath not ſeen.

Putant Hebræi איה eam eſſe avē quia in lege דאה dicitur a viſus perſpicuitate (Deut. 14.13.) cæterum in eo loco utrāq; conjungitur ergo diverſæ ſunt: ut ſit conſtat avē איה eſſe viſus perſpicaciſſimi. Merc.

The Vulture is ſo ſharp-ſighted, that her eye is, proverbially, put for ſharp-ſight; and the Vulture hath a ſharp ſtomack too as well as a ſharp eye, and therefore will ſearch into the moſt ſecret paths for prey: yet the Vulture never came into nor ſaw this path. And as the Fowls of Heaven have not ſeen it, ſo neither have the Beaſts of the Earth; as it follows.

Verſ. 8. The Lions whelps, (or, the Sons of the Lion.)

Non calcant eam filij ſuperbiæ. i. e. feræ animoſiores et truculentiores. Merc.

Uno verbo, ſemita rebus omnibus creatis avia: Jun.

The Hebrew is, Sons of pride. The Lion is proud and ſtately, as a King among beaſts. The Sons of the proudeſt and ſtatelieſt Lions, have not trodden this path, nor the fierce Lion paſſed by it; that is, the Lion that is moſt greedy, and will take moſt pains for prey, even he never came into theſe places, into which the Mineraliſt goes for Gold and Silver. Then, by this enumeration of Fowls and Beaſts, Job would intimate unto us, that the paths which lead to the precious Minerals, are ſuch as no Creature ever came into; and that, the thirſt or deſire which men have after them carrieth them further then the appetite and pinching hunger of the moſt fierce and greedy, whether Fowls of the Heaven, or Beaſts of the Earth, have ever carried them. The hunger of a Vulture or of a Lion forceth them far, yet not ſo far, as the hunger of man hath forced him in ſeeking and purſuing food for his covetouſneſs; and when he hath gotten more then he needs, his hunger is not ſatisfied, but encreaſed, for ſtill he thinks he hath need of more: ſuch is the eagerneſs and fierceneſs of mans appetite after earthly treaſure, that he will venture an periſhing things. His bowels are pained till he hath torn out the very bowels of nature, that he may fill his own. And though his belly be full, though his hand and houſe are full, yet his heart is empty. He is reſtleſs in labouring for that which neither will nor can give him any reſt. Theſe his reſtleſs labours in the purſuit of riches, are clearly and fully deſcribed in the three enſuing Verſes.

Verſ. 9. He putteth forth his hand upon the Rock; he overturneth the Mountains by the roots.

See what work he makes to get Gold and Silver.

He putteth forth his hand upon the Rock.

Theſe words may be taken two wayes; Firſt, Proverbially; Secondly, Properly. In the former acception, they imply thus much; that theſe men are willing to undertake the hardeſt work for Gold, &c. What is harder then a Rock; yet though the work be as difficult as digging through a Rock, they will put their hands to it. Secondly, Take the words properly, and the meaning is; though while theſe men work in Mines of the earth, they meet a Rock, yet they put their hands to it, and hew a way through it. And at the fourth Verſe, floods of water broke out upon them, and in this they meet with a Rock which they muſt break, or elſe their deſign is broken, and both their hopes and labour loſt. The word ſignifieth the hardeſt Rock, ſo that if they will have the treaſure, they muſt batter a Rock which ſtands as a Bulwark of Braſs to defend it againſt them. And yet this is not all. The next words ſhew us another Herculean labour; he overturneth the Mountains by the roots; or rather, he turneth up the roots of the Mountains; The meaning is, if Mountains ſtand in his way to hinder his work, or if his work be to undermine and remove Mountains, he will attempt and do it, that he may attain what he ſeeks for. A Mountain is ſpoken of in Scripture emblematically, to denote the greateſt difficulties and oppoſitions of men to croſs any deſign; and the overturning or levelling of theſe Mountains expreſſeth the higheſt actings of the power of God, in ſubduing all difficulties and oppoſitions for the good of his people, (Zech. 4.7.) And when Chriſt ſhould ſhew the utmoſt that a faith of Miracles can do. He ſaith, It will remove a Mountain. And therefore to overturn Mountains properly ſo called, is a ſtupendious undertaking; yet the Gold and Silver-ſearchers are not diſcouraged at it.

Verſ. 10. He cutteth out Rivers among the Rocks, and his eye ſeeth every precious thing.

The former part of this tenth Verſe gives light to the former part of the ninth. There 'tis ſaid, He putteth forth his hand upon the Rock; and here we ſee what his hand doth there; He cutteth out Rivers among the Rocks; that is, when the Miner meets with water, as was ſhewed Verſe fourth. Then he makes channels to conveigh it away, and give it paſſage. Some expound it of bringing waters from Springs, through Rock to move his Engins, or waſh his Metal, but 'tis more proper to expound it of waters ariſing upon, or about his works; theſe he rids himſelf of, by making Water-courſes under-ground, even among the hardeſt Rocks.

And his eye ſeeth every precious thing.

That is, having thus dealt with the Rocks, and Mountains, and having made Rivers among the Rocks, to carry away the water which annoyed and drowned his work, having (I ſay) thus ordered his matters; His eye ſeeth every precious thing; he ſeeth the Gold, the Silver, and the Gemms, which his Soul deſired. The Hebrew word, which we render precious, ſignifieth firſt, that which is honourable (Pſal. 45.9.) and the Greek word which ſignifieth, honourable, or honor, is by us tranſlated precious, (1 Pet. 2.7.) Secondly, That which is dear or beloved, (Jer. 31.20.) Is Ephraim a dear Son? Thirdly, That which is moſt acceptable, or much ſet by and pleaſing, (1 Sam. 18.30.) Fourthly, That which is rare and hard to come by, (1 Sam. 3.1.) When David ſaith, (Pſal. 116.5.) Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints. And (Pſal. 72.14.) He ſhall redeem their Soul from deceit and violence, and precious ſhall their blood be in his ſight; his meaning is, that the death and blood of the Saints is dear, much accounted of, and highly prized in the ſight of God, though poured out by men as a vile thing. Laſtly, And beyond all this, it ſignifieth, that which is light, or hath a ſhining light in it; for ſo moſt precious things, eſpecially Gemms have. (Zech. 14.6.) And it ſhall come to paſs that the light ſhall not be clear; ſo we tranſlate, and put in the Margin, The light ſhall not be precious; that is, the light ſhall not ſhine in that day as a precious, ſparkling Stone, but it ſhall be a kind of dim dusky light, it ſhall neither be dark nor clear, but between both. Divine knowledge is precious, and it is light, every Soul ſits in darkneſs till that light ſhines into it. And as this light is precious, ſo their eyes, who have it, may be ſaid to ſee, indeed, every precious thing.

Honorabilis pretioſus charius et varus fuit.

Non erit lux pretioſitatū, i. e. non ſplendida et refulgens, qualiter gēma pretioſæ oculis ſcintillare ſolunt. Bold.

Again, when 'tis ſaid, His eyes ſees every precious thing, the word rendered to ſee, notes not only ſimple to ſee, or to ſee naturally, but to ſee exactly, or an Artificial ſeeing. A skilfull man faſtneth his eye upon this or that object, to diſcern and find out which is beſt; he ſeeth like an Artiſt. Some have, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (Heb. 5.14.) Senſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil, and to reſolve which is beſt or worſt, among Naturals, Morals and Spirituals. His eye ſeeth, that is, diſtinguiſheth every precious thing that he findes in the earth. And as the word imports, ſeeing diſtinctly and diſtinguiſhingly, ſo ſeeing delightfully. And thus precious things are ſeen, by thoſe who ſeek for them. They are no ſooner eſpyed, but their ſeekers are ready to leap and ſing for joy. Thus the Mineraliſt ſeeketh every precious thing; He knows it when he ſees it, and it pleaſeth him to ſee it.

Curioſe inſpicere.

Hence Note, Firſt, Precious things are mingled among the vile.

How many heapes of ſtones and duſt muſt be removed, before the Silver, the Gold, and the goodly Stones are found, as the Wheat lyes in the ſame heap with the chaff, till it be winnowed, ſo do the precious Ores, with the baſeſt Earth, till they are ſeparated.

Note, Secondly, The wiſe mans eye diſtinguiſheth between the precious and the vile, and knowes which is which.

He will not take traſh for Gold and Silver, nor Pebbles for Saphires; he will not take Chaff for Wheat, nor Cockle for Barly. Thus ſhould we do in Spirituals, our eye ſhould be upon the precious things. Grace is a precious thing, Faith and Love are precious things; and though Grace be mingled with corruption, as the Ore with Droſs, yet he that is Spiritually wiſe can diſtinguiſh between them. The Apoſtle prayes for the Phillippians, that, their love abounding in knowledge and in all judgment, they might approve (or try) things that are excellent, or (as the Greek hath it) things that differ, (Phil. 1.9, 10.) that is, things that differ in excellency. Thus not only doth grace differ from corruption, and truth from error, but one grace differs from another in excellency, and one truth from another, though all are excellent. As in naturals, not only doth Wheat differ from Chaff, and Gold from Droſs, but ſome Wheat differs from other, and ſome Gold from other in excellency. And thus it is both in Morals and Spirituals; and the eye of a godly man ſeeth both diſcerningly, he ſeeth what is good from bad, and among good things he ſeeth which is beſt. And as it an argument of a Spiritual eye to ſee things, ſo perſons that are precious. As the Lord tells the Prophet (Jer. 15.19.) If thou take away the precious from the vile, then ſhalt thou be as my mouth; that is, if in thy teaching thou put a difference between the godly, and doeſt not promiſcuouſly give the portions and priviledges of the former to the latter; then thou wilt approve thy ſelf and the wicked man ſpeaking as I my ſelf have ſpoken, or have taught thee to ſpeak. The carnal man takes them up altogether, his eye diſtinguiſheth not either precious things or perſons, yea as the Prophet ſpeaks, (Iſa. 5.20.) He puts darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs; he puts ſweet for bitter, and bitter for ſweet; he puts good for evil, and evil for good. And as Chriſt chargeth ſuch (John 3.19.) They love darkneſs darkneſs rather then light, they are ſo far from ſeeing, that is, delighting in precious things, that they chooſe the vileſt things. But when the laborious Miner goeth down into the path which he hath made in the Earth, he ſeeth only precious things, he takes no other notice of worthleſs Stones, but only to put them by, that ſo he may come at what is precious. (As Eliſha in another caſe profeſſed, 2 Kings 3. 14.) As the Lord of Hoſts liveth, before them I ſtand, ſurely, were it not but that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the King of Judah, I would not look toward thee nor ſee thee. So would theſe men do, in the preſent caſe, they would not ſee the things that are vile, nor look towards them, were it not that they regard the preſence of Gold and Silver, and precious ſtones, which lye in their company, and are mingled with them. Job hath not yet finiſhed his diſcourſe concerning theſe Adventures, he gives one inſtance more.

Verſ. 11. He bindeth the floods from overflowing, and the thing that is hid bringeth he forth to light.

The floods mentioned in this Verſe may be of two ſorts. Firſt, The ſame which we ſpake of at the fourth Verſe, as alſo, in the Verſe immediately foregoing, where Job told us, that the Mineraliſt cut out Rivers among the Rocks, which having done poſſibly they might annoy him; therefore his next skill is to handle them ſo, that they ſhall not. For this end, He bindeth the flood from overflowing; As he makes it flow to the advantage, ſo he bindes it to its good behaviour, that it overflow not to the hindrance of his work. As the Lord by his infinite wiſdom and power bindeth the Ocean, and ſaith to the Sea, Hitherto ſhalt thou come; and no further, and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtay'd; So the Miner would have theſe waters come as far as is neceſſary for his uſe and benefit, but no further, and therefore he bindes them leſt they ſhould. The word, that is here tranſlated, to bind, is applyed to the binding up of a child in ſwathing bands; or to the binding up of a wound. And whereas we render, He bindeth up the flood from overflowing, the Text is, from weeping; we ſay ſome grounds, they are weeping grounds, and of bankes, where the water ouzeth through, they are weeping banks. Theſe Artiſts would bind up the floods with ſuch ſure banks or bounds, that they ſhould not weep through, nor ſhed a tear to their annoyance. Thus Mr. Broughton renders; He bindeth up the floods from weeping. Only take notice, that, this learned man conceives, that, the Antecedent to the relative He, is God himſelf; for thus he gloſſeth the Text; God dryeth the ſprings, from whence Rivers ran, that they fail, and have not ſo much as a tear of Water. Secondly, Theſe floods may be ſuch as are made from above, not ſuch as he found below. Exceſs of rain falling from the Clouds, doth often make great floods, which naturally making their way downwards may fall into thoſe capacious vaults which he hath made under the Earth, and overflowing them, ſpoil his work. Therefore he provides againſt theſe water-floods alſo, and binds them from overflowing. Having thus ſecured his Mine, he carrieth on his buſineſs with ſuch ſucceſs, that if any thing of worth be to be had he lights upon it, and will have it, as Job concludes this Verſe and his whole diſcourſe upon this ſubject in the next words, בכי Fletum propriè ſignificat, hic pro ſtillatione ſumitur, ut cap. 28. 16. Merc.

And the thing that is hid bringeth he to light.

That is, he diſcovers thoſe riches which, till then, never ſaw the Sun, though wrought by the powerful influences of the Sun, as Gemms and Minerals are. The words are neer of the ſame ſence and import with what he ſaid in the former Verſe, His eye ſeeth every precious thing; yet there is an obſervable difference between them; that ſpeaking of the ſight which himſelf hath of thoſe precious things, but this, of his bringing them out to the ſight and for the uſe of others. The ſum of all is; that whereas vaſt treaſures lay buried and concealed from all former generations, he brings them to open view, and preſents them to the eye of the World. He having let or brought in the light to them, lets or brings them out to light.

From this large deſcription of the way and means of getting treaſure out of the Earth, Obſerve, Firſt, Strong and conſtant labour compaſſeth great things, even the greateſt things of this World.

What may not men do, if they have a heart, and will put their hands to the doing of it? The Soul of the ſluggard (ſaith Solomon, Pro. 13.4.) deſireth and hath nothing; we may ſay, The Soul of a laborious man may have any thing that he deſires; he that is nothing but deſires, ſhall have nothing that he deſires; but he that addeth good endeavours to his deſires, can deſire nothing that is good, and good for him, but he may have it. So Solomon concludes in the Verſe before-mentioned, in oppoſition to the ſluggard; But the Soul of the diligent ſhall be made fat.

Secondly, Obſerve, True and hearty deſires, are alwayes followed with ſtrong and hard endeavours.

They who indeed deſire Gold and Silver, will ſeek to the ends and dig to the bottom of the earth for them. Through deſire (ſaith Solomon, Pro. 18. 1.) a man having ſeparated himſelf (from all things that may hinder him) ſeeketh and intermedleth with all wiſdom; that is, with all thoſe things, wherein he may either exerciſe the wiſdom which he hath attained to, or attain to more wiſdom. The true deſire of the mind is like the hungry appetite of the ſtomack, it provokes to any pains which may give it ſatisfaction. And becauſe nothing can ſatisfie deſire but enjoyment, therefore the deſirer needs no Task-maſter: Man will enjoyn himſelf the hardeſt taſkes, upon a hope of enjoying what is deſired.

Thirdly, Obſerve, That, for the things of this World, Worldly men are willing to beſtow ſtrong and conſtant labour.

The explication of the whole context makes good the truth of this Obſervation. Neither darkneſs, nor the ſhadow of death, neither ſtifling dampes, nor over-flowing floods, neither Rocks nor Mountains have been able to diſcourage the hearts, or weaken the hands of men greedy of gain. Some of the Ancient Heathens have at once ſtood admiring and bemoaning man in this; they have wondered what ſo great neceſſity that is, which hath compelled man, who is made of an erect countenance, with his face Heaven-ward, thus to bow down and dig himſelf into the Earth, to get thoſe things which are not got with more danger then they are poſſeſſed, when gotten. But though we can never bewail this too much, no, nor enough, yet we need not much wonder at it. There being many conſiderations which may ſatisfie us, why man, though theſe things cannot ſatisfie him, is yet ſo unſatisfied without them.

Quæ tanta neceſſitas hominem ad ſidera erectum incurvavit et defodit, ut erueret aurum non minore periculo quærendum quam poſſidendum. Sen. l.6. Natur. Quæſt.c.25.

Firſt, becauſe theſe things are connatural unto man; man is a kin unto the Earth, and the things of the Earth; he was made out of the duſt of the Earth; and what is Gold but yellow duſt? Or Silver, but Earth purified by the fire? man and earthly things being ſo nearly related, no marvail if man muddle in the earth after them; till his nature is renewed, this motion cannot be diverted. (John. 3. 31.) He that is of the earth (in his Original) is earthly (in his converſation) and ſpeaketh of the earth. All his ſpeeches and all his actions ſavor of the earth. Philoſophers ſay, The temper of mans mind followeth the temperament of his body; and if ſo, how can the mind of man be but earthly, ſeeing the general temperament of his body is earth. And therefore the Apoſtle ſpeaking of ſome profeſſors who were ſo only in profeſſion, ſaith of them, Their god is their belly, they mind earthly things. (Phil. 3.19.) And 'tis true of godly men too, who have much earth ſtill about them, that though they are not earthly minded, yet earthly things are much in their minds; Firſt, To think of them; Secondly, to deſire them; Thirdly, To compaſs and poſſeſs them.

Terrenus terrena. Sapit.

Secondly, Earthly things have a glorious glitter and appearance in them; they are the moſt taking objects of the eye. The Apoſtle John (1 Ep. 2. 16.) calls covetouſneſs which chiefly reſpects God and precious things) The luſt of the eye; that is, that which the eye luſteth after. And man is naturally led by ſenſe. The Apoſtle ſaith, We (that is, Saints) walk by faith, and not by ſight; implying, that all one the other ſide of the line of Grace walk by ſenſe, and not by faith (2 Cor. 5. 7.) And again (Chap. 4. 18.) We look not at things that are ſeen; we, that is we Believers do not, but the unbeliever or unregenerate man looks only at the things that are ſeen; and becauſe men are ſo greedy of this ſight, therefore they will dig, and cut through Rocks and Mountains, and make themſelves paths to theſe treaſures, which the Vultures eye hath not ſeen.

Thirdly, Man hath continual uſe of theſe things, they accommodate all his affairs in this World. Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 7. 12.) Wiſdom is a defence, and money is a defence; that is, a wiſe man will procure himſelf defence by his money. He ſaith again, (Eccl. 10. 19.) Money anſwers all things ; that is, any thing may be had, and almoſt any thing may be done by money. Money anſwers beauty and Nobility. It makes the deformed comely, and the baſe-born honourable; It ſerves all turns and buſineſſes, and therefore we ſhould not wonder, if there be ſuch an appetite or inſtinct in man, to ſearch into the bowels of the earth for the materials of it.

Et Genus & formam regina pecunia donat. Horat.

Fourthly, Man riſeth up in repute and eſtimation in the world, as he gets more of theſe things ; worldly honour and credit flow in with riches ; men are diſtinguiſhed by their poſſeſſions ; few value men by grace, by faith, &c. A man may be rich in faith, and abound in holineſs, and yet find little reſpect with men : but if a man be wealthy, if he have ſtore of ſilver and gold, he is reſpected by moſt, and adored, or made (as it were) an Idol by ſome. They that are ſpiritual, know how to eſteem men for ſpirituals, but commonly men are valued by their value and worth in temporals. This gives us another account, why the treaſures of the earth are ſought and purſued with ſo much eagerneſs. And indeed they are purſued with ſo much eagerneſs, that the Prophet David knew not which way in the world, to ſhew a higher eſteem of and ſtronger affections unto God and his wayes, the wayes of holineſs, then by ſaying, that he eſteemed or affected them more then all the treaſures of the world (Pſal. 119. 14.) I have rejoyced in the way of thy teſtimonies, as much as in all riches ; The Hebrew is, as in all riches ; we ſupply, as much as in all riches ; not that David's ſpirit ſtood upon equal terms between God and the world. For he that rejoyceth in God, no more then in riches, rejoyceth much leſs in him then his duty is. And therefore David explains himſelf fully to this in the ſeventy ſecond of the ſame Pſalm, The law of thy mouth is better unto me then thouſands of gold and ſilver. Both Texts ſhew how much gold and ſilver are eſteemed, when this is made the commendation of our love to God, that we love him more then gold and ſilver.

But though we have no cauſe to wonder, yet we have much cauſe to lament, while we ſee the ſons of men thus buſied in the earth, and in love with earthly things. How ſad is it to ſee ſo many venture the periſhing of their mortal bodies, much more of their immortal ſouls, in ſeeking things which periſh ? How ſad is it to ſee their hunger after this prey, carrying them into paths which the Lyons whelp never trod, nor the fierce Lyon ever paſſed ? How ſad is it to ſee ſuch digging and ſearching for ſilver and gold, while that is neglected which is better then gold, even durable ſubſtance ? How ſad is it to ſee men overcoming all difficulties, and laughing at all dangers, to get gold, when as every difficulty ſtops their ſearch after heavenly treaſures. If a flood (ſhall I ſay) break out upon them, nay, if but a few drops of trouble fall upon them, they have done preſently ; and, if a rock, or a mountain (ſhall I ſay) be in the way, nay, if but a pebble ſtone or mole-hill of oppoſition be in their way, they will go no further ; O how far are they from cutting rocks, or labouring to remove mountains ! How ſad is it to ſee men ſlighting the ſhadow of death in their ſearch for gold, and yet afraid of deaths ſhadow, even the remoteſt appearance of death in their ſearches after God? what a ſhame is it to ſee men paſs not only through the ſhadow of death, but through death indeed, for dying or rather liveleſs things, and yet to be afraid of deaths ſhadow, in following the things of eternal life ! When the ſluggard ſhould go on in his way, he will not, for (ſaith he, Prov. 26. 13.) There is a Lyon in the way, every ſhew of danger is to him a Lyon, though poſſibly it can endanger him no more then a mouſe. What a ſhame and reproach is it to mankind, that whereas in ſeeking gold and ſilver, men have exceeded all the fabulous labours of the old giants, by their real labours, that yet men in ſeeking grace and glory, act ſo much below even dwarfs and pigmies ?

Auri effodiendi ratio opera vicerit gigantũ. Plin. l. 33. c. 4.

Be exhorted therefore, not to think any pains too much, or perils too great for the things of heaven, ſeeing men think no pains too much, nor perils perilous for the things of the earth. The very labour in ſeeking heavenly treaſures is very ſweet, but the enjoyment of them is infinitely ſweeter : whereas the labour of ſeeking for earthly treaſures, is very tireſome, and the very enjoyment, to many, is much more tireſome. Some one luſt is engaged and works in getting, but all the luſts of a mans heart may be at work in the enjoyment of the world. And if to obey the commands of one luſt hath tired many a man, how will that man be tired who is at the command of many, of every luſt ? So then, we may conclude, There is leſs trouble in ſeeking earthly treaſures, then there is in uſing and poſſeſſing them, though that trouble is far enough from being little. The ſumme of all is, Vain man troubles himſelf very much to get himſelf more trouble. The Apoſtle Paul ſeems much affected with it, that the care of thoſe who run races for honour and temporal rewards, ſhould not be equalled, if not exceeded, by the Saints in running their race for glory and immortality ; Every man that ſtriveth for the maſtery, is temperate in all things (1 Cor. 9. 25.) Now (ſaith he) they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible. When men are to run a race how do they diet and order themſelves before ? and when they come to the race, how do they ſtrain themſelves, and all for a corruptible crown ; we are ſtriving for an incorruptible crown, ſhall we not be temperate in all things ? ſhall we not uſe much ſobriety, and be much in mortification and ſelf-denial, that we may ſo run as to obtain ? The temperance and pains of race-runners, the labour of earth-miners, will riſe up in judgement againſt all thoſe that are ſluggiſh and ſloathful in ſoul-matters ; yea the wiſdom of theſe men, will riſe up in judgment againſt thouſands, who pretend to be very wiſe. The miners go directly to the place where gold is, they ſeek not gold upon a green-tree, nor precious gems upon a vine ; but they dig down into the earth when they would have theſe things. 'Tis folly to ſeek things out of their proper place. But we may ſay to many as the Angel to Mary, Why ſeek ye the living among the dead ? Why ſeek ye heaven in the bowels of the earth, and glory in the wayes of ſin ? They labour in the earth, as if heaven it ſelf were to be had there ; and they labour for heaven, as if not ſo much as this earth were to be had there. But when with grievous toil they have gotten that which hath only a ſhew of good, they will know (too late for recovery) that which is really ſo. I will cloſe this admonition to earthly minded, and earth-minding men, with David's chiding queſtion (Pſal. 4. 2.) O ye ſons of men, how long will ye love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing ? When will ye pray, as he doth (verſ. 6.) Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us ? when will ye be able to ſay (as he did, verſ. 7.) from your experience of the anſwer of ſuch a prayer ; Lord, thou haſt put gladneſs in our hearts, more then in the time, that (either other mens or our own) corn and wine, gold and ſilver did encreaſe.

Sed quonam lateat, quod cupiunt bonum neſcire caeci ſuſtinent. Et quod ſtelliferum tranſabiit polum, Tellure demerſi petunt. Boet. lib. de Conſol. Phi.

There is nothing can divert the thoughts of man and his deſires from the world, but to direct them upon God. And thoughts of God are more then a diverſion of our thoughts from the world, they are the death and mortification of them. Earthly deſires cannot live in the air of heaven, no more then any creature can, when taken out of or off from its proper element. The gladneſs which the light of Gods countenance puts into the heart, conquers and kills the gladneſs which the glitter of gold and ſilver puts into the heart. As God alone will be All in all to Saints in heaven, ſo they who are much with him here in the actings of faith and love, cannot but delight in him above all, and riſe up to David's concluſion, from David's Queſtion (Pſal. 73. 25.) Whom have we in heaven but thee ? and there is none (either thing or perſon) upon earth, that we deſire beſides thee.

Thus far Job hath deſcribed the labour of man, in ſeeking worldly treaſure, the vein for Silver, and the place for Gold, either where they find or fine it; and having finiſhed this diſcourſe he comes to ſhew that there is a vein of wiſdom, which few men in the world have a deſire to ſeek, and which none of the men of the world have an ability to find.

VERS. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19.

But where ſhall wiſdom be found ? And where is the place of underſtanding ?
Man knoweth not the price thereof, neither is it found in the Land of the living.
The depth ſaith, It is not in me : and the Sea ſaith, It is not with me.

It cannot be gotten for gold, neither ſhall ſilver be weighed for the price thereof.
It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onix, or the ſaphir.
The gold and the chryſtal cannot equal it: and the exchange of it ſhall not be for jewels of fine gold.
No mention ſhall be made of coral, or of pearls: for the price of wiſdom is above rubies.
The Topaz of Ethiopia ſhall not equal it, neither ſhall it be valued with pure gold.

IN the former part of this Chapter, we found Job diſcourſing of that natural wiſdom which is implanted in man by God. And there he ſhewed by an induction of many inſtances, what that wiſdom can do, how far it can work; that can ſearch the boſom and bowels of the earth, and diſcern what's there; that can fetch or draw out gold and ſilver and precious ſtones from thence; that can maſter and overcome all the difficulties and impediments, and out-dare all the dangers that ſtand in the way of thoſe attainments; that wiſdom can purifie and refine, perfect and poliſh all ſorts of metals and gems, into a fitneſs for the uſe and ornament of man: all this the wiſdom of man can do. Moſt men can ſee far into nature; ſome men can ſee her quite through, they are (as it were) of councel with nature, and know her whole heart, all her ſecrets: all this man doth and hath by natural wiſdom, which yet is the gift of God to man, a gift common to man as man. So that there is nothing in this lower world, nothing in the loweſt parts of this world, which hath not been diſcovered and drawn out, either by the diligence of man, or by the ſucceſſion of times. All things have their original and period, their beginning and ending, their entrances and their iſſues in certain times and places.

But now (in the following part of this Chapter, as was toucht in the diviſion of the whole) Job makes report of a wiſdom which hath neither beginning nor end, neither vein nor iſſue ſearchable by man: yea, that wiſdom of man which is ſo pregnant and piercing, ſo active and ſucceſsful in diſcovering the works of God in nature, which are done below, even within the bowels of the earth, is not only puzzled often and at a ſtand, not only non-pluſs'd often and gravell'd, but is ſometimes ſtark blind to ſee, and utterly unable to unty the knot and diſcover the myſtery of thoſe works of God in providence which are done aloft upon the face of the earth.

Verſ. 12. But where ſhall wiſdom be found?

Man, who hath digg'd and found out many ſecrets, knows not where to dig for or find out this ſecret? And Job gives four reaſons, in the proceſs of this Chapter, why he cannot.

Firſt, Becauſe there is no place particularly deſigned for it; He knows not where to break ground, with any hope or probability of finding this treaſure. He treats of and enlarges this reaſon with much excellent variety. (Verſ. 12, 13, 14.) Where ſhall wiſdom be found? and where is the place of underſtanding? It is not found in the land of the living. The depth ſaith, it is not in me, &c.

Secondly, Becauſe man hath no price in his hand to obtain it; As there is no place in nature where it can be found, ſo all the treaſures of nature cannot reach the purchaſe of it. And this Job proſecutes from verſ. 15. incluſively to the end of verſ. 19. It cannot be gotten for gold, neither ſhall ſilver be weighed for the price of it, &c.

Thirdly, He ſhews, that as there is no place where, nor price whereby, ſo no power in the creature to attain it. This wiſdom is not compaſſable by (that price for which the old heathens ſaid their gods ſold all things) ſtudy, labour, and induſtry; Which Job intimates (verſ. 21, 22.) which he ſaith, It is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept cloſe from the fowls of the air, &c. There are ſome things which no man can buy with gold or ſilver, which yet may be got by ſtudy and labour. But no beating of the brain, no biting of the nails can find out theſe ſecrets, 'tis kept cloſe from the fowls of the air; even from thoſe men who ſoar higheſt after it in ſtudy and contemplation. Theſe fowls of the air cannot come at it, for God purpoſely hides it as a reſerve to himſelf; It is kept cloſe; and where? even in the breaſt of God, that's the cabinet. As the Kings and Princes of this world have many ſecrets and myſteries of State, which every man muſt not know, and ſome ſecrets which no man muſt know, in the whole compaſs of it, but only here a little, and there a little; ſo hath God infinitely more.

Arcana Imperii.

Fourthly, He concludes; that God, and God only hath this wiſdom, becauſe He, and He alone, hath at once a full proſpect of all things all the world over, in all times, even in one and the ſame time. He that hath not ſuch a view of things as this, or he that ſees things only by parts, or in this or that part of the world, or in this and that part of time, can never underſtand the full mind of God in what he doth, ſeeing whatſoever he doth is done with an infallible ſight and foreſight of all things in all places and through all times, paſt, preſent, and to come. And this Job proves from the twenty-third to the twenty-ſeventh verſe; God underſtandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof, for he looketh to the ends of the earth, and ſeeth under the whole heaven, to make the weight for the windes, and he weigheth the waters by meaſure, when he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder; then did he ſee it, and declare it, he prepared and ſearched it out. As if he had ſaid, God ſet all things in order, and ſaw the order wherein they were ſet from everlaſting, and therefore God and none but God, underſtandeth the way of wiſdom, and knoweth the place thereof.

Upon all theſe grounds, Job concludes, that this ſecond ſort of wiſdom, (for I formerly diſtinguiſhed of three ſorts of wiſdom treated on in this Chapter; Firſt, Wiſdom about naturals; Secondly, Wiſdom about providentials; Thirdly, Wiſdom about ſpirituals; upon theſe grounds I ſay, Job concludes that this ſecond ſort of wiſdom) referring to the providences of God in adminiſtring the things of this world, whether to the one ſort of mankind or the other, hath ſuch knots in it as no man can unty; ſuch riddles in it as no man living is able, unerringly, to reſolve, but many thouſands have erred exceedingly, foully, groſly, while they have been aſſaying to reſolve them; and ſo have at once fallen by their preſumption under the ſore rebukes of God, and a deſerved cenſure from man. This was the caſe of Job's friends, they preſumed they had found out the key of the whole matter, even the hidden reaſon of all God's providences toward Job. But God tells them at laſt (Chap. 42. 8.) Ye have not ſpoken of me (that is of my dealings with men) the thing that is right; indeed they had ſpoken as to the man before them, ſuch things as were very wrong, and had ſhot wide from their mark: And as God told them at laſt, that they were defective in wiſdom; ſo Job puts the Queſtion to them, here, reprovingly.

Where ſhall wiſdom be found?

Job proſecutes his point in ſeveral forms of ſpeech; In this verſe he argues by way of interrogation; in the next (or thirteenth) by a plain negation; and in the fourteenth, by a proſopopeia or an imitation of a perſon, bringing in the deep diſclaiming this wiſdom, and the ſea, ſaying, it is not in me.

Where ſhall wiſdom be found?

There is a vein for the ſilver, and a place for the gold where they fine it: But where is the vein for wiſdom? for wiſdom to ſee to the bottom of all Gods providential dealings with the children of men; the bowels of the earth and the bottom of the ſea, are eaſier found, then the place of this wiſdom.

Some read the Text with a ſpecial accent upon the word wiſdom: Where ſhall that wiſdom, or (as others) Wiſdom it ſelf be found? That wiſdom, which ye have been pretending, to, all this while, as enabling and furniſhing you to aſſign the reaſon, why God is pleaſed thus to exerciſe, thus ſeverely to rebuke and tread me a poor worm under his feet, yet the work of his hands, where ſhall this wiſdom be found? As if he had ſaid, I have ſpoken of wiſdom, of that wiſdom which men put forth in the purſuit of gold and ſilver, with all other precious treaſures of the earth, but I am now ſpeaking of a higher wiſdom, Where ſhall that wiſdom be found? that wiſdom whereby God doth order and diſpoſe all the motions of this world; in ſearching this wiſdom all the wiſdom which men have ever given proof of in ſearching for mines or digging metals is meer meer folly. This wiſdom is nothing elſe but, and it is no leſs then the righteouſneſs and the reaſon of all Gods proceedings both with the righteous and the wicked; ſometimes concluding both under the ſame ſtate of outward ſuffering, and ſometimes under the ſame ſtate of outward proſperity; ſometimes running the diſpenſation quite croſs, ſo that godly men are ſorely afflicted, and wicked men greatly advanced; And then again the godly advanced greatly, and the wicked are ſorely afflicted. Job puts the queſtion (Chap. 21.22.) Shall any teach God knowledge, ſeeing he judgeth thoſe that are high? Now as no man can teach God this knowledge, ſo God teacheth but few men any of this knowledge, and he teacheth no man all of it. Where is that wiſdom to be found?

And where is the place of underſtanding?

Some diſtinguiſh between wiſdom and underſtanding, as between a habit and an act. Underſtanding (ſay they) is the habit, and wiſdom the act by which all things are ordered and diſpoſed of according to that light which ſhineth in the underſtanding. The Jewiſh Doctors call underſtanding, the daughter of wiſdom. But we need not be thus curious, it being frequent in Scripture to repeat the ſame thing in another expreſſion. Whereſoever wiſdom is, there is underſtanding; And whereſoever a right underſtanding is, there is wiſdom; and as theſe two are inſeparable companions ſo they are often put the one for the other; For though many have an underſtanding, who have no wiſdom, or who are very unwiſe; yet whoſoever is an underſtanding man, is a wiſe man alſo; or rather his underſtanding is his wiſdom: and though ſome critical diſtinction may be given between them, yet both may bear the ſame ſence and ſignification, as elſewhere ſo in this place alſo, without any hurt or ſtrain to Job's intention. When God gave young Solomon his choice what to ask (1 *King.*3.9.) Lord (ſaid he) give thy ſervant an underſtanding heart to judge thy people, that I may diſcern between good and bad. An underſtanding for government is a choice mercy; And as it is a choice mercy to underſtand how to govern our ſelves or others; ſo to underſtand how our ſelves or others, whether perſons or nations are governed by the hand of God, is a choice mercy alſo. We may well ſay with Job, Where is the place of this underſtanding? And as the place of it is not known, ſo neither hath man a price in his hand to purchaſe it.

Verſ. 13. Man knoweth not the price thereof, neither is it found in the land of the living.

When Job ſaith, Man knoweth not, we are not to expound it of this or that man, or ſort of men diſtinguiſhed from the reſt; as of weak men, or of ignorant men, or of unlearned men, or of men of an inferior and common rank; Nor are we to interpret Job ſpeaking only of wicked or prophane men. But take the wiſeſt, the moſt learned, the greateſt, yea the holieſt men on earth, and even of them all it may be ſaid, Man knoweth not, (that is, no one man of all theſe men knoweth) the price thereof. For not only they who have wiſdom from God, but even they who have the wiſdom of God, know not the wiſdom which is here treated of. They who know much of the mind of God, yea (as Paul ſpeaks to the Church of Epheſus, *Act.*20.27.) they who know, (as to what God would have man do) all the counſel of God, may yet know little or nothing of his mind or counſel, as to what himſelf hath done or is doing. This was the Prophets confeſſion (*Jer.*12.1.) Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee, yet let me talk with thee of thy Judgments, wherefore doth the way of the wicked proſper? Wherefore are all they happy (in the eye and account of the world he means, or in their own, for other happineſs ſuch have none) that deal very treacherouſly. That holy man did not know how to clear up the Lords righteouſneſs (though he knew he was righteous) when he ſaw the unholy and unrighteous flouriſhing; This looked like a matter quite out of order, and he could not ſee the order of it. And ſo ſome render this Text, Man knoweth not the order of it. I ſhall touch that reading as ſoon as I have given a brief account of ours.

Hic tantum agitur de ſapientiâ divinæ adminiſtrationis, quæ ne piis quidem hominibus patefacta eſt ut merito hic dici queat nuſquā inveniri. Merc.

Man knoweth not the price thereof.

The price of a thing is that which either Firſt, the eſteem of men, or Secondly, the rarity of it, or Thirdly, the danger and difficulty of attaining it, or Fourthly, the intrinſecal worth of it hath put upon it. One of the ancients gives an excellent account about the price of things; As any one is delighted with or phancieth a thing, ſo is the price of it. Every mans luſt, eſpecially the luſts of great men or Princes, makes the price great. And again the ſame Author, It is a ſmall matter to us, unleſs we are cloathed and fed with dangers, ſo that what we uſe all the body over pleaſeth us moſt, when 'tis got by the hazard of the ſoul or life. But the word which we render price, and well enough as to the ſignification of it, is yet by many of the learned (and I think better as to the ſence of this place) tranſlated order; Man knoweth not the order (nor the ſtate) of it. Thus we render it in the verb often (Pſal. 50.21.) I will reprove thee and ſet them, (that is, thy ſins) in order before thee. And again (*Exod.*40.23.) He ſet the bread in order upon it, &c. The Greek verſion conſents fully to this reading. And becauſe Job ſpeaks of the price or worth of wiſdom afterwards, telling us that it cannot be had for gold or ſilver, &c. (*verſ.*16.) therefore (though our tranſlation is not to be refuſed, becauſe it anſwers both a known ſignification of the word and the general ſcope of the Chapter, yet) I judge that reading more ſutable; No man knoweth the order thereof. As if he had ſaid, God doth ſo vary his dealing, that no man knoweth his method, or where to have him at all times. God doth not keep a road, but takes what liberty he pleaſeth in his adminiſtrations toward men. And therefore, Man knoweth not the order thereof.

Neither is it found in the land of the living.

That is, It is not any where to be found. That which is not to be found among the living, is much leſs to be found among the dead. Beaſts live, yet the life of ſenſe is no life in compariſon to the life of reaſon, and therefore it is ſaid, Eve was the mother of all living; as if beaſts who have a ſenſitive, and plants which have only a vegetative life, or a life of growth were not to be reckoned among the living. This form of ſpeaking, The land of the living, is a common Hebraiſm in Scripture, ſignifying our abode and ſtate in this world. (Pſal. 27.13.) I had fainted unleſs I had believed to ſee the goodneſs of God in the living. And thus ſpake thoſe wicked conſpirators againſt the Prophet (*Jer.*11.19.) Let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembred. So that when Job ſaith, It is not found in the land of the living, it is as if he had ſaid, This wiſdom is not to be found among any ſort of men in the world. Yet there are ſome (to note that by the way) who reſtrain this expreſſion to the land of Canaan, as if that, by way of eminency were called The land of the living. Thus they expound (*Iſa.*38.11. *Ezek.*26.20.) as alſo thoſe other Texts already mentioned. As if to walk in or to be cut off from the land of the living, were to live in or die off from the land of Canaan or Judea, in a more peculiar ſence then to live in or die off from any other land upon the face of the earth. And there is a double reaſon given for it. Firſt, Becauſe the land of Canaan was furniſhed with all things neceſſary for natural life, beyond other lands; It was a land flowing with milk and honey; In the word flowing we have abundance, and in thoſe words milk and honey, we have the fatneſs and ſweetneſs, the ſtrength and deliciousneſs of thoſe food proviſions which Canaan yielded. Secondly, In a ſpiritual ſence, Canaan was called, The land of the living, Becauſe, there was the worſhip of the living God, and there the living God did in a ſpecial manner maniſeſt himſelf. There alſo were living men, or men living a life of grace: in compariſon of whom all other men may be numbred among the dead, and are often in Scripture language called dead men, dead in ſins and treſpaſſes. So that foraſmuch as to that land, the land of Canaan, the grace of God was confined, upon the matter, (For though there were here and there ſome picked out and called to a life of grace (as the firſt-fruits of the Gentiles) from other nations, yet that was the land of thoſe who lived a life of grace, holineſs, and faith, while the reſt of the world ſate in darkneſs and in the ſhadow of death.

Viventes peculiariter vocantur homines, ut cū Hova vocatur mater omnium viventium. Druſ.

Terra Canaan dicebatur terra viventium, quia ibi habitabant cultores dei vivi: ſed præcipuè propter multitudinem ſanctorum Hivæorum, i. e. vivicatorum, ſc. prophetarū. Bold.

Now I ſay, foraſmuch as the grace of God was almoſt ſhut up within the borders of Canaan.) That may well, in way of difference from all other Lands, be called the Land of the living. Yea not only did all the living (in this ſenſe) dwell in the Land of Canaan, but (as I may ſay) the enliveners dwelt only there. The Prophets of God dwelt there more then in all Lands, this was Canaans glory and priviledge, it was the Land of the Prophets, who enlivened the People with the knowledge of the living God, and ſo was the Land of the enliveners. The Holy Prophets were the living Oracles of God, and carryed the meſſage of eternal life and Salvation from God to the inhabitants of that Land. But though Canaan (I grant) was the Land of the living in a peculiar ſenſe, and had priviledges above all Lands; yet in this Text I would not ſo reſtrain it, nor is there any reaſon why any others ſhould, ſeeing Job is here ſpeaking at the greateſt Latitude that is imaginable, aſſuring us that the wiſdom which he treats of, is not to be found in any Land whatſoever; and all Lands are Lands of the living, as to the life of Nature; and there are ſcarce any now, where ſome do not live the life of grace.

Nec invenitur in terra ſuaviter viventium. Vul.

The vulgar Tranſlation renders the Text with another kind of reſtriction; Wiſdom is not to be found in the Land of thoſe that live diliciouſly; as if the meaning of Job were; it is not to be found among Epicures and Senſualiſts, among the Sons and Daughters of pleaſure, whoſe greateſt care and ſtudy is, to make proviſion for the fleſh, that they may fulfill the luſts thereof: but though there be a general truth in this Tranſlation, and uſefulneſs in the ſenſe that ariſeth out of it; though it be eaſily granted, that wiſdom is not found among the voluptuous, who (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the wanton widow, (1 Tim. 5. 9.) Live in pleaſure, and are therefore (as he there concludes of ſuch a widdow) dead while they live, and ſo may well be excluded from the Land of the living; and though we may argue from it, that if the holieſt men that live cannot reach the depth of this wiſdom, then much leſs can they who live in ſinful pleaſures; though (I ſay) this be a true aſſertion, yet as to the Original Text it is an unſound and corrupt Tranſlation; and therefore I paſs it by,

Nec invenitur in terra ſuperborum peccantium in vita ſua. Chal.

The Chaldee Paraphraſt tranſlates as wide from the Hebrew, and much to the ſame ſenſe. Neither is it found in the Land of the proud livers, or of thoſe, who in their lives, are proud ſinners. For as God knows the proud afar off, (Pſal. 138. 8. that is, he takes no more reſpectful notice of them, then we do of things or perſons which are afar off, or out of diſtance) ſo the proud know not God, and the works of God (whether they be works of judgment or works of mercy) are afar off from them; that is, they have little or no acquaintance at all with the purpoſes of God in them; proud men are even declared enemies to God; now if, The ſervant (as Chriſt ſaith, John 15. 15.) knoweth not what his Lord doth; that is, his Lord doth not communicate to him the ſecrets of what he is doing, then much leſs do enemies know what their Lord doth. And ſurely if the wiſdom here ſpoken of be to found any where in the Land of the living, it is to be found among the humble, The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way (Pſal. 25. 9.) And again (v. 14.) The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will ſhew them his Covenant; or (as our Margin hath it) and his Covenant to make them to know it. Yet he doth not reveal all his ſecrets to thoſe that fear him, He will reveal to them all the neceſſary ſecrets of Spiritual wiſdom, but not all the ſecrets of providential wiſdom. Therefore, I conceive, both theſe renderings are as wide from the ſcope of this Text, as they are (I am ſure) from the letter of it. And therefore I ſhall carry it more generally. Concluding that when Job ſaith, wiſdom is not to be found in the Land of the living, his meaning is only this, that it is not to be found any where upon the Earth, or among the living. In purſuance of which ſenſe, he brings in the depth, and the Sea diſclaiming the poſſeſſion of it in the next verſe.

Verſ. 14. The Depth ſaith, It is not in me: and the Sea ſaith, It is not in me.

Here is a double diſclaimer. The negation is repeated to ſhew the certainty of it.

The Depth ſaith.] It is uſual in Scripture to aſcribe ſpeech to things ſpeechleſs, or that cannot ſpeak; the Vallies and the Mountains, the Fields and Forreſts are brought in ſpeaking there; yea paſſions and affections are aſcribed to them, and they are there repreſented ſometimes mourning and lamenting, ſometimes laughing and rejoycing. This figure of Rhetorick is frequent alſo in prophane Authors, both Poets and Orators.

The Depth ſaith.] What ſaith it? We may conceive it ſaying thus; I am deep, but wiſdom is too deep for me. No created depth can hold that depth. There are two ſorts of deeps; Firſt, deeps at Land; Secondly, deeps at Sea. The word in the Text may ſignifie either, any great gulf of Earth or Water, whoſe bottom cannot at all or very hardly be found, Moſes uſeth this word in his deſcription of that firſt maſs of Earth or Water, before the creating power of God had determin'd or drawn it out into any particular order. (Gen. 1. 2.) And the Earth was without form and void, and darkneſs was upon the face of the deep. It is applyed ſpecially to Sea-deeps (Pſal. 107. 24, 26.) They that go down to the Sea in Ships, that do buſineſs in great Waters, they ſee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. They mount up to Heaven; They go down again to the depths, &c. A Ship in a ſtorm ſinks down ſometimes (as it were) into a low Valley, and then again is mounted as upon a Hill. It is applied ſpecially to Earth deeps in that bleſſing which Jacob pronounced as the Portion of his Son Joſeph (Gen. 49. 25.) And by the Almighty, who ſhall bleſs thee with bleſſings of Heaven above, bleſſings of the deep that lyeth under. Which ſome expound of Springs of Water, which ariſe out of the bowels of the Earth. Others of precious Mines which are found and digged there. And here, I conceive, the word is rather to be reſtrained ro a depth of the Earth, becauſe the Sea is expreſſed in the next part of the Verſe.

The Sea ſaith, It is not in me.

The Sea is that body of Waters, diſtinct from Rivers, of which Moſes ſpeaks (Gen. 1: 10.) The gathering together of Waters called the Seas. All theſe lower Waters are collected into that huge Veſſel or Receptacle called Sea.

Some interpret the Text of Sea-men; the Sea ſaith, that is, Sea-men whoſe buſineſs is upon the Sea, whoſe buſineſs and art it is to paſs and repaſs thoſe mighty Waters; each one of this Sea tribe ſaith, It is not in me. As if Job had ſaid, Inquire of Sea-men who increaſe their skill by much experience, and are daily acquainted with the Water-works and Wind-works of God, and they will anſwer, Wiſdom is not in us.

Per mare intelligit eos qui in mari Navigant et mercaturas ſtudent. Rab. Solom.

Others expound it of thoſe native inhabitants of the Sea, the mute Fiſhes; theſe can as much inform us in this point as men on Earth. They ſay no leſs, and they can ſay thus much, though they never yet ſaid any thing, Rather then we will take it upon us, that wiſdom is to be found in our watery Element, we will all ſay with one vote, as if we were but one, Wiſdom is not in me. Thus the creatures are brought in, as it were, anſwering the ſearchers for wiſdom, you will loſe your labour and ſearch in vain, if you think to find this wiſdom in us, which God hath ſecreted in his own breaſt and boſome.

Theſe three Verſes being all of this one ſtrain, or a continued proof, that wiſdom is no where to be had or found in the whole compaſs of Nature, I ſhall only give ſome brief Notes from them as conſidered together.

Obſerve, Firſt, There is no creature can give us any unerring intelligence of the wayes of God's providence, or the reaſon of his dealings with the Sons of men.

Though every creature Proclaims that there is a God (we cannot ſet a ſtep, but we tread upon that which ſpeaks a God; which way ſoever ye look, ye have a repreſentation of his Eternal power and Godhead (Rom. 1. 20.) The creatures being as ſo many Glaſſes which reflect his divine perfections) yet none of the creatures can make a perfect report to us of this wiſdom of God; they ſhew us that God is wiſe, and we may find great ſtore of undenyable demonſtrations of his wiſdom every where, or any where, in the Land of the living, in the Depth, and in the Sea:

But we cannot find this wiſdom among them all. The creatures have it not, Nature is not acquainted with it, and therefore Job goes higher, affirming that it is not only not to be found in the deep Sea, or in the depths of the earth, but man knoweth not the price thereof.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly, The wiſeſt and holyeſt of men cannot enter into or underſtand the ſecrets of God.

There is not only a difficulty in the thing, but, as to man, the beſt of men, an utter impoſſibility. We know nothing, but as God is pleaſed to make us know it. And there are ſome things which he hath not at all promiſed to make known to us. Secret things (ſaith Moſes, Deut. 29. 29.) belong unto the Lord our God; that is, they are his peculiars, or his peculiarly. And he there ſpeaks of thoſe ſecrets of providence which are in the manifeſt judgments and curſes of God powred out upon wicked men. For even in thoſe things which are ſeen, there is much unſeen; and of viſible actings, there are inviſible reaſons and purpoſes: the key of theſe ſecrets is kept in Gods hand, not in ours. God hath three ſorts of ſecrets; Firſt, the ſecrets of his counſel and decrees; Secondly, the ſecrets of his providence and outward adminiſtrations; Thirdly, the ſecrets of his Spirit and of his grace. From the two former, God hath locked out the holieſt of men; God hath locked man not only out of the ſecrets of his counſel, as the Apoſtles challenge proves (Rom. 11. 34.) Who hath known the mind of the Lord, and who hath been his counſeller? But he hath alſo locked out man from the ſecrets of his providence. Though many providences of God are plain, and it is our duty to ſearch them with a holy and modeſt diligence, as David intimates (Pſal 111. 2.) The (providential) works of God are great, ſought out of them that take pleaſure therein; yet man by ſearching cannot find them out fully, or to the bottom. Thy righteouſneſs (ſaith the ſame David, Pſal. 36. 6.) is like the great Mountains, thy Judgment are a great deep. Some of the Judgments of God are a ſhallow, or a Foord over which a Lamb may wade; every Child may read the meaning of them; and a man (any ordinary man) may ſay, verily there is a reward for the righteous, verily there is a God that judgeth in the Earth, (Pſal. 58. 11.) The Lord many times acts ſo legibly and intelligibly, that a man, a common man, who hath but natural reaſon, ſhall be forced to acknowledge the Lords hand, and ſay, there is a God in Heaven that judgeth in the Earth. The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth (Pſal. 9. 16.) That is, every one who ſeeth ſuch a judgment, may know that God hath executed it; ſuch power, ſuch holineſs, ſuch juſtice, ſuch hatred of ſin appears in it, as none can ſo much as pretend to, but God himſelf. But there are unpaſſable depths in ſome of the judgments of God, depths in which the Elephant may ſwim, and which the moſt judicious and reaching heads have not line of underſtanding enough to fathom. The Apoſtle ſpeaking not only of the counſels of God from eternity, but of the dealings of God in time, and in particular of his dealings with Jewes and Gentiles, in caſting off the one people, and taking in the other, (He, I ſay, ſpeaking of theſe) is forced to cry out (Rom. 11. 32, 33.) as a man amazed, and at his wits end, as a man whoſe reaſon is over-maſter'd, and himſelf at a loſs in his underſtanding, as a man who had ſaid all he knew, and he knew no more what to ſay, O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his wayes paſt finding out! Though he could not ſee the reaſon of what God had done, yet he ſaw he had reaſon to be amazed at what he had done. Oh how was Paul aſtoniſhed to ſee thoſe who were not a people, that is, who were a people of no account or reckoning, to become the people of God. And that God had indeed, as the Baptiſt ſaid he could, (Matth. 3. 9.) Raiſed up Children to Abraham out of Stones. What ſhall we ſay then (we ſcarce know what to ſay ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 9. 30, 31.) That the Gentiles which followed not after righteouſneſs (yea, which were filled with all unrighteouſneſs, Rom. 1. 29.) have attained unto righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs which is of Faith: But Iſrael, which followed after the Law of righteouſneſs, hath not attained to the Law of righteouſneſs. And though he gives a clear reaſon of it, in regard of their groſs miſtake, in ſeeking it not by Faith, but as it were by the workes of the Law; yet ſtill there is a dreadful ſecret in it, that they ſhould be left to miſtake ſo groſly. In theſe things the wayes of God are deep; and as they are a deep, ſo they are upon the deep: there is no tracing of his footſteps. Thy way (ſaith David, Pſal. 77. 19.) is in the Sea, and thy path is in great waters, thy footſteps are not known; that is, they are not alwayes known, or they are not known in all things, yea they are not altogether known in any thing. The Lord, in many of his providences, walkes as if a man ſhould walk upon the Sea, who as ſoon as he is paſt, there's no print nor tract diſcernable. A Ship (we ſay) plougheth the Ocean, and makes deep furrows there; yet there is no appearance where the Ship paſſed, when once 'tis paſt: he that comes after, cannot find where the Keel had made impreſſion and cut the waters. Such are many of the wayes and pathes of God; where he doth moſt, he appears leaſt. The Lord reigneth (ſaith David, Pſal. 92. 2.) And one would think, that where the Lord reigneth, yet there he ſhould be moſt viſible in his workings, (as it follows) even then, clouds and darkneſs are round about him, that is, he acts as in the clouds, and his works are full of darkneſs, though fuller of righteouſneſs and Judgment, (as it is there alſo ſaid,) towards the Children of men. The Lord dwells in light inacceſſible, or which no man can approach unto, (1 Tim. 6. 16.) and yet man cannot approach unto him for darkneſs. He hath made his wonderful works to be remembred (Pſal. 111. 4.) that is, he hath made them ſo, that they ought to be remembred, or he hath made them ſo, that they cannot chooſe but be remembred; if man would ſet himſelf or ſtudy to forget them, he cannot; and as he hath made his wonderful workes, in all theſe ſenſes, to be remembred, ſo he hath made many of them ſo full of wonders that they cannot be underſtood.

There are workes of God in Nature, which the greateſt Philoſophers have been at their wits end to find a reaſon of, and (as 'tis ſaid) one of them ended his life becauſe he could not find the reaſon of one of them. Some Authors tell us, that Ariſtole not being able to give an account to himſelf or others why the Euboean Sea or Euripus ebb'd and flowed ſeven times a day, caſt himſelf into it, ſaying, Seeing I cannot apprehend thee, do thou take me. Yea ſome of the commoneſt things in Nature are beyond mans diſcovery; and Solomon uſeth that as an argument to prove that man knoweth not the providential works of God (Eccl. 11. 5.) As thou knoweſt not what is the way of the Spirit, that is, of the wind, as ſome interpret, which riſeth and abateth, cometh and goeth no man knoweth how; as Chriſt tells Nicodemus (John. 3. 8.) The wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but knoweſt not whence it cometh, or whither it goeth. Others by the Spirit, underſtand the Soul of man, which enters the body and quickneth it no man knows how, though it be done every day; and this doth well comply with the latter part of the verſe, Nor how the bones grow in the Womb of her that is with Child. So that here is an aſſertion of mans ignorance about the work of God in the whole frame and formation of man, Soul and Body; we neither know, how the Soul is conveighed into the body, nor how the body is formed in the Womb by the joynting and growth of the bones. Whence Solomon infers the point in hand, Even ſo thou knoweſt not the works of God who maketh all; as if he had ſaid, as thou knoweſt not the Natural works of God; ſo neither doeſt thou know his providential works; and as this is true of the times or ſeaſons of God's working in providence, ſo alſo of the manner, intent or purpoſe of God in it.

Quia Ego non capio te, tu capias me.

Let this reprove and repreſs their bold curioſity, who have an itch to pry into the ſecrets of God, and are not ſo much induſtrious as immodeſt, in ſearching into thoſe things which cannot be found (as if they could carry the wiſdom of God (as ſome ſpeak) in their ſleeve, or put it into their pockets) while in the mean time, they are cold and careleſs in ſearching into thoſe things which 'tis their duty to ſeek, and would be their happineſs to find. Our wiſdom is but as the drop of the bucket, yea but as a drop to the Ocean, compared with Gods. And can our drop comprehend his Ocean? A Bucket ſhall as ſoon take in the Ocean, as man the wiſdom of God. The Apoſtle Paul ſpeaking of the Gentiles (Rom. 1. 22.) ſaith, that profeſſing themſelves wiſe, they became fools. They who take it upon them to have that wiſdom which they have not, deſerve to have the wiſdom taken from them which they have; and they who neglecting to know God, or what they know of God, have an ambition to be knowing as God, are juſtly left to be leſs knowing then man, that is, to become fools. He that would be wiſe ſpiritually muſt become a fool, (1 Cor. 3. 18.) He muſt lay aſide his own wiſdom before he can exalt or receive the wiſdom of God. Happy are they who become fools that they may be wiſe; but wo unto thoſe who are ſo wiſe, that they become fools.

And if the wiſeſt and holyeſt of men cannot reach the ſecrets of God in the workings of his providence, ſurely then, no natural man can reach the ſecrets of God in the workings of his grace and Spirit. The natural underſtanding of man is more in the dark about the leaſt and loweſt things of grace, then about the greateſt and higheſt things of nature. The natural man (as the Apoſtle concludes, 1 Cor. 2. 14.) receiveth (or apprehendeth) not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſs unto him; neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. He that ſeeth ſpiritual objects muſt have a ſpiritual eye. Meer ſenſe in Beaſts is not further from reaſon, then meer reaſon in man is from grace.

And here let us take notice of the goodneſs of God, who hath not hid the knowledge of any of thoſe things from us, which are neceſſary for us to know; nor hath the Lord hid other things from us which he doth hide, as if he did envy our knowledge of them (as the Devil falſly ſuggeſted to our firſt parents) but becauſe it is not good, much leſs neceſſary for us to know them; he hath given us the knowledge of all that is neceſſary and good for us to know. And whereas, that other wiſdom or knowledge is not to be found any where in the Land of the living; this is (upon the matter) every where to be found. To be ſure Wiſdoms houſe, and the poſts of wiſdom, are to be found in all places where Chriſt is known, and the ſound of the Goſpel comes. And if other parts of the World are ſtraitned, for the means of holy ſaving knowledge, we are not. Wiſdom keeps open houſe with us continually: And the two principal points of divine knowledge are clearly and fully revealed to us.

Firſt, The way of duty, how we ought to walk and to pleaſe God, as the Apoſtle ſums up all his Sermons of duty to the Theſſalonians (1 Ep. 4. 1.) God doth not command us to obey him blindfold, or not revealing in what he would be obeyed. We read (Mic. 6. 6.) of a great enquiry made of old what to do, Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow my ſelf before the high God? Will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of Rams? &c. Shall I do this? or ſhall I do that? The anſwer is given to theſe Queriſts (v. 8.) He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, and love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? Let none ſay, where is this wiſdom to be found? And where is the place of this underſtanding? It is plain before thee, O man, God hath ſhewed thee where thy duty lyeth; thou needeſt not ſtand groaping after or gueſſing at it.

Secondly, As God hath revealed to us the way of duty, how we ought to live and order our converſation; ſo the way of life, and how we may attain Salvation. He hath revealed Chriſt plentifully; and all Believers have received an unction, whereby they know all things (1 John 2. 20.) That is, all thoſe things, which either not to know, were their ſin, or the not knowing of which would leave them in their ſins. They have the anointing or teaching of the Spirit, to lead them into all theſe truths. Therefore do not ſay, God hath ſtraitned you, in any neceſſary peice of knowledge and ſpiritual wiſdom, ſeeing the knowledge of all that wiſdom is ſet before your eyes, which concerns either the duty, or the comfort, the preſent converſation, or future Salvation of man. The way by which we ſhould go to Heaven (Jeſus Chriſt) is plain; though many of thoſe wayes wherein God goeth among us on Earth are hidden and ſhut up. Wherefore as Paul at once adviſed and dehorteth (Rom. 10. 6, 7.) Say not in thy heart, Who ſhall aſcend into Heaven? (that is, to bring Chriſt down from above) or who ſhall deſcend into the deep? That is to bring up Chriſt again from the dead) As if you were at a ſtand where to find Chriſt, or how to make uſe of him. But (v. 8.) What ſaith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of Faith which we preach. We need not make ſo many difficulties in this matter, when God hath made it plain and eaſie; as the ſame Apoſtle ſhuts up this diſcourſe, (v. 17, 18.) So then, Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But, I ſay, have they not heard? Yes verily their ſound went into all the Earth, and their words unto the ends of the World. The Goſpel of Chriſt, or Chriſt in the Goſpel, like the Sun (ſpoken of by David, Pſal. 19. 5.) hath caſt his beautiful and glorious beams all the World over. What the Pſalmiſt ſpake of the creatures, that the Apoſtle attributes to the Evangeliſts or Preachers of the Goſpel; becauſe by them the name of Chriſt, and Salvation in his Name, was publiſhed all the World over, according to that command of Chriſt left with them at his departure (Matth. 28. 19.) Go teach all Nations. And (Mark 16. 15.) Go ye into all the World, and preach the Goſpel unto every creature. This command the Apoſtles faithfully performed, dividing themſelves into the ſeveral quarters of the World for the ſpeedy performing of this ſervice, the carrying of the light of the Goſpel, as the Sun doth his light, unto all the Nations of the earth. For indeed the Apoſtle (to note that by the way) doth not properly cite that of the Pſalmiſt, but only allude to it. And therefore, he doth not ſay, As it is written, which he uſeth to do, when he alledgeth a proof out of the Old Teſtament, but only takes up the words of the Pſalm, and accommodates them to the point he was upon. As if he had ſaid; if the voice of the Heavens be gone through the World, why not the voice of Chriſt in the Goſpel, or how much more the voice of Chriſt, and the light of Chriſt, the Sun of righteouſneſs in the Goſpel, which doth much more declare the glory of God, then the Sun and Moon in the Heavens. But to come off from this, and return, It cannot but be granted that God hath not denied us the knowledge of thoſe things which make us wiſe to Salvation, and hath ſhewed us where that knowledge is to be found; though there is a wiſdom, of which Job ſaith, Where ſhall wiſdom be found?

And as Job hath already ſhewed, that there is no place among men where that wiſdom of God is to be found; ſo, he ſheweth in the words following, that there is no price in the hand of a man by which that wiſdom can be purchaſed.

Verſ. 15. It cannot be gotten for Gold, neither ſhall Silver be weighed for the price thereof.

Gold and Silver are the moſt valuable things in this World. What cannot Gold and Silver buy? Yea, what cannot Gold and Silver do? It is ſaid, proverbially, We may buy Gold too dear; but there is nothing ſo dear among men which Gold will not buy; yet Gold can do nothing in this caſe; wiſdom cannot be gotten for Gold, &c. When Simon Magus (Act. 8. 18.) ſaw that through laying on of the Apoſtles hands the Holy Ghoſt was given, he offered them Money, ſaying, Give me alſo this power, &c. But Peter ſaid unto him, (v. 20.) Thy Money periſh with thee, becauſe thou haſt thought the gift of God may be purchaſed with Money. What Peter there ſpake concerning that ſpecial gift of God, is true of this alſo. Money cannot by it out of the hand of God. It hath been ſaid, All things are to be ſold or ſaleable at Rome. Gold may get any thing of them who are covetous of Gold. Not only Dignities and Offices, but Indulgences and Pardons, Altars and Croſſes, the power of the Keys, and Chriſt himſelf, with Heaven and all, are ſet to ſale in opening Market by thoſe Romiſh Merchants. But the things which are highly eſteemed among men, are an abomination to the Lord.

Omnia Romæ Venalia.

Further, The word here rendered Gold, ſignifies, ſhut up or encloſed; Gold is ſo called upon a double conſideration:

Firſt, With reſpect to the natural locality of Gold; for as ſome Gold is mingled with the ſand, and lyes open to the eye upon the face of the earth; ſo other Gold is ſhut up in the bowels of the earth, or ſhut in among Stones and Rocks. This encloſed Gold is the beſt and richeſt Gold; and yet for this wiſdom cannot be gotten.

Secondly, It is called ſo, becauſe they who have gotten Gold ſhut it up and keep it ſafe and cloſe under lock and key, within bolts and bars; Nature locks it up, it is hard to come by at firſt, and when men have once unlockt Natures cloſet, and got it out, they lock it up in ſafer cloſets. What we eſteem highly, we lay up carefully. And our care in keeping it, is proportionable to our pains in getting it. This word is rendered pure Gold, and we put in the Margin, ſhut up (1 Kings 6. 20.) and here the pureſt Gold is meant; It cannot be gotten for Gold, the fineſt Gold.

Neither ſhall Silver be weighed for the price thereof.

There is an alluſion in the word weighed to the cuſtom of thoſe times; then they made their payments by weighing (Gen. 23. 16.) as we do now by telling.

שקל Unde ſiclus quod eſt genus ponderis.

Verſ. 16. It cannot be valued with the Gold of Ophir.

From the word Chetem, here tranſlated Gold, that word Mictam is derived, which is the title of ſeveral of Davids Pſalms, (Pſal. 15. 56, 57, 58, 60.) as if it had been ſaid, theſe are golden Pſalms, or moſt precious Pſalms. And 'tis ſaid here, that wiſdom cannot be valued with this Gold; the meaning is, though there be ſome Gold more precious and valuable then other, and you bring that which is moſt valuable, yet even that is no valuable price for wiſdom. This verſe is of the ſame ſenſe with the former; only note, that whereas we render, It cannot be valued; the Hebrew elegancy is, it cannot be laid on the ground with the Gold of Ophir. Which manner of ſpeaking is a further alluſion to the cuſtom of many Nations, in trading by exchange or barter, among whom the buyer layeth an heap of his commodity, and the ſeller an heap of ſome other commodity upon the ground, that each may judge whether it be proportionable in value. God will not lay the leaſt ray of this wiſdom to the greateſt mount of Gold, and go to a barter with you, there is no getting wiſdom by ſuch exchange. Concerning Ophir, the reader may ſee more (Chap. 22. v. 24.) where Ophir alone is put (as we tranſlate) for the Gold found there. It cannot be valued with the Gold of Ophir;

With the precious Onyx and the Saphir.

Having ſpoken of precious Metals, he now ſpeaks of precious Stones, Gems and Jewels; concerning which it is not neceſſary to make any large diſcourſe, either as to the reaſon of their names, or of their Nature. And if a Modern Author hath ſaid in his Comment upon this Scripture, it may well enough become a good Grammarian to be ignorant about them; much more may I ſay, it will be no diſparagement to a good Chriſtian to be ſo. We find this Stone mentioned as the ſecond in the fourth or laſt row of precious Stones appointed by God to be ſet in the Breaſtplate of Judgment, to be worn by the High-prieſt (Exod. 28.20.) And the fourth row, a Beryl and an Onyx and a Jaſper; they ſhall be ſet in Gold in their incloſings. The Onyx is a whitiſh Stone, like the white of a mans nail; from whence alſo it hath its name; ſome of them are of divers colours, white-ſpeckled. The Saphir was ſpoken of at the ſixth verſe of this Chapter. But I would not have the reader either here or there to expect any exact diſcovery of the figure, of the nature, of the vertue or value of theſe precious Stones, I leave that work to its own profeſſors. But how excellent ſoever they are, they cannot be valued with wiſdom.

Verſ. 17. The Gold and the Criſtal cannot equal it, and the exchange of it ſhall not be for jewels of fine Gold.

Before it was Gold with the precious Onyx; here The Gold and the Criſtal. The word which we render Chriſtal, is tranſlated by ſome not as a diſtinct kind of Stone, but as noting the quality of the beſt Stone of any kind, the root importing purity and clearneſs. The Criſtal is a well-known Gemm like unto moſt pure water congealed into a tranſparent, perfectly perſpicuous body; and as its excellency ariſeth from its own native beauty, ſo from its uſe in Scripture, to emblem or ſet forth the moſt beautiful things (Ezek. 1. 22. & 4. 6. Rev. 22. 1.) To be clear as Criſtal, is a proverbial ſpeech nothing the greateſt clearneſs. And if this Stone were as hard as it is clear and pure, no Gemm would be comparable to the beſt ſort of Chriſtal for beauty and glory. And becauſe it is hard to determin what Stone is diſtinctly intended by the Hebrew word, therefore as we tranſlate it the Criſtal, ſo others the Diamond. Doubtleſs Job meant a Stone of a great eſteem; for ſeeing ſenſe the riſeth higher and higher; therefore it ſeems to be a Stone in value beyond the Onyx and the Saphire. The Naturaliſt Pliny puts the preciouſneſs of it in the brittleneſs of it, men boaſting moſt in thoſe things which are ſooneſt loſt.

And the exchange of it ſhall not be for jewels of fine Gold.

Some read Veſſels of fine Gold. Now as he had ſpoken of Gold in the matter and nature of it, ſo here he ſpeaks of Gold in the uſe of it, when wrought into ſome exquiſite form by Art. Some things are more prized for the Art uſed and ſhewed in making them, then for the matter of them; the workmanſhip is more worth and coſtly then the ſtuff. And though Gold be exceeding precious, yet the skill of the Artiſt may be more precious and valuable then the Gold. Therefore Job's diſcourſe is ſtill aſcending, exalting wiſdom not only above the beſt of Naturals, but artificials, not only above Gold as taken from the Earth, but above Gold when the Artificer hath put his greateſt skill upon it: Gold faſhioned and wrought with the greateſt skill, and moſt ingenuous curioſity, cannot equal wiſdom. The exchange of it ſhall not be for Jewels of fine Gold. As if he ſaid; if any man ſhould offer ſuch Jewels in exchange for it, the offer would not be accepted.

The word (phaz) which we render fine Gold, (ſo called from its ſtrength, faſtneſs or ſolidity) others expound as the name of a place from whence ſuch Gold came; and ſome learned conceive that phaz is the ſame with Uphaz ſpoken of (Jer. 10. 9. Dan. 10. 5.) Mr. Broughton tranſlates it Phez-Gold, and concludes that it is the ſame which is at this day known by the name of Phez in Barbary, from whence excellent Gold is brought.

Aurum optimum et purificatum quod eſt ſolidius. Interpretes reddunt aurum primũ, purum, purgatiſſimum.

Verſ. 18. No mention ſhall be made of Coral, or of Pearls, &c.

Job ſeems to bring in Coral and Pearl as lower in value then thoſe precious Stones before inſtanced in; and therefore ſpeaks of them Elegantly, as inferior things, not worth the remembring in this buſineſs, they are ſo ſhort of it; as if he had ſaid, Theſe are ſo far below wiſdom, that they are not worthy to be named the ſame day.

The Text is, There ſhall be no mention of Coral or of Pearls.

The Hebrew Doctors are at much uncertainty how to underſtand or render the Original words. Firſt, ſome take and tranſlate them Appellatively; high and eminent things ſhall not be remembered; for the Hebrew word ſignifieth any thing that is high. Secondly, Others tranſlate the former word (Ramoth) the Unicorns Horn, which is a moſt ſoveraign Antidote againſt Poyſon, and in price or worth, almoſt, invaluable. Again, a third tranſlates, precious Skins or Furrs, which we know are of high eſteem. Fourthly, Moſt, as we, tranſlate the word Coral, becauſe Coral doth uſually grow on high upon the Rocks. Coral is called by the learned Lapidaries, a bud of Maritim beauty, and the delight of Children, the beſt of Natures buds. 'Tis a Plant of Natures ſetting in the Sea, which though while it continues in its proper place, it be green and ſoft, yet taken out and abiding in the Air, quickly changeth its colour into a beautiful red, and its ſoftneſs into the compacted ſolidneſs of a Stone. It is very delightful and pleaſing to the eye, reſembling a Plant adorned with many ſpreading branches. The word (Gabis) which we tranſlate Pearls, is no where elſe uſed in Scripture. But the word by which we render it is well known and of frequent uſe both for Medicin and for Ornament. The Pearl or Union (ſo called becauſe the greater of them are alwayes found ſingle in a Shel, whereas the leſſer, commonly called Margarites, are found many together; the Pearl I ſay, (is nothing elſe but the excellent Geniture of a Shel-Fiſh congealed into a fair Diaphanous Stone, and it is the birth of that Fiſh or Scallop. The value of theſe Stones is according to their beauty, and bigneſs, and roundneſs, greater or leſſer. Some (as that famous Pearl which Cleopatra Queen of Egypt diſſolved and drunk) are worth many Thouſands. It is ſaid (Rev. 21. 21.) That the Twelve Gates of the New Jeruſalem (which John ſaw in viſion) were Twelve Pearls, every ſeveral Gate was one Pearl. That the greateſt glory of our Spiritual ſtate is ſhadowed by them, is proof enough of their beauty and glory, and yet how exceeding glorious and beautiful ſoever they are, they have neither beauty nor glory, by reaſon of that beauty and glory of wiſdom which excelleth, and there is no mention ſhall be made, either of Coral or of Pearl in compariſon of, or in competition with this holy and heavenly wiſdom. Of all which Job gives a further reaſon.

For the price of wiſdom is above Rubies.

Mr. Broughton renders, Wiſdoms price doth paſs Carbuncles. If a thing that is better be not of value ſufficient to make the purchaſe, then that which is leſs worth is not worthy to be mentioned; Rubies are (it ſeems) of a higher value then Coral or Pearl, yet their price is nothing to wiſdom. The word which we render price, comes from a root, which ſignifies to draw out; becauſe the price of a thing is that which draweth it out. He that layeth down a due price for a commodity, draweth it out of any mans hand, Houſe or Shop, where it is laid up. Some read, A little wiſdom is above Rubies; which ſtill heightens the value and excellency of wiſdom. Rubies are precious ſtones, of a Read colour, as we may read (Lam. 4. 7.) They were more ruddy in body then Rubies. The Ruby or Carbuncle, for ſo the great Ruby is called, hath a glory in it which reſembles a flame of fire; 'tis of the colour of pure Vermilion or Crimſon. And by how much the more fiery it doth appear, by ſo much the better it is. It is reported by a learned Author, that one of the Indian Kings had a Carbuncle of ſo great a magnitude and ſplendour, that he might be ſeen by it in a dark place, as if the Sun-beams had darted into the Room. And it hath a name in the Hebrew (not that here expreſſed by Job, which is Panimim but Barakath) derived from a Verb ſignifying to lighten, becauſe this ſtone caſteth forth a ſparkling glory like lightning. In compliance wherewith it is called Pyropus in Greek, from a word ſignifying Fire, as alſo Anthrax, becauſe it is ſo like a Fire-coal. This ſtone alſo was the laſt of the firſt row of thoſe precious ſtones which adorned the Breaſt-plate of Judgment, (Exod. 28. 17.) A ſtone of ſuch value it is, that it bears the ſame price with the moſt excellent Diamond of its own weight; yet ſaith Job, and Solomon ſaith it too, (Pro. 8. 11.) The price of wiſdom is above Rubies; Job hath ſaid much, but he thinks he hath not ſaid enough in the praiſe of Wiſdom, and therefore goes two ſteps further in the next Verſe.

Verſ. 19. The Topaz of Ethiopia ſhall not equal it, neither ſhall it be valued with pure Gold.

The Topaz alſo had the honour to have the ſecond place in the Breaſt-plate of Judgment, (Exod. 28. 17.) and is one of the twelve Foundations of the glorious City deſcribed, (Rev. 21.) This ſtone, The Topaz, is ſuppoſed to be the ſame, with the Emerauld or Smaradge; all which names are applied to one precious ſtone, of ſo admirable a Viridity or Spring-colour, that it exceeds the beauty of the faireſt Meadow, and feaſts the eye with freſher delights, then the greeneſt ſuit that ever the Spring wore. And as this ſtone pleaſeth the eye much, ſo it much clears or ſharpens the dulneſs of it. There are ſeveral ſorts (ſome ſay twelve) of this ſtone reported by Lapidaries; but I ſhall ſay no more of it, when I have ſaid, that they tell us, The Topaz of the Ancients was that, which is now called the Chryſolite. And that though the Topaz was found in many Countries, yet the rareſt and moſt eſteemed was

The Topaz of Ethiopia or Cuſh.

Geographers diſtinguiſh of two Ethiopia's, one in Africa, which is divided into the upper and the lower. The other in Aſia, which extended from the red Sea unto the Perſian gulf, and is that Ethiopia which is ſo often mentioned in the old Teſtament. Of this it is ſaid (2 Chron. Chap. 14.) That Zerath King of the Ethiopians came againſt Aſa King of Judah, with an Hoſt of a Million and three hundred Chariots. And that this Ethiopia is intended by Job, is as the moſt received, ſo the moſt probable opinion. Yet it is not much material for us to enquire which of theſe is here intended, only we muſt take the general ſcope of the place, which is to ſhew, that the beſt ſort of Topazes ſhall not equal wiſdom; and therefore if any place called Ethiopia, yeeld better then other, that may be underſtood.

Neither ſhall it be valued with pure Gold.

He ſpake of Gold before, more then once in this buſineſs; here he returns to it again, yet with an Excelling difference. We had Gold, and the Gold of Ophir, and fine Gold before, but here it is pure Gold. As if he had ſaid, Wiſdom is not to be valued with Gold, no not with Gold it ſelf; as Job ſpake of darkneſs like darkneſs it ſelf, pure darkneſs, (Chap. 10. 22.) So there is Gold that is like Gold it ſelf, pureſt Gold, or Gold which is nothing but Gold, Golden Gold. It ſhall not be valued with pure Gold, the pureſt Gold.

Having opened theſe words, I ſhall give ſome Obſervations from them in general, as laid and conſidered together.

Firſt, Conſider how many of the good things of nature are here heaped up, Gold, Silver, Jewels, Pearl, Coral, the Ruby, the Onyx, and the Topaz, here are pretious things of all ſorts, and of all names. And why all all theſe? Why doth the Holy Ghoſt give us a view of all theſe treaſures, and, as it were, open the whole Magazin of the Earths riches, by the pen of Job in this place? The reaſon of this ſhall be the firſt Obſervation.

Natural men have an high eſteem of viſible Glories of Gold and Gems.

They who live by ſight, and not by faith, cannot believe there is any glory like to that which appears in what is ſeen. Believers look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen, (2 Cor. 4. 18.) Unbelievers look not at the things which are not ſeen, but at the things which are ſeen. Faith is the evidence of things which are not ſeen; ſenſe hath no evidence of any thing beyond what it ſees. And therefore the beſt things ſeen, (ſuch are Silver, and Gold, and glittering Gems) are the beſt delights of the moſt of the Children of men, the deſire of their eyes and the joy of their hearts; after theſe their Souls run, and to them they cleave: nor had it been to Job's purpoſe, if theſe rarities, Gold and Silver, &c. had not been of high eſteem with men, to have ſpoken of them here. And though it cannot be denied, but that the luſts and pride of men have ſet the greateſt price upon theſe things; (the covetous man is all for Gold and Silver; proud men and women are all for pretious Stones and Jewels) yet it muſt be granted, that they have alſo a great intrinſecal worth in them; they are ſerviceable as well as delightful, and yeeld an excellency to the eye of reaſon as well as to the eye of ſenſe. Indeed moſt men exceedingly over-rate them, and earthly minded men not only eſteem them highly, but adore them ſuperſtitiouſly as a God, or as their cheifeſt good. When the Iſraelites would make themſelves a god, they made it of Gold, a Golden Calf; ſo Moſes at once complained againſt and prayed for them (Exod. 32. 31.) Oh this people have ſinned a great ſin, and have made them gods of Gold. And as they (in this groſs way of Idolatry) made them gods of Gold, ſo nothing is more common then (in a cloſe way of Idolatry) to make Gold a god. All they do ſo, who give it thoſe valuations and affections which are due and proper to God only. Thus the covetous mans Gold is his god; and every man whoſe mind is either delighted vainly, or lifted up inordinately, either in the poſſeſſing or wearing of Gold and Silver, puts them in the place of God. Now, what higher eſteem can man beſtow upon any thing, then to eſteem it as God, who is higher then all things, and the maker of all things. A godly man uſeth theſe things, but he doth not admire, much leſs adore them. He takes and interprets them as they are, the ſports of nature, the delights of ſenſe, the trials of humane folly, and at beſt, the helps of humane frailty; but that which he properly and truely ſeeks, and loves, and embraceth, and rejoyceth in, is infinitely better then all theſe. But becauſe moſt men over-value them, therefore the Spirit of God puts a ſlight upon them, in compariſon of wiſdom, thereby to convince all men that wiſdom deſerves our utmoſt reſpect, ſeeing theſe things, which men ſo much reſpect, and which bear ſo great a weight at the common beam, are yet lighter then vanity in this ballance of the Sanctuary.

Secondly, Obſerve, Man is ſo weak and dark in his underſtanding, that he cannot diſcern the worth of wiſdom, nor of any thing that is ſpiritual, but as compared with and ſet off by thoſe things which are natural, and obvious to our ſenſes, yea but toyes and trifles for our ſenſes to play withall.

Ludibria ſenſuum.

The reaſon why the Spirit of God gives ſo many inſtances in the beſt treaſures to be found in Natures ſtorehouſe, is becauſe our dulneſs knows not how to apprehend the excellency of that which is divine, nor how to value it abſtractly, or in it ſelf, but by conſidering how much it excels thoſe things which are moſt valued by our ſelves. A little, the leaſt grain of grace and Holy wiſdom is better in it ſelf, then a Mountain of Gold, yet few ſee the goodneſs of it, but in its preferrence before Gold. And therefore, though there are many uſes, for which, and ends why God made Silver and Gold, yet this may be reckoned a ſpecial one, that their worth and natural excellency might be as a foyl to ſet off the beauty and luſter of that which is ſpiritual.

For, As when the Lord had finiſhed the Work of Creation, he brought and ſet all the creatures in their Original beauty before Adam, that having viewed them well, and given them names according to their natures, he might ſee there was not one among them all worthy of himſelf, or meet for his ſociety, and that then his deſires might be drawn out to embrace a help meet for him, (Gen. 2. 20.) So the Lord ſets before the poſterity of Adam, all the good things of this World, that finding their deſires ſtill hungry and unſatisfied, they may be led further, and convinced, that if things of greateſt worth here below, cannot ſatisfie them, then they muſt look out for ſomewhat that is above, and better. That's alſo one reaſon why Chriſt is ſo often ſhadowed in the Goſpel by ſenſible objects, by bread, and cloathing, by light, and the light-bearer, the Sun in the Firmament; that ſo we in them perceiving how uſeful and neceſſary Chriſt is for the ſupply of all our wants, might be excited to a following after, and a cloſing with him. And indeed we ſhould either not at all, or not ſo fully perceive either his excellency or our own neceſſity, were we not inſtructed in both by ſuch reſemblances. That's alſo the ſervice, which all thoſe Goſpel-Parables do unto our faith. Now as we ſee our need of Chriſt more clearly, by comparing him with thoſe things, which we moſt need; ſo we come to a better underſtanding of the tranſcendency of that wiſdom by which God doth adminiſter the affairs of this world, by preferring it before the beſt things which we behold and enjoy in this World.

Thirdly, Foraſmuch as Job doth ſo often repeat the ſame negation in ſuch variety of words and expreſſions, telling us;

Maximan habet Epitaſni tot verbium et phraſεων accumulatio.

First, That Wiſdom cannot be gotten for Gold.
Secondly, That Silver ſhall not be weighed for the price of it.
Thirdly, That It cannot be valued with the Gold of Ophir.
Fourthly, That Gold and Chriſtal cannot equal it.
Fiſthly, That The Exchange of it ſhall not be for Jewels of fine Gold.
Sixthly, That Coral and Pearl ſhall not be mentioned with it.
Seventhly, That the price of it is above Rubies.
Eighthly, That the Topaz of Ethiopia ſhall not equal it.
Ninthly, That it ſhall not be valued with pure Gold.

Hence Obſerve, Man is not eaſily perſwaded, or convinced of the excellency of the wiſdom of God.

Job had never multiplied ſo many words, but that he knew man would not take up this truth in a word. If the Iron (we work with) be blunt, and we do not whet the edg, then muſt we put to more ſtrength, ſaith Solomon, (Eccl. 10. 10.) And ſo, if that which we work upon, be hard we muſt put to the more ſtrength, and give the harder ſtrokes before we can make an impreſſion upon it. They are ſlow to receive a truth who muſt have (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 28. 10.) Precept upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line upon line. And doth it not argue that man is very ſlow to receive this truth, when ſo many ſtrokes are given, ſo many ſpecialties inſtanced in, and made uſe of to perſawde him of it? Man is as backward to take up high thoughts of the wiſdom of God, as he is forward to have high thoughts of his own. Our little is much in our own eyes, and Gods great, yea infinite, is but little in our eyes.

Fourthly, From the large and gradual Catalogue or Inventory of theſe precious things here given in.

Note, God hath made ſome things in Nature more excellent then others.

Gold and Gems have not only a reputed worth, from the fancies of men, but an inherent one beyond Iron and common ſtones. The creatures are diſpoſed into ſeveral forms, and have as their ſpecial differences grounded in their nature and kinds, ſo their gradual differences, grounded in their better qualities and properties, though they be of the ſame kind. Job ſpeaks of Gold four times in this context; and every time with ſome addition of Excellency. We have here, First, Gold alone (v. 15.) Secondly, the Gold of Ophir, (v. 16.) Thirdly, Feſs or fine Gold (v. 17.) Fourthly, pure Gold (v. 16.) which though they differ not in Nature, yet in degree they do. So among Grain or Corn, not only doth Wheat differ from Rie or Barley, but Wheat differs from Wheat in goodneſs. Not only doth one ſtone differ from another, as a Pebble from a Pearl or a Topaz, but one Pearl or Topaz differs from another. Not only as the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Cor. 15. 40.) Are there Celeſtial bodies and bodies Terreſtrial, and the glory of the Celeſtial is one, and the glory of the Terreſtrial is another: But among the Celeſtial bodies, there are ſeveral glories. As the Apoſtle exemplifies in the following verſe (v. 41.) There is one glory of the Sun, another glory of the Moon, and another glory of the Stars, for one Star differeth from another Star in glory. And the learned Aſtronomers have obſerved ſix differences in the glory of the Starrs. This is an experienced truth in the higheſt ſpecies or ſort of viſible creatures, Man; for not only do all men differ from beaſts, as all have the ſame endowment of reaſon; but one man differs from another in a better improvement of reaſon. God hath made one man to differ from another in wiſdom, in parts, in power, in riches; man differs from man in internals, and in externals; yea, not only is there a difference among men, as natural and civil, but as ſpiritual and holy. Not only do all Saints or perſons regenerate differ from the moſt accompliſhed meer rational men in the World; but one Saint differs from another in goodneſs, and in grace, that is, in the degrees and eminency of grace and goodneſs. Among Saints, ſome are Stars of the firſt magnitude, others are Stars of an inferior magnitude, they ſhine not with the ſame beams and brightneſs of holineſs in the Firmament of the Church.

Fifthly, Note, God gives a power to ſome one Country, or Climate, to produce the ſame things in greater perfection then others do.

Not only is ſome Gold more excellent then other in the ſame place; and ſome precious ſtones more precious then others of that kind in the ſame Countrey. But the Gold and Stones of this or that place or Countrey, are better then are found in any other; The Gold of Ophir is better then any other Gold; and the Topaz of Ethiopia, then the Topazes in other Countreys; The Oriental or Eaſt-Indian Pearls, are more beautiful then the Occidental or Weſt-Indian are. This is a further argument of the wiſdom of God, who hath ſo ordered it, that every part of the World hath ſomewhat in it of a peculiar excellency beyond other parts of the World. One Countrey excels in this, another in that, that ſo every Nation might have ſomewhat to endear it to other Nations, and to envite traffick thither.

Sixthly, Obſerve, God hath given us not only ſuch things as ſerve for the neceſſary uſes of this life, but for honour and ornament.

Gold and Jewels are more then neceſſaries; we might have lived with bread for our food, and with Wool and Flax for our cloathing. But God hath provided for us with a liberal hand; He hath given us not only that which is good, but ſtore of it; And he hath not only given us great ſtore of that which is good, but he hath given ſomewhat which is excellent and beautiful; he hath made all his creatures for our comfort, and not a few for our content; he hath made all the Creatures for our uſe, and not a few for our delight; Only he hath made none of them for our luſts; It is our own ſin which makes them ſo. And we have much cauſe to lament, that what God hath given at moſt for our honour and ornament, for our content and delight, is ſo often employed in the ſervice of luſt, and hung out as a flag of Pride and vain Oſtentation. How often is our Table our ſnare? How often do thoſe things which (in their Original conſtitution) were for our good, become to us an occaſion of falling. How ſad is it that man ſhould diſhonour God with that, which there was no reaſon (as to us) why God made it, but for the honour of man? How ſad is it, that we ſhould greive and burden God with that, which there was no reaſon (as to us) why God made it, but for our delight and ornament? O ungrateful man, who thus requites the bounty and munificence of God!

Seventhly, Obſerve, The beſt and moſt precious things in this World, Gold and Silver, Pearls and precious Stones, are not comparable to divine wiſdom.

That wiſdom in and by which all things were made, muſt needs be better then all things that are made. That wiſdom which orders and governs the whole World, muſt needs be better then the beſt things of the World under its order and government. The very name of wiſdom ſounds high; nor doth any thing ſet man ſo high in the eſteem of thoſe who are wiſe, as true wiſdom doth. The wiſdom of man, in a right adminiſtration of juſtice and humane affairs, is more excellent then Gold. Yea, Solomon prefers the wiſdom of a vertuous Woman in ordering her family beyond the rareſt Jewels, (Pro. 31. 10.) Who can finde a vertuous Woman, for her price is far above Rubies? And why? He tell us (v. 11, 12.) The heart of her Husband doth ſafely truſt in her, ſo that he ſhall have no need of ſpoil, ſhe will do him good and not evil all the dayes of her life; ſhe ſeeketh Wool and Flax, and worketh willingly with her hands. And if the Wiſdom of a Woman diſcovered and exerciſed in the diſcreet and induſtrious government of her Houſhold, is to be valued above Rubies, How glorious is the wiſdom of God in Governing his great Houſe and Houſhold, The whole World? And if the wiſdom by which God orders the motions of this World, excelleth Gold, and Silver, and precious ſtones, then how excellent is that wiſdom of God which he infuſes into man for the due ordering of his heart and life in holineſs and righteouſneſs, of which Job ſpeaks at the laſt verſe of this Chapter? How much is the grace of God, the riches of his grace in Chriſt to ſinners to be valued above Rubies? That's the treaſure of which Chriſt ſpeaks (Matth. 13. 44.) The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto treaſure hid in the Field, the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth, and ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth that Field. That man makes a good bargain, who parts with all his treaſure to purchaſe the Field of treaſure; who parts with all that he hath, to buy that which is better then all that he hath. Again (verſ. 45.) the Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a Merchant man ſeeking goodly Pearls; Who when he had found one Pearl of great price, he went and ſold all that he had and bought it. This Pearl of great price is a Portion or an intereſt in Chriſt, and Goſpel-grace. They are wiſe and happy Merchants who get this Pearl, whatſoever it coſt them. This was the judgment of Solomon the wiſe, or rather of a wiſer then Solomon, the Spirit of God by his pen, (Pro. 3. 13, 14.) Happy is the man that findeth wiſdom, and the man that getteth underſtanding, for the Merchandiſe of it is better then the Merchandiſe of Silver, and the gain thereof then fine Gold; ſhe is more precious then Rubies. The aim of our whole lives ſhould be at the gain of this wiſdom, that is, Spiritual wiſdom, at the gain of Jeſus Chriſt, which is infinitely better then the knowledge of all ſecrets, and in whom are hidden all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledg. And in this the pooreſt Saint may be comforted. They that have Chriſt, have that which is better then Gold or Silver, then Saphirs or Rubies. What's the man with a Golden Ring, to the man with a gracious Heart? What's a man rich in Gold, to a man rich in Faith? There is nothihg worth the mentioning or remembring, when once the grace of God in Chriſt is mentioned and remembred. And as the riches of this World are but dung and droſs to Wiſdom and Holineſs; ſo they make no man either Wiſe or Holy. If a man were inveſted with the riches of both the Indies, he could not purchaſe Wiſdom to find out the bottom reaſon of the Works of God. We are apt to think rich men wiſe men, as if riches had an aptneſs to make men wiſe, or as if they who have riches enough muſt needs be wiſe enough. Such was their ſence who ſaid, Have any of the Rulers believed on him? But as Chriſt himſelf, ſo our dayly ſad experience hath taught us, that riches are no advantage to, but a hindrance rather of our Spiritual enjoyments; they put clogs upon us, rather then give us wings, either in ſeeking or finding eternal happineſs.

Earthly things never befriended any man for Heaven. We may, I grant, as Chriſt adviſeth rich men, (Luk. 16. 9.) make to our ſelves friends of the Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, if we our ſelves are ſpiritually wiſe; but the Mammon of unrighteouſneſs never made any man Spiritually wiſe; yea, as moſt men get riches by their folly, that is, by ſinning againſt the rules of Righteouſneſs towards man; ſo their riches makes them more fooliſh in neglecting the duties of holineſs towards God. And that's the reaſon why Chriſt ſaith, (Matth. 19. 24.) It is eaſier for a Camel to go through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God. The more we have of this World, the leſs we mind the World to come, unleſs we have learned that Wiſdom (which the World never taught any man) to caſt it out of our minds. That earth which we tread under our feet, gets up into our hearts, and makes them more earthly then the earth it ſelf is, till God fill our hearts with grace, and ſo makes them heavenly. No man could ever keep the Moon (that is, things temporal and changeable) under his feet (as that Woman the Church, called a great wonder in Heaven, is deſcribed in the Revelation, Chap. 12. 1.) till (as that Woman was) he is cloathed with the Sun; and that's a cloathing which as all the riches in the World cannot purchaſe; ſo the rich men of the World ſeldom prize. Some are ſo poor, that they are undone temporally; and many are ſo rich, that their riches, both as to the getting of them, and as to the uſing of them, have undone them (as an occaſion) eternally. And therefore Chriſt to ſhew how litle any are beholding to their riches for their Wiſdom (if they have any) ſaith to the rich man (Luk. 12. 20.) Thou fool, this night ſhall thy Soul be required of thee: Then, whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided? That's one great point of folly, to provide many things for we know not whom; and yet there is a greater point of folly, which that rich man was, and many Thouſands more have been and are guilty of, That while they provide many things for they know not whom, they have no knowledge to make proviſion for themſelves; but as they came naked into this World when they were born, ſo they go naked out of this World when they dye, dying hopleſs, becauſe Chriſtleſs and Graceleſs.

Wherefore to cloſe this whole diſcourſe about the precious things of the earth, I ſhall give in theſe brief Coralaries.

Firſt, Do not ſeek wiſdom where wiſdom is not to be found. The depth ſaith plainly, It is not in me, and the Sea ſaith plainly, It is not in me; therefore do not ſeek it either in the deep places of the earth, or in the boſom of the Sea; that is, ſeek it not in any worldly attainment, or enjoyment.

Secondly, Seeing the beſt things of the earth are not to be compared with wiſdom, then ſeek and pray for wiſdom above all earthly things; for true wiſdom to underſtand and know (ſo far as God revealed his ſecrets to the creature) the ſecret of God in his dealings with others, eſpecially what leſſons and inſtructions he gives us in his providential diſpenſations to our ſelves. To be quick-ſighted and quick-ſented about the works of God, to have an underſtanding in them, is a high price of Spiritual wiſdom. This wiſdom (as Solomon ſpeaks, Pro. 4. 7.) is a principal thing, therefore get this wiſdom, and with all thy gettings, get this underſtanding.

Thirdly, Seeing the beſt of earthly things bear no weight, and are of no price in compariſon of Heavenly, let not earthly things draw us off from the purſuite of Heavenly. Let not Silver out weigh wiſdom in our ballance, nor the Gold of Ophir be valued above it; Let things ſtand in our Rate-book as they ſtand in Gods. The moſt of men are of a reprobate mind, highly valuing what God ſlights, and ſlighting that which God moſt highly values. They are of a prophane Spirit like Eſau, who (as the Apoſtle rebukes his folly, Heb. 12. 16.) for one morſel of meat ſold his Birthright. Such bargains and exchanges are dayly made by the wiſeſt of meer Worldly men. They know not how to approve of things that are excellent (as we are adviſed to do, Phil. 1. 10.) or (as we put in the Margin) of things that differ; that is, of things that differ in excellency; how often do ſuch read Job's text backward in their Books; as if Gold were to be valued before wiſdom, and the price of Rubies were above it; as if that were no match for the Topaz of Ethiopia, or were leſs precious then the Onyx or the Saphir. As they are wiſe men indeed and happy who know the true cauſes, ſo alſo are they who know the true prizes and value of things.

VERS. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24.

Whence then cometh wiſdom? And where is the place of underſtanding?
Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept cloſe from the Fowls of the Air.
Deſtruction and death ſay, We have heard the fame thereof with our ears.
God underſtandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof:
For he looketh to the ends of the earth, and ſeeth under the whole Heaven.

HEre is a repetition, yet no tautology; a repetition, yet no vain repetition (which Chriſt forbids in prayer, Math. 6. 7.) but an excellency of ſpeech. When in Scripture the ſame things are often ſaid, they are ſuch as cannot be ſaid too often. The Apoſtle tells the Philippians (Chap. 3. 1.) To write the ſame things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is ſafe. And this he did, not for any ſcarcity of words or matter, with which himſelf was preſſed, but that the matter might take deeper impreſſion upon others.

Verſ. 20. Whence then cometh wiſdom? And where is the place of underſtanding?

Job having once before paſſed an enquiry all the World over, for the place of wiſdom, and not finding it, reneweth his enquiry the ſecond time in this place, and at laſt findeth it. We have the Queſtion laid down in Verſe 20; Whence then cometh wiſdom? And where is the place of underſtanding? This queſtion is reſolved two wayes: Firſt, Negatively (v. 21. 22.) Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, &c. Secondly, Affirmatively (v. 23.) God underſtandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof. The reaſon of which affirmation is given (v. 24.) For he looketh to the ends of the Earth, and ſeeth under the whole Heaven. The explication and illuſtration of it follow (v. 25, 26, 27.) To make the weight for the winds, &c. Then did he ſee it, and declared it, he prepared it, ye and ſearched it out. Thus we have the parts and method of Job's profound diſcourſe upon this great point; I ſhall now touch upon them in their order. Whence then cometh wiſdom? And where is the place of underſtanding? This verſe is the ſame with the twelfth already opened, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it; And the next is almoſt the ſame with the thirteenth, and therefore I ſhall make but little ſtay upon that alſo.

Verſ. 21. Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, &c.

'Tis hid, firſt, from the eye of the body; and thus all wiſdom is hid from the eyes of all men: Wiſdom is not a corporeal object, and therefore falls not under the eye of ſenſe, men may look long enough with that eye, and never get a ſight of it. Secondly, 'tis hidden from the eye of a created underſtanding, the eye of mans mind, even his intellectual eye ſeeth not this wiſdom of God. The natural underſtanding of the moſt underſtanding man could never reach it. There are ſome things that we know not, becauſe they cannot be known by us; they are in themſelves too myſterious for mans apprehenſion: other things are not known by us, becauſe they are concealed and hidden from us. (Col. 3 3.) Our life is hid with Chriſt in God. Our Spiritual life is an hidden life. It is hidden from the ſenſitive eye of all men, and from the underſtanding of all Worldly men; only it is not hidden from the eye of a Believer, he is able by Faith to ſee that life, which is a ſecret to all men living in the World beſides. And as this life is hidden from the ſight of Worldly men, ſo from the malice of the Prince of this World; he would devour our Spiritual life, as he did the natural life of Adam, were it not hidden (which his was not) in a Mediator. And as our Spiritual life is thus hidden from the Devil, and from moſt men alive; ſo the wiſdom here ſpoken of by Job is hid from the eye of all living, even from the eye of the Saints, and holieſt men alive. The word of the Spirit in man, and the works of providence for man, are a great myſtery. The Original word here rendered Hid, implies an intentional hiding, or the keeping of a thing ſecret, on purpoſe that it may not be ſeen; wiſdom like a chaſt and modeſt Virgin (the ſame word ſignifies a Virgin and to be hid) is either ſhut up cloſe at home, or goes vailed abroad, from the eyes of all beholders. The old Egyptians, who wrapt up their Religion in darkeſt ſhadows, were wont to place the Picture or Statue of a Sphinx, before or at the entrance of their Idotrous Temples, thereby intimating that the learning or wiſdom of their ſacred or rather ſuperſtitious worſhip was a ſecret or a Riddle to the Vulgar. And the Temple of Minerva among the Heathens (who was their Goddeſs of wiſdom) had this inſcription upon it; I am all that exiſteth, is and ſhall be, and no mortal did ever yet open or look within my Veſt or Hood. If Heathens did eſteem the wiſdom of Idols and dunghil Deities ſo unſeen a ſecret, may we not think that the wiſdom of Jehovah, the true and living God, is hid from the eyes of all living? And (as it follows in the next clauſe)

Is kept cloſe from the Fowls of the Air.

This, may ſeem to diminiſh or leſſen the ſenſe (though it is indeed an heightening of it.) For who would wonder that wiſdom ſhould be hid from the Fowls of the Air, who have not ſo much as the uſe of reaſon? Who would expect, that what is hid from men, ſhould be known to Birds? This ſcruple will ſoon be removed in the explication of the Text. The word which we tranſlate, is kept cloſe, ſignifieth to keep a thing cloſe, upon a twofold account; Firſt, that it be not diſcovered; Secondly, that it be not hurt or moleſted. Here 'tis uſed in the former ſenſe, Wiſdom is kept ſo cloſe, that the Fowls of the Air cannot diſcover it.

But, what or whom are we to underſtand by the Fowls of the Air? There is a fourfold interpretation of theſe words.

First, Some by the Fowls of the Air, underſtand the Devils, or wicked Spirits: As if Job had ſaid. This Wiſdom of God is hid not only from the eyes of all men living upon the earth, but even from all the Devils in Hell. And we find in Scripture alluſion, that evil Spirits are called Fowls of the Air. It is ſaid in that Parable (Luke 8. 5.) A Sower went out to ſow his ſeed: and as he ſowed ſome fell by the wayes ſide, and it was trodden down, and the Fowls of the Air devoured it. Theſe Fowls of the Air are expounded (v. 12.) to be the Devils; Thoſe by the way-ſide, are they that hear; then cometh the Devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, &c. Wiſdom is hid from theſe Fowls of the Air, from the Devils; who though they are ſo full of knowledge, that they are called knowers or cunning Ones; yet if you would go for counſel to, or conſult with the Devil (as Saul did when he went to the Witch at Endor, 1 Sam. 28.) to find out the providential Wiſdom or ſecrets of the works of God, they may (as they have dealt with many) befool and cozen you, but they cannot inform you.

Secondly, Others by the Fowls of the Air underſtand, the good Angels, who may not unaptly be called Fowls of the Air, by reaſon of their ſwiftneſs, they being alſo in that reſpect often, in Scripture, deſcribed with wings. Theſe good Angels are wonderful ſtored with wiſdom and with knowledge, and are as it were anxiouſly prying into the myſteries of divine Wiſdom, (1 Pet. 1 12.) Which things the Angels deſire to look into. The Angels ſtooped down to look into the ſecrets of the Goſpel. The word there uſed ſignifieth a prying into that which is veiled over and hidden out of ſight, a looking (as we ſay) wiſhly at it, wiſhing to ſee the rarities of it; and 'tis well conceived that the Apoſtle Peter in that place alludeth to the Cherubims, which were formed with their eyes caſt down towards the Mercy-ſeat in the Holy of Holyes, (Exod. 25, 18, 19, 20.) as it is ſaid (for there alſo this word is uſed, John. 20. 5.) The Diſciples who came to the Sepulchre, ſtooped down to ſee the place where Jeſus was laid. Or (which reaches the Emphaſis of the word as well (it refers to their geſture and poſture, who when either ſhews or perſons of note paſs through the ſtreet, put their heads out at window to obſerve what and who goes there. The Angels being thus ſtudious, and as it were curious to inſpect the manifold wiſdom of God reyealed revealed in the Goſpel, and receiving alſo much light and information about it intentionally by that light which ſhines forth in the Church (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Eph. 3. 10.) Now to the intent that unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places (that is, the holy Angels) might be known by the Church the manifold wiſdom of God. I ſay, conſidering that the Angels both by their own ſtudy, as alſo by that revelation, know ſo much of the myſtery of the Goſpel; they ſurely know much of the myſtery of providence; and yet there is a ſecret in that wiſdom of God, which is kept cloſe from theſe Fowls of the Air, the Angels. When Chriſt would ſhew how uncommunicable a ſecret the time of the end of the world is, he ſaith (Mat. 24. 36.) Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the Angels of Heaven, but my Father only.

Thirdly, That is not to be paſſed by with ſilence, That in the Fowls of the Air here ſpoken of, reſpect may be had to the ſuperſtitious practice of the Heathen; who as they were wont to conſult with their Aruſpices or cunning men, who gave them anſwers concerning things to come, both publick and private, of Good or bad ſucceſs in their wars, of the ſtate and changes of Kingdoms and Nations, of Cities and Families, as alſo of particular perſons, by certain ſigns appearing to them in the intrals of beaſts offered in Sacrifice to their Idol gods. Of which abominable divination we find mention in the Prophet (Ezek. 21. 21.) when Nebuchadnezzar, intending a War both with the Jews and the Ammonites, was reſolved which to attempt firſt by opening the belly of the Sacrifice, and looking into the liver; ſo they ſought reſolution in doubtful caſes of importance from their Augurs, by the chattering and flying of Birds, whether on the right hand or on the left, whether high or low, whether croſs and overthwart them, or directly againſt them, as is notoriouſly known to all who have any acquaintance with the Roman Hiſtories and cuſtomes. Theſe Heatheniſh Augurs had a great opinion that theſe Birds had a kind of a foreſight of events by ſome natural inſtinct, beyond all men, ſo that by them they looked for informations and predictions by certain tokens, which through their vain credulity and curioſity they had fancied to themſelves. And poſſibly the Spirit of God might at once point at and rebuke that wickedneſs, in ſaying, Wiſdom is kept cloſe from the Fowls of the Air. They (how much ſoever men did Idolize them) do neither know what ſhall be hereafter, nor the reaſon of any thing that is. Theſe three Interpretations have each of them a fair probability in them; and are not diſſonant either from the ſcope of Job in this place, or from any other Scripture truth. Yet Simplicius eſt quod neq; in imo neq; in ſummo animali natura videatur ſapientia. Nam quid volucrum oculis cum ſapientia quærimus ea vox ſignificat cognitionem rerum ſive divinorum ſive humanarum. Coc.

Fourthly, I rather pitch upon that which as it hath more plainneſs in it, ſo it comes up every way as fully to the general ſenſe of this context. That when Job ſaith, Wiſdom is kept cloſe from the Fowls of the Air, His meaning is only this, That as it is hid from the eyes of all men living and converſing on the face of the Earth, ſo if it were poſſible for a man to live in the Air, and converſe as near Heaven as the Birds and Fowls do; yet he ſhould not be able to find out the ſecrets of providence. Not only they who live at as great a diſtance from the Throne of God, as earth is from Heaven, but if any of the Sons of men were admitted as neer to him, as the higheſt flighted Fowls of the Air, yet even they would remain ſtrangers to this ſort of Wiſdom.

Theſe two verſes already opened, being of the ſame mind (as was toucht before) with the twelfth and thirteenth verſes of this Chapter: I ſhall only give this one Obſervation from them.

God hath purpoſely hid ſome things from the knowledge of all men.

We read (Deut. 34. 5, 6.) that when Moſes dyed, the Lord buryed him in a Valley in the Land of Moab, over againſt Bethpeor, but no man knoweth of his Sepulcher unto this day. For though the Valley where he was buried be expreſſed by undoubted or well known circumſtances, yet conſidering the largeneſs of the Valley where he was buried, and that the Lord without the help or privity of any man laid him up there, the particular place of his Sepulcher could not be known. Now, as the Lord hid the body of Moſes, and would not let his burying place be known, leſt (as ſome conceive) the Children of Iſrael (among whom his name was ſo renowned, both for his conduct of them out of Egypt, and for the many Miracles which the Lord wrought by his hand) ſhould take an occaſion to commit Idolatry there, as they did afterwards with the Brazen Serpent. So likewiſe the Lord is pleaſed to hide and bury the knowledge of ſome things quite out of our ſight, leſt it ſhould prove an occaſion of drawing out of ſome of our corruptions, or hinder the exerciſe of ſome of our graces. It is ſaid (Math. 13. 44.) The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto Treaſure hid in a Field, &c. But the knowledge of that treaſure (which is Jeſus Chriſt and Salvation by him) is not hid from the eye of all living, nor is it at all hid with an intention that it ſhould not be ſought for or found. But 'tis hid, that, ſeeking we may find it; for ſo it followeth in the ſame Parable; Which when a man hath found he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and ſelleth all that he hath and buyeth that Field. God hath hid the treaſures of Spiritual wiſdom that they might be found; but he hath hid the treaſures of his providential wiſdom that may not be found. The Prophet ſaith of God himſelf (Iſa. 45. 15.) Verily thou art a God that hideſt thy ſelf, O God of Iſrael the Saviour. God (being a Spirit) is inviſible in his own nature, He cannot be ſeen, and therefore in that reſpect needs not hide himſelf from the ſight of man; which is a great conviction of the ſinfulneſs of Idol-Makers, and Idol-worſhippers, as Moſes warned the Jews (Deut. 4. 15, 16.) Ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude on the day that the Lord ſpake to you in Horeb, out of the midſt of the fire. Take ye therefore good heed unto your ſelves, that ye corrupt not your ſelves, and make you a graven Image, the ſimilitude of any Figure, &c. And that the Prophet may have ſome aim at this, in the words now cited, Thou art a God that hideſt thy ſelf (even in the Spirituality of thy nature) may have a probable ground from the oppoſition which he makes in the next (or ſixteenth) verſe. Verily they ſhall be aſhamed and confounded all of them: they ſhall go to confuſion together that are makers of Idols. Now as God hideth himſelf in the inviſibility of his nature, ſo in the ſecrecy of his works; God doth, as it were, artificially hide his works, though not in the matter of them, yet in the cauſes and reaſons, in the deſigns and purpoſes of them. For thus the Prophet ſpeaks, in a holy aſtoniſhment at the depths of God's diſpenſations towards that people. Or again, God doth hid himſelf from his people two wayes; Firſt, by withdrawing his comfortable preſence and powerful aſſiſtance, as if he would take no more care of, nor do any more for them. Secondly, the Lord hideth himſelf from his people by drawing a curtain of ſecrecy and concealment over that which he hath already done or is in doing, ſo that his judgments and intentions in them are unſearchable and paſt finding out. Therefore as the vain curioſity of man appears in prying into theſe ſecrets which God hath kept cloſe, ſo his raſhneſs and madneſs in cenſuring of or murmuring at (which is alſo a cenſuring of) thoſe wayes and works of God, which his dull eyes cannot ſee, nor his ſhallow brain apprehend in the divine reaſons and reaches of them.

There are two great vanities in men in reference to knowledge.

Firſt, A neglect to know what we ought, and what is our duty. There are many things which God hath revealed and ſet open to all living, which few care to look into. There is a wiſdom which God hath not only given us leave to ſearch after, but cryeth to us from day to day to ſearch after it. (Pro. 1. 20, 21.) Wiſdom cryeth without, ſhe uttereth her voyce in the Streets, ſhe cryeth in the chief place of concourſe, in the openings of the Gates, in the City ſhe uttereth her words, ſaying, How long ye ſimple ones will ye love ſimplicity? And ye ſcorners delight in ſcorning, and fools hate knowledge? And (v. 23.) I will make known my words unto you. Thus wiſdom cryeth, and cryeth her moſt precious wares in the open Streets and greateſt throngs of men, there ſhe cryeth her wares more precious then the Gold of Ophir, yet none, that is, few or none, regard them more then traſh, or brayded ware. She uttereth her voyce, ſhe uttereth her words in the opening of the Gates, at which all paſs, there ſhe is known and utters words more excellent then Jewels of fine Gold, yet ſhe can get no utterance, meets with no conſiderable Market for them, as appears but too plainly, in that moſt wrathful and threatning account which ſhe gives of the reception and entertainment which both her ſelf and her counſels found among the children of men, (v. 24.) Becauſe I have called, and ye refuſed, I have ſtretched out my hand, and no man regarded, but ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, and would none of my reproof; I alſo will laugh at your calamity, &c. As if ſhe had ſaid, you have even laught at, or made a ſcorn of the counſel which I brought and offered you, and therefore I ſhall but ſerve you in your kind, to laugh at the calamities which ſhall be brought and laid upon you. How ſad is it to ſee, that men will not receive wiſdom revealed; and this (as Chriſt hath aſſerted, John 3. 19.) is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkneſs rather then light:

Secondly, The vanity of man appears, as in a dull neglect of what is revealed, ſo in an eager purſuit of what is lockt up and hidden; as in refuſing the light for the love of that moral darkneſs, ſin, ſo in preſſing after that light which God hath compaſſed about with the myſtical darkneſs of ſecrecy, intruding (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks ſignificantly to this point, Col. 3. 18.) into things which they have not ſeen, yea into thoſe things which cannot be ſeen, becauſe God hath not revealed them; and whence comes this intruſion? The next words of the Apoſtle ſhew us whence, even from pride of Spirit, or from being vainly puſt up by their fleſhly mind. There's fleſh in the underſtanding, as well as in the will and affections of man, and in the fleſh there is pride, and 'tis pride which makes men ſo buſie and bold, ſo boldly buſie, as (unasked, ye forbidden) to intrude themſelves into the things they have not ſeen. This was the diſtemper of Chriſts own Diſciples, who, when they had admiringly ſhewed him the buildings of the Temple, told them, that beautiful fabrick ſhould be utterly deſtroyed (Matth. 24. 2.) Verily, I ſaid unto you, there ſhall not be left here one ſtone upon another that ſhall not be thrown down. They were not ſatisfied with knowing what Chriſt told them, but enquire further (v. 3.) Tell us when ſhall theſe things be? And what ſhall be the ſign of thy coming, and of the end of the World? It did not content them to know what ſhould be, unleſs they might alſo know when it ſhould be, with the immediate ſymptomes and preſages of thoſe great revolutions. They thought when the Temple ended, the World muſt end too, and their Maſter muſt appear in glory: And therefore they urge him to inform them of the very nick of time, when theſe things ſhould come to paſs. And we find, that Chriſt did condeſcend far to their importunity in giving them many ſigns both of the deſtruction of the Temple, and of the end of the World, yet would not tell them the ſpecial time of thoſe things, but concludes his diſcourſe with a lock upon that ſecret (v. 36.) Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the Angels of Heaven, but my Father only. As if he had ſaid, I perceive ye have a mind to know what the Angels know not, yea (as he adds, Mark 13. 32.) what the Son, or my ſelf know not at this time, or according to my preſent ſtate of humiliation. Even good men have ſometimes a ſtronger deſire to know the times, then to redeem the time; as alſo to know what concerns others, then what concerns themſelves. The Apoſtle Peter was not ſatisfied, that Chriſt had told him how himſelf ſhould be dealt with in his Old age, but puts the curious Queſtion (John 21. 21.) And what ſhall this man do? (meaning if John the beloved Diſciple, who leaned on his Maſters breaſt) Jeſus ſaith, if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? As if Chriſt had ſaid, That's none of thy buſineſs, to inquire what this man ſhall do, thou ſhouldeſt rather be preparing for what I now told thee, thou muſt hereafter ſuffer. Uſually they (I do not ſay Peter did ſo) neglect what is revealed, who are moſt inquiſitive into thoſe things which God hath kept ſecret. And though God corrects this humour in man, by putting a bar in his way, and ſhutting the door upon him, yet man will be forcing it open. As our firſt parents, ſo all their poſterity are apt to be tempted with the forbidden fruit of the Tree of knowledge. The Lawyers were charged by Chriſt for taking away the Key of knowledge (Luk. 11. 52.) But there is a knowledge, the Key whereof God himſelf hath taken away; and yet, though the Key be gone, what working is there at the door to get it open. I would only ſay to ſuch, remember, it is a great point of ignorance, to attempt the the knowledge of thoſe things, which God would not have us know: but not to know them is no point of ignorance. It is ignorance, not to know that which is our duty; but not to know that which is not our duty, is neſcience only, not ignorance; And quietly to reſt in this neſcience, is not our fault, but our Wiſdom.

But ſome may ask, why doth God hide ſo many things from the Sons of men, and reſerve them to himſelf alone? why are not all the locks open'd and veils taken away, which hold us in ſo much darkneſs? Is it not mans honour to know much, and the more any man knows, is he not the more fit to honour God?

I anſwer, Firſt, God keeps many things veiled from us, that he might keep us humble; he knows there is much pride in our hearts, and that our pride is apt to encreaſe with our knowledge, yea, that if we knew ſome things, our pride would be intollerable. Eliab Davids elder Brother charged him falſly, when he ſaid (1 Sam. 17. 28.) I know thy pride, and the noughtineſs of thy heart. But the Lord chargeth us moſt truly, when he ſaith, I know your pride, and that your hearts are ſo noughty, that a little more knowledge may make you a great deal more proud. (1 Cor. 8. 1.) Knowledge puffeth up, that is, knowledge in the head alone, or knowledge without a due ballance of grace and holineſs in the heart, puffeth up; and is not only a temptation to pride, but the very matter of it: yea, we have ſeen ſome ſo puffed up that they have been quite blown away with knowledge. Paul himſelf was endangered by it; though he was ſo holy a man, yet his knowledge, as himſelf confeſſeth, had almoſt over-ſet him, (2 Cor. 12. 7.) Leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure, through the aboundance of revelation, there was given to me a thorn in the fleſh, the meſſenger of Satan to buffet me, leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure. He ſpeaks it twice, leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure; a godly man, yea the higheſt of godly men, a Paul, when he is led into the ſecret of God, is in danger of being liſted up in himſelf: All his other graces ruu a hazard by his knowledge. And if Paul had need of a corrective, of a meſſenger of Satan to keep him humble, what need may others have? Many are exalted above meaſure by what they know, but few keep to the meaſure of what they know; many are puffed up by what they know, but few are edified or govern'd by what they know. And if the knowledge of thoſe things which are uſeful and profitable for us, doth often run out more to our pride then to our profit, what would the knowledge of ſuch things do as are not for our uſe or profit? The knowledge of the beſt and holyeſt things doth not make us better, or more holy by it ſelf, but the knowledge of ſome things is very apt to make us worſer and more unholy. The Lord will hide none of that knowledge from us, which hath a natural tendency to make us more holy, or more humble; but when he ſees, that we would only wound and hurt our ſelves by the knowledge of ſuch and ſuch things, then he hides them from us. As a Father hides a Knife from his Child, not becauſe he loves the Knife better then his Child, or would deny his Child any thing that is good for him; but becauſe the Child may ſoon do himſelf a miſchief with the Knife; ſo the Lord hides ſome things out of our ſight, that we might not do our ſelves a miſchief.

Secondly, He doth it, becauſe though he is exceeding ready to ſatisfie our neceſſities, yet he will never feed our curioſity; there and there only he cuts us ſhort. His heart is enlarged to us in giving, and he would have our hearts enlarged in deſiring and asking a ſupply of our wants; but as he forbids us to ask, ſo himſelf will not give (unleſs in wrath and ſore diſpleaſure, as he gave the Iſraelites Quails, I ſay, unleſs in wrath, he will not give) us any thing to feed our wantonneſs, or meat for our luſts. Paul writing to the Theſſalonians, tells them of a knowledge which they had no need of, (1 Theſ. 5. 1.) But of the times and the ſeaſons, Brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. As if he had ſaid, I know ye are looking, yea longing that I who have written to you, that the Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from Heaven with a ſhout, with the voyce of the Archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt (having I ſay) written to you of theſe things, I know ye will be expecting that I ſhould write ſomewhat to you about the time when theſe things ſhall be; but all that I ſhall write to you about the times and ſeaſons is only this, That of the times and ſeaſons ye have no need at all, that I ſhould write unto you; and as it is beſides my duty, ſo I am not at leaſure to write of needleſs matters. Paul ſhunned not to declare all the counſel of God to the Church of Epheſus (Acts 20. 27.) But times and ſeaſons are no part of that counſel which he declared. He declared the whole counſel of God both concerning Faith and repentance, concerning eternal life, and the way to it, even the whole myſtery of Chriſt crucified. But he had no commiſſion to declare the counſel of God concerning the time or ſeaſon when Chriſt ſhould come to be glorified on earth, nor doth he take upon him to have any acquaintance with that ſecret.

Thirdly, Our knowing the ſecrets of the wiſdom of God in ſome things, occaſions us more fully to give him the glory of his wiſdom in all things. For, if when we cannot ſee a reaſon of what he doth, we can yet ſit down quietly and conclude, The Lord is holy and juſt in all he doth, this is the greateſt acknowledgment of his holineſs, wiſdom, and juſtice; and if, when we know not the time when he will come to do his great works on Earth, we are yet alwayes preparing for his coming, and waiting for him from Heaven (which is the true poſture of a Believer, 1 Theſ. 1. 10.) then we honour him ten thouſand times more then we could do by knowning the year or day or hour of his coming. Our Faith honours God more then our knowledge.

Verſ. 22. Deſtruction and death ſay, we have heard the fame thereof with our ears.

Vſitatum eſt ſcriptura ut abſtracta ponantur pro concretis, ut perditio pro perditis, mors pro mortuis. Sanct.

Here's ſome kind of a report brought in concerning wiſdom by a pair of ſtrange intelligencers, Deſtruſtion and Death: But how doth Deſtruction hear, or Death receive a fame? and how do either of them, or both of them ſay, we have heard it?

I anſwer, Firſt, it is uſual in Scripture to put the abſtract for the concrete; and then by deſtruction and death, we are to underſtand thoſe who are deſtroyed and dead. So the meaning is, the deſtroyed and the dead ſay, we have heard the fame of it. But how can the dead ſay it? I anſwer, Hearing and ſpeaking are attributed in Scripture, not only to thoſe perſons who once lived and are dead, but to thoſe things which are meerly liveleſs or never lived, either a life of ſenſe or reaſon, to the Heavens and to the Earth (Iſa. 1. 2.) To the Trees of the Wood, (Iſa. 14. 7, 8.) and the Corn in the Valleys, or Valleyes of Corn (Pſal. 65. 13.) This is a high yet an uſual ſtrein of Rhetorick, both in the holy Scriptures, and humane Authors. Much more is it uſual to attribute acts of life and reaſon to them, who once lived in the ſphear of reaſon, though now among the dead. And ſo when Job brings in deſtruction and death, ſaying, We have heard the fame thereof; It is, as if he had ſaid; If you go and inquire of the dead, even of all that have heretofore lived upon the face of the Earth, but now are dead and gone, all that they can give in anſwer to this great enquiry, amounts only to thus much, which indeed is very little, we have heard the fame thereof with our ears.

Perditio et mors, i. e. perditi homines et deo mortui. Janſan.

Secondly, Some by deſtruction and death, underſtand the wicked, that are not only dead but damned, men caſt into the loweſt Pit, and buried in utter in everlaſting deſtruction. Theſe while they converſed in the World, met ſometimes with diſcourſes and reports of the unſearchable Judgments and wiſdom of God, the impreſſions whereof, are not quite worn out, no not in Hell. And therefore, enquire of and examine them, and they will bear witneſs, that they have heard of ſuch a thing, but further they cannot ſay.

Aquinas in locum.

Thirdly, Others, by the word Deſtruction, underſtand all that are in Hell; and by death, all the Saints departed and in Heaven. And ſo we have the dead of both ſtates in the Text, good and bad, bleſſed and miſerable. Inquire of either, and what will they anſwer; We have heard the fame thereof.

Fourthly, The three ſorts of rational creatures are ſuppoſed to be ſpoken of by Job in this context, and the worſt of them in the laſt. As when he ſaith, Wiſdom is hid from the eyes of all living, he intends it of mankind; when he ſaith, It is kept cloſe from the Fowls of the Air, he intends it of the good Angels; and when he adds, deſtruction and death ſay, We have heard the fame thereof, he intends it of the Devils, or evil Angels, who being furtheſt removed from God, by reaſon of their deſperate wickedneſs, have only heard a bruit or a rumour of wiſdoms excellency, but have no knowledge at all of it.

Laſtly, I rather cloſe with that interpretation which aſſerteth, that by deſtruction and death we are to underſtand, all things created and paſt; as if he had ſaid; As this wiſdom is not now known in the preſent age, ſo neither was it by any heretofore. So that if neither they who now live, nor they who lived in former times, but are dead and gone, knew it, then it is altogether unknown, or none at all know it. And the utmoſt report that any could make of it (though ſome could make that report more perfectly then others) was this, We have heard the fame thereof.

The Text is, We have heard the hearing of it; the Act of hearing is by a figure put for the word or matter heard. As (Rom. 10. 16.) Faith comes by hearing (that is, the grace of Faith is wrought by the Spirit in the Act of hearing) and, hearing by the word of God, that is, the matter heard, both by which and in which this Faith is wrought, is the word of God. We have the like manner of ſpeaking (Ob. 1. 1.) We have heard a hearing, or (as we render) a rumour from the Lord, &c.

Again, When we ſay, deſtruction and death have heard the fame thereof. The word Fame, may be taken two wayes. Firſt, for an honourable report; ſo Fame, commonly ſignifies, and famous men are honourable men. Secondly, Fame implies no more then a dubious or uncertain report. Thus when a man heareth only ſome piece of news, or an imperfect account of a matter, he may be ſaid to hear a fame of it. In this latter ſenſe (I conceive) we are cheifly to underſtand it in this place. Go to the dead, go to the damned, or deſtroyed, and all that they can ſay, is no more then this poor little or nothing, that they have heard a fame, a rumor of a ſtrange power of God in turning things upſide down, and of as ſtrange a wiſdom of God in diſpoſing the affairs of this World, which way himſelf pleaſeth, and yet in wayes which to mans reaſon are paſt finding out. In the firſt ſence there is a great truth; the workings of God with the Children of men are very famous, there is an honourable report made of them in the World, and ſhall be to the end of the World. (Pſal. 44. 1.) We have heard with our ears, our Fathers have told us, what works thou didſt in their dayes, in the times of Old; That is, as we have heard a moſt certain, ſo a moſt honourable report of the mighty workes and glorious deliverances, which God brought about and commanded in the former Ages. We have heard how he hath deſtroyed the enemies of his People, and ſtretched out his hand for their Salvation.

Audivimus famam ejus, ſc: tantum famam; q. d. nunquam potuimus cognoſcere aut aſſequi eam. Jun.

But conſidering the works of God in the ſeveral circumſtances, wherein they are done, and in the reaſons why they are done; eſpecially why done in ſuch a time, why in ſuch a manner, why by ſuch means, why by ſuch perſons, why upon or againſt ſuch perſons, as here in Job's caſe (who though he were a righteous perſon, yet he had much done upon him, and againſt him, by the wicked and unrighteous, conſider (I ſay) and lay all theſe things together) and then, 'tis little that we know of the wiſdom of God in his works, We only hear a fame thereof, but attain not to a full underſtanding and comprehenſion of it. This being taken for the interpretation of this verſe, it holds forth the ſame truth, with the former two, and thereof I ſhall paſs it by, without raiſing any diſtinct Obſervations from it; the whole being but a proof and confirmation by another ſort of witneſſes, Namely, all ſuch as are gone out of this World, of one ſort or other, that they know nothing certainly of this wiſdom of God, but this, that certainly, there is in him ſuch an all-diſpoſing and over-ruling wiſdom.

Thus far Job anſwers his own Queſtion Negatively; Whence then cometh wiſdom? And where is the place of underſtanding; Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept cloſe from the Fowls of the Air; deſtruction and death ſay, We have heard the fame thereof with our ears. But in the next verſe he ſpeaks in the Affirmative.

Verſ. 23. God underſtandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof.

After he had found nothing but ignorance and inſufficiency all the world over, as to this thing, and had taken the Crown of this glory from off the head of men and Angels, of the living and the dead, he informs where and with whom this Glory reſteth.

God underſtands the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof.

Some expound this, as the anſwer of deſtruction and death, which having ſaid, we have heard the fame thereof; ſeem to ſay further, If ye would know more of us, this is all we can ſay; God knows. But rather take the words as ſpoken by Job. As if he had ſaid; After all our inquiries and Interrogations, the reſult of all is this, God hath reſerved to himſelf the reaſon of all; He underſtandeth the way thereof; that is, whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; God underſtandeth that wiſdom cometh out from himſelf, and goeth into man according to the meaſure of his appointment and the pleaſure of his will. God's underſtanding of the way of wiſdom is his Nature. All the underſtanding which man hath of it, is from the free gift and grace of God.

Again, When he ſaith, God underſtandeth the way thereof, we are to take it excluſively, God alone underſtandeth it; for Job's purpoſe is not to teach or inſtruct his friends how to find out this myſtery; but blames them for taking upon them the knowledge of that, which God had kept to himſelf, the ſecrets of his providence, whether towards him or any other. This wiſdom fills all things, yet is not comprehended of any; It is with God, It is in God, It is God. And therefore none but God can ſo much as pretend any thing to it.

Once more, When Job ſaith, He, that is, God underſtandeth the way thereof, we muſt take it of a perfect and exact underſtanding; others may have ſome gueſſes and glimmering light about it, but he only underſtands it perfectly. And whereas it followeth,

He knoweth the place thereof.

We are not to conceive, that there is any place properly taken, where wiſdom is laid up. But the meaning is, he knoweth the place of it, that it is in himſelf, yea that, it is himſelf. Gods knowing himſelf is his knowledge of the place of wiſdom, or, He knoweth that the place of this wiſdom is no where elſe but in himſelf, and nothing elſe but himſelf. The wiſdom of God, is the wiſe God; the underſtanding of God, is the underſtanding God. The reaſon and wiſdom by which the whole World is governed, is the wiſdom of God, or rather God himſelf is that reaſon and wiſdom. God is the exemplar, he is the Fountain of wiſdom; our wiſdom is but a ray, but a beam, but a ſpark, but a drop. There will be further occaſion to ſpeak of this divine wiſdom at the twenty-ſeventh Verſe, where Job ſpeaks thus of God in reference to wiſdom; Then did he ſee it, and declare it, he prepared it, yea and ſearched it out.

Here in the next Verſe, Job ſubjoins the firſt part of the demonſtration or reaſon, why God knoweth the way thereof.

Verſ. 24. For he looketh to the ends of the Earth, and ſeeth under the whole Heaven.

As if he had ſaid; God muſt needs underſtand the wayes of wiſdom, For he looketh to the ends of the Earth; not as if God did look out of himſelf to behold this wiſdom; for himſelf is every where, even to the ends of the Earth. And ſo the argument is taken from the infinite extenſion of the wiſdom of God; He ſurely hath the comprehenſion of all wiſdom, He knoweth the place and way of it, that ſeeth under the whole Heaven, and looks to the ends of the Earth. But thus the Lord doth, therefore he underſtandeth the way thereof, and knoweth the place thereof. And whilſt Job aſſerteth this glory of God, he vindicates himſelf from that inglorious charge of Eliphaz (Chap. 22. 14.) Thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? Can he judge through the dark Cloud? Thick Cloudes are a covering to him, that he ſeeth not, and he walketh in the Circuit of Heaven. Here Job anſwers for himſelf; I ſay, God looketh to the ends of the Earth, and ſeeth under the whole Heaven; and if this be an Article of my Faith, then ſurely I never made any ſuch ſimple or ſinful doubts and Queries, How doth God know? Can he judge thorough the dark Cloud? Nor did I ever make any ſuch Atheological concluſion, as this; Thick Clouds are a covering to him, that he ſeeth not; For I ſay, He looketh to the ends of the Earth, and therefore he looketh quite over it, thorough it, into the wayes and motions of every man.

Explicatio ſapientiæ dei ab infinitate ejus in omnia loca. Jun.

Looking, which is an act of ſenſe, is metaphorically aſcribed to the mind, to the underſtanding of God; whoſelooking is nothing elſe but his underſtanding. And the word ſignifieth, not a bare looking, but a looking with conſideration and care. The Lord doth not give a glance (as we ſay) ſlightly ſlightly looking over the world, but he looks with a careful eye upon each thing, to the ends of the Earth, as if he had but one thing to look to, or look upon in the whole Earth. The word is uſed (Iſa. 66. 2.) To this man will I look (ſaith God) even to him that is poor and of a contrite Spirit, &c. As if the Lord had ſaid, though I am ſo high and great, that Heaven is my Throne, and Earth my footſtool; yet I will have regard to and take notice of a poor humble hearted ſinner, I will look to him and tend him (ſuch is the emphaſis of the word) as a Nurce-keeper looks to, and tends a ſick or weak perſon lying pained and diſtempered upon his bed. Thus the Lord looketh to the ends of the Earth,

And ſeeth under the whole Heaven.

He doth not only ſee in Heaven, but under the whole Heaven, and he ſeeth every thing every where, with an exactneſs, yea with a kind of curioſitie, as the Hebrew word imports. We have that ſpecial ſignification of it upon record (Gen. 16. 13.) when Hagar being hardly dealt with by Sarah, fled from her face (v. 6.) an Angel found her, and bid her return and ſubmit her ſelf to her Miſtreſs. And he called the name of the Lord that ſpake unto her, thou God ſeeſt me; for ſhe ſaid, have I alſo here looked after him that ſeeth me? Wherefore the Well was called Beer-lahai-roi, that is, the well of him that liveth and ſeeth. She repeats that act of God ſeeing her three times. Firſt, ſhe called him, Thou God ſeeſt me; Secondly, him that ſeeth me; and thirdly, ſhe called the Well, The well of him that liveth and ſeeth me. God ever-liveth, and he ever-ſeeth, and he ſeeth every perſon, Hagar a ſervant as well as Sarah her Miſtreſs, and he ſaw her in her flight from her Miſtreſs, as well as in her abode with her miſtreſs. A Sparrow falls not to the ground without him (that is, without his obſervance and ſufferance) and the very hairs of our head are all numbered (Mat. 29. 30.) Birds flie freely, yet fall by a divine diſpoſe, not as the fowler pleaſeth. This providential ſight of God is punctual and to a hair, he ſeeth the whole univerſe as preciſely as any individual, and he ſeeth every individual as preciſely as if he had but one individual to ſee to. When Abraham had paſſed that hard exerciſe and tryal of his faith, the offering of his Son Iſaac (Gen. 22. 14.) He calleth the name of the place Jehovah-Jireh, as it is ſaid to this day, in the mount of the Lord it ſhall be ſeen. The Lord will ſee, or the Lord will provide, the Lord ſeeth ſo as to provide: His is not a bare ſight, his ſeeing is the providing for, and the right diſpoſing of all things in his ſight. The Lord ſeeth and provideth ſecretly for thoſe that fear him, as Abraham did, and he will be ſeen evidently in bringing them ſuccour and ſupply in their greateſt ſtraits and wants, as he did to Abraham. This name of God either in the active or paſſive ſignification of it, Jehovah-Jireh, the Lord ſeeth, or, the Lord is ſeen, was ſo famous in the old Church that it grew into a ſacred proverb (ſaith Moſes there) As it is ſaid to this day, in the mount of the Lord it ſhall be ſeen. He ſeeth under the whole Heaven.

Hence Note, Firſt, What ever is done in the world, falls under the notice and cognizance of God.

He that looketh to the ends of the Earth, and ſeeth under the whole Heaven, in the ſence explained, cannot but take notice of all that is done, or comes to paſs all the World over. (2 Chron. 16. 9.) The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole Earth; not that he needs to move from place to place, to run up and down from Country to Country to ſee what is done, for by one infinite, inviſible, indiviſible act, he beholdeth all things in all places; but the Scripture ſpeaks thus, to teach us the infallibility and particularity of his knowledge; even as we are ſaid to know thoſe things infallibly, which we have viewed upon the place: for otherwiſe there is neither high nor low, far or neer, firſt nor laſt to God, all things being at once before him for ever. (Jer. 23. 23.) Am I a God at hand, ſaith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Some render the words as an explicit affirmation, I am a God at hand, and not afar off; that is, I am alwayes at hand, or ready at hand upon every call and occaſion to do my people good, I am never as a man afar off, when there is need of me: This is a truth; yet our reading and interrogation carrieth more quickneſs in it, Am I a God at hand, &c. That is, am I God in Heaven only, which is the place of my glorious reſidence, and which in common apprehenſion is accounted neerer to me; And am not I a God afar off? That is, am not I able to act my power, and declare my ſelf God upon the Earth, which ſeems further off from me, or upon thoſe parts of the Earth which to you are moſt remote and furtheſt off? as it follows (v. 24.) Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him, ſaith the Lord?

And if the Lord ſeeth every where, let us every where ſee the Lord. Moſes ſaw him that was inviſible. This thought, the Lord ſeeth, will compoſe and keep us from doing what the Lord cannot endure to ſee. Did we but keep this common principle warm upon our Spirits, The Lord ſeeth under the whole Heaven, how heavenly would our lives be! And ſeeing the Lord ſeeth, as, under the whole Heaven, ſo into the hearts of all men, how ſhould it deter us, even from heart-ſins, and the cloſeſt hypocriſie!

Again, The Lord in ſeeing all things, diſpoſeth all things. As his hand ſet up all in order at firſt, ſo his eye hath kept all in order ever ſince, and will do for ever. That which ſome expound of Davids promiſed care over others (Pſal. 32. 8.) as it is alſo expounded, ſo it is moſt true of Gods providential care over David and all others his faithful ſervants; I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way that thou ſhalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye; or (as we put in the Margin) I will counſel thee, mine eye ſhall be upon thee, that is, to guide thee in all thy undertakings. And as Gods eye is the guide of perſons, ſo of things; his ſight is influential, and turns the whole world. Further, take theſe concluſions concerning the ſight of God.

Firſt, The Lord beholds all things diſtinctly; not in groſs only, or in a lump; he beholds the leaſt as well as the greateſt. He looks upon every parcel, and opens the whole pack and bundle of humane affairs.

Secondly, He beholds every thing and perſon perfectly, fully, quite through; his is an intentive and moſt attentive view.

Thirdly, In ſeeing he governs every thing effectually, and works it to his own ends; he over-rules the purpoſes of men to his own purpoſe; he guideth the whole Creation with his eye; which way he looks, he makes that look too; which way he is pleaſed to move, that ſhall move too; His is a ruling eye.
